In Showalter v. Southern Kansas R. Co. (1892) 49 Kan. 421, 32 Pac. 42, on subsequent appeal in (1897) 57 Kan. 681, 47 Pac. 831, under a statute providing that upon vacation of a street the same shall revert to the owners of the real estate thereto adjacent on each side in proportion to frontage, except where the street shall have been taken and appropriated to public use in a different proportion, in which case it shall revert to adjacent lots in proportion as it was taken from them, it was held that the proviso applied only where the street was taken from the adjacent lots for use as such; so that where the site was platted and the abutting lots were sold with reference to the plat, it could not be said that the street was taken from the lots so as to entitle the owner thereof to share the vacated street in unequal proportions under the proviso in the statute.

In Wisconsin it has been held that

Rev. Stat. chap. 52, §§ 1294, 1294a, which provided that when a highway shall be abandoned and discontinued it shall revert to the abutting owner, applies only to streets laid out by public authority, and is not applicable to streets dedicated or granted by recorded plat operating as a statutory conveyance. Paine Lumber Co. v. Oshkosh (1895) 89 Wis. 449, 61 N. W. 1108.

And New York Laws 1895, chap. 1006, which provided that title to the land in a street closed thereunder became vested in private ownership in the owner of the fee if the street was made by dedication (street in such case is a mere easement of way), and in the city of New York if it were opened by statutory proceedings for that purpose, have been construed in a number of instances. See Re New York (1898) 28 App. Div. 143, 52 N. Y. Supp. 588, affirmed in (1898) 157 N. Y. 409, 52 N. E. 1126 (holding that the act was constitutional and the statute valid as against the objection that it took private property for a private use, and that a dedicated street upon vacation reverted to the owner of the fee, and that such owner was entitled to compensation for the taking thereof); Swain v. Schonleben (1908) 109 N. Y. Supp. 223, affirmed in (1909) 130 App. Div. 521, 115 N. Y. Supp. 23, which was affirmed without opinion in (1910) 198 N. Y. 622, 92 N. E. 1103 (holding that in the case under consideration the fee reverted to the owner of the fee, and that a subsequent conveyance by him of the lot which was described as bounded by the line of the vacated street did not convey any rights in the fee of such street to such subsequent grantee); and Re East 168th Street (1898) 28 App. Div. 143, 52 N. Y. Supp. 588, appeal dismissed in (1898) 156 N. Y. 677, 51 N. E. 1092, but subsequently affirmed in (1898) 157 N. Y. 409, 52 N. E. 1126 (holding that the closing of a street under the act is for a public purpose). This act also provided that when the city has title to the fee of a discontinued street which it does not need for public purposes, it may convey the same to abutting owners upon payment by the latter of the value of such interest. See People ex rel. Brown v. Metz (1907) 119 App. Div. 271, 104 N. Y. Supp. 649, affirmed without opinion in (1907) 189 N. Y. 550, 82 N. E. 1131; and Re East 168th Street (N. Y.) supra.

And statutes have been passed in a few instances authorizing a municipality to vacate a certain street or streets, and to convey the land to the abutting owners. Illustration of a statute of this kind is found in Marietta Chair Co. v. Henderson (1904) 121 Ga. 399, 104 Am. St. Rep. 156, 49 S. E. 312, 2 Ann. Cas. 83, wherein the constitutionality of the statute was upheld.

But where the statute merely authorizes the city to quitclaim to abutting owners upon petition by them for vacation of a street, the title which it has, and such title consists of a fee in trust for the public for highway purposes, subject to reversion to the original owner upon vacation, it has been held that a municipality does not cut off the original owner's right of reversion by vacating a street and quitclaiming the same to the abutting owners. Gebhardt v. Reeves (1874) 75 Ill. 301.

And where the street is merely an easement so that the abutting owner of the fee is entitled to reversion upon abandonment, it has been held that a statute attempting to vest a vacated street in the municipality is unconstitutional and void in that it deprives the abutting proprietor of property without due process of law. Re John Street (1839) 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 659.

G. J. C.

EMMA F. CURTIS, Respt.,

v.

A. D. HOLEE

and

RUTH GOLD, Appt.

California Supreme Court (Dept. No. 2)—January 26, 1921.

(184 Cal. 726, 195 Pac. 395.)

Limitation of actions — sufficiency of promise to arrest running.

1. An agreement by one who took title to real estate subject to a mortgage, which he did not agree to pay, written on the back of the mortgage note, which on its face refers to the mortgage, reciting that, in consideration of a raise in interest rates, the due date of the note is extended, constitutes an unqualified acknowledgment of the mortgage and debt secured thereby, which will arrest the running of the Statute of Limitations.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1027.]

— mortgage debt — contract for extension — owner subject to mortgage.

2. One taking title to real estate subject to a mortgage has, although he does not agree to pay the debt, such an interest in it that he may contract for an extension of time for payment, which will be valid as against himself and his successors in interest.

— mortgage — transfer subject to — proof.

3. The execution of an extension agreement by the owner of the equity of redemption in mortgaged property, coupled with a payment in reduction of the principal of the debt, is a sufficient acknowledgment that the property was transferred to him subject to the mortgage.

APPEAL by defendant Gold from a judgment of the Superior Court for Los Angeles County (Shenk, J.) in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to foreclose a mortgage. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. L. C. Woods for appellant.

Messrs. Joseph H. Call and Asa V. Call for respondent.

Lennon, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The pleaded facts of the plaintiff's case, briefly stated, are these: The defendant A. D. Holee, on June 20, 1912, executed a note, secured by a mortgage on real property, in favor of one M. M. Arthurs, in the sum of $2,500. The mortgage note by its terms was due and payable "on or before three years after date," and the interest thereon, at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, was to commence running from July 1, 1912. The mortgage was duly recorded in the county recorder's office of the county wherein the mortgaged property was located. The mortgagor, Holee, conveyed the mortgaged property to one Haymond on or about the 1st of July, 1915, when he was still the owner in fee simple, subject to the mortgage, of the mortgaged property. Haymond made and entered into an agreement in writing with M. M. Arthurs, the original and then owner of the said note and mortgage. This agreement, which was written on the back of said note, provided that, in consideration of a raise in the rate of interest, provided for in and by said note, from 6 to 7 per cent from the date of said agreement, namely, July 1, 1915, the time for the payment of the note was extended to June 20, 1916. At the time of the execution of said agreement of extension, namely, on July 1, 1915, the sum of $75 was paid on account of interest, and $500 was paid on account of the principal of said note. Subsequent to the execution of said agreement of extension, on August 16, 1915, the said Haymond conveyed the mortgaged property by grant deed to F. E. Lindblom, which deed, after specifically describing the mortgaged property, expressly stated that it was conveyed "subject to a mortgage to secure a note for $2,500 . . . in favor of M. M. Arthurs, upon which note there has been paid the sum of $500 on the principal," and that "the note was extended for one year from July 1, 1915, and the interest rate raised to 7 per cent in place of 6 per cent." This deed from Haymond to the Lindbloms was duly acknowledged and recorded in the recorder's office of the county wherein the mortgaged property and the property mentioned in the deed is situated. The Lindbloms thereafter conveyed said property by grant deed, also expressly subject to said mortgage and the extension heretofore mentioned, to one Werner. Werner subsequently conveyed said property by grant deed, also subject to said mortgage and extension, to the appealing defendant herein, Ruth Gold. On October 29, 1917, M. M. Arthurs, the original owner of the note and mortgage, sold and assigned the same to this plaintiff and respondent, which assignment was thereafter duly recorded in the county wherein the property is situated.

This action to foreclose the mortgage as extended was instituted and filed August 29, 1919. Pending the hearing and determination of defendant's demurrer to the plaintiff's complaint, the defendant A. D. Holee entered into a stipulation with the plaintiff that her default might be entered and a judgment might be taken by plaintiff against her upon condition that no deficiency judgment should be entered against her.

Answering the plaintiff's complaint, the defendant Ruth Gold admitted the truth of the allegation that Holee, the mortgagor, did, by grant deed, convey the mortgaged property to Haymond, but, while conceding that all the subsequent conveyances of the property were made subject to the mortgage, affirmatively alleged that it did not appear from the grant deed to Haymond that the conveyance to the latter was made subject to the said mortgage. For lack of information and belief, the answer denied that Haymond and Arthurs agreed in writing at any time, or at all, that the payment of said note and mortgage should be extended to June 20, 1916. Further answering, the defendant Ruth Gold interposed the defense of the Statute of Limitations, pleading that the plaintiff's cause of action was barred by the provisions of § 337, subd. 1, and § 360 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and also by § 2911 of the Civil Code of the state of California. Upon the issues thus framed, a trial was had, and judgment rendered for the plaintiff upon findings made in favor of, and in substantial accord with, the allegations of the plaintiff's complaint and against the defense of the Statute of Limitations. From the judgment of foreclosure and sale the defendant Ruth Gold has appealed.

As previously indicated, the question of the liability of the original mortgagor has been eliminated from the case, and the question of the liability of appellant for a deficiency judgment does not arise upon this appeal, for no deficiency judgment was rendered.

It is a stipulated fact in the case that Haymond, as the grantee of the defendant Holee, did not, when taking a conveyance of the mortgaged property, agree to pay the note in suit, or assume the mortgage by which it was secured, and because of this fact it is insisted, upon behalf of appellant, that the agreement between Haymond and Arthurs, the owner of the mortgage, for an extension of the time within which the note would mature, is insufficient, under the provisions of § 360 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as evidence of a continuing contract which would take the case out of the operation of the Statute of Limitations. The insufficiency is claimed to result from the fact that Haymond was under no legal obligation in the first instance, or at all, to pay the note or assume the mortgage, and therefore the extension agreement, in so far as it related to him, was not signed by a party to be charged with the original indebtedness. In other words, it is the contention of the appellant that the grantee of a mortgagor who does not assume the mortgage is a stranger to the mortgage debt, to whom the provisions of § 360 of the Code of Civil Procedure do not apply, and that, therefore, the legal life of a mortgage note cannot be continued by the written agreement of such a grantee of the mortgagor.

As previously stated, it is admitted that Haymond did not agree to pay the note and mortgage, and never became personally liable thereon, but, since the mortgage was on record at the time of the conveyance of the property to Haymond, the property itself continued subject to the lien of the mortgage after it was acquired by him. While under such circumstances the grantee is not personally liable for the debt, nevertheless, in view of the fact that our laws render the land primarily liable for the payment of a mortgage debt (Crisman v. Lanterman, 149 Cal. 647, 117 Am. St. Rep. 167, 87 Pac. 89), the grantee of land subject to a mortgage, as long as he is the owner of the thing which is the fundamental source of satisfaction of the debt, is, to a limited extent, charged with the debt and interested in its payment. For this reason the grantee of the mortgagor who takes subject to a mortgage is not such a stranger to the mortgage or the mortgage debt that he cannot, while he is the owner of the mortgaged property, extend and continue the same as against himself and his successors in interest. Fitzgerald v. Flanagan, 155 Iowa, 217, 135 N. W. 738, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 1104.

Limitation of actions—mortgage debt—contract for extension—owner subject to mortgage.

Therefore, it is not necessary, in order to take a mortgage out of the operation of the Statute of Limitations as against the grantee of the mortgagor and his successors, that the grantee who signs the acknowledgment thereof should have personally assumed the payment of the mortgage.

We turn, then, to a consideration of the form of acknowledgment in the present case. If the grantee acknowledged the existence of the debt in writing with sufficient certainty, that will suffice to take the debt out of the operation of the statute. Chaffee v. Browne, 109 Cal. 211, 218, 41 Pac. 1028; State Loan & T. Co. v. Cochran, 130 Cal. 245, 251, 62 Pac. 466, 600; Concannon v. Smith, 134 Cal. 14, 66 Pac. 40. An actual promise to pay is not necessary. Foster v. Bowles, 138 Cal. 346, 71 Pac. 494, 649. When such an acknowledgment is made before the note becomes barred by the Statute of Limitations as applied to the date originally designated for the payment of the note, it constitutes a continuation of the life of the original obligation beyond the operation of the Statute of Limitations as applied to the original obligation. McCormick v. Brown, 36 Cal. 180, 95 Am. Dec. 170; Daniels v. Johnson, 129 Cal. 415, 79 Am. St. Rep. 123, 61 Pac. 1107; Rodgers v. Byers, 127 Cal. 528, 60 Pac. 42. The acknowledgment of the mortgage is an acknowledgment of the debt secured by the mortgage. Foster v. Bowles, supra; Girard Trust Co. v. Dixon, 89 Neb. 557, 131 N. W. 912. And, conversely, it must be that an acknowledgment of the debt by the mortgagor's grantee, with knowledge on his part of the existence of the mortgage, as admittedly was done by the grantee of the mortgagor in the instant case, constitutes an acknowledgment of the mortgage itself, and takes the same out of the operation of the Statute of Limitations, for the mortgage is merely an incident of the debt evidenced by the note. While the extension agreement in the instant case does not, in so many words, make mention of the mortgage, still that agreement was written upon the back of the mortgage note, and made express reference thereto. The note, upon its face, bore the caption, "Note secured by mortgage," and therefore, considered and construed in connection with the note to which it referred,

~~—sufficiency of promise to arrest running.~~ the agreement to extend the time for the payment of the note constituted an unqualified acknowledgment of the mortgage and the debt secured thereby, sufficiently direct and distinct to arrest the running of the Statute of Limitations.

It was not essential that the plaintiff's complaint should allege, or the trial court should find, that the conveyance from Holee, the mortgagor, to Haymond, his grantee, was made subject to the mortgage in suit.

The complaint alleged that the mortgage was recorded prior to the transfer to Haymond, and, moreover, the execution of the extension agreement, particularly when coupled with the payment of a part of the principal and some of the interest due upon the mortgage note, was a sufficient acknowledgment that the property conveyed was transferred subject to the mortgage. Fitzgerald v. Flanagan, supra; McLane v. Allison, 60 Kan. 441, 56 Pac. 747. It likewise operated to toll the Statute of Limitations as against the successors in interest of Haymond, all of whom took the mortgaged property expressly and affirmatively subject to the mortgage and to the agreement extending the legal life of the mortgage note.

~~—mortgage—
transfer subject to—proof.~~

What we have thus far said, in effect, adversely disposes of the remaining points presented in support of the appeal.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: Wilbur, J.; Sloane, J.

ANNOTATION.

Limitation of actions: acknowledgment, new promise, or payment by grantee of mortgaged premises.

- I. Introduction, 1027.
- II. As to liability of grantee or successors in interest:
 - a. Where grantee has assumed mortgage, 1028.
 - b. Where grantee has not assumed mortgage, 1030.
- III. As to liability of mortgagor or grantor:

I. Introduction.

The present annotation purports to cover only the question as to whether the grantee of mortgaged premises may make such an acknowledgment of, or payment on, the debt as will remove or interrupt the bar of the Statute of Limitations; and does not cover the question of the sufficiency of the acknowledgment or payment in any particular case, assuming that

III.—continued.

- a. Cases holding that running of statute is not interrupted, 1033.
- b. Cases holding that running of statute is interrupted, 1035.
- IV. Acknowledgment or payment by purchaser of part of mortgaged premises, 1036.
- V. Miscellaneous, 1037.

such grantee is a proper person to make the acknowledgment or payment. See Byrnes v. Payne (Wash.) and Wallber v. Caldwell (Neb.) under V. infra.

In general, an acknowledgment or new promise to pay must, in order to take a case out of the Statute of Limitations, be made by the person to be charged, or by some person legally authorized by him so to act; and a similar rule applies with respect to partial payments, which should be made by some person who has the right to acknowledge the debt, or make the new promise; in other words, by the debtor himself or his authorized agent. See 17 R. C. L. §§ 273, 299. Acknowledgments or payments by a stranger are, of course, insufficient.

The question, then, arises, whether a grantee of the mortgaged premises is a person to be charged with the debt, or has such an interest that he can, under the above rules, suspend the running, or remove the bar, of the Statute of Limitations. In solving this question, particular attention should be paid to the points (1) whether the action is to recover on the personal obligation of the mortgagor, or is one to enforce the mortgage against the grantee or his successors in interest; and (2) whether the grantee has assumed and agreed to pay the debt.

II. As to liability of grantee or successors in interest.

a. Where grantee has assumed mortgage.

It appears to be well settled that acknowledgment of or payment on the debt by the grantee of mortgaged premises may interrupt the running of the Statute of Limitations with respect to his liability, or that of the property, to the holder of the mortgage debt, where the grantee has assumed and agreed to pay the debt. (Generally, with several exceptions, the suits have been to foreclose the mortgage rather than to enforce a personal liability against the grantee.)

Arkansas. — See Conley v. Archillion (1920) 146 Ark. 64, 225 S. W. 5
(vendor's lien).

California.—Fielding v. Iler (1919)
39 Cal. App. 559, 179 Pac. 519;
Daniels v. Johnson (1900) 129 Cal.
415, 79 Am. St. Rep. 123, 61 Pac. 1107.

Connecticut. — Tuttle v. Armstead
(1885) 53 Conn. 175, 22 Atl. 677.

Illinois. — Harts v. Emery (1900)
184 Ill. 560, 56 N. E. 865; Murray v.
Emery (1900) 187 Ill. 408, 58 N. E.
327; Blackburn University v. Weer
(1886) 21 Ill. App. 29.

Iowa. — Senninger v. Rowley (1906)

138 Iowa, 617, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 223, 116 N. W. 695.

Kansas. — Schmucker v. Sibert
(1877) 18 Kan. 104, 26 Am. Rep. 765;
Hendricks v. Brooks (1909) 80 Kan.
1, 133 Am. St. Rep. 186, 101 Pac. 622;
Woodruff v. Albright (1900) 10 Kan.
App. 113, 62 Pac. 250.

Kentucky.—Curry v. Adams (1900)
22 Ky. L. Rep. 256, 57 S. W. 8.

Louisiana. — Collier v. His Creditors (1846) 12 Rob. 398 (assumption of mortgage debts by purchaser at execution sale); Ferguson's Succession (1865) 17 La. Ann. 255; Cockfield
v. Farley (1869) 21 La. Ann. 521;
Levy v. Police Jury (1872) 24 La.
Ann. 292.

Missouri. — Grace v. Gill (1908)
136 Mo. App. 186, 116 S. W. 442.

New Jersey.—Biddle v. Pugh (1900)
59 N. J. Eq. 480, 45 Atl. 626.

North Carolina. — Harper v. Edwards (1894) 115 N. C. 246, 20 S. E.
392.

Tennessee. — Christian v. John (1903) 111 Tenn. 92, 76 S. W. 906.

Texas. — Clayton v. Watkins (1898)
19 Tex. Civ. App. 133, 47 S. W. 910
(vendor's lien).

Vermont.—Hollister v. York (1886)
59 Vt. 1, 9 Atl. 2.

Canada. — Rogers v. Brann (1905)
6 Ont. Week. Rep. 993. See also Trust & L. Co. v. Stevenson (1892)
20 Ont. App. Rep. 66.

Where the grantee of mortgaged premises assumes payment of the debt, his contract is an original, absolute promise to pay it, enforceable by the mortgagee, and is not, therefore, discharged merely because the debt, as to the original debtor, has become barred by the Statute of Limitations. Schmucker v. Sibert (Kan.) supra; Hendricks v. Brooks (1909) 80 Kan. 1, 133 Am. St. Rep. 186, 101 Pac. 622.

And where the grantee assumed payment of a specific portion of the encumbrance on the property as a part of the purchase money, it was held in Harts v. Emery (Ill.) supra, that he became personally liable to the holder of the notes as a principal debtor, the same as though he had agreed with such holder directly to pay this portion; that payments made by him operated to prevent the running of the Statute of Limitations in his favor; and that the fact that an action on the notes could not have been maintained against the original maker thereof, by reason of the operation of the Statute of Limitations as to him, was not a bar to an action against the grantee.

So, where the purchaser of the mortgaged property assumed payment of the mortgage, it was held in Daniels v. Johnson (Cal.) supra, that this assumption in the deed constituted an agreement to pay the note secured by the mortgage, and not a mere agreement to discharge the mortgage lien; and that the Statute of Limitations was thereby tolled as to the debt as well as to the mortgage, so that an action to foreclose the mortgage, brought within the statutory period after such an agreement was made, was not barred on the theory that the statute had run against the debt, and that when the debt is barred the remedy as to the mortgage is lost.

An acknowledgment of the indebtedness, made by a purchaser of the mortgaged property who has assumed and agreed to pay the mortgage, is not ineffectual to toll the Statute of Limitations against an action to foreclose the mortgage, on the ground that it is made by a stranger to the original note and mortgage; the grantee in a deed of mortgaged premises, by which he assumes and agrees to pay the mortgage indebtedness, becomes primarily liable to the mortgagee; and therefore he is "the party to be charged" within the meaning of the statute. Fielding v. Iler (Cal.) supra.

Where successive grantees from the mortgagor each assumed and agreed to pay the mortgage as part of the consideration, and interest was paid by the last grantee up to within two years of the suit, although the mortgagor and the immediate grantee had made no payments within sixteen years, it was held in Biddle v. Pugh (N. J.) supra, that the payments of interest were referable to the bond held by the mortgagee, and operated, as to a suit on the bond, to toll the Statute of Limitations; and that immediate grantees could not set up the statute as a bar to a suit brought by the holder of the bond for a deficiency arising on a sale of the property on foreclosure.

And where, before the Statute of Limitations had run on vendor's lien notes, the land was conveyed to one who, as part of the consideration, assumed payment of the notes, it was held in Conley v. Archillion (Ark.) supra, that an action on the notes, brought within the period of limitations after such assumption, was not barred; and that the indebtedness might be enforced by a sale of the land.

In Tuttle v. Armstead (Conn.) supra, where the grantee of mortgaged premises, as a part of the purchase price, assumed and agreed to pay the mortgage debt, it was held that payments of interest by him interrupted the running of the Statute of Limitations against him on his promise, although the mortgage subsequently proved to be invalid.

Where the grantee has assumed a duly recorded mortgage upon the property, and has kept the debt alive by payments of interest, a purchaser from him stands in no better position than the grantee with respect to the right to plead the Statute of Limitations against an action to foreclose the mortgage. Murray v. Emery (1900) 187 Ill. 408, 58 N. E. 327.

A case sometimes cited on the present question is Heyer v. Pruyn (1839) 7 Paige (N. Y.) 465, 34 Am. Dec. 355, where the acknowledgment of the debt which, it was held, interrupted the running of the Statute of Limitations against a suit to foreclose a mortgage, was made by a purchaser at execution sale; but the holding that the acknowledgment was effective as against the purchaser and his grantee is apparently similar in principle to that in other cases, not covered in the present annotation, with respect to the question whether a mortgagor's acknowledgment is effective as against a subsequent grantee.

b. Where grantee has not assumed mortgage.

Even though the grantee of property subject to a mortgage does not assume or agree to pay the debt, so as to render him personally liable therefor, it has been held that he has such interest that acknowledgments or payments made by him on the debt may interrupt the running of the Statute of Limitations as to a suit to enforce the mortgage lien. Many of the cases in which, so far as the facts appear, the grantee did not assume the debt, do not, however, discuss this point. But, grouping the cases as the facts appear, the following seem to support the rule indicated:

California. — CURTIS v. HOLEE (reported herewith), ante, 1024; Foster v. Bowles (1903) 138 Cal. 346, 71 Pac. 494, 649; Cotcher v. Barton (1920) — Cal. App. —, 193 Pac. 169.

Colorado. — Medina v. Phelps (1907) 39 Colo. 92, 88 Pac. 848.

Florida. — Phifer v. Abbott (1917) 73 Fla. 402, 74 So. 488.

Iowa. — Senninger v. Rowley (1906) 138 Iowa, 617, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 223, 116 N. W. 695 (recognizing rule); Fitzgerald v. Flanagan (1912) 155 Iowa, 217, 135 N. W. 738, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 1104.

Kansas. — McLane v. Allison (1899) 60 Kan. 441, 56 Pac. 747; Neosho Valley Invest. Co. v. Huston (1900) 61 Kan. 859, per curiam opinion in 59 Pac. 643.

Nebraska. — McLaughlin v. Senne (1907) 78 Neb. 631, 111 N. W. 377; Girard Trust Co. v. Dixon (1911) 89 Neb. 557, 181 N. W. 912.

New Jersey. — Moore v. Clark (1885) 40 N. J. Eq. 152; Colton v. Depew (1899) 59 N. J. Eq. 126, 44 Atl. 662, affirmed in (1900) 60 N. J. Eq. 454, 83 Am. St. Rep. 650, 46 Atl. 728.

In the reported case (CURTIS v. HOLEE, ante, 1024) it is held that the grantee of property subject to a mortgage has, although he does not agree to pay the debt, such an interest in it that he may contract for an extension of time for payment, which will be valid as against himself and his successors in interest.

And although the grantee of the mortgagor was not personally liable, and the liability of grantor on the bond had been extinguished by his discharge in bankruptcy, it was held in Colton v. Depew (N. J.) supra, that payments of interest made by the grantee after the discharge in bankruptcy were necessarily referable to the mortgage, and were an acknowledgment that the grantee held under, or by permission of, the mortgagee, and not adversely; and that, as the right to bring ejectment would continue for twenty years from the time of the last payment, so the right to foreclose the mortgage continued for the same period. In this case the payments were made by a remote grantee, who, as appears from the opinion on the appeal, had taken a conveyance subject to the mortgage, which he expressly assumed as part of the consideration, but the deed to the immediate grantee contained no assumption clause and no agreement that the mortgage money should be taken as part of the consideration; and it was said that, therefore, the remote grantee was under no personal liability.

So, in Medina v. Phelps (Colo.) supra, where the conveyance was made subject to a trust deed given as security for a note, and the grantee made payments of interest on the indebtedness, and otherwise acknowledged it as unpaid, it was held that his acts constituted an admission that the land was subject to the deed of trust, and an engagement for the satisfaction of the balance of the note secured thereby out of the mortgaged premises, and operated to suspend the running of the Statute of Limitations against proceedings to foreclose the deed of trust, even though he had not assumed or agreed to pay the indebtedness in such a way as to make him personally liable therefor.

In Fitzgerald v. Flanagan (Iowa) supra, where the statute provided that "causes of action founded on contract are revived by an admission in writing, signed by the party to be charged, that the debt is unpaid, or by a like promise to pay the same," the court, in discussing the question whether a debt or mortgage might be revived by the grantee of the mortgagor, said: "As the grantee who holds the legal title is the only necessary party, the universal holding is that he is in such privity to the original mortgagor that he may plead the bar of the statute. . . . If such grantee were a mere stranger, he could not plead the statute, as the right to so plead is generally regarded as a personal privilege. . . . Having this right, it is optional with the grantee whether or not he will interpose such a plea, and it is not for his grantor to complain. If he has the right to interpose the plea, it logically follows that he should be allowed to waive the statute, which is one of repose in his behalf, and we think that a grantee from a mortgagor of real estate, the mortgage being of record and a prior lien upon the land, may waive the Statute of Limitations after action brought, or revive the cause of action before suit is commenced, as provided in § 3456 of the Code. Indeed, this seems to have been the holding of all courts where the question has arisen, no matter what their view as to the effect of the statute in general."

And the court took the view in Senninger v. Rowley (Iowa) supra, that, although a grantee of land does not assume personal liability for the payment of a mortgage thereon, his written admission that it is unpaid is sufficient to toll the Statute of Limitations against foreclosure of the mortgage. In this case, however, it was held that there was a sufficient showing that the grantee had assumed the mortgage, although there was no assumption of the debt in the deed, it being held that the grantee's undertaking to assume and pay the mortgage might be shown by parol, consisting, in this instance, of evidence of payment of interest and principal by him.

In McLane v. Allison (1899) 60 Kan. 441, 56 Pac. 747, supra, where the deed recited the existence of a mortgage on the premises, but the conveyance was not expressly made subject thereto, it was held that, although the Statute of Limitations had run as to the mortgagor upon the note secured by the mortgage, payments of interest by the purchaser and her grantee constituted a binding admission that the land was subject to the mortgage, and an agreement for its payment to the value of the mortgaged premises, and suspended the running of the Statute of Limitations against an action to foreclose the mortgage. It was unsuccessfully contended that the doctrine should apply that the right of action to foreclose a mortgage lien is inseparable from the right of action to recover the debt, and that, when suit upon the note is barred, an action upon the mortgage is likewise barred. The counter contention was made, and apparently adopted, that an action to foreclose a mortgage may be maintained without the right—or, at least, without the ability—to recover a money judgment for the debt. To support this proposition, the court cited Andrews v. Morse (1893) 51 Kan. 30, 32 Pac. 640, the facts of which, however, place it beyond the scope of the annotation.

And in Schmucker v. Sibert (1877) 18 Kan. 104, 26 Am. Rep. 765, the court said that, where the deed specifies that it is made subject to a certain mortgage, an acceptance of the deed is an undertaking that, to the extent, at least, of the value of the granted premises, the grantee shall pay the mortgage, and the statute begins to run only from the execution of the deed.

Where mortgaged land was conveyed by a deed wherein no reference to the mortgage was made, it was held in Cotcher v. Barton (1920) — Cal. App. —, 193 Pac. 169, that the mortgage might be foreclosed as against the purchaser, in view of his written acknowledgment of the indebtedness which interrupted the running of the Statute of Limitations, even though the statute had run as against an action on the note secured by the mortgage, and a statute provided that "a lien is extinguished by the lapse of time within which, under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, an action can be brought upon the principal obligation." The court said: "While the mortgage may be said to be incidental to the note, it is a distinct and separate contract. Particularly is this true where, as here, the mortgaged property has been conveyed, and is held by one other than the maker of the note and mortgage. The note is a contract to pay money. While the mortgage is a contract creating a lien upon the real estate described therein to secure performance of an act, no personal obligation to perform the same is implied thereby. . . . Facts may exist which toll the statute as to the note, as where the maker is out of the state, but do not apply to a mortgagor who remains in the state. . . . It follows, we think, that, as subsequent grantee of the mortgage, defendant's relation to the mortgage was the same as though he, in the first instance, had executed the same on his own property, thereby creating a lien as security for the performance of the obligation of the Security Investment Company, maker of the note; that the promissory note evidencing the obligation to pay the money and the mortgage creating the lien must, under the circumstances, be deemed separate and distinct contracts, as to which the party to either contract, without affecting the right of the other to plead the statute, might continue or extend the contract to which he was a party by complying with the provisions of said § 360. While it has been frequently held, as provided in said § 2911, that the lien of a mortgage is extinguished when the principal obligation is barred, in none of them, so far as we are advised, was presented the question here involved, namely, the continuance or extension of the mortgage lien by written acknowledgment of its existence, to a time beyond that when the principal obligation is barred. Hence we hold that such cases are not applicable to the facts here presented."

But in Frase v. Lee (1910) 152 Mo. App. 562, 134 S. W. 10, where the conveyance made no reference to a trust deed duly recorded on the property, and it was not shown that the grantee had assumed and agreed to pay the debt secured by the deed of trust, it was held that a payment of interest by him on the debt was the payment by a mere volunteer, and did not interrupt the running of the Statute of Limitations against a suit to foreclose the trust deed. The court said: "It is contended now by plaintiff that the payment of interest by Block [a grantee], and his having written a letter to plaintiff in which he mentioned something about paying the debt, were recognition by him of the deed of trust, and that he is, for that reason, now held for its payment, and therefore, if he paid interest upon the note, the running of the Statute of Limitations was suspended, and that his suit is in time. With this contention we do not agree. If Block did not agree at the time he purchased the land to pay the debt secured by the deed of trust, a subsequent agreement made by him with the holder of the note, to be binding, would have to be based upon a new consideration; so that even though he may have promised to pay the debt, and did, as a matter of fact, pay interest upon it, this would not constitute a contract upon his part to pay the principal of the note. . . . As Block was not bound to pay the debt, payments made by him were, in contemplation of law, made by a mere volunteer, and did not stop the running of the Statute of Limitations. Neither can it make any difference that Block paid interest on the debt to prevent a foreclosure of the deed of trust upon the land. A payment to stop the running of the Statute of Limitations must be made by someone legally bound to pay the debt. A payment made by one for his own convenience, merely, is not sufficient." At the time of the foreclosure action, the land was held by a remote grantee, but, as indicated from the above quotation, the court treated the case as though the land was still held by the original grantee. The opinion in the above case was adopted by the St. Louis court of appeals in (1911) 160 Mo. App. 607, 140 S. W. 1194, when the case was transferred to that court.

There is a suggestion in Devens v. Van Valkenburg (1915) 192 Mo. App. 215, 180 S. W. 996, that the Frase Case, supra, was distinguishable on the ground that it was an action on the note secured by a deed of trust and to foreclose the deed. But the action in the Frase Case is referred to, in the opinion therein, as one merely to foreclose a deed of trust. In the Devens Case, the court held that the grantee had reissued the note secured by the trust deed given by his predecessor in interest, and that the statute, under the circumstances, should run from the time of the reissuance.

III. As to liability of mortgagor or grantor.

a. Cases holding that running of statute is not interrupted.

On the question whether acknowledgments or payments by a grantee of mortgaged premises, who has assumed the debt, interrupt the running of the Statute of Limitations in favor of the grantor, there is a conflict among the authorities. The better rule would seem to be that they do not have this effect, and this view is supported by the following cases: Biddel v. Brizzolara (1880) 56 Cal. 374; Old Alms-House Farm v. Smith (1884) 52 Conn. 434; Boughton v. Harder (1899) 46 App. Div. 352, 61 N. Y. Supp. 574; Regan v. Williams (1904) 185 Mo. 620, 105 Am. St. Rep. 600, 84 S. W. 959; Cottrell v. Shepherd (1894) 86 Wis. 649, 39 Am. St. Rep. 919, 57 N. W. 983.

The reasons for the rule are thus stated in Old Alms-House Farm v. Smith (Conn.) supra: "If the defendant himself had paid the interest during the time, the payments would have had such effect, for each payment would be a voluntary admission by him that the debt was then subsisting, which would raise by implication a new promise to pay it.

But the payments of interest by the successive owners of the equity of redemption were on their own account, in order to keep alive the equity of redemption, of which they had become the purchasers; for if they failed to pay interest their equitable estate would become liable to be extinguished by foreclosure. Such payments, therefore, being made on their own account and for their own benefit, had no legal significance as regards the maker of the note, and effected no change whatever in the legal relations between the plaintiff and the defendant. They were not the agents of the defendant in making the payments, neither did they profess to be acting for him. How, then, can the payments be regarded as made by the defendant, when they were neither made by him personally, nor by any authorized agent in his behalf? . . . The defendant was liable on the note. The grantees were liable to have their land taken for its payment. These liabilities are separate and distinct. Neither party could do anything to increase the liability of the other. How could the grantees, by any act of theirs, acknowledge that the mortgage debt was a subsisting indebtedness, so as to subject the defendant to a new liability upon it, when they themselves were not liable on the note? We think the grantees could do nothing by word or deed to remove the bar of the Statute of Limitations, so far as the defendant is concerned."

A grantee who has assumed payment of a mortgage on the premises does not become, as to the debt, a principal, with the grantor as surety, so as to permit the grantee, by making payments on the indebtedness, to interrupt the running of the Statute of Limitations as to the grantor, under the doctrine that payments by a principal will suspend the statute as to a surety. Regan v. Williams (1904) 185 Mo. 620, 105 Am. St. Rep. 600, 84 S. W. 959, supra. The court said: "The reason why a payment by the principal stops it as to a surety is not because one is principal and the other surety, but because both are usually joint promisors; that is, the surety is affected by the act of the principal in his capacity as a joint promisor. The idea is that persons who jointly bind themselves are all liable to the promisee by virtue of their original agreement, so that performance or part performance by one is the act of all. . . . The principle only applies where the payment was made by one originally liable. . . . Whether or not the statute ceased to run in favor of the defendant, when the payments were made by the subsequent grantees, depends, then, on whether he can be considered a joint promisor with them. Undoubtedly he was not. They were not parties to the note when it was made, and only became obligated to pay it by subsequent contracts between themselves and the maker, Williams. Their responsibility, far from resting on a promise by them given in conjunction with Williams to the payee, Regan, rests exclusively on the promises they made afterwards to assume the debt. In no sense were they joint obligors with him. Their promises neither coincided with his in point of time, nor were made with the same person, nor based on the same consideration. . . . The precedents are all against this contention of the appellant."

So, where there was an oral agreement that the grantee of the mortgagor, as a part of the consideration, should pay the mortgage, and the grantee subsequently made payments of principal and interest to the mortgagee, it was contended in Cottrell v. Shepherd (1894) 86 Wis. 649, 39 Am. St. Rep. 919, 57 N. W. 983, supra, that the payments by the grantee should be held to have been made by the grantor, and so to remove the bar of the Statute of Limitations as to the latter, on the theory that the grantee occupied the relation of a joint debtor with, or agent of, the grantor. The court rejected this contention, however, on the ground that the grantee was not a joint debtor, or jointly liable, with the grantor, and that he made the payments, not for the benefit of the grantor, but for his own benefit, to protect his equity of redemption, and that he was not acting in any sense as agent for the grantor.

The statement in Mack v. Anderson (1901) 165 N. Y. 529, 59 N. E. 289, that when the grantee, who had assumed and agreed to pay the mortgage, paid interest on the mortgage indebtedness, he did so to protect his own title, and in paying it necessarily acted for himself as principal, and not as an agent, points to the view that by such a payment by the grantee the Statute of Limitations in favor of the grantor is not interrupted, although the question was not directly presented for decision. See this case under IV. infra.

The view that payments made by a grantee of mortgaged premises will not interrupt the running of the Statute of Limitations in favor of the mortgagor has been taken, also, in several cases in which, so far as appears, the grantee did not assume payment of the mortgage debt.

Thus, in Home L. Ins. Co. v. Elwell (1897) 111 Mich. 689, 70 N. W. 334, where the payments were made by one who had taken a conveyance subject to a mortgage on the premises, the court said there was nothing to show that the payments made by the grantee were other than payments for his own benefit to relieve the premises from the encumbrance; that, where the payment is made by another than the debtor, such other must be authorized to make a new promise on behalf of the debtor, in order to take the case out of the statute; that there was nothing in this case to show that any such authority was given to the grantee; and that presumably the payments were made on his own behalf to save his estate; and the court could not say that on expectation on the part of the grantor that the grantee would make the payments, if such might be inferred, was tantamount to authorizing or directing the grantee to bind the grantor by a new promise.

And in Dundee Invest. Co. v. Horner (1897) 30 Or. 558, 48 Pac. 175, an action to foreclose a mortgage, the court took the view that payments of interest made by a grantee of the mortgagor, after the grantee had parted with his interest, were in effect made by a stranger, the grantee never having assumed the debt, and were, therefore, ineffective to toll the Statute of Limitations as to his grantee or as to the original debtor.

b. Cases holding that running of statute is interrupted.

Although, as indicated above, the better rule, and that supported, perhaps, by the weight of authority, is to the contrary, there are some cases to the effect that acknowledgments or payments made by a grantee of mortgaged premises who has assumed the debt may interrupt the running of the Statute of Limitations in favor of the mortgagor. Cucullu v. Hernandez (1881) 103 U. S. 105, 26 L. ed. 322 (applying rule in Louisiana); Blackburn University v. Weer (1886) 21 Ill. App. 29; Collier v. His Creditors (1846) 12 Rob. (La.) 398 (purchaser at execution sale); Cockfield v. Farley (1869) 21 La. Ann. 521; Levy v. Police Jury (1872) 24 La. Ann. 292; Biddle v. Pugh (1900) 59 N. J. Eq. 480, 45 Atl. 626; Forsyth v. Bristowe (1853) 8 Exch. 716, 155 Eng. Reprint, 1540, 17 Jur. 675, 22 L. J. Exch. N. S. 255, 1 Week. Rep. 356; Alston v. Mineard (1907) 31 Sol. Jo. (Eng.) 132, 2 Butterworths' Ten Years' Dig. (1898-1907) 570; Ross v. Schmitz (1913) — Sask. —, 14 D. L.R. 648, 25 West. L. R. 828. See also Longstreet v. Brown (1897) — N. J. Eq. —, 37 Atl. 56 (recognizing rule); Dibb v. Walker [1893] 2 Ch. (Eng.) 429, 62 L. J. Ch. N. S. 536, 3 Reports, 474, 68 L. T. N. S. 610, 41 Week. Rep. 427 (where payments of interest by a life tenant under a deed of settlement were held to interrupt the running of the Statute of Limitations against an action to recover a deficiency from the estate of the settlor); and Rogers v. Brann (1905) 6 Ont. Week. Rep. 993.

And payments of interest by the grantee of the mortgaged premises, who had not personally assumed payment of the debt, were held in Macfar- land v. Utz (1912) 175 Ill. App. 525, to toll the Statute of Limitations in favor of the mortgagor. The court said that these payments by the grantee were made both for his benefit and for the benefit of his grantors, and served to toll the statute and keep alive the debt for the payment of which the mortgaged property was primarily liable. It may be observed, however, that the decree of foreclosure in this case was in rem, and not in personam against the grantors, to whom a reconveyance had been ordered.

In Blackburn University v. Weer (1886) 21 Ill. App. 29, supra, where a conveyance of lots reserved a lien to secure a note given for part of the purchase money, and in subsequent conveyances the lien was expressly retained, each grantee assuming payment of the note, the court took the view that payments on the indebtedness made by an immediate grantee were, in effect, made by him as agent of the original grantee, and arrested the running of the Statute of Limitations as to the latter.

In Levy v. Police Jury (1872) 24 La. Ann. 292, supra, the court said that each successive purchaser assumed payment of the mortgage for the benefit of the preceding one, and that payments of interest (which were made by each successive purchaser) were in discharge of the former owner, and with his implied consent. And to the same effect are Collier v. His Creditors (1846) 12 Rob. (La.) 398, and Cockfield v. Farley (1869) 21 La. Ann. 521, supra. In the latter case, a payment on the mortgage debt, made, before prescription had accrued, by a remote grantee from the mortgagor, who had assumed payment of the debt, was held to interrupt prescription both as to himself and the original debtor.

In Forsyth v. Bristowe (1853) 8 Exch. 716, 155 Eng. Reprint, 1540, 17 Jur. 675, 22 L. J. Exch. N. S. 255, 1 Week. Rep. 356, supra, where the grantee of the equity of redemption had agreed to pay, and had paid, the interest on the mortgage debt within the statutory period of limitations, the court said that the statute did not expressly require that the payments should be made by the party liable, or his agent, but that, if it implied such a requirement, the assignee of the equity of redemption, who covenanted to pay the interest, was sufficiently an agent for this purpose.

In Alston v. Mineard (Eng.) supra, where the defendant conveyed to the trustees of his daughter's marriage settlement, property which he had mortgaged to the plaintiff, and the trustees paid the interest on the indebtedness, it was held that payments made by the trustees were sufficient to take the case out of the Statute of Limitations.

Where there was an implied covenant, by operation of a statute, on the part of an assignee of the equity of redemption, to pay the mortgage debt, the court in Ross v. Schmitz (Sask.) supra, held that payments of interest by the assignee to the mortgagee were made on behalf of the mortgagor, and interrupted the running of the Statute of Limitations in favor of the latter.

IV. Acknowledgment or payment by purchaser of part of mortgaged premises.

In several cases the question has been as to whether acknowledgment or payment made by a purchaser of a portion of the mortgaged premises would interrupt the running of the Statute of Limitations in favor of the purchaser of another portion. And the cases do not seem to be in accord upon this question.

It was held in Mack v. Anderson (1901) 165 N. Y. 529, 59 N. E. 289, that payments on the mortgage indebtedness made by a grantee of one parcel of the premises from the mortgagor, such grantee having assumed and agreed to pay a certain portion of the debt secured by the mortgage, would not operate to suspend the running of limitations in favor of a purchaser of another parcel of the mortgaged premises, since the payment by such grantee was on his own behalf, to protect his own title, and was not made by him as agent of the mortgagor, or as an agent or privy of the purchaser of the other portion.

To a similar effect is Boughton v. Harder (1899) 46 App. Div. 352, 61 N. Y. Supp. 574, where a suit to foreclose a mortgage upon three parcels of land was held barred by the Statute of Limitations as to two of the parcels, notwithstanding the fact that a grantee of the third parcel and his successors in interest, who by the terms of their deeds assumed and agreed to pay the mortgage, had continued to pay interest on the mortgage debt until about five years before the bringing of the suit, since the mortgagor's grantees were not his agents, and their payments were made upon their own covenants, to protect their own title.

But in Hollister v. York (1886) 59 Vt. 1, 9 Atl. 2, the court held that a portion of the mortgaged premises which had been deeded to the wife of the purchaser of another part of the premises was equally liable to foreclosure, where payments by him had removed the bar of the Statute of Limitations, quoting the doctrine that, where several persons are interested in the equity of redemption, payment by one of them keeps alive the right of entry not only as against him, but also against all the other owners of the equity. And it was said that the holder of the mortgage could not be deprived of his security by any conveyances; and that, as affecting his security, he was not bound to inquire as to what conveyances had been made, but that when the bar of the statute was removed, he was entitled to all the security given by the mortgage.

Attention is called, also, to Longstreet v. Brown (1897) — N. J. Eq. —, 37 Atl. 56, as illustrative of possibly other cases of the same class, where the payment was not made by a grantee of the mortgagor. This case is to the effect that a payment made by an owner of the equity of redemption of a portion of the mortgaged premises inures to the benefit of all the mortgaged premises still subject to the mortgage, and interrupts the running of the Statute of Limitations in favor of an owner of an equity of redemption in another portion of the mortgaged premises. The court said: "This payment was made by the owner of the equity of redemption of a portion of the mortgaged premises, and inured to the benefit of all the mortgaged premises, still subject to the mortgage. So far as the mortgagee is concerned, the whole mortgage debt is charged in equity on all the mortgaged lands; and, while conveyances by the owner, subsequent to the mortgage, may give rise to equities relating to the order of application of the lands for payment, yet the whole mortgage debt still continues, until payment, a debt chargeable upon all the lands. All the lands being, therefore, chargeable with the debt, in their proper equitable order, the lands of the owners of the equity of redemption in different portions of the premises subject to the debt are to be treated, so far as the mortgagee is concerned, as jointly liable to the equitable charge, and the payment to the mortgagee by any one of such owners should be considered as a payment made on account of this joint equitable liability."

V. Miscellaneous.

As before stated, the annotation does not cover the question as to the sufficiency of the acknowledgment. Of this class of cases, apparently, is Byrnes v. Payne (1918) 103 Wash. 260, 173 Pac. 1091, where it is said: "Some courts hold that a grantee who, prior to the bar of the mortgage debt, accepts title subject to the mortgage, thereby makes such acknowledgment as will interrupt or toll the statute and keep the debt on foot for another statutory period. Such, however, is not the rule in this state."

And, as illustrative of the same class of cases, attention is called to Wallber v. Caldwell (1907) 79 Neb. 418, 126 Am. St. Rep. 675, 112 N. W. 584, where it was held that a recital in a deed that the conveyance was subject to a certain mortgage did not interrupt the running of the Statute of Limitations against an action to foreclose the mortgage, it not appearing that the grantee assumed the debt or retained any part of the consideration on account of such indebtedness. The court approved the rule that an acknowledgment of a debt, to take the case out of the statute, must be made to the creditor or someone acting for or representing him.

And the question whether acknowledgments of the indebtedness by a purchaser of the mortgaged property may rebut the presumption of payment of the mortgage arising from lapse of time is not within the scope of the present annotation. As holding that it may have this effect, see, among possibly other cases, Park v. Peck (1829) 1 Paige (N. Y.) 477.

Although distinct from the other cases cited in the annotation, as the indebtedness which it was sought to enforce was not the mortgage debt, attention is called to Greenley v. Greenley (1906) 114 App. Div. 640, 100 N. Y. Supp. 114, where the defendant agreed that, if the mortgagor would deed to him the mortgaged property, he would manage and dispose of it, and, after reimbursing himself for his services and expenses, would pay certain obligations, among which were notes held by the plaintiff; and it was held that, although the Statute of Limitations had run against an action on the notes, the holder might maintain a suit in equity to establish the validity of the agreement, and to compel its performance.

R. E. H.

MINNIE M. PARSONS, Plff. in Err.,

v.

ESTATE OF HENRY R. PARSONS, Deceased.

Colorado Supreme Court (Dept. No. 1) — April 4, 1921.

(— Colo. —, 201 Pac. 559.)

Divorce — survival of liability for alimony.

Death of the husband terminates the liability of his estate for alimony under a decree adopting a contract fixing the amount of alimony, which does not provide for its surviving the husband's death.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1040.]

ERROR to the District Court for Montrose County (Black, J.) to review a judgment disallowing plaintiff's claim for alimony against the estate of her deceased husband. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Catlin & Blake, for plaintiff in error:

The court has power to decree alimony during the natural life of the wife, thus making it a charge upon the husband's estate, should he die first.

14 Cyc. 788; O'Hagan v. O'Hagan, 4 Iowa, 509; Stratton v. Stratton, 77 Me. 373, 52 Am. Rep. 779; Miller v. Miller, 64 Me. 484; Burr v. Burr, 10 Paige, 20; Murphy v. Moyle, 17 Utah, 118, 70 Am. St. Rep. 767, 53 Pac. 1010; Grover v. Clover, 69 Colo. 72, 169 Pac. 578; Storey v. Storey, 125 Ill. 608, 1 L.R.A. 320, 8 Am. St. Rep. 417, 18 N. E. 329; Buck v. Buck, 60 Ill. 242; Whitney v. Whitney Elevator & Warehouse Co. 106 C. C. A. 28, 183 Fed. 678; Steinkopf v. Steinkopf, 165 Wis. 224, 1 A.L.R. 1103, 161 N. W. 757; Wilson v. Hinman, 182 N. Y. 408, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 232, 108 Am. St. Rep. 820, 75 N. E. 236; Stone v. Bayley, 75 Wash. 184, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 429, 134 Pac. 820; 1 R. C. L. 947; Creyts v. Creyts, 143 Mich. 375, 114 Am. St. Rep. 656, 106 N. W. 1111.

Mr. John L. Stivers, for defendant in error:

Alimony continues only during the joint lives of the parties.

Lennahan v. O'Keefe, 107 Ill. 620; Brenger v. Brenger, 142 Wis. 26, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 387, 135 Am. St. Rep. 1050, 125 N. W. 109, 19 Ann. Cas. 1136; 2 Bishop, Marr. & Div. 6th ed. §§ 427, 428; Stone v. Duffy, 219 Mass. 178, 106 N. E. 595; 14 Cyc. 788; Wilson v. Hinman, 182 N. Y. 408, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 232, 108 Am. St. Rep. 820, 75 N. E.

236; Maxwell v. Sawyer, 90 Wis. 352, 63 N. W. 284; Lally v. Lally, 152 Wis. 56, 138 N. W. 651; Faversham v. Faversham, 161 App. Div. 521, 146 N. Y. Supp. 569; Hazard v. Hazard, 197 Ill. App. 612; O'Hagan v. O'Hagan, 4 Iowa, 509; Wilson v. Hinman, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 232, note; Yates v. Yates, 165 Wis. 250, 161 N. W. 743; Craig v. Craig, 163 Ill. 176, 45 N. E. 153, 19 C. J. 279; Storey v. Storey, 125 Ill. 608, 1 L.R.A. 320, 8 Am. St. Rep. 417, 18 N. E. 329.

Allen, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This cause is before us upon a writ of error to review a judgment of the district court of Montrose county, disallowing a claim of a divorced wife against the estate of her former husband, now deceased.

In March, 1918, the claimant, Minnie M. Parsons, brought an action for divorce against Henry R. Parsons. On April 17, 1918, prior to the trial of the case, the parties entered into a written stipulation and agreement intended to settle their property rights and fix the amount and manner of payment of permanent alimony for the support of the plaintiff and of a minor child of plaintiff and defendant. That part of the written agreement which is material upon this review reads as follows: "The defendant agrees and binds himself to pay to plaintiff the sum of thirty-five dollars ($35) per month so long as she shall remain single, for the full maintenance and support of herself and the minor child of plaintiff and defendant, Zelta Louise. . . ."

(— Colo. —, 301 Pac. 559.)

Thereafter, and on the same day, the cause was tried upon its merits, resulting in findings for plaintiff. No testimony was taken for the purpose of fixing the amount of alimony, but, in exact accord with the stipulation of the parties, the court ordered that "plaintiff shall receive from the defendant the sum of $35 a month alimony for the support of plaintiff and said child as long as said plaintiff shall remain single and unmarried."

The defendant in the divorce action died October 13, 1918. During his lifetime he paid all alimony due for the period of time ending October 17, 1918. Several months thereafter the plaintiff filed in the county court a claim against the estate of the deceased for alimony as having accrued since October 17, 1918, notwithstanding the death of the divorced husband. The claim was disallowed, and, on appeal to the district court, was again denied.

The question to be decided is whether the divorced wife, Minnie M. Parsons, is still entitled to receive from the estate of Henry R. Parsons, deceased, the monthly allowance awarded to her as alimony for the support of herself and minor child, or whether she ceased to be entitled to the payment of such alimony upon the death of her divorced husband.

The decree as to the allowance of permanent alimony was a consent decree. It embodied fully the agreement made and filed by the parties, giving effect to and ratifying the agreement both as to the amount and as to the manner and time of payment of the alimony. It is generally held that agreements affecting the amount of alimony may be adopted by the court. 19 C. J. 251, § 586. This was done in the instant case.

We will assume, without deciding, that, under our divorce statute, the courts have the power to make a decree for alimony which will survive the death of the husband. In Stone v. Bayley, 75 Wash. 184, 48 L.R.A. (N.S.) 429, 134 Pac. 820, it is said: "Authority is not wanting that the making of a contract by the parties that a decree may be entered providing for the payment of alimony or for the support of minor children, to continue after death of the father, has the effect of giving the court power to make such a decree, even if the court would not ordinarily possess that power under the statute."

In Stone v. Bayley, supra, the court was concerned with a contract, and not a decree. In Storey v. Storey, 125 Ill. 608, 1 L.R.A. 320, 8 Am. St. Rep. 417, 18 N. E. 329, the court construed a consent decree, and not a contract. In each case the decision finally rested on the intention of the parties as to whether payments of alimony should continue after the husband's death.

The contract upon which the claimant relies in the instant case does not disclose any intention that it should survive the death of the husband. There being an absence of any agreement of the parties to that effect, and the decree not showing that the court intended to bind the husband's heirs not survive the former husband's death. 19 C. J. 278, §§ 633, 635; 1 R. C. L. 933, §§ 80, 81. It was not error to disallow the claim.

Divorce—survival of liability for alimony.

The judgment is affirmed. Former opinion withdrawn.

Teller, J., sitting for Scott, Ch. J., and Denison, J., concur.

Petition for rehearing denied November 7, 1921.

ANNOTATION.

Death of husband as affecting alimony.

- I. Introductory, 1040.
- II. Limited divorce or separation, 1041.
- III. Absolute divorce:
 - a. Restricted view, 1045.
 - b. Broader view, 1050.
 - c. English cases, 1053.
- IV. Arrears at time of husband's death, 1054.
- V. Consent, 1055.
- VI. Miscellaneous, 1057.

I. Introductory.

This annotation does not include the question whether a provision in a decree directing the payment by the father of a certain sum for the support of a child will survive the death of the father; nor does it include cases where the husband dies before judgment, or pending an appeal.

For power to enter judgment in divorce nunc pro tunc after death of party, see the annotation to Re Pillsbury, 3 A.L.R. 1403.

For what amounts to a "final division and distribution" of estate within statute allowing such in lieu of alimony, see the annotation to Steinkopf v. Steinkopf, 1 A.L.R. 1106.

The word "alimony" in English law comes from a time when there was no judicial divorce a vinculo for the husband's fault, if at all; and the word was used to signify an allowance judicially granted to the wife for support during a divorce a mensa et thoro, or during separation. But, at an early day in America, as later in England, the question arose, What is to be done in the way of support, maintenance, or property for the wife divorced a vinculo for the husband's fault?

With the enlarged idea, the word "alimony" took on an enlarged meaning, and in modern American law has come generally in legal parlance to include not only its former meaning, but also the provision or allowance, whether periodical or in gross, judicially made to the wife upon an absolute divorce. See, for example: Pryor v. Pryor (1908) 88 Ark. 302, 129 Am. St. Rep. 102, 114 S. W. 700; Parsons v.

Parsons (1838) 9 N. H. 309, 32 Am. Dec. 362; Sheafe v. Sheafe (1852) 24 N. H. 564; Lynde v. Lynde (1902) 64 N. J. Eq. 736, 58 L.R.A. 471, 97 Am. St. Rep. 692, 52 Atl. 694; Piatt v. Piatt (1839) 9 Ohio, 37; Tuttle v. Tuttle (1910) 26 S. D. 545, 128 N. W. 695.

In Burrows v. Purple (1871) 107 Mass. 428, Gray, J., after stating the Massachusetts usage, said: "In many other states, also, the word 'alimony' is commonly used as equally applicable to all allowances, whether annual or in gross, made to a wife upon a decree of divorce, under similar statutes." Quoted in Robinson v. Robinson (1889) 79 Cal. 511, 21 Pac. 1095.

"In this commonwealth, it is provided by Rev. Laws, chap. 152, § 30, that 'upon a divorce, or upon petition at any time after a divorce, the superior court may decree alimony to the wife, or a part of her estate, in the nature of alimony, to the husband.'" Brown v. Brown (1916) 222 Mass. 415, 111 N. E. 42.

In Warne v. Warne (1916) 36 S. D. 576, 156 N. W. 60, the court said: "'Alimony,' in its strictly legal sense, relates to provisions made pendente lite. Under the statutes of New York, California, and South Dakota, there is no such thing as permanent alimony. It is 'allowance' or 'permanent allowance' for maintenance."

In Bialy v. Bialy (1911) 167 Mich. 564, 133 N. W. 496, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 800, in sustaining the award of a large gross sum in an absolute divorce, the court said: "Alimony, by whatever authority it is conferred, is an incident of marriage, and based on the underlying principle that it is the duty of the husband to support his wife not necessarily to endow her. Primarily it signifies, not a certain portion of his estate, but an allowance or allotment adjudged against him for her subsistence, according to his means and their condition in life; during their separation, whether it be for life or for years. In practical application an award of permanent alimony in a gross sum may result in a division of the husband's estate; but the controlling element, not to be lost sight of, is his compulsory contribution for her support and maintenance under obligations of the marriage contract." Quoted in Kiplinger v. Kiplinger (1912) 172 Mich. 552, 188 N. W. 230.

In Ex parte Spencer (1890) 83 Cal. 460, 17 Am. St. Rep. 266, 23 Pac. 395, a case beyond the scope of this annotation, the court said: "It is true that 'alimony,' in its strict technical sense, proceeds only from husband to wife; and that where the relation of husband and wife does not exist, strictly speaking, there can be no alimony. It is true, also, that the legislature has used the term only in its strict legal sense, and has therefore used the word 'alimony' only when prescribing the provision which the court might make for the support of the wife pendente lite. But the courts have not always been as careful in their use of the word. They have frequently used it as a mere name for another and different allowance, made, and authorized to be made, under § 139 of the Civil Code. It was manifestly so used in this case, and has been so used in many others."

In Nelson v. Nelson (1920) 282 Mo. 412, 221 S. W. 1066, the court said: "There is a distinction, however, between the alimony known to the ecclesiastical law and that provided by the statute. The former was incident to and dependent upon an existing and continuing valid marriage, while the latter is given only upon its dissolution. This distinction should be kept in mind, for it differentiates the two in essential attributes. Under the canonical law administered by the ecclesiastical courts, marriage was a religious sacrament, and no English court had jurisdiction to dissolve it for a postnuptial cause. The divorce granted by these courts was from bed and board,—a mere judicial separation. The relation of husband and wife continued, the door of reconciliation was left open, and they could resume their former status of their own accord without any civil or religious ceremony of any kind or character. As the marriage relation continued, the husband was in no wise disturbed either in his title to the property brought to the marriage by the wife, or in his possession thereof, but he was still under the duty to afford her support according to his means and station in life. Hence, alimony was allowed and enforced as support due from husband to wife during their legal separation. This was the theory and origin of alimony under the unwritten law. Consequently, alimony decreed the wife continued only during the joint lives of herself and her husband. Upon the death of either it was at end. Even unpaid arrearages upon the decease of the wife could not be collected by her personal representatives, but reverted to the husband, though her creditors could in equity have such arrearages impressed in their favor to the amount of the support furnished the wife by them."

18 A.L.R.—66.

The fact that in many states there are statutes empowering the court, on absolute divorce, to divide the property, or to allot to the wife a gross sum, shows that there is no general rule restricting the wife's provision, on divorce, to the life of the husband. And the variances in the statutes are so great as to limit the making of general rules on the subject.

Some of the statutes expressly permit the court, on divorce for an offense of the husband, to make an allowance to the wife for her support during her life. See, for example, De Roche v. De Roche (1908) 12 N. D. 17, 94 N. W. 767, 1 Ann. Cas. 221, and cases there cited.

II. Limited divorce or separation.

There are a number of cases which take the view that, on limited divorce or separation, a provision for regular periodical payments to the wife for her maintenance and support should not relate to periods after the death of the husband.

Arkansas.—Johnson v. Bates (1907) 82 Ark. 284, 101 S. W. 412.

Kentucky.—Lockridge v. Lockridge (1835) 3 Dana, 28, 28 Am. Dec. 52;

Caskey v. Caskey (1883) 4 Ky. L. Rep. 811. See also Lively v. Lively (1886) 7 Ky. L. Rep. 838.

Maryland.—Wallingsford v. Wallingsford (1823) 6 Harr. & J. 485; McCaddin v. McCaddin (1911) 116 Md. 567, 82 Atl. 554; Hood v. Hood (1921) 138 Md. 355, 15 A.L.R. 774, 113 Atl. 895 (arguendo).

Massachusetts.—McIlroy v. McIlroy (1911) 208 Mass. 458, 94 N. E. 696, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 934 (arguendo).

Michigan.—See Wagner v. Wagner (1903) 132 Mich. 343, 93 N. W. 889.

Mississippi.—Dewees v. Dewees (1877) 55 Miss. 315.

New York.—See Sleeper v. Sleeper (1892) 65 Hun, 454, 20 N. Y. Supp. 339, affirmed in (1894) 142 N. Y. 625, 37 N. E. 565.

North Carolina.—Rogers v. Vines (1846) 28 N. C. (6 Ired. L.) 293 (arguendo). See also Taylor v. Taylor (1885) 93 N. C. 418, 53 Am. Rep. 460.

Ohio.—Lockwood v. Krum (1877) 34 Ohio St. 7 (arguendo).

Virginia.—Francis v. Francis (1879) 31 Gratt. 289. But compare Isaacs v. Isaacs (1913) 115 Va. 562, 79 S. E. 1072 (for a later appeal, see (1915) 117 Va. 730, L.R.A.1916B, 648, 86 S. E. 105).

Canada.—Davidson v. Winteler (1902) Rap. Jud. Quebec B. R. 97.

In Lockridge v. Lockridge (Ky.) supra, where, on a bill for alimony, the decree had granted alimony for the life of the wife, it was held: "Alimony is the maintenance secured by judicial authority, during coverture, or until reconciliation. There being no divorce a vinculo, it cannot be right to decree any allowance for the term of the wife's life."

This case was cited in Caskey v. Caskey (1883) 4 Ky. L. Rep. 811, supra, where the court, in holding it error, on a limited divorce, to give the wife the use for life of one third of the husband's land "of any apparent value," said: "The law provides for the wife at the husband's death, 'and being then sui juris, there is no necessity for a decree for maintenance, nor any suitableness or propriety in such decree.'" See also Lively v. Lively (Ky.) supra.

Where separate maintenance was granted the wife, the appellate court said and held: "The final decree will be modified by giving and continuing the permanent alimony until the dissolution of the marriage by the death of either party, instead of 'during the natural life of the wife,' and, as thus modified, is affirmed." Dewees v. Dewees (Miss.) supra.

In Sleeper v. Sleeper (N. Y.) supra, the court, in a separation case, ordered that the monthly payment for maintenance and support should continue no longer than during the joint lives of the parties.

In Lockwood v. Krum (Ohio) supra, where a decree for separation made a provision for alimony during the natural life of the wife, which was not complained of, the court said: "Where alimony is decreed to a wife, not in gross, but in instalments, to be paid at stated times, the decree should limit her right to receive the same to the period of coverture, where it is not to terminate before that relation ceases. The estate of the husband cannot, properly, in a proceeding for alimony, be charged or encumbered with the support of the wife, to continue after his decease."

In Johnson v. Bates (1907) 82 Ark. 284, 101 S. W. 412, supra, it was held that, in a suit by a wife for separate maintenance, it was error to allot to the plaintiff, as maintenance, the use of certain land owned by defendant, for and during the natural life of plaintiff, as such a provision could not extend beyond the life of the husband. The court said: "It is unnecessary now to discuss the question as to whether, in an action for maintenance alone, the chancellor could allow, as maintenance or alimony, one half of the cleared land owned by the defendant, for, even if he could do so, such a provision could not extend beyond the life of the husband. As she was not divorced, and remained the wife of defendant at his death, the law makes provision for her by allowing her dower in his estate."

The decree in Wallingsford v. Wallingsford (1823) 6 Harr. & J. (Md.) 485, supra, directed a sale of part of the husband's real estate, but did not assign an income for the maintenance of the wife, it being supposed that an agreement had been made for that purpose. Without deciding the question as to the validity of the agreement, the court said: "Alimony is a maintenance afforded to the wife where the husband refuses to give it, or where, from his improper conduct, he compels her to separate from him. It is not a portion of his real estate, to be assigned to her in fee simple, subject to her control, or to be sold at her pleasure, but a provision for her support, to continue during their joint lives, or so long as they live separate. Upon the death of either, or upon their mutual consent to live together, it ceases; and the amount of this allowance must depend upon the value of the husband's estate."

Where alimony without divorce was decreed, it was said: "When, therefore, this decree provided for the payment of so much a week as permanent alimony, it was subject to the limitations fixed by law, and could only continue during the joint lives of the husband and wife, while they live apart." McCaddin v. McCaddin (1911) 116 Md. 567, 82 Atl. 554, supra.

So, on a bill for limited divorce, the court said, arguendo: "In the case of the death of one of the parties . . . alimony ceases." Hood v. Hood (1921) 188 Md. 355, 15 A.L.R. 774, 113 Atl. 895, supra.

In Wagner v. Wagner (1908) 132 Mich. 343, 93 N. W. 889, supra, the decree was that alimony be paid in certain monthly instalments so long as the wife should maintain the youngest child of the defendant, and until the child arrived at fourteen years of age, when a smaller amount was to be paid monthly. Other provisions were made, the whole to be in lieu of dower and any interest she had or might have in the real or personal property of the defendant. While declining to pass on the question of the power of the court to determine that allowance should be in lieu of all her other interests in her husband's property, while living and at his death, the court declared: "According to the absolute terms of this decree, she would have no interest in his estate in the event of his death at any time, except that a fund should be set aside to secure to her the monthly allowance decreed. We think the decree for separate maintenance should end with his death, and that then she should be left to her interests in his estate according to the law."

In Rogers v. Vines (1846) 28 N. C. (6 Ired. L.) 293, supra, it appeared that, on a limited divorce, the court had awarded alimony and a separate maintenance to the wife under the statute permitting the court to assign to her separate use such part of the real and personal estate of the husband as the court shall think fit, not exceeding one third part thereof, as the justice of the case may require, which shall continue until a reconciliation shall take place between the parties; and the husband, on her death, having sued to recover slaves assigned to the wife under the decree, the court said, arguendo, that alimony, in its nature, "is a provision for a wife separated from her husband; and it cannot continue after reconciliation, or the death of either party. There is no occasion for it after the death of the husband; for she then becomes entitled to dower and a distributive share, though divorced a mensa et thoro; unless, indeed, she should lose dower by leaving her husband and living in adultery."

Where a decree for a divorce from bed and board and for alimony in gross had been made, and the alimony paid, in Taylor v. Taylor (1885) 93 N. C. 418, 58 Am. Rep. 460, the husband died seized of land which he devised to another than his wife. She sought her dower right, setting up the decree, which recited that, in consideration of the alimony, "he is hereby discharged and acquitted from all liability to maintain, support, and provide for the plaintiff in the future." Upon demurrer to the complaint, it was contended that, by the payment of the alimony, the husband's estate was discharged from all further liability for her support, and his estate was, therefore, not subject to her dower. But the court declared: "This contention is founded on a mistaken notion of alimony and the relative rights of husband and wife upon a divorce a mensa et thoro. Alimony, in its legal sense, may be defined to be that proportion of the husband's estate which is judicially allowed and allotted to the wife for her subsistence and livelihood during the period of their separation. . . . Instead of the allotment of a certain sum to be paid from year to year, the decree, in the case referred to in the pleadings, gave the plaintiff a sum in gross, which she consented to take in lieu of all future allotments, and the husband was thereby discharged from any liability to be charged with any other sums for her support during their separation. . . . When the alimony is allotted out of the specific property of her husband, . . . the property continues in the husband, and will revert in possession to him upon her death or reconciliation. For it is given to her until a reconciliation, and, notwithstanding the divorce, the husband will be entitled to his curtesy in her lands, and the wife to dower in his, just as if there had been no divorce."

Where the husband died pending his appeal from a decree for the wife's separate maintenance, the court, in affirming the decree, said: "Alimony is a proportion of the husband's estate allowed to the wife for her maintenance and support during the period of their separation, and only continues with their joint lives. It ceases with the death of either of the parties. . . . The death of the appellant, therefore, puts an end to the provision in favor of the appellee. It could not, however, affect her right to those instalments which, under the decree of the court, accrued before the death occurred." Francis v. Francis (1879) 31 Gratt. (Va.) 289.

But it is to be noted that in Isaacs v. Isaacs (1913) 115 Va. 562, 79 S. E. 1072, on a divorce from bed and board, the husband was ordered to pay to the wife monthly a certain amount "during her lifetime," and the court held that this charge was a lien against the husband's property, and remanded the case for further proceedings. For a later appeal, see (1915) 117 Va. 730, L.R.A.1916B, 648, 86 S. E. 105.

In Davidson v. Winteler (1903) Rap. Jud. Quebec 13 B. R. 97, it was held, where the wife, in an action for separation from bed and board, was granted an alimentary allowance of a certain yearly sum, payable quarterly during her life, that the obligation did not continue after the death of her husband. An appeal was quashed for want of jurisdiction in (1903) 34 Can. S. C. 274.

There are, however, decisions which show a different view.

In Smythe v. Banks (1884) 73 Ga. 303, the question arose on the death of the husband, in this way: A decree for alimony had been granted the wife on separation. An agent of the husband held a note for him, secured by mortgage. The agent was appointed receiver to collect this money, and hold it subject to order of the court. After collection, the husband died. In a contest by the widow and a judgment creditor, with judgment prior to the decree, the money was awarded to the widow. On appeal the court said: "It is further provided, by § 1752 of the Code, after permanent alimony granted, upon the death of the husband the wife is not entitled to any further interest in his estate in her right as wife; but such permanent provision shall be continued to her, or a portion of the estate equivalent thereto shall be set apart to her. In this section there is no saving in favor of creditors; and it would seem from this section alone, where permanent alimony has been allowed the wife out of her husband's estate, and he dies, that then the same shall be continued to her, and that a portion of his estate equivalent thereto shall be set apart to her, and this without regard to the condition of the estate as to judgment debts or other claims against the estate. . . . So we hold that, when Charles Banks died, a provision for the support of his family, which is provided by a decree for alimony, took precedence of all claims against his estate. And it must follow from these positions that the court below did right to order the money in the hands of the receiver to be paid upon the decree in favor of Louisa C. Banks."

In Burr v. Burr (1842) 10 Paige (N. Y.) 20, affirmed in (1843) 7 Hill, 207, the decree by the vice chancellor, as modified by the chancellor, gave the wife $10,000 a year, payable quarterly during her life, and also provided that, if not paid quarterly, as it became due, it should still belong to the wife as her separate property, with power of disposal at her death, by an instrument in the nature of a will, if her husband survived her. The chancellor (10 Paige, 36) said: "And the objection that the vice chancellor was not authorized to decree a provision for the alimony of the wife which should continue beyond the life of the husband is clearly untenable. The statute authorizes the court to make such order and decree for the suitable support and maintenance of the wife out of his property as may be just and proper. 2 Rev. Stat. 147, § 53. And it certainly cannot be unjust or improper to compel a husband, whose wife has been driven from her home by his cruelty, or in consequence of his defilement of the marriage bed, to provide her a suitable support for the remainder of her life, instead of permitting him to dispose of his property to strangers at his death, leaving her entirely destitute."

This case was declared "not controlling" in the absolute divorce case of Wilson v. Hinman (1905) 182 N. Y. 408, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 232, 108 Am. St. Rep. 820, 75 N. E. 236 (see infra, III. a, under "Lack of power"), where the court pointed out that, in the Burr Case, the statute "provided that the court might make decree for the suitable support and maintenance of the wife by the husband, 'or out of his property, as may appear just and proper' (2 R. S. 147, § 54)," and said: "Now the provision is that the court may require the defendant to provide for the support of the plaintiff as justice requires (Code Civ. Proc. § 1759). Thus the court is now empowered only to impose a personal obligation upon the defendant."

III. Absolute divorce.

a. Restricted view.

There are a number of cases which take the view that, in absolute divorce, a provision for regular, periodical payments to the wife for her maintenance and support should not relate to periods after the death of the husband; or, at least, that the presumption is that such a provision will not embrace such periods unless they are specifically included.

Arkansas.—Kurtz v. Kurtz (1881) 38 Ark. 119; Brown v. Brown (1881) 38 Ark. 324; Casteel v. Casteel (1882) 38 Ark. 477.

Colorado.—PARSONS v. PARSONS (reported herewith) ante, 1038.

Illinois.—Lennahan v. O'Keefe (1883) 107 Ill. 620; Stahl v. Stahl (1885) 114 Ill. 375, 2 N. E. 160; Craig v. Craig (1896) 163 Ill. 176, 45 N. E. 153 (arguendo).

Maryland.—Emerson v. Emerson (1913) 120 Md. 584, 87 Atl. 1033.

Massachusetts.—Knapp v. Knapp (1883) 134 Mass. 353 (arguendo); Stone v. Duffy (1914) 219 Mass. 178, 106 N. E. 595 (obiter).

New York.—Field v. Field (1883) 66 How. Pr. 345, affirmed in (1885) 15 Abb. N. C. 434; Johns v. Johns (1899) 44 App. Div. 523, 60 N. Y. Supp. 865, affirmed in (1901) 166 N. Y. 613, 59 N. E. 1124; Wilson v. Hinman (1905) 182 N. Y. 408, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 232, 108 Am. St. Rep. 820, 75 N. E. 236; Barnes v. Klug (1908) 129 App. Div. 192, 113 N. Y. Supp. 325 (arguendo); Whitney v. Whitney Elevator & Warehouse Co. (1910) 106 C. C. A. 38, 183 Fed. 678 (obiter); Faversham v. Faversham (1914) 161 App. Div. 521, 146 N. Y. Supp. 569 (arguendo); Gibson v. Gibson (1913) 81 Misc. 508, 143 N. Y. Supp. 37 (obiter).

West Virginia.—Martin v. Martin (1890) 33 W. Va. 695, 11 S. E. 12 (not necessary to result).

Wisconsin.—Maxwell v. Sawyer (1895) 90 Wis. 352, 63 N. W. 283. See also Lally v. Lally (1912) 152 Wis. 56, 138 N. W. 651.

While the court, in Kurtz v. Kurtz (Ark.) supra, considered it within its discretion to fix the rules as to alimony, it refused to allow a decree granting it for the life of the wife to stand without modification, and made it payable only for the joint lives of the parties. And in Brown v. Brown (1881) 38 Ark. 324, supra, in striking out of a decree of divorce a provision for a gross sum as alimony, to be paid in instalments, the court said that alimony "continues only during the joint lives of the parties, or, when there is a divorce from the bonds of matrimony, until the wife marries again." So, in Casteel v. Casteel (1882) 38 Ark. 477, supra, where a husband appealed from the decree granting alimony, the court said: "By the decree, as it now stands, although no definite time is fixed during which it is to continue, it will, from its nature, cease with the death of either party."

In the reported case (PARSONS v. PARSONS, ante, 1088) it was held that a divorced woman had no claim against the estate of her deceased divorced husband for sums not accruing during his life, under the decree of divorce providing that she should receive from him a certain sum "a month alimony for the support of plaintiff and her child as long as said plaintiff shall remain single and unmarried," such decree being based upon a written stipulation of the parties that the defendant in the divorce suit should pay the plaintiff said sum "per month so long as she shall remain single, for the full maintenance and support of herself and the minor child" of the parties. The court considers that, in the absence of disclosed intention, alimony does not survive the former husband's death. The court does not refer to Van Gorder v. Van Gorder (1912) 54 Colo. 57, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 998, 129 Pac. 226, where the appellate court, in affirming a decree of divorce giving the wife a gross sum, states that plaintiff was "given a judgment for $8,000, as permanent alimony," and it refers to the judgment as "awarding alimony;" nor does it refer to Cowan v. Cowan (1891) 16 Colo. 335, 26 Pac. 934, where, on divorce, the same court spoke of a gross sum allowed the wife "as permanent alimony."

In Lennahan v. O'Keefe (1883) 107

Ill. 620, supra, the decree awarding the alimony stated that it should be payable in instalments "until further order of this court." The defendant died intestate, and the widow filed a bill for dower and for partition. One of the heirs filed a cross bill asking that dower might be assigned, and that her alimony might be modified or canceled. The court held that the widow was entitled to dower, and that the alimony decreed to the wife ceased at the death of her husband, and that the lands were discharged from that lien, except as there might be unpaid alimony which had accrued in his lifetime. The court, on appeal, said: "We have held that the court may, under proper circumstances, make an allowance for alimony once for all, and, also, that real estate may be decreed absolutely to the complainant; but that neither of these is justifiable only under exceptional circumstances, which have been pointed out. But that is not the question here. Here the payment of alimony is ordered to be made in instalments, and the right of revision of the question is expressly reserved, and the only question is, What effect has the death of the defendant upon such a decree? In the absence of language showing unequivocally that the intention was to bind the heir by such a decree, we are of the opinion that it does not do so, but that its life terminates with the life of the defendant. . . . Granted that, under our statute, the power of the court to allow alimony is broader than it was in England, still, until the power is exercised by the court, its mere existence is, to the present question, unimportant; and, when it is exercised, it must, and can, only be through its decree, and the decree must, upon its face, show the extent to which the court has exercised, or assumed to exercise, such power. The question in such case is, simply, Does the decree, by its terms, charge the payment of the alimony upon the heir? We cannot presume that it does so. The fact, if such it is, must affirmatively, and, as we have before observed, unequivocally, appear."

The foregoing case was cited in Stahl v. Stahl (1885) 114 Ill. 375, 2 N. E. 160, supra, as authority for the statement that alimony in a divorce decree, of a certain sum per month, abates on the husband's death.

In Craig v. Craig (1896) 163 Ill. 176, 45 N. E. 153, reversing in part (1895) 64 Ill. App. 48, it was held that it was error to refuse payment of alimony already due, and to enter an order canceling such alimony. The husband was not dead in this case, but the court remarked: "The accruing of each and every of them was contingent upon the continued life of both the parties, for the general rule is that alimony will not accrue after the death of either party. Alimony decreed upon the dissolution of a marriage, if payable in instalments, is, unless otherwise specially provided, an allowance for the support of the beneficiary during the joint lives of herself and her divorced husband. The duty of support ends with the death of the beneficiary."

Where a decree of absolute divorce ordered $400 to be paid to the wife each and every six months, without limit, the defendant died leaving a will by which he left the residue of his estate to a trustee, to pay therefrom $800 annually to his former wife, during her natural life, the same to be paid semiannually. The petitioner sought both the $800 per year under the will and the $800 per year decreed by the judgment of divorce. But the court declared: "It is very clear that the allowance made to the wife by the decree of divorce was alimony pure and simple. It is so denominated in the judgment. It consists of an allotment of sums payable at regular intervals from year to year, and it is not declared to be a division of the estate; hence it must be construed as alimony. Blake v. Blake (1887) 68 Wis. 303, 32 N. W. 48. The general principle is well established, also, that alimony continues only during the joint lives of the parties. It ends when the husband dies." Maxwell v. Sawyer (1895) 90 Wis. 352, 63 N. W. 283.

In Lally v. Lally (1912) 152 Wis. 56, 138 N. W. 651, supra, in holding that the decree in a divorce case was a decree for alimony, and not a decree of final division of the estate of the husband, the court said: "It is true the provision for payment by his heirs, executors, and administrators does not harmonize with the idea of alimony, for that ceases upon the death of the husband." (Probably nothing to the contrary was intended in Kempster v. Evans (1892) 81 Wis. 247, 15 L.R.A. 391, 51 N. W. 327, where quarterly payments to the plaintiff, on divorce, were to be made each year "during her natural life," in case she remained unmarried, and it was held that this was alimony, and not a final division; nor by the similar holding in Norris v. Norris (1916) 162 Wis. 356, 156 N. W. 778. See, in this connection, the annotation in 1 A.L.R. 1106.)

Lack of power.

In Emerson v. Emerson (1913) 120 Md. 584, 87 Atl. 1033, supra, where an agreement as to alimony, etc., had been embodied in a decree of absolute divorce, the court, in refusing to modify it as to alimony, etc., on the remarriage of the wife, said, arguendo: "It was not alimony as understood and followed under the Maryland law. It was not alimony, as the court, in the absence of the agreement, would have decreed. A mere recital of the provisions shows that, under our statutes and decisions, no such decree could have been passed if this appellant had not been in agreement upon it. It was a plain attempt upon his part to have allowed to his wife something more than, under the law, could have been allowed as alimony; and, as the learned judge below said, we 'should bind ourselves to the fact if we should treat that arrangement as one of alimony.' If for alimony, why did he bind himself to pay these annual sums up and until the death of the wife, irrespective of whether or not she survived him? Was not that providing more than he could have been compelled to provide under the terms of alimony? It is settled in this state that alimony ceases upon the death of either of the parties. Wallingsford v. Wallingsford (1823) 6 Harr. & J. (Md.) 485."

In Martin v. Martin (1890) 33 W. Va. 695, 11 S. E. 12, it was held to be error, in granting a divorce to a wife, to decree an annual sum as alimony during her lifetime, as it could only have been granted during the joint lives; but the judgment was entirely reversed and a divorce granted to the husband.

—New York.

It is held in New York that the court has no power, in absolute divorce, to grant to the (plaintiff) wife a certain sum annually beyond the life of the husband, under a statute empowering the court, in the final judgment dissolving the marriage, to require the defendant to provide "for the support of plaintiff, as justice requires, having regard to the circumstances of the respective parties," on the ground that the court is empowered only to impose a personal obligation upon the defendant. Wilson v. Hinman (1905) 182 N. Y. 408, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 232, 108 Am. St. Rep. 820, 75 N. E. 236; Field v. Field (1883) 66 How. Pr. 346, affirmed in (1885) 15 Abb. N. C. 434; Barnes v. Klug (1908) 129 App. Div. 192, 113 N. Y. Supp. 325 (arguendo); Whitney v. Whitney Elevator & Warehouse Co. (1910) 106 C. C. A. 28, 183 Fed. 678 (arguendo).

In Wilson v. Hinman, supra, it was held that the obligation to comply with a provision of a decree of absolute divorce imposing upon the husband the duty of paying to the wife a certain sum annually as alimony, "so long as she may live," ceases with his death, although, in compliance with the decree, such payment has been secured by a mortgage of real estate. The court does not refer to Miller v. Miller (1822) 6 Johns. Ch. 91, where a decree of absolute divorce ordered "that the defendant pay to the plaintiff, or to her order, during her natural life, or until the future order of this court to the contrary, the annual sum of $100," where the statute authorized the court, in dissolving a marriage where the wife is complainant, to make a further order compelling the defendant "to provide a suitable allowance to the complainant for her support as to the said court shall seem reasonable and just, having regard to the circumstances of the parties respectively," etc. Rev. Laws 1813, chap. 102, § 5. Nor does the court refer to Peckford v. Peckford (1828) 1 Paige, 274, where, in deciding that there must be a divorce, the chancellor said that the husband must pay to the wife an annuity of a sum named "during her natural life." The court, however, in the Wilson Case, declared that the case of Burr v. Burr (1842) 10 Paige, 20, affirmed in (1843) 7 Hill, 207, was "not controlling," and pointed out that in the Burr Case (which was a case of limited divorce, see supra, II.), the statute "provided that the court might make a decree for the suitable support and maintenance of the wife by the husband, 'or out of his property, as may appear just and proper' (2 R. S. 147, § 54)" whereas, in the statute in question in the Wilson Case, the words "or out of his property" did not appear.

It was held in Field v. Field (1883) 66 How. Pr. 346, supra, that where a judgment dissolving the marriage provided that the defendant husband should pay the plaintiff the sum of $50 per month, during her life, the obligation did not extend to periods after the husband's death. In affirming this case the court, in (1885) 15 Abb. N. C. 434, supra, declared Burr v. Burr (1842) 10 Paige, 20, affirmed in (1843) 7 Hill, 238, not to be in conflict; but the remarks of the court plainly indicate that the opinion of the chancellor in 10 Paige had not been read carefully.

In Beach v. Beach (1883) 29 Hun, 181, a decree dissolving the marriage at the suit of the wife having been made, providing that the defendant pay, during the lifetime of the plaintiff, and while she remained unmarried, the sum of $365 in each year, in quarterly payments; and the husband having been thereafter discharged in bankruptcy from all debts existing on a day subsequent to the decree, and having died after paying, during his lifetime, all payments accruing during his lifetime, it was held that his estate was not liable for instalments falling due after his death. The court said: "It is not necessary to dispute the doctrine that, on a divorce, alimony may be decreed to the wife, payable during her life. Burr v. Burr (1842) 10 Paige, 20. For the question is not as to the power of the court to make such a decree, but as to the effect of the subsequent discharge in bankruptcy. Inasmuch as there is a continuing duty, resting on the husband, during his life, to support his wife, from which no discharge in bankruptcy would relieve him, it is very possible that the obligation to pay alimony, which, after a divorce, takes the place of the ordinary duty of support, may, in like manner, be a continuing obligation from which he is not relieved by his discharge. But that question is not directly involved. For the husband, during his lifetime and after his discharge, did pay the alimony decreed. Now the obligation upon his estate, if there be one, must be a mere debt. The ordinary duty of a husband to support his wife has been ended by his death. Whatever now remains is nothing but the debt created by the judgment, and that was discharged by the bankruptcy proceedings."

In Johns v. Johns (1899) 44 App. Div. 533, 60 N. Y. Supp. 865, affirmed in (1901) 166 N. Y. 613, 59 N. E. 1124, the decree of divorce provided that the defendant should pay a certain sum monthly, during the wife's natural life, and should also pay premiums on policies on his life, payable to the plaintiff on his decease. Upon the death of the defendant, his former wife collected over $21,000 on the policies, and entered a claim against his estate for six instalments of alimony. The appellate division, in referring to the judgment below, said: "The court, in dismissing the complaint, proceeded upon the ground that the provision in the decree of divorce, which directed the payment of alimony during the life of the plaintiff, was subject, in legal construction, to mean during the lives of both parties, and that, upon the death of the defendant, the binding force of the judgment in this respect came to an end. We think the court below was correct in such construction, and that the obligation to continue to pay alimony ceased with the death of the defendant in the judgment. . . . We think, however, that it was not the intention of the court to decree any liability beyond the lifetime of the defendant, and that such intention is clearly gathered from the provisions of the present judgment. It first awards alimony during the lifetime of the plaintiff; it then makes provision for the protection of the plaintiff upon the death of the defendant; he was required to pay the premiums upon the insurance policies issued upon his life, which were payable to the plaintiff, and which only became due and payable upon his death. Thus, by the very terms of the judgment, the court contemplated and made a provision which should inure to the benefit of the plaintiff upon the decease of the defendant, and of this provision the plaintiff has received the benefits, and is now in the enjoyment of an estate nearly three times as large as that which she seeks to impound for her future protection."

When, after the death of the husband, the wife sued on an agreement, the court said: "When a decree of divorce is granted to an innocent wife against a guilty husband, the allowance of alimony to her is a continuance of his marital duty of support which the courts have power to compel him to furnish notwithstanding the dissolution of the marriage. This duty being upon him only during his lifetime, the courts cannot compel him to make provision for its continuance after his death. But he can voluntarily make such provision for support to continue after his death, by contract or otherwise, if he sees fit so to do. By the contract annexed to the complaint, appellants' testator agreed 'to make such payments for the term of her (plaintiff's) natural life,' and the modified agreement provided for the increased payments to be made according to the original contract. The appellants' testator could make such a contract if he desired." Barnes v. Klug (1908) 129 App. Div. 192, 113 N. Y. Supp. 325.

In Whitney v. Whitney Elevator & Warehouse Co. (1910) 106 C. C. A. 28,

183 Fed. 678 (infra, V.), the court said, arguendo: "Except for possible subsequent statutory changes, to none of which has our attention been called, the law of this state relevant to the subject-matter of this appeal is fully and definitely set forth in two decisions: Johns v. Johns, supra, and Wilson v. Hinman (1905) 182 N. Y. 408, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 232, 108 Am. St. Rep. 820, 75 N. E. 236. With the conflict of law in other states we have no concern. Briefly stated, the law of New York is this: When a suit by a wife for absolute divorce comes before a court for determination, and it grants the relief prayed for, it is authorized to give by its decree, in the form of an allowance, a just and adequate substitute for the right of support which the divorce cuts off, and is also authorized to require security for the payment of the allowance. But since the right of support, if the marital relation were not disturbed, terminates with the death of the husband, the court has no power to enlarge it, and impose a charge upon the deceased husband's estate for support of the wife, who secures a divorce, after his death. The reasons for this will be found in the exhaustive opinions cited supra."

In Faversham v. Faversham (1914) 161 App. Div. 521, 146 N. Y. Supp. 569, the court said, arguendo: "Although the decree allows alimony to the wife 'so long as she shall live,' the obligation to pay ceases on the death of the husband, and any lien given by him to secure the payment of the alimony terminates at the same time. Wilson v. Hinman (1905) 182 N. Y. 408, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 232, 108 Am. St. Rep. 820, 75 N. E. 236; Johns v. Johns (1899) 44 App. Div. 533, 60 N. Y. Supp. 889, affirmed on opinion below in (1901) 166 N. Y. 613, 59 N. E. 1124." (The Faversham Case held that the wife's executor could not recover arrears of alimony, and was overruled in Van Ness v. Ransom (1915) 215 N. Y. 557, L.R.A.1916B, 852, 109 N. E. 593, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 580.)

b. Broader view.

Other cases take the view that whether a provision for periodical payments to the wife in absolute divorce, for support and maintenance, abates on the husband's death or not, depends upon circumstances.

California.—Ex parte Hart (1892) 94 Cal. 254, 29 Pac. 774.

Illinois.—Storey v. Storey (1888) 125 Ill. 608, 1 L.R.A. 320, 8 Am. St. Rep. 417, 18 N. E. 329 (arguendo).

Iowa.—O'Hagan v. O'Hagan (1857) 4 Iowa, 509 (arguendo).

Kentucky.—Fishli v. Fishli (1822) 2 Litt. 338.

Maine.—Stratton v. Stratton (1885) 77 Me. 373, 52 Am. Rep. 779.

Michigan.—Seibly v. Person (1895) 105 Mich. 584, 63 N. W. 528 (arguendo); Creyts v. Creyts (1906) 143 Mich. 375, 114 Am. St. Rep. 656, 106 N. W. 1111 (arguendo).

Minnesota.—Fitzpatrick v. Fitzpatrick (1914) 127 Minn. 96, 148 N. W. 1074.

Utah.—Murphy v. Moyle (1898) 17 Utah, 113, 70 Am. St. Rep. 767, 53 Pac. 1010 (arguendo).

In Ex parte Hart (Cal.) supra, the petitioner was imprisoned for refusal to pay alimony, as he claimed that the decree was void because it did not specify the period during which the alimony was to be paid. The court held it sufficiently certain, since "it intends the payment of alimony during the life of the wife, or until modified by the court. Such a decree the court had power to make in granting a divorce for the offense of the husband. Civil Code, § 139." The statute (§ 139) provided: "When a divorce is granted for an offense of the husband, the court may compel him . . . to make such suitable allowance to the wife for her support, during her life or for a shorter period, as the court may deem just. . . ."

In case of a "consent decree" for alimony, in Storey v. Storey (Ill.) supra, the court declared: "The right of the divorced wife to have the payment of alimony continued to her out of the estate of her deceased husband will depend upon the nature and terms of the decree allowing alimony." The alimony was payable in instalments "for so long as she may be and remain sole and unmarried." As to the claim made that those words were merely to designate the time, during the life of the husband, when he should cease to pay the alimony, the court said: "We think that the words in question are to be interpreted according to their natural sense and meaning. Their natural meaning is that alimony shall be paid for so long a time as Mrs. Storey shall remain unmarried, whether before or after her husband's death. This construction receives support from the language subsequently employed, wherein it is ordered that 'the same sum' shall be paid 'every three months thereafter during the time aforesaid.' The words, 'during the time aforesaid,' designate a continuous period, during which payment is to be made, and not a mere limit at which payment is to cease." (In Adams v. Storey (1890) 135 Ill. 448, 11 L.R.A. 790, 25 Am. St. Rep. 392, 26 N. E. 582, the widow claimed dower in addition to the alimony granted in Storey v. Storey (Ill.) supra, but the court held that the consent decree was intended to be in lieu of dower, and refused it.)

In O'Hagan v. O'Hagan (Iowa) supra, in holding that the husband's death abated a proceeding by the wife supplemental to a decree of divorce, for modification of such decree as to alimony, so as to give her a monthly allowance, the court said, inter alia: "In this country, however, the statutes of the different states generally authorize that where a divorce of either kind is granted, there may also be a decree for alimony, or some equitable and fair division of the property. In making such decree, our courts are not, in many of the states, confined to giving to the wife sums of money, payable at regular periods; nor to giving her money merely; but may give her absolutely a specific portion of her estate or property, whether real or personal. And in decreeing her sums of money, in the first instance, or in making the proper and equitable order in relation to their property and her maintenance, the decree may provide for the payment thereof from year to year, for a specified period, or may provide even that it shall continue during her life."

Where the statute provided that "the court pronouncing the decree of divorce shall regulate and order the division of the estate, real and personal, in such way as to them shall seem just and right, having due regard to each party and the children, if any: Provided, however, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to authorize the court to compel either of the parties to divest himself or herself of the title to the real estate," the court decreed the wife, on dissolving the marriage, a moiety of the husband's personal estate, and the use for life of one third of his real estate. Fishli v. Fishli (Ky.) supra.

(It may be noted that in Tyler v. Tyler (1896) 99 Ky. 31, 34 S. W. 898, it was held, that in granting an absolute divorce, the court may allow the wife a lump sum of money, and she may issue an execution against her husband's real estate therefor, notwithstanding the statute provides that "no such order for maintenance of children or allotment in favor of the wife shall divest either party of the fee-simple title to real estate.")

In Stratton v. Stratton (Me.) supra, during the pendency of cross libels for divorce, the parties entered into an agreement that, in case of divorce entered upon the husband's libel, two referees should determine what alimony the wife should receive, and how she should receive it; and that the report of the referees should be made a part of the decree, and binding on the parties. Their award and this agreement were extended on the record. The award was to the wife "during her natural life, an annuity . . . to be paid quarterly." Upon a decree of divorce, the court ordered "that alimony according to the award . . . be received and paid as therein provided." The defendant paid for a time, then ceased paying, and finally died. An action of debt was brought against the administrator to recover the instalments past due, both before and after the death. It was declared, on appeal, that "the court, in adopting the award of the referees as a part of its decree, gave alimony to the wife 'during her natural life.' That the court has the power so to do, where it may be granted at all, seems to be very strongly implied by the terms of the statute, which provide that the court may order so much of the husband's real estate, or the rents and profits thereof, as is necessary, to be assigned and set out to the wife for life. Moreover, where the language of the decree expressly states that it is to continue after the death of the husband, the authorities hold that it will so continue."

In Seibly v. Person (1895) 105 Mich. 584, 63 N. W. 528, an absolute divorce had been granted the wife, and the consideration of alimony reserved. But, before further steps were taken, the husband died testate, and the former wife sought alimony out of the estate. The court, while considering it to be the general rule that a proceeding to enforce alimony, at the common law, abates on the death of either party, stated: "But, under our statute (How. Anno. Stat. §§ 6245, 6247), the court may decree suitable alimony, and it may award a sum in gross, which becomes presently payable; or the court may sequester the real and personal estate, and appoint a receiver thereof, and cause the personal estate and the rents and profits of the real estate to be applied to the payment of the alimony. It is proper practice for the court to determine, in the first instance, the right to decree, and to reserve the question of alimony for subsequent adjudication. See Rea v. Rea (1884) 53 Mich. 40, 18 N. W. 551. That was attempted to be done in this case, and, if it results that the death of the husband ousts the court of jurisdiction to award permanent alimony, it follows that in every case where a decree is entered in the form here employed there must be a period of greater or less duration, during which the wife is at the risk of losing the interest in her husband's estate which she would have under the Statute of Distributions but for the divorce, and without opportunity afforded her by the court to have awarded her a proper allowance of alimony."

In Creyts v. Creyts (1906) 143 Mich. 375, 114 Am. St. Rep. 656, 106 N. W. 1111, where the court, in dissolving a marriage, awarded to the wife a lump sum "alimony, in lieu of dower," which had been paid, on holding that a provision for a monthly sum for the support of a child did not abate by the death of the husband, the court said: "The original decree was not discharged by the death of the complainant. No one would contend that the provision for the wife would have been discharged by his death, or before payment, or before it became due."

In Fitzpatrick v. Fitzpatrick (1914) 127 Minn. 96, 148 N. W. 1074, where a divorce was granted to the husband, the plaintiff, for cruel and inhuman treatment, the trial court awarded to defendant, under authority of the statutes, first, a life estate in the family homestead, valued at $4,500, together with the household furniture and effects; and, second, the sum of $50,000 as alimony, payable, two payments of $1,000 each, within a certain time, and the balance, or $48,000, in quarterly payments of $750 each, with interest on the deferred payments after they became due and payable, and the judgment was made a lien upon certain specified real property. The appellate court stated that "the statutes provide (Gen. Stat. 1913, § 7128) that such award shall be made in cases of this kind as the situation of the parties, the circumstances of the case, and the ability and financial worth of the husband, the court shall deem fair and just, 'not exceeding in value the one third thereof;'" and later on said: "The general rule, supported by the weight of authority, in respect to an award of alimony in a definite sum of money, payable in instalments at future dates, in the absence of some statute or provision in the decree to the contrary, is that the allowance terminates at the death of either party. 1 R. C. L. 933; Wilson v. Hinman (1905) 182 N. Y. 408, 75 N. E. 236, and notes to the report of that case in 108 Am. St. Rep. 820, and 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 232. We have no statute in this state covering this subject, and if the rule stated applies here,—a question we do not stop to determine,—then the period during which the alimony must be paid under this decree depends for its continuance upon the life of plaintiff, and not upon the life of defendant,—the reverse of what was intended by the court below. We fully concur with the trial judge, and for reasons stated by him, that defendant is entitled, under the facts of this case, to liberal support from plaintiff during the remainder of her life, and, to effect this end, conclude that the judgment appealed from should be so modified that the matter will be put beyond future controversy." And it was held that, instead of $50,000, the amount should be $3,000 per year, payable quarterly (besides $3,000 in thirty days), and "that the judgment and the right of defendant to have and receive the payments shall continue after the death of plaintiff, should defendant survive him, and be a charge upon and against his estate." (It should be noted that if the court, by the above expression, "an award of alimony in a definite sum of money, payable in instalments at future dates," meant to refer to the award of a sum in gross, payable in instalments, then it had mistaken the decision in Wilson v. Hinman (1905) 182 N. Y. 408, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 232, 108 Am. St. Rep. 820, 75 N. E. 236, supra, III. a, as that case related to a yearly sum, and not to a sum in gross, and it appears that the court in that case considered that, under the New York statute, there could be no award of a sum in gross as alimony, except by consent.)

In Murphy v. Moyle (1898) 17 Utah, 113, 70 Am. St. Rep. 767, 53 Pac. 1010, a case relating to allowance for the support of a child, the court said that in absolute divorce, "whether or not the divorced wife and minor children, or any of them, are entitled to have the payment of alimony or money for their support continue after the death of the deceased, depends on the nature and terms of the decree allowing the same; the statute providing: "When a divorce is decreed, the court shall make such order in relation to the children and property of the parties, and the maintenance of the wife, and such portion of the children as may be awarded to her, as may be just and equitable."

It may be noted that in Lawton's Petition (1878) 12 R. I. 210, the court said that, under R. I. Rev. Stat. chap. 137, § 8, allowing the wife, "out of the real or personal estate of the husband, or out of both, such alimony as the court shall think reasonable, not exceeding the use of one moiety of his real estate, during the life of the wife, and the property of one half of his personal estate," the wife might have had the use of one half of the husband's real estate for life and one half of his personal estate outright; but, the decree being for an annual allowance of $100 for life, and not making it a lien upon real estate, the only claim the woman had, if any, would be that of a judgment creditor in the man's estate upon his decease; not deciding that she had any.

c. English cases.

The Matrimonial Causes Act (1907) 7 Edw. VII. chap. 12, § 1 (1) (repeals § 32 of the Act of 1857 and § 1 of the Act of 1866, and) enables the court, on any decree for dissolution or nullity of marriage, to "order that the husband shall, to the satisfaction of the court, secure to the wife such gross sum of money or such annual sum of money for any term not exceeding her life as, having regard to her fortune (if any), to the ability of the husband, and to the conduct of the parties, it may deem reasonable;" and § 1 (2) provides that "in any such case the court may, if it thinks fit, make an order on the husband for payment to the wife during their joint lives of such monthly or weekly sum for her maintenance and support as the court may think reasonable, and any such order may be made either in addition to or instead of an order under the last preceding subsection." That order may be modified from time to time. The order for securing the property to the wife can only be modified if there is inserted therein an express clause reserving that power of modification. See Naish v. Naish

(1916) 32 Times L. R. 487; Dunbar v. Dunbar L. R. [1909] Prob. 90, 78 L. J. Prob. N. S. 35, 100 L. T. N. S. 380, 25 L. T. N. S. 230.

The Statute 20 & 21 Vict. 1857, chap. 85, § 32, was substantially the same as the present subsec. (1) of § 1 of the present statute. The Act of 1866 (29 Vict. chap. 32), which was worded with obscurity, evidently intended to provide in its § 1 that in cases where the husband had no property on which to secure the sums ordered, the court might order him to pay to the wife during their joint lives such monthly or weekly sums for her maintenance and support as the court might think reasonable.

In Naish v. Naish, supra, the court ordered £75 per annum secured to the divorced wife for her life, whether she survived her husband or not, with liberty to her to apply for an increase, and also that an additional £75 per year be paid to her during their joint lives, with liberty to either to apply for a modification.

It has been held that there is no power under the foregoing subsec. 2, to order payment to the wife "during her life," except by consent. Maidlow v. Maidlow, L. R. [1914] Prob. 245.

In Kirk v. Kirk, L. R. (1902) Prob. 145, 71 L. J. Prob. N. S. 78, 87 L. T. N. S. 148, the court ordered that a gross sum of £6,000 for permanent maintenance be paid to the wife, who had obtained a decree dissolving the marriage, following Morris v. Morris (1861) 31 L. J. Prob. & Div. N. S. 33. See also Stanley v. Stanley, L. R. [1898] Prob. 227, 79 L. T. N. S. 104, 68 L. J. Prob. N. S. 227, 47 Week. Rep. 272. These cases were overruled in Twentyman v. Twentyman L. R. [1903] Prob. 82, 72 L. J. Prob. N. S. 36, 51 Week. Rep. 575, 88 L. T. N. S. 571, holding that there was no power under the statute to order a gross sum paid over to the wife, and the court ordered the gross sum to be secured for the divorced wife during her life.

IV. Arrears at time of husband's death.

Arrears of instalments accruing during the life of the husband may be recovered from his estate after his death.

Massachusetts.—Knapp v. Knapp (1883) 134 Mass. 353; McIlroy v. McIlroy (1911) 208 Mass. 458, 94 N. E. 696, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 934 (separation); Stone v. Duffy (1914) 219 Mass. 178, 106 N. E. 595 (obiter).

Michigan.—Martin v. Thison (1908) 153 Mich. 516, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 257, 126 Am. St. Rep. 587, 116 N. W. 1013.

New York.—See Van Ness v. Ransom (1915) 215 N. Y. 557, L.R.A.1916B, 852, 109 N. E. 593, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 580. See also Faversham v. Faversham (1914) 161 App. Div. 521, 146 N. Y. Supp. 569 (obiter).

Ohio.—McCown v. Weiskittle (1879) 4 Ohio L. J. 803.

Rhode Island.—Gilbert v. Hayward (1914) 37 R. I. 303, 92 Atl. 625 (separation).

Tennessee.—See Sloan v. Cox (1817) 4 Hayw. 75 (limited divorce).

Virginia.—Francis v. Francis (1879) 31 Gratt. 289 (supra, II.).

Wisconsin.—See Guenther's Appeal (1876) 40 Wis. 115 (possibly implied.)

England.—Re Stillwell [1916] 1 Ch. 365, 85 L. J. Ch. N. S. 314, 114 L. T. N. S. 604, 32 Times L. R. 285, 60 Sol. Jo. 322.

Smith v. Smith (1792) 1 Root (Conn.) 349, sometimes referred to in this connection, seems to suggest in its brief report the death of the wife rather than that of the husband.

In Knapp v. Knapp (1883) 134 Mass. 353, supra, the court declared: "As alimony out of the husband's property is a provision for the support of the wife by him, the obligation to pay it in the future necessarily ceases with the death of the husband, but amounts already due at the time of his death are in the nature of a debt then existing, and are payable out of his estate. . . . Such arrears, however, are not absolute debts." The court said further: "From the peculiar nature of a decree for alimony, and the right and power in the court to revise or alter it at any time, execution is not necessarily to issue for the full amount of arrears of alimony found to have been due and unpaid at the time of the death of the defendant's testator; but it is in the discretion of the court, on the facts that may be proved, to determine for what sum, if for anything, the decree for alimony shall be enforced by an execution against his estate."

Under a statute permitting a court of probate to appoint commissioners to examine and adjust all claims and demands against deceased, the court may allow against the estate of a decedent claims for alimony which accrued between a divorce decree and the remarriage of decedent's wife in his lifetime, and is not precluded from so doing by the fact that jurisdiction over decrees for alimony is, by statute, vested in the chancery court. Martin v. Thison (1908) 153 Mich. 516, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 257, 126 Am. St. Rep. 537, 116 N. W. 1013, supra.

"The estate of a deceased husband may be held, at the suit of his wife, for alimony which had accrued prior to his death." Faversham v. Faversham (1914) 161 App. Div. 521, 146 N. Y. Supp. 569, supra (obiter), overruled on other grounds in Van Ness v. Ransom (1915) 215 N. Y. 557, L.R.A. 1916B, 852, 109 N. E. 593, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 580.

In Van Ness v. Ransom (1914) 164 App. Div. 483, 150 N. Y. Supp. 251, where the wife, after the husband's death, claimed many years' arrears of alimony under a decree of divorce, the court held for the defendants upon defenses of a release, payments under it, and the Statute of Limitations. After this determination the wife died, and the court of appeals granted a motion by her executor to substitute him as plaintiff in (1915) 215 N. Y. 557, L.R.A. 1916B, 852, 109 N. E. 593, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 580, stating in their opinion: "We are not concerned on this motion with any defense which the defendants may have to the judgment of 1867, other than the one that the liability thereby created for alimony in arrears does not survive the wife's death." The above judgment of the appellate division was affirmed without opinion by the court of appeals in Parsons v. Macfarlane (1917) 220 N. Y. 605, 115 N. E. 1046.

In Ohio it was held, in McCown v. Weiskittle (Ohio) supra, that a decree granting alimony might be revived against the husband's administrator, to recover the instalments due at the time of his death.

In Sloan v. Cox (1817) 4 Hayw. (Tenn.) 75, supra, the only defense made by the executor to the attempt to have the arrears of alimony decreed on a divorce from bed and board paid from the estate was that the complainant was a person of lewd habits; which point the court decided against him solely on the statute governing the question of suspension of the decree.

It was held in Re Stillwell (Eng.) supra, where, on judicial separation, permanent alimony had been ordered the wife, that she, on the husband's death, might collect the arrears from his solvent estate.

Limitation of the rule.

(It seems that, even in the husband's lifetime, the ecclesiastical courts were not disposed to allow collection of arrears of long standing. See Wilson v. Wilson (1830) 3 Hagg. Eccl. Rep. 329, note, 162 Eng. Reprint, 1175.)

By the quotation in the preceding subdivision from Knapp v. Knapp (1883) 134 Mass. 353, it appears that the court, in its discretion, may limit the amount of arrears to be collected from the husband's estate. In that case the wife had allowed the arrears to accumulate for more than twenty years, and the decision aforesaid reversed an order dismissing her writ of scire facias against the husband's executrix, and stated that the statutory presumption of payment "would affect only those payments which, by the decree, were to be made more than twenty years before the date of this writ."

V. Consent.

When an agreement between the parties as to an allowance to the wife, although she survives the husband, is embodied in the decree, the courts will enforce it. Whitney v. Whitney Elevator & Warehouse Co. (1910) 106 C. C. A. 28, 183 Fed. 678 (New York); Pryor v. Pryor (1908) 88 Ark. 302, 129 Am. St. Rep. 102, 114 S. W. 700; Stratton v.

Stratton (1885) 77 Me. 373, 52 Am. Rep. 779 (supra, III. b); Emerson v. Emerson (1913) 120 Md. 584, 87 Atl. 1033 (supra, III. a, under "Lack of power"). See also Storey v. Storey (1888) 125 Ill. 608, 1 L.R.A. 320, 8 Am. St. Rep. 417, 18 N. E. 329 (supra, III. b).

In Whitney v. Whitney Elevator & Warehouse Co. (1910) 106 C. C. A. 28, 183 Fed. 678, supra, the court affirmed the judgment of the United States circuit court for the western district of New York in (1910) 180 Fed. 187, where it appeared that some years after husband and wife, together with a trustee, had entered into an agreement of separation, by which the wife agreed at any time to release her inchoate right of dower, when requested, in any of her husband's property, and the husband agreed, among other things, to pay to the wife $3,000 per year, in equal monthly payments, during the time she should remain his wife or widow, or during her life, if she should not marry until after his death, he to give security therefor, the wife was granted an absolute divorce from the husband for his fault. Counsel for the parties agreed on the form of the decree, which provided that the defendant pay to the plaintiff $3,000 per year, "for and during her natural life, as a suitable allowance to . . . the plaintiff, for her maintenance and support," and that the said sum of $250 monthly be paid to the trustee as trustee for the plaintiff, and be paid by him to her for her support and maintenance. The decree provided for a new security for the annuity, and differed in certain matters from the old agreement, but provided that the old agreement should "remain unimpaired and in full force, except," etc. It was held, in an action to foreclose the new security, that, by the agreement embodied in the decree, the liability for the annuity continued after the husband's death. The court refers to the provision in the decree that the allowance of $3,000 per annum should continue during the wife's natural life, irrespective of whether the husband lived or died, as one that, in New York, "the court had no power to make except by consent." An application for a writ of certiorari to review this decision was denied in (1911) 219 U. S. 588, 55 L. ed. 348, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 472.

It may be noted that in Fleming v. Peterson (1897) 167 Ill. 465, 47 N. E. 755, the bill in equity alleged a decree of divorce and alimony from defendant, and a subsequent contract in writing, whereby he agreed to pay her alimony quarterly, "until her decease or remarriage." The payment having ceased, the complainant asked for an accounting, the ascertainment of the amount due her, and for a payment of the annuity "according to the terms of the contract." It was declared that it was within the equity jurisdiction of the court to enforce the contract.

In Carson v. Murray (1832) 3 Paige (N. Y.) 483, there seems to have been no divorce, but there was an agreement for immediate separation, the amount of the alimony and the method of carrying it out to be settled by arbitrators. The precise terms were not in evidence, but the court seems to have presumed that there was a covenant, on the part of the husband, with the trustees, to pay an annuity to the wife for life in lieu of dower and of all other claims upon the estate of the husband, either before or after his death. The husband died intestate. The court said: "I cannot see that there is anything in the contract, as proved, to render it invalid. It appears to have been an agreement for an immediate separation; the amount of alimony to the wife, and the particular mode of carrying it into effect, to be settled by the arbitrators selected by the parties. . . . But, as it appears a lawyer was employed to put it into form, in the absence of all proof to the contrary, I think that it may fairly be presumed there was a covenant on the part of the husband, with the trustee, to pay the annuity to the wife for life, in lieu of dower and of all other claims upon the estate of the husband, either before or after his death, according to the terms of the award." See also Barnes v. Klug (1908) 129 App. Div. 192, 113 N. Y. Supp. 325 (supra, III. a, under "Lack of power").

VI. Miscellaneous.

Where the value of the husband's property, real and personal, did not exceed $1,000, and the trial court, in a decree of divorce, had awarded the wife $500 alimony and the further sum of $10 per month continuing alimony, payable monthly, the appellate court struck out the monthly sum and said: "We are fully persuaded that the allowance of $10 per month indefinitely for the support of the plaintiff, in addition to the sum of $500 awarded her, is excessive. We do not approve of allowing alimony in the form of an annuity, or requiring the husband to pay a fixed sum each month during the life of the other party, or for an indefinite period of time." McGechie v. McGechie (1895) 43 Neb. 523, 61 N. W. 692, following Cochran v. Cochran (1894) 42 Neb. 612, 60 N. W. 942.

It may be observed that in Bauman v. Bauman (1857) 18 Ark. 320, 68 Am. Dec. 171, it appears that, on an absolute divorce, the husband was ordered to pay to the wife $250 every year "during her natural life."

So, in Richmond v. Richmond (1838) 2 N. J. Eq. 90, on an absolute divorce, an annual sum was to be paid to the wife or to her order "during her natural life, or until the future order of this court to the contrary."

In 3 Salk. 138, 91 Eng. Reprint, 738, there is the following note: "A divorce for adultery was anciently a vinculo matrimonii; and therefore, in the beginning of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, the opinion of the Church of England was, that after a divorce for adultery the parties might marry again; but in Foliamb's Case, anno. 44 Eliz., in the Star Chamber, that opinion was changed; and Archbishop Bancroft, upon the advice of divines, held that adultery was only a cause of divorce a mensa & thoro." Chancellor Kent (2 Com. 104) follows this view of the old law, citing Bracton, fol. 92, the passage in Salk, and the report of Foliamb's Case in F. Moore, 683, pl. 942, 72 Eng. Reprint, 838, where it appears that the adultery was that of the wife. (For a discussion of Foliamb's Case, see 2 Scribner on Dower, 2d ed. p. 544.) B. B. B.

W. F. MYERS, Plff. in Err.,

v.

STATE OF OKLAHOMA.

Oklahoma Criminal Court of Appeals — June 6, 1921.

(— Okla. Crim. Rep. —, 197 Pac. 884.)

Rape — liability of husband.

1. Part of subdivision 8 of the statute defining rape provides "that in all cases of collusion between the accused and the husband of the female to accomplish such act, both the husband and the accused shall be deemed guilty of rape." Held that, where it appears that there is no collusion and no common felonious purpose between the husband and the actual perpetrator to commit the act, the husband alone cannot be guilty of raping his wife.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1063.]

Trial — instruction — rape by husband.

2. Where a husband is charged with rape committed on his wife, an instruction to the jury defining rape, given in the language of the statute

(Rev. Laws 1910, § 2414), except that it omits the phrase "not the wife of the perpetrator," is erroneous in that it omits one of the elements of the offense named in the statute.

Rape — coercion by husband — liability of perpetrator.

3. Where the perpetrator of the offense believed that he was having sexual intercourse with a common prostitute, the fact that the female was coerced by her husband to submit to such act will not of itself, without a common felonious intent, constitute collusion between the accused husband and the actual perpetrator.

Evidence — sufficiency.

4. The evidence as a whole, as recited in the opinion, was insufficient to support the verdict.

Statute — construction — penal offense — scope.

5. Where an offense is defined by statute and its application to enumerated conditions prescribed, it is implied that it shall not apply to other conditions not enumerated.

[See 25 R. C. L. 981.]

ERROR to the District Court for Bryan County (Crook, J.) to review a judgment convicting defendant of rape. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Robert Crockett and W. B. Stone, for plaintiff in error:

Defendant was not guilty of rape, and the court erred in refusing to give in charge to the jury his special instruction No. 5.

Mulligan v. Com. 84 Ky. 229, 1 S. W. 417; State v. Haines, 51 La. Ann. 731, 44 L.R.A. 837, 25 So. 372; State v. Dowell, 106 N. C. 722, 8 L.R.A. 297, 119 Am. St. Rep. 568, 11 S. E. 525, 8 Am. Crim. Rep. 681.

To constitute rape by means of threats of physical violence, such threats must be accompanied by an apparent power of execution preventing resistance, and existing at the time of the commission of the act.

Sowers v. Territory, 6 Okla. 436, 50 Pac. 257.

Where the testimony of prosecutrix bears upon its face inherent evidence of improbability, to sustain a conviction, there should be corroboration by other evidence as to the principal facts relied on to constitute the crime.

Allen v. State, 10 Okla. Crim. Rep. 64, 134 Pac. 91; Morris v. State, 9 Okla. Crim. Rep. 252, 131 Pac. 731; Palmer v. State, 7 Okla. Crim. Rep. 557, 124 Pac. 928; Wines v. State, 7 Okla. Crim. Rep. 450, 124 Pac. 466.

Messrs. S. P. Freeling, Attorney General, and W. C. Hall, Assistant Attorney General, for the State.

Bessey, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 15th day of March, 1919, in the district court of Bryan county, W. F. Myers was convicted of rape upon the person of Goldie Myers, committed on May 15, 1918, and his punishment was fixed at imprisonment in the state penitentiary for a term of fifteen years. From this judgment and sentence he appeals.

The evidence disclosed that W. F. Myers, plaintiff in error, herein called the defendant, was a moral degenerate, who, by force or persuasion, induced his wife, Goldie Myers, to lead the life of a prostitute. The information charges that the defendant, by means of a certain dangerous and deadly weapon, a knife which he held in his hand, forcibly compelled Goldie Myers, his wife, against her will, to submit to sexual intercourse with one Arn Adcock, and that she was prevented from offering resistance to the act of sexual intercourse by reason of the defendant's threats to kill her, and threats of immediate great bodily harm, which the defendant then had the apparent power to execute.

The testimony of Goldie Myers discloses that she was married to the defendant in December, 1917, when she was just past seventeen years of age; that she then resided in the country, 4 miles west of Durant; that the defendant was a man of uncertain habits and occupation; that in May, 1918, there was a show at the town of Mead, in Bryan county, giving nightly performances, and that defendant and his wife went to Mead and took lodgings in a hotel there, where they remained all night; the following night, at their room at the hotel, the defendant told witness that he was going to arrange with men to have sexual intercourse with her, and told her to charge and collect for it; she objected, and that he told her that if she did not have sexual intercourse with men he would cut her damned head off, and that while this threat was being made he held an open knife at her throat; that later, after dark, they went walking up the railroad track, and after they had gone some distance defendant told her there would be some men come, and instructed witness to have intercourse with them; that she protested, and he told her she had to do it, while he held the open knife in his hand. Presently three men or boys came, and defendant told witness to go ahead and get the money. He told witness to stay where she was, and he retired a short distance away, leaving this man, Arn Adcock, with whom she had sexual intercourse, collecting the money and turning it over to the defendant; then the other two boys came in turn to where witness was, and had sexual intercourse with her; after that they walked back to the show, where the defendant made arrangements with three more men, and they all got into a car and went into the country, and witness there had sexual intercourse with two of them, and attempted intercourse with the third; that when alone with the defendant she protested, and he repeated his threats to do her great bodily harm if she failed to carry out his instructions; that no protests were made in the presence of these men, and from all that appears from her testimony these men did not know that she was acting against her will; that the defendant was not in the immediate presence of the parties when these sexual acts were performed, but remained in speaking distance, some 50 or 60 feet away.

On cross-examination the witness Goldie Myers said she first had sexual intercourse with other men at Leigh, about three months after her marriage to defendant. Later she had intercourse with men at her room in a hotel at Mead, at Coalgate, at Medill, Poteau, Bonham, Texas, and Dennison, Texas. In each case she claimed that the intercourse was arranged for by her husband, the defendant, and was done under fear and duress. She did not disclose these threats and duress to any of the men with whom she had intercourse, and did not communicate them to her parents or to any friend or any other person, because she feared that if she did the defendant would put his threats into execution. She visited Durant on two or more occasions in the absence of her husband, after the last visit at Mead, but made no effort to communicate to her father the threats or conduct of her husband.

Arn Adcock testified for the state to the effect that before the time of this offense he was not acquainted with Goldie Myers or her husband. He saw both of them at Mead while the show was going on there, but had not spoken to either one. After receiving information from others as to where Goldie and the defendant were, along the railroad track, witness and Joe Jackman went to where they were. The defendant was sitting on a dump, about 50 or 60 feet from where Goldie sat. Witness came to him first, and defendant said she was right up the track. If defendant had anything in his hand there witness did not see it. Witness had a lighted cigar in his mouth, and defendant told him to get rid of it; that the law might see it and come down and get them. Witness went to where the woman was, and she asked him what he wanted, and on being told they proceeded to have intercourse without further conversation. She asked for the money and was paid, and witness was warned to hurry away or the defendant would "raise the devil." The woman did not appear to be excited. "She acted like she didn't care whether she done it or not." Witness then went back to where defendant was standing with Joe Jackman and waited until the latter went to the woman and had intercourse. In the meantime there was no further conversation with the defendant. When Jackman returned the two went back to town, leaving the defendant and the woman in the position they were when first seen there.

The testimony of Adcock is typical of the testimony of four other state witnesses, who testified that they had intercourse with this woman that night. None of them knew that she was laboring under fear, duress, or threats; all supposed that she was a common prostitute, willingly selling her person for gain.

We feel, as doubtless the jury felt, that this degenerate husband deserved severe punishment, but that alone is not the question before us. It is for us to determine, as a matter of law, whether the facts proven constitute rape, or some other crime. Section 2414, Rev. Laws 1910, provides:

"Rape is an act of sexual intercourse accomplished with a female, not the wife of the perpetrator, under either of the following circumstances:

"First. Where the female is under the age of sixteen years.

"Second. Where the female is over the age of sixteen years and under the age of eighteen, and of previous chaste and virtuous character.

"Third. Where she is incapable through lunacy or any other unsoundness of mind, whether temporary or permanent, of giving legal consent.

"Fourth. Where she resists but her resistance is overcome by force and violence.

"Fifth. Where she is prevented from resistance by threats of immediate and great bodily harm, accompanied by apparent power of execution.

"Sixth. Where she is prevented from resisting by any intoxicating narcotic, or anesthetic agent, administered by or with the privity of the accused.

"Seventh. Where she is at the time unconscious of the nature of the act and this is known to the accused.

"Eighth. Where she submits under the belief that the person committing the act is her husband, and this belief is induced by artifice, pretense or concealment practised by the accused, or by the accused in collusion with her husband with intent to induce such belief. And in all cases of collusion between the accused and the husband of the female, to accomplish such act, both the husband and the accused shall be deemed guilty of rape."

Unlike the statutes of many other states that adhere to the common-law definition of rape, our statute provides that in eight different conditions or situations sexual intercourse with a female shall constitute rape, and all other situations must be excluded. It would seem, then, under our statute, under circumstances shown by the testimony in this case, that the crime of rape can be committed only on some female "not the wife of the perpetrator," except, as provided in subdivision 8, above quoted, the husband may be guilty of the offense perpetrated on the wife in any of the ways pointed out in the statute by collusion with the party actually committing the act, or by aiding or abetting the principal perpetrator to commit the act, and not otherwise.

The word "perpetrator," as defined in Webster's International Dictionary, is: "One who commits an offense or crime; one who is guilty of an act, usually in a bad sense."

In this case it is conceded that there was no collusion or conspiracy between the husband and any of the young men who had intercourse with the wife, to have such intercourse forcibly or against her will. These men were not guilty of the charge of rape, and, that being so, in the absence of collusion, the husband must have been the sole "perpetrator," without collusion of any other person; and our statutory definition of rape takes out of its operation the offense committed by the husband alone against his wife, although done through the instrumentality of an innocent third person. By the exception to the above rule, as embodied in subdivision 8, where the act is done by the husband in collusion with some other person who commits rape upon the wife, both the husband and his co-conspirator are guilty, but the husband alone, in this case the sole "perpetrator," cannot commit rape on his own wife.

Rape—liability of husband.

The reports abound with decisions holding that, where the husband conspires with a third person to commit a rape on the wife, both are guilty of the offense, but after diligent search we have been able to find but two cases where the third person, the one who actually committed the act of sexual intercourse, was not a co-conspirator with the husband to ravish the woman. In the case of State v. Dowell, 106 N. C. 722, 8 L.R.A. 297, 19 Am. St. Rep. 568, 11 S. E. 525, 8 Am. Crim. Rep. 681, the husband, a white man, at the point of a gun, compelled an unwilling negro to attempt to have sexual intercourse with his wife. We assume that the want of precedents covering situations of this character is due to the fact that men's depravity rarely drags them to such depths as to cause them to attempt an offense so difficult, repulsive, and abhorrent. In the Dowell Case, supra, there was no statute defining rape, as in this state. The court held in that case that there was a sufficient criminal intent on the part of the negro to sustain a conviction of the husband of an assault to commit rape upon his wife, where by threats of death he coerced this third person to attempt to ravish her; that, notwithstanding such threats, it was the duty of the third person to refuse and resist. But there was a dissenting opinion, embodying, as we think, the better reasoning, in which it was said: "In the nature of the marriage relation, the husband himself cannot ravish his wife; nor, for like reasons, can he in a legal sense assault her with the intent to commit a rape upon her. He can only commit the offense of rape, or that of assault with intent to commit a rape, against his wife, by procuring, aiding, abetting, or encouraging another to commit these offenses. His offense, in such case, depends, necessarily, upon the perpetration of the principal offense by another party. In this case the negro named did not commit a rape upon the wife of the defendant, nor did he assault her with such intent. There was a total absence of such intent on his part. . . . Then, in the nature of the matter, how can the defendant be chargeable with the particular offense charged against him in the indictment? As the negro committed no assault with the intent to commit a rape, so the defendant did not. It is said: Shall the defendant go quit? Has he committed no offense? Most unquestionably he shall not go quit. He has committed an offense—a very serious one. He is chargeable with an assault upon his wife with a deadly weapon, and with the intent to kill, and a like assault upon the negro."

The reasoning of this dissenting opinion is in some measure amplified in the case of State v. Haines, 51 La. Ann. 731, 44 L.R.A. 837, 25 So. 372: "While the husband is indicted as a principal, he could be guilty of the crime of rape, in so far as his wife is concerned, only on the supposition and proof that he procured the offense to be committed upon her by another, or aided or abetted that other in so doing; for, if he were the one who forcibly and against her consent performed the sexual act upon her, there was, and could be, no rape. . . .

"One cannot be guilty of aiding and abetting the perpetrator of a crime without its first being shown that the crime has been actually committed by another."

A case having some points of analogy to the case here at issue is the case of State v. Jackson, 65 N. J. L. 105, 46 Atl. 764, where it appeared that a Mrs. Jackson had acted as a procuress for one Kinsinger in persuading a girl to go to a room provided by this woman, where Kinsinger expected to meet and debauch the girl; that after meeting Kinsinger in the room appointed the girl resisted, and refused to yield to his wishes. Kinsinger and the Jackson woman were jointly indicted for a felonious assault on the girl. Held, that the accusation would not hold as against the Jackson woman. She was not present, aiding and abetting the assault, and did not know that Kinsinger would attempt to gratify his passion against the will of the girl, or make an assault upon her person. This Jackson woman simply arranged for a meeting place for these two by mutual consent, and, while she might have been indicted as a panderer or for keeping a place for assignation, she was not, under the circumstances, guilty of an assault to rape. Like Arn Adcock in this case, she was not entirely guiltless, but certainly neither was guilty of the offense of rape. Applying the rule announced and followed in the Dowell Case, supra, the unlawful purpose of this Jackson woman, in the one case, and of Arn Adcock, in the instant case, to commit a misdemeanor, would be sufficient to predicate a felony charge against the chief perpetrator of the respective offenses. With this conclusion we cannot agree; we think that, if the woman and Arn Adcock were innocent of the crime of rape, it was immaterial that they were guilty of misdemeanors, and being guilty of a misdemeanor would not make either of them responsible for the overt act of rape committed by another, without their knowledge and consent, and that such participation, without a felonious intent, would not make the actual perpetrator a co-conspirator, because there was no common purpose to commit a felony.

The statutes of neither North Carolina nor Louisiana classify and define rape, as in this state. The statutes of New Jersey, without mentioning the husband, make every person who aids, abets, counsels, or procures the commission of the offense equally guilty with the principal offender. In this state every condition not included in the statutory classification is by implication excluded, and we hold that the general declaration in our statute that rape is an act of sexual intercourse accomplished with a female, not the wife of the perpetrator, excludes every such act not within the purview of the eight subdivisions of that statute.

It is a general rule of statutory construction that the mention of one thing implies the exclusion of another thing; that, where an offense is defined and its application to enumerated conditions prescribed, it is implied that it shall not apply to other conditions not enumerated. Sutherland, Stat. Const. §§ 326 and 327; 25 R. C. L. 981, § 229; 36 Cyc. 1112.

Penal statutes cannot be enlarged by implication or extended by inference. This court is without power to amend or repeal a plain general statutory provision, although the court may disapprove of some of its provisions or omissions. White v. State, 4 Okla. Crim. Rep. 163, 111 Pac. 1018; Shawnee v. Landon, 3 Okla. Crim. Rep. 440, 106 Pac. 652.

Moreover, we think the evidence in this case, considered as a whole, was insufficient to support the verdict. During the time the defendant was coercing and abusing his wife and on this particular occasion she could have informed others or made some outcry. The evidence shows that she must have known when she went to Mead that the purpose of going there was to make money by prostituting her body to strange men. The jury probably concluded that Mrs. Myers had become a prostitute through the influence or coercion of her husband, and that his despicable, depraved conduct merited severe punishment, and that it was a matter of no conse-

Statute—
construction—penal offense—scope.

Evidence—
sufficiency.

—coercion by husband—liability of perpetrator.

quence whether his crimes against her and society were rape or some other penal offense. But this court cannot so view it. We are here to construe and apply the law as it is written, and to do so in such a way as will operate to guide courts and executive officers in definitely applying the law to similar conditions that may arise in the future.

In paragraph 1 of the court's instructions the court instructed the jury that:

"Rape, as applicable to this case, is the act of sexual intercourse accomplished with a female under either of the following circumstances:

"First. Where she is prevented from resisting by threats of immediate and great bodily harm, accompanied by apparent power of execution upon the part of him who makes the threats."

This part of the court's instructions is incomplete and erroneous, in that it omits one of the elements named in the statute, viz., "not the wife of the perpetrator," except in cases coming within the purview of subdivision 8, where it is provided that the husband may, by collusion with another be guilty of rape in any instance where there was a common felonious intent to commit the act.

For the reasons stated in this opinion, the judgment of the trial court is reversed.

Doyle, P. J., and Matson, J., concur.

ANNOTATION.

Criminal responsibility of husband as for rape, or assault to commit rape, on wife.

- I. Introductory, 1063.
- II. Act of husband alone, 1063.
- III. Act of husband in conjunction with others:
 - a. General rule, 1064.
 - b. Exception to rule, 1065.

I. Introductory.

It is intended in this note to consider only those cases which discuss the criminal responsibility of a husband for the crime of rape or assault to commit rape on his wife.

For a discussion of intercourse under marriage with a girl below the age of consent as constituting statutory rape, see 10 A.L.R. 409.

II. Act of husband alone.

But one case has been found wherein the charge against a husband of rape, or assault to commit rape, was based on his act or attempted act of sexual intercourse with his wife, that case holding that no criminal responsibility rested on him therefor. One of the reasons underlying the decision was that a wife by assuming the marital relation gives a consent which she will not be permitted to retract in order to charge her husband with the crime of rape. In the case mentioned (Frazier v. State (1905) 48 Tex. Crim. Rep. 142, 122 Am. St. Rep. 738, 86 S. W. 754, 13 Ann. Cas. 497) it appeared that the defendant had been married for a number of years; that his wife, although continuing to live with him and performing the household duties for the family, had later refused to cohabit with him, and that finally he demanded his marital rights, pursuing her when she resisted and fled from him, and renewing his efforts, from which, however, she escaped. The court held that a man cannot himself commit an actual rape on his wife.

There are, however, numerous cases in which it has been stated more or less incidentally that a husband cannot be guilty of an actual rape on his wife.

Thus, in State v. Haines (1899) 51 La. Ann. 731, 44 L.R.A. 837, 25 So. 372, set out at length, infra, III. b, the court said: "Sexual intercourse by him with his wife, even effected by violence and against her consent, would not, in law, be rape."

So, the court in Com. v. Fogerty

(1857) 8 Gray (Mass.) 489, 69 Am. Dec. 264, concluded its opinion with the following dictum: "Of course, it would always be competent for a party indicted to show, in defense of a charge of rape alleged to be actually committed by himself, that the woman on whom it was charged to have been committed was his wife."

Likewise, in Gonzales v. State (1901) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 62 S. W. 1060, it was said: "Nor did the court err in instructing the jury they must believe beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant was at that time not the wife of appellant, and was under the age of consent, to wit, fifteen years."

The offense of rape has been said to be "correctly defined" as "an act of sexual intercourse, accomplished with a female not the wife of the perpetrator, under certain conditions." People v. Jailles (1905) 146 Cal. 301, 79 Pac. 965.

In State v. Williamson (1900) 22 Utah, 248, 83 Am. St. Rep. 780, 62 Pac. 1022, there is a statement to the effect that one indicted for rape may defend on the ground that the act was committed with his wife.

In Plunkett v. State (1904) 72 Ark. 409, 82 S. W. 845, a case not strictly in point, the statute under which the defendant was indicted provided as follows: "Every person convicted of carnally knowing or abusing unlawfully any female person under the age of sixteen years shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary for a period of not less than five years nor more than twenty-one years." The court, in discussion thereof, stated that "the legislature intended by this enactment to make it a felony for any person to carnally know or abuse any female under the age of sixteen years, except in cases of marriage, either with or without her consent. Our statute makes it lawful for females to marry at the age of fourteen years."

The court in Garner v. State (1905) 73 Ark. 487, 84 S. W. 623, declared that an allegation in an indictment that the defendant "feloniously did carnally know and abuse" a certain female "could not be true if they were husband and wife."

For statements to much the same effect, see the following cases: Hust v. State (1905) 77 Ark. 146, 91 S. W. 8; People v. Gonzalez (1907) 6 Cal. App. 255, 91 Pac. 1013; State v. Dowell (1890) 106 N. C. 722, 8 L.R.A. 297, 19 Am. St. Rep. 568, 11 S. E. 525, 8 Am. Crim. Rep. 681; Com. v. Landis (1908) 129 Ky. 445, 112 S. W. 581, 16 Ann. Cas. 901; State v. Comstock (1877) 46 Iowa, 265; Young v. Territory (1899) 8 Okla. 525, 58 Pac. 724.

III. Act of husband in conjunction with others.

a. General rule.

A husband may, however, be guilty of rape or assault to commit rape on his wife, where he procures another to commit or attempt to commit such crime on her person, or where he assists in the execution thereof, the husband's responsibility in these cases being based on the rule that one who aids, assists, or abets in the commission of a crime, may be held as a principal. Re Kantrowitz (1914) 24 Cal. App. 203, 140 Pac. 1078; People v. Chapman (1886) 62 Mich. 280, 4 Am. St. Rep. 857, 28 N. W. 896, 7 Am. Crim. Rep. 568; State v. Dowell (1890) 106 N. C. 722, 8 L.R.A. 297, 19 Am. St. Rep. 568, 11 S. E. 525, 8 Am. Crim. Rep. 681; Audley's Case (1631) 3 How. St. Tr. (Eng.) 401, 1 Hale, P. C. 630.

Re Kantrowitz (Cal.) supra, was an application for a writ of habeas corpus, wherein it appeared that the petitioner was charged with rape, the contention being made by him that since the act charged appeared to have been committed on his wife he could not be held guilty thereof under any circumstances. The court held to the contrary, however, citing authority to the effect that one aiding, assisting, and abetting in the commission of a crime may be charged and punished as a principal.

In People v. Chapman (1886) 62 Mich. 280, 4 Am. St. Rep. 857, 28 N. W. 896, 7 Am. Crim. Rep. 568, the defendant had been convicted of rape on the person of his wife, under statutes making liable to punishment as a principal anyone who aided, assisted, or abetted in the commission of a crime. There was testimony to the effect that the defendant had agreed with one Reagan that he would pay Reagan $25 if he, Chapman, should catch Reagan in the act of sexual intercourse with Chapman's wife, the purpose being to obtain evidence for the securing of a divorce from her. To this end the defendant and his brother stationed themselves in a certain room next to that occupied by Mrs. Chapman, bored a hole through the wall separating the rooms, and witnessed the rape committed on her by Reagan without offering the slightest assistance in her struggles, rushing into the room after the crime had been committed, and the defendant exclaiming, "Now I have caught you." The court, in discussing the defendant's responsibility, said: "By his presence and his silence, under the fact of his previous agreement with Reagan, he must be considered as having countenanced and encouraged the latter in the commission of the outrage upon his wife. He did this as effectually as if he had stood in the room, and said to Reagan; 'Go ahead; you shall have the money the same whether it be by force or consent.' If he had done this, there would have been no possible doubt of his guilt as a principal of the same crime as Reagan." And it was held that the jury were properly charged that if they were convinced of the truth of the testimony, substantially as recited above, the defendant was guilty of rape.

In State v. Dowell (1890) 106 N. C. 722, 8 L.R.A. 297, 19 Am. St. Rep. 568, 11 S. E. 525, 8 Am. Crim. Rep. 681, which involved an indictment for assault with intent to commit rape, it was shown that the defendant, a white man, armed with a gun, attempted to force his white wife and a negro to have sexual intercourse, threatening them both with death in case of their refusal. It appeared that the colored man actually made the attempt under the coercion of the defendant, but that he escaped before the perpetration of the outrage. The defendant based a claim to immunity from guilt on the ground that he was the husband of the prosecutrix. The court, however, citing Audley's Case (Eng.) supra, held that the privilege was a personal one, and that in a case such as the one before it the husband might be convicted as if he were a stranger. The further contention that, the negro having acted under coercion, there was no intent to commit rape, and that consequently the defendant could not be convicted, was denied by the court, which, after pointing out that the attempt actually took place, said: "We are clearly of the opinion that the unlawful act committed in pursuance of the combined intents of the defendant and his enforced instrument are amply sufficient to sustain the conviction."

In Audley's Case (1631) 3 How. St. Tr. (Eng.) 401, 1 Hale, P. C. 630, the defendant, having by force compelled his wife to submit to intercourse with his servant, was convicted of rape.

It was said in Com. v. Fogarty (1857) 8 Gray (Mass.) 489, 69 Am. Dec. 264: "A husband may be guilty at common law as principal in the second degree of a rape on his wife, by assisting another man to commit a rape upon her."

And it was remarked in Com. v. Murphy (1861) 2 Allen (Mass.) 163, that a man may be a principal in the second degree in the commission of the crime of rape on his wife.

For statements to the same effect, see the following cases: State v. Comstock (1877) 46 Iowa, 265; State v. Boyland (1880) 24 Kan. 186; Com. v. Landis (1908) 129 Ky. 445, 112 S. W. 581, 16 Ann. Cas. 901; Strang v. People (1871) 24 Mich. 1.

b. Exception to rule.

There is apparently an exception to the rule heretofore stated, namely, where the one procured by the husband to accomplish sexual intercourse with his wife, or assisted by him in the act, cannot be convicted of the crime with which the husband is charged. So, in the two following cases the courts, while recognizing the rule in question, held it to be inapplicable to the facts before them:

In State v. Haines (1899) 51 La. Ann. 731, 44 L.R.A. 837, 25 So. 372, it appeared that the defendant had been indicted for rape, the woman being his wife. She testified that the act had been accomplished by one Thibodeaux while the defendant held her down. Thibodeaux, however, on a separate trial, was found not guilty, so that the question to be decided was, "After the acquittal of the man who actually violated the person of the woman, the husband being present aiding and abetting, is there any longer a basis, a predicate, a foundation, upon which to rest the prosecution of the husband?" The court, stating that a husband can, by procuring the commission of the crime of rape on his wife, or by aiding and abetting in its commission, incur liability as a principal together with the perpetrator, pointed out that the husband, while chargeable as a principal, could be considered only as a principal in the second degree, and that since there was no principal in the first degree in the case, Thibodeaux having been acquitted, the conviction of the defendant could not stand.

The reported case (MYERS v. STATE, ante, 1057) differs slightly from the other cases discussed, in that the actual perpetrator or perpetrators of the crime were not acting in collusion with the defendant husband, and the court therein, while acknowledging the rule as stated, points out that, by reason of this fact and the statutory provisions applicable thereto, the case presents itself as an exception.

R. S.

WILLIAM OUTLAW, Plff. in Err.,

v.

STATE OF FLORIDA.

Florida Supreme Court — June 29, 1921.

(— Fla. —, 89 So. 342.)

Assault — aggression — riding with wife of assailant.

1. The mere fact that defendant was riding in a car alone with the wife of another will not make the defendant the aggressor in bringing on a difficulty, unless there was some act or attempted act of violence toward the assailant or his wife.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1068.]

— justification — attentions to spouse.

2. The mere walking or driving of a married woman with another man, or a married man with another woman, is not sufficient provocation to justify an assault by either spouse.

[See 2 R. C. L. 555.]

New trial — verdict against evidence.

3. Where the evidence so greatly preponderates against a verdict that it may well be assumed that the jury were influenced by considerations outside the evidence, the verdict will be set aside and a new trial granted.

[See 20 R. C. L. 275, 276.]

Headnotes by BROWNE, Ch. J.

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Walton County (Campbell, J.) to review a judgment convicting defendant of assault with intent to commit murder in the second degree. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Walter Kehoe and Forsyth Caro for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Rivers H. Buford, Attorney General, and J. B. Gaines, Assistant Attorney General, for the State.

Browne, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

William Outlaw was convicted of assault with intent to commit murder in the second degree.

The evidence discloses that Mrs. Ingram, the wife of the man assaulted, sent two telegrams to Outlaw, one on the 3d and one on the 4th. The first read: "Come to-day if you cannot wire me care Jennie Skipper." The second read: "Come to-day by 1 or 2." Both were signed "Addie." On the afternoon of the 4th Mrs. Ingram walked out on what is known as the Glendale road, where she met Mr. Outlaw, who was traveling in a car. She got in the car with him, and they rode together some distance, and turned and came back towards De Funiak springs; when they reached the second bridge they saw another car containing the driver and Mrs. Ingram's husband. Outlaw stopped to let the other car pass, and when he did Ingram jumped from his car, and, with his right hand in his bosom, ran or walked rapidly to the car in which Outlaw and Mrs. Ingram were, and said: "Well, you are going to ruin me, are you; you have tried to. Crawl out, and I am going to whip you."

Ingram further testified: "After I got the curtain up I reached in under the curtain; it was not fastened, and I reached in through there and started to pull him out,—tried to make him get out, and I couldn't. He didn't offer any resistance, and I wondered why he didn't raise his hands up. I looked down and one hand was on the gun. He put the gun out over the facing of the door, and I starts back and he shoots me in the left hip."

On cross-examination he testified: "When I seen who it was I didn't like it the best in the world." "I wasn't so powerful angry," but "I might have been" mad. As he got out of his car and went towards Outlaw, he used violent language toward Outlaw, saying, "Well, God damn you, you want to ruin me, do you?"

As to the assault, he says: "I don't think I exactly hit him in the face." "I reached my hand from the under side of the curtain up, and I got hold of him right along there (indicating), and told him to get out. I kind of jerked back my hand, and I didn't exactly handle him like he was a doll—didn't put my hand up there like he was a china doll."

Mrs. Ingram says she did not know whether her husband hit or slapped Outlaw,—“he done something to him;” there was blood “on his sleeve and his nose” after he was struck. This is corroborated by several witnesses.

Outlaw's version of the affray is that, when he stopped his car, Ingram, with his right hand in his bosom, rapidly approached him and said: "O, yes, God damn you, you are here, are you; I will get you." He came up to the car, shoved his hand in, hit him on the nose with something, and when he did he shot him once, and made no attempt to shoot again, but got out of the car and assisted Mrs. Ingram to get her husband to the other car.

Just what version of the affray is correct is not material, because Ingram admits the assault, and the evidence is conclusive that he drew blood from the defendant's face. The testimony also discloses that threats to do bodily harm to Outlaw were made by Ingram and communicated to Outlaw prior to the difficulty. Ingram admits that he used violent language towards Outlaw as he went towards him, and that he had his hand in his shirt bosom, but denies that he had any weapon. Outlaw testifies to seeing a tire wrench. Clarence Aycock, the chauffeur who drove Ingram to the scene of the difficulty, said Ingram took a Maxwell tire wrench that was in the car and stuck it in his bosom, and after he had done so said, "I will kill the s—— of a b—— that is with her;" and that when he got out of the car he had his hand in his bosom.

There was testimony about attentions that Outlaw had paid to Mrs. Ingram before she was married, and an attempt was made by the state to introduce a letter alleged to have been written by Outlaw to Mrs. Ingram. When this was excluded by the court, the state attorney, in the presence of the jury, stated: "I want to make it plain before the jury that this man was not altogether justified in making love to another man's wife." There was further testimony not pertinent to the issue, from which the jury, if not fully instructed by the court, might have improperly found that Outlaw was the aggressor, and brought on the difficulty.

In order that the jury might not be misled on this point, the defendant requested this charge to be given, but it was refused by the court, and is the basis of the fourth assignment of error: "The fact that the defendant was riding in a car alone with the wife of Ingram, if the evidence proves that fact, would not alone make the defendant the aggressor in bringing on a difficulty, if there was a difficulty, unless there was some act of violence toward the said Ingram or his said wife."

This instruction was peculiarly applicable to the facts in the case, and should have been given. It was intended to offset the likelihood of the jury adopting a false rule in determining who was the aggressor, and when the court refused it he permitted the jury to adopt a standard not known to the law, in determining whether Outlaw or Ingram was the aggressor. The testimony is so positive and uncontradicted on the point of Ingram being the actual aggressor that the verdict can only be explained by the conclusion that the jury considered Outlaw the aggressor because he was riding with Ingram's wife.

New trial—verdict against evidence.

There may have been a time when a wife was regarded as her husband's chattel, and being out alone on a public road with another man regarded as sufficient provocation to justify the husband in making an assault upon her companion, but this is no longer true when women enjoy equal freedom with men. The mere walking or driving of a married woman with another man, or a married man with another woman, is not sufficient provocation to justify an assault by either spouse, and the greater freedom of intercourse between men and women in this day protects them from unwarranted attacks by a jealous husband or wife, who sees in innocent acts of social intercourse "confirmation strong as proofs of Holy Writ" that they are flagrantly immoral.

*Assault—
justification—attentions to spouse.*

The judgment is reversed, and a new trial granted.

Taylor, Whitefield, Ellis, and West, JJ., concur.

ANNOTATION.

Right of self-defense as affected by the fact that the defendant was in company with the assailant's spouse.

As to right of self-defense as affected by defendant's violation of law only casually related to the encounter, see annotation in 10 A.L.R. 861.

The reported case (OUTLAW v. STATE, ante, 1066) is authority for the proposition that the mere act of a man in walking or driving with the wife of another is not sufficient provocation to justify an assault by the latter, or make the former the aggressor in bringing on a difficulty with the husband, so as to deny him the right of self-defense. The court, in reaching this conclusion, pointed out that although there may have been a time when a wife was regarded as her husband's chattel, and being out alone on a public road with another man as sufficient provocation to justify the husband in making an assault upon her companion, this is no longer true when women enjoy equal freedom with men, such aggression—riding with wife of assailant.*

*Assault—

greater freedom of intercourse between men and women protecting them from unwarranted attacks by a jealous spouse.

And where a wife has sought a relative's home as a refuge from her husband, it has been held that such relative has a right to protect his habitation and its inmates from the husband, who, by the use of force, is entering the same with threats against the lives of the inmates, under a statute defining justifiable homicide as the killing of a human being in necessary self-defense of habitation or person, against one who manifestly intends or endeavors by violence to enter the habitation of another for the purpose of offering personal violence to any person dwelling or being therein. It was so held in Bailey v. People (1913) 54 Colo. 337, 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 145, 130 Pac. 832, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 1142.

In State v. Burns (1919) 278 Mo. 441, 213 S. W. 114, where the deceased, apparently because of the alleged attentions of the defendant to his wife, drove the defendant out of the house with a drawn weapon and such threatening demeanor as to cause, in defendant's mind, a reasonable belief that his life was in danger, and, so believing, he fired to protect his own life, it was held that he was acting in self-defense and entitled to an acquittal. The report of this case does not indicate the nature of the defendant's attentions, or what the defendant and the wife of deceased were doing at the time the husband drove defendant out. It does appear, however, that the defendant was lawfully upon the deceased's premises, the wife having charge of the postoffice which was located in the house, and the defendant being a mail carrier and waiting for mail to be made up.

And it has been held that one is not deprived of the right of self-defense when attacked by another, by the fact that he has enticed the latter's wife temporarily to accompany him from her home for illicit purposes. State v. Larkin (1913) 250 Mo. 218, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 13, 157 S. W.

600. In reaching this conclusion the court said: "The pertinent inquiry here is whether there was in the record sufficient facts to show that defendant Larkin did voluntarily engage in the difficulty which resulted in the death of the deceased. The testimony for the state shows that Larkin, on the night in question, had been at the home of deceased for no good purpose. The whole trend of the testimony indicates that he sustained, and had been for some weeks sustaining, illicit intercourse with the wife of deceased, Larkin's codefendant here. The testimony indicates that as a rule this illicit intercourse was not had in the home of the deceased, but that the defendants adjourned to some suitable spot in the vicinity. Such an adjournment was apparently had on this occasion. . . . They had both left the house of deceased. The facts show that they were seeking the darkness, and not light; that they were evading a probable difficulty, and not seeking to bring it on. The fact that Larkin and his codefendant had left the premises of deceased and gone out to uninclosed and unimproved property, presumably, and so far as the record shows, belonging to others, shows that so far as the physical encounter was concerned, defendant Larkin was avoiding the same and not bringing it on or seeking to bring it on. Had he remained in the home of deceased, where he had no right to be, and where he unlawfully was, there might be some sort of a peg upon which to hang such a theory. But he left the home of deceased, and went with or met (it matters not which) his codefendant and guilty paramour at a place distant therefrom, and where he might well be supposed to have believed the deceased would not come, and of which he might well have believed the deceased would have no knowledge. . . . Since the defendant Larkin, at the point where the difficulty occurred, was not on the premises of deceased, but on the premises of others, distant from the home of deceased, wherein does this case differ from a case which would have been presented if deceased, hearing that defendant Larkin was in company with the wife of deceased upon a public street, or any other public place, or even private place, should have armed himself as he did, and gone threatening defendant Larkin as he did, to seek him and kill him? It is true that under the well-settled law in this state murder in the second degree is to be presumed from the simple fact of the wilful intentional killing of one man by another, nothing further appearing. . . . Yet such presumption, while it attaches to the acts of the defendant here, does not prohibit him from showing, if he may, and can, that in such killing he acted in self-defense. It is not the duty of this court to enforce what is very commonly called the 'unwritten law.' The legislature of this state has not seen fit to enact into a statute this 'unwritten law.' It is our duty to enforce the law as we find it, and as written by the legislature, and not as we might otherwise write it, or as we might desire it to be. If the uncontradicted facts as shown by the state in this case are true, the inferences arising therefrom corroborate the statement of defendant Larkin. The written law is, and the law which we must enforce says, that even if the deceased had discovered his wife and her codefendant, Larkin, in flagrante delicto, and being overcome by his passion had shot and killed defendant Larkin, yet under the strict letter of the law he would not go acquit. He would have been guilty even then, however human his passion and failing in that behalf would have been, and however much it might be said that the sympathies of man for man might go out to him; he would yet have been guilty of manslaughter in the second degree. . . . The theory of the state in this case that no right of self-defense existed under the facts here in favor of defendant Larkin is not tenable. Such a theory would be tenable only if the law were that if deceased had killed Larkin, instead of Larkin having killed deceased, deceased would be guilty of no crime, or, at least, of no felony. But since, as we have seen, even had the facts been thus reversed, instead of as they are, deceased would not have been guiltless, but, on the contrary, would have been guilty of manslaughter in the second degree. So, the right of self-defense still inured to Larkin, however outrageous and morally reprehensible and indefensible his conduct and actions might have been, and in fact were. The court properly instructed, therefore, under the facts and circumstances shown in evidence, that Larkin was entitled to his right of self-defense."

On the other hand, there is considerable authority to the effect that if a paramour is discovered having illicit intercourse with the discoverer's wife, he commits such a wrong as takes away the right of self-defense in case the husband attacks him. Dabney v. State (1896) 113 Ala. 38, 59 Am. St. Rep. 92, 21 So. 211; Drysdale v. State (1889) 83 Ga. 744, 6 L.R.A. 424, 20 Am. St. Rep. 340, 10 S. E. 358; Redding v. State (1920) 25 Ga. App. 233, 102 S. E. 845. And in Rigell v. State (1913) 8 Ala. App. 46, 62 So. 977, it was again said that a paramour, upon being discovered in the act of having sexual intercourse with a married woman, has no right to defend himself by inflicting injury on the husband, even though he has been assailed by the latter with deadly intent. The court argued that in such a case, though the husband be the aggressor and there be no way to escape death at his hands except by taking his life, still, if the paramour do so, he is guilty of murder, for he was the wrongdoer in the first instance in that he furnished the very provocation which brought the difficulty on. And see Duncan v. State (1908) 171 Ind. 444, 86 N. E. 641, wherein it was said in answer to a plea of self-defense that, if a paramour armed with a deadly weapon was lurking in a public alley for the sole purpose of seeking an opportunity to have illicit sexual relations with the wife of the deceased, when attacked, he was not in a place where he had a right to be, and without fault, within the meaning of those terms as employed in the law of self-defense, and that it would be "absurd to hold a libertine, confessedly guilty of defiling the wife of another, without fault when assaulted by the outraged husband while upon or about his premises, under cover of darkness, seeking an opportunity to repeat the offense." Also Wheeler v. State (1921) — Ind. —, 132 N. E. 259, wherein it was held that a man who came, after midnight, armed with a pistol, to call at the home of a woman whose husband was believed to be and had been away from home, and, after fleeing from the husband, returned near where the woman and her husband lived, and to avoid repetition of a blow from a stick 1 inch thick in the hands of the husband, shot him in the leg, was not in a place where he had a right to be, and without fault, at the time of the shooting, although he was there at the invitation of the wife, such an invitation not justifying the shooting.

In Dabney v. State (Ala.) supra, where the husband found the defendant in his wife's home and about to have or having illicit intercourse with her, the court, after laying down the rule that "one who provokes a difficulty—who by his own wrong contributes to a situation out of which arises a necessity to take the life of another to preserve his own—cannot invoke the doctrine of self-defense to justify the homicide he commits in such difficulty—cannot plead a necessity to kill which arose from his own wrong," said that sexual intercourse with the wife of another is such a wrong, and that "if, as in the case at bar, the paramour, in order to save his own life from the consequences of the deadly passion of the husband, excited by the wrong of the former, slays the husband, he can in no sense be said to have been free from fault in bringing about the mortal encounter; the fatal result, to the contrary, is traceable directly to his own wrong, and he cannot justify his act by an invocation of the doctrine under which one free from fault and unable to retreat is authorized to save his own life by destroying that of another." And in Drysdale v. State (1889) 83 Ga. 744, 6 L.R.A. 424, 20 Am. St. Rep. 340, 10 S. E. 358, supra, where the element of justification was in issue, the court, in holding that a husband may attack for intimacy with his wife in his presence, raising a well-founded belief from the improper or unjustifiable conduct of the defendant that an adulterous act is just over or about to begin, and that the adulterer, though in imminent danger, cannot defend himself by using a deadly weapon, said that "a man surprised by the husband immediately after an actual, or immediately before an intended, adulterous connection, can lawfully defend himself against the husband's violence by flight only, or at least by means short of deadly. He cannot stand his ground and shoot or cut to repel the husband's attack upon him, though it may be a dangerous attack. Whatsoever the law would justify the husband in doing under such circumstances, it would not justify the adulterer in preventing by homicide or attempting homicide; perhaps not otherwise than by making his escape." Again, in Redding v. State (1920) 25 Ga. App. 233, 102 S. E. 845, supra, the court held the case squarely within the ruling in the Drysdale Case.

So, in State v. Martin (1900) 9 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 778, it was held that if the jury should find that the defendant's debauchery of the deceased's wife was the direct cause of the deceased's attack upon the defendant, he had so far put himself in the wrong by provoking the attack that he would not be justified in killing in repelling the attack, unless he retreated as far as he could, and avoided the conflict by every available means that did not increase his danger.

And, for a better reason, self-defense cannot be set up by a paramour who kills the husband, if he has armed himself with a deadly weapon in contemplation that the husband would interfere with his having illicit intercourse with the wife, and for the purpose of taking life should it become necessary to save his own in the course of such interference. Dabney v. State (1896) 113 Ala. 38, 59 Am. St. Rep. 92, 21 So. 211. In so holding the court said: "It is also a too elementary and familiar principle of law to need discussion or reference to authorities, that if one entering upon the commission of a wrongful act has in contemplation that another will or may interfere with his enterprise, arms himself with a deadly weapon with the intent to take the life of that other should it become necessary to save his own in the course of such interference, and who in fact does take the life of the person so interfering in pursuance of such intent, is guilty of murder in the first degree; the intent to kill under the conditions contemplated constituting the 'formed design' sufficient and necessary in murder, when the circumstances of the act do not justify the design, and the wrongfulness of the act in which the slayer was engaged at the time the necessity to strike arose precluding all justification of the design." And to the effect that, if the defendant produced the occasion for the purpose or in order to have a pretext for killing, the killing will be murder, no matter to what extremity the defendant was reduced, see statement in Franklin v. State (1892) 30 Tex. App. 628, 18 S. W. 468.

But circumstances which would lead a husband to believe that a man has just been engaged in, or is about to engage in, an act of illicit intercourse with the wife, does not deprive such person of the right of self-defense on the spot unless he himself was chargeable with giving rise to such circumstances by his own improper or unjustifiable conduct. Drysdale v. State (1889) 83 Ga. 744, 6 L.R.A. 424, 20 Am. St. Rep. 340, 10 S. E. 358.

And it has been held that if a husband, knowing of his wife's criminal infidelity, deliberately lays a trap for her paramour, the latter when caught in the guilty act may defend himself against the deadly assault of the husband. Thus, in Wilkerson v. State (1893) 91 Ga. 729, 44 Am. St. Rep. 63, 17 S. E. 990, where the husband, knowing of his wife's infidelity, pretended to her and her paramour that he, the husband, was going on a journey, when it was his purpose not to go, but to conceal himself and lie in wait at or near his home for the purpose of killing the paramour in case he should be caught in the guilty act, at the same time expecting and designing so to catch him, it was held that the paramour had a right to defend himself against a deadly assault made by the husband under such circumstances, although the assault was made while the guilty act was in progress; and that where the husband was killed as matter of necessity to prevent his assault from resulting in death, the homicide was justifiable. This decision was based upon the fact that the act of the husband was in no sense justifiable, since it was not to prevent the adultery, he being consonant of previous similar acts, but to obtain revenge; and the court distinguished the Drysdale Case (Ga.) supra, upon the ground that in that case it did not appear that there was any previous adultery, or circumstances other than that the husband, upon discovering the intimacy, immediately assaulted the paramour under such circumstances as to render his act justifiable.

In Texas, where by statute a husband is justified in slaying a person when taken in the act of adultery with the wife and before they have separated, and by adjudication a distinction is made between the so-called perfect and imperfect right of self-defense, it is held that the wrong does not entirely remove the right of self-defense. This distinction and its application are well illustrated by the case of Reed v. State (1882) 11 Tex. App. 509, 40 Am. Rep. 795, wherein, in holding erroneous an instruction to the effect that an adulterer is not justified in resisting an attack by the husband of the adulteress, it is said: "Evidently the court must have based this charge upon the converse of the proposition stated in art. 567 of the Penal Code, which declares that 'homicide is justifiable when committed by the husband upon the person of anyone taken in the act of adultery with the wife, provided the killing take place before the parties to the act of adultery have separated.' In other words, the controlling idea intended to be conveyed by the court, according to our construction of the language used, seems to have been that, because the law would justify the husband in taking the life of the adulterer under the circumstances named in the statute, it would follow that the adulterer must submit to the infliction of death thus attempted to be executed upon him, and that he was not even authorized to resist an attack upon his life by the injured husband, much less plead such deadly attack by way of justification or self-defense, if, in resisting such attack, he was compelled to take the life of the injured husband to save his own. Thus, it appears that the court has attempted to make the legal status of the defendant depend upon what might or would have been the law with reference to the act of deceased had the situation of the parties been reversed and the latter had taken the life of the former. In no possible state or case would such a rule of deduction be a fair or conclusive criterion in the administration of criminal law. The accused is always guilty or innocent from his own standpoint; that is, his personal, individual acts with relation to the matter charged. . . . But the right of self-defense, though inalienable, is and should to some extent be subordinated to rules of law, regulating its proper exercise, and so the law has wisely provided. It may be divided into two general classes; to wit, perfect and imperfect right of self-defense. A perfect right of self-defense can only obtain and avail where the party pleading it acted from necessity, and was wholly free from wrong or blame in occasioning or producing the necessity which requires his action. If, however, he was in the wrong,—if he was himself violating or in the act of violating the law,—and on account of his wrong was placed in a situation wherein it became necessary for him to defend himself against an attack made upon himself which was superinduced or created by his own wrong, then the law justly limits his right of self-defense, and regulates it according to the magnitude of his own wrong. Such a state of case may be said to illustrate and determine what in law would be denominated the imperfect right of self-defense. Whenever a party, by his own wrongful act, produces a condition of things wherein it becomes necessary for his own safety that he should take life or do serious bodily harm, then indeed the law wisely imputes to him his own wrong and its consequences to the extent that they may and should be considered in determining the grade of offense which, but for such acts, would never have been occasioned. . . . How far and to what extent he will be excused or excusable in law must depend upon the nature and character of the act he was committing, and which produced the necessity that he should defend himself. When his own original act was in violation of law, then the law takes that fact into consideration in limiting his right of defense and resistance whilst in the perpetration of such unlawful act. If he was engaged in the commission of a felony, and, to prevent its commission, the party seeing it, or about to be injured thereby, makes a violent assault upon him, calculated to produce death or serious bodily harm, and in resisting such attack he slay his assailant, the law would impute the original wrong to the homicide, and make it murder. But if the original wrong was or would have been a misdemeanor, then the homicide growing out of or occasioned by it, though in self-defense from an assault made upon him, would be manslaughter under the law. . . . If defendant was taken by deceased in the act of adultery with his wife, and to avenge the wrong deceased made a dangerous or murderous assault upon him, in resisting which he took the life of deceased, under such state of facts defendant would be guilty of manslaughter, because he was committing a misdemeanor which was the cause of and brought the necessity for the homicide." And in Franklin v. State (1892) 30 Tex. App. 638, 18 S. W. 463, the rule of perfect and imperfect self-defense was again adhered to, it being held that conduct of the defendant, such as being found in the deceased's home at 2 A. M., under circumstances indicating that the purpose was carnal knowledge of the deceased's wife, was such as was calculated to provoke an attack from the husband, and that therefore the right of self-defense was imperfect, and a killing in resisting an attack so provoked, manslaughter. So, in Nicks v. State (1904) 46 Tex. Crim. Rep.

241, 79 S. W. 35, where, from one view of the evidence it appeared that the defendant went to deceased's house for the purpose of having carnal intercourse with the latter's wife, which provoked an assault upon him by the deceased, it was held that the issue of imperfect self-defense was raised, and that it was the duty of the court to charge on manslaughter. And see also Barber v. State (1920) 87 Tex. Crim. Rep. 585, 223 S. W. 457. For a case of perfect right of self-defense under the Texas rule, see Pannell v. State (1908) 54 Tex. Crim. Rep. 498, 113 S. W. 536, which, however, is not strictly in point in the present annotation, since it appeared that defendant's carnal intercourse with deceased's wife was prior to the time of the homicide, and that she was not present when the attack was made. And of the same class is Sheely v. State (1918) 83 Tex. Crim. Rep. 127, 201 S. W. 1012. G. J. C.

MILAN SHEPPARD, Plff. in Err.,

v.

STATE OF NEBRASKA.

Nebraska Supreme Court—June 19, 1920.

(104 Neb. 709, 178 N. W. 616.)

Indictment — charging different offenses in separate counts — election.

1. Whether or not the state shall be required to elect between counts in an indictment charging the receiving of different stolen automobiles rests largely in the discretion of the trial court.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1077.]

Appeal — refusal to require election — error.

2. Failure to require the state to elect between counts charging the receiving of three separate automobiles until the evidence was all in is not such prejudice to accused as to require reversal, where the evidence under either count would have been admissible under the one on which the conviction was based, to show scienter.

Evidence — motion of strike — portion competent.

3. A motion to strike all the evidence of a witness as incompetent is properly overruled if a portion of it was competent.

[See 26 R. C. L. 1056.]

Appeal — indorsement of witness's name after beginning of trial.

4. Permitting the indorsement of the name of a witness upon the information after trial is commenced is not reversible error if no prejudice is shown or continuance asked.

[See 14 R. C. L. 169, 170.]

ERROR to the District Court for Hamilton County (Corcoran, J.) to review a judgment convicting defendant of receiving a stolen automobile. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Prince & Prince and Patterson & Patterson, for plaintiff in error:

It was prejudicial error in not requiring the state to elect at the commencement of the trial upon which count of the information it would ask for a conviction.

Guyle v. State, 102 Neb. 668, 168 N. W. 567.

The evidence to the witness, Guard, was all incompetent, and highly prejudicial to defendant, as it cast suspicion upon him of the commission of another separate and distinct offense, and introduced into the case a new, separate, and distinct offense, without any showing whatever that defendant was connected therewith.

People v. Loper, 159 Cal. 6, 112 Pac. 720, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1193; State v. Walker, 124 Iowa, 414, 100 N. W. 354; People v. Maine, 166 N. Y. 50, 59 N. E. 696; People v. Cuin, 27 Cal. App. 316, 149 Pac. 795; Alsobrook v. State, 126 Ga. 100, 54 S. E. 805; State v. Robinson, — Mo. —, 183 S. W. 304; Harrison v. State, 69 Tex. Crim. Rep. 152, 151 S. W. 552; St. Clair v. State, 103 Neb. 125, 169 N. W. 554.

It was error to admit evidence of distinct and separate offenses.

Goldsberry v. State, 66 Neb. 312, 92 N. W. 906; St. Clair v. State, 103 Neb. 125, 169 N. W. 554; Clark v. State, 102 Neb. 728, 169 N. W. 271.

Messrs. Clarence A. Davis, Attorney General, and J. B. Barnes, for the State:

Not requiring the state to elect at the commencement of the trial upon which count of the information it would ask for a conviction was not prejudicial error.

Guyle v. State, 102 Neb. 668, 168 N. W. 567.

There was no error in the reception of evidence of witness Guard.

Knights v. State, 58 Neb. 225, 76 Am. St. Rep. 78, 78 N. W. 508; Goldsberry v. State, 66 Neb. 312, 92 N. W. 906; Clark v. State, 79 Neb. 473, 113 N. W. 211; Palin v. State, 38 Neb. 862, 57 N. W. 743; Becker v. State, 91 Neb. 352, 136 N. W. 17.

It was not an abuse of discretion for the trial court to permit the state to indorse the name of the witness Mrs. Percy Lamphere on the information.

Johnson v. State, 34 Neb. 257, 51 N. W. 835; Rauschkolb v. State, 46 Neb. 658, 65 N. W. 776; Fager v. State, 49 Neb. 439, 68 N. W. 611; Trimble v. State, 61 Neb. 604, 85 N. W. 844; Barney v. State, 49 Neb. 515, 68 N. W. 636.

Morrissey, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Defendant prosecutes error from a conviction in the district court for Hamilton county for receiving a stolen automobile.

The information was in three counts, the first of which charged defendant with receiving, on or about November 1, 1918, a stolen automobile belonging to George W. Jewel. The second count charged the receiving of a stolen automobile on or about May 1, 1919, the property of J. E. Schaeffer, and the third count charged the receiving of a stolen automobile on or about April 15, 1919, the property of Lloyd Magney. Defendant was convicted on the third count.

The principal assignment of error is the refusal of the trial court to require the state to elect, at the beginning of the trial, upon which count of the information it would rely for a conviction. Each count of the information was complete in itself, and there was no allegation of any connection between the various offenses charged. The state introduced evidence on each of the three counts. Defendant did not renew his motion to elect until all the testimony had been adduced, and the court then required the state to elect upon which count it would go to the jury.

The question of election is one resting largely in the sound discretion of the trial court. As was said by Justice Harlan in Pointer v.

United States, 151 U. S. 396, 403, 38 L. ed. 208, 212, 14

Indictment—charging different offenses in separate counts—election.

Sup. Ct. Rep. 410, 412: "While recognizing as fundamental the principle that the court must not permit the defendant to be embarrassed in his defense by a multiplicity of charges embraced in one indictment and to be tried by one jury, and while conceding that regularly or usually an indictment should not include more than one felony, the authorities concur in holding that a joinder in one indictment, in separate counts, of different felonies, at least of the same class or grade, and subject to the same punishment, is not necessarily fatal to the indictment upon demurrer or upon motion to quash or on motion in arrest of judgment, and does not, in every case, by reason alone of such joinder, make it the duty of the court, upon motion of the accused, to compel the prosecutor to elect upon what one of the charges he will go to trial. The court is invested with such discretion as enables it to do justice between the government and the accused."

The same rule has been announced by this court in Korth v. State, 46 Neb. 631, 65 N. W. 792, and in Bartley v. State, 53 Neb. 310, 73 N. W. 744, although in these cases there was a closer relationship between the offenses charged than in the instant case.

But the determining question in each case is whether defendant has been embarrassed or confounded in his defense. Practically all of the evidence introduced relating to the crimes charged in the first and second counts was admissible for the purpose of showing scienter under the count on which defendant was convicted. When the state closed its case in chief, defendant proceeded to make his defense without again asking that the state be required to elect until after he had introduced all his evidence. Under these circumstances we fail to

Appeal—refusal to require election—error.

see that defendant has been so confounded or prejudiced in his defense as to call for a reversal of the judgment.

Complaint is made of the testimony of a witness named Guard, who stated that shortly prior to the commission of the crime in question defendant asked him to obtain a Ford coupé for him, and agreed to pay him $200 for one which he subsequently "spotted out." This witness further testified that some time later he delivered a stolen Buick automobile at Friend, supposedly for defendant, but it was not shown to whom the delivery was made. Defendant moved to "strike all the evidence given by this witness for the reason that it is incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, and also that the introduction of this evidence constitutes misconduct on the part of the state." The ruling of the court was as follows: "Part of it is competent. The motion as made will be overruled." The first part of this testimony was clearly competent, as showing that defendant was in the business

Evidence—
motion to strike —portion competent.

of receiving stolen automobiles. St.

Clair v. State, 103

Neb. 125, 169 N. W. 554. The motion, in the form in which it was made, was properly overruled.

Error is predicated upon permission granted the state to indorse the name of a witness upon the information after the trial had commenced. Defendant made no showing of prejudice, nor did he ask for a continuance. Prejudice will not be assumed.

The action of the trial court does not constitute reversible error. Kemplin v. State, 90

Neb. 655, 134 N. W. 275; Laws 1915, chap. 164.

Defendant's other assignments of error are disposed of by the views just expressed. There is nothing in the record to call for a reversal, and the judgment is affirmed.

Flansburg, J., not sitting.

Petition for rehearing denied.

Appeal—indorsement of wit-ness's name after beginning of trial.

ANNOTATION.

Joinder of counts for theft of property, or receiving stolen property, belonging to different persons.

Counts based on single transaction.

Where all the counts of an indictment for larceny are based on the same transaction, it is proper to charge the defendant in different counts with the theft of property belonging to several persons, and the prosecution is not required in such a case to elect on which count it will rely for a conviction, unless it appears to the trial court, in the exercise of a sound discretion, that an election is required to enable the defendant to make his defense without embarrassment or prejudice.

California. — People v. Connor (1861) 17 Cal. 354.

Florida. — Kennedy v. State (1893) 31 Fla. 428, 12 So. 858.

Indiana. — Bell v. State (1873) 42 Ind. 335; Cooper v. State (1881) 79 Ind. 206.

Maryland. — State v. McNally (1881) 55 Md. 559.

Massachusetts. — Com. v. Sullivan (1870) 104 Mass. 552; Bushman v. Com. (1885) 138 Mass. 507.

North Carolina. — See State v. Simons (1874) 70 N. C. 336.

Tennessee. — Owen v. State (1845) 6 Humph. 330.

Texas. — Irving v. State (1880) 8 Tex. App. 46; Shuman v. State (1895) 34 Tex. Crim. Rep. 69, 29 S. W. 160; McLaughlin v. State (1896) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 34 S. W. 280; Robinson v. State (1909) 56 Tex. Crim. Rep. 62, 118 S. W. 1037. See also Pisano v. State (1895) 34 Tex. Crim. Rep. 63, 29 S. W. 42.

Thus, in State v. McNally (Md.) supra, it was held to be error to quash an indictment for the larceny of wheat because it charged in three separate counts that the wheat was the property of three different persons, the court saying that it was proper to state the transaction in different ways in order to meet the evidence which might be adduced. See to the same effect Pisano v. State (Tex.) supra.

Similarly, in People v. Connor (Cal.) supra, it was held that an indictment for larceny was not defective because some of the counts alleged the ownership of the stolen property to be in one person, and other counts alleged it to be in other persons, it appearing that the same transaction was charged in all of the counts. There is a dictum to the same effect in State v. Simons (N. C.) supra.

So, in Shuman v. State (1895) 34 Tex. Crim. Rep. 69, 29 S. W. 160, an indictment in one count charged the theft of a bale of cotton as the property of one person and in another count alleged it to be the property of another. In holding that though different dates were alleged for the theft in the two counts, there was no error in overruling a motion in arrest of judgment, the court said: "It is not only allowable, but considered the better practice, to set up the same transaction by as many counts as the pleader may deem necessary to meet the various phases which the proof may possibly develop, and only in a case where it may appear that the rights of a defendant may be jeopardized or prejudiced will the state be required to elect on which count it will proceed to trial. In this case there was no motion requiring the state to elect, and the question was first presented after verdict by a motion in arrest of judgment."

In Owen v. State (Tenn.) supra, it was held to be proper to allege in one count of an indictment for larceny of a stray horse that the horse was the property of the person who had taken possession of it, and in another count to allege it to be the property of its legal owner; and a general finding of guilty on both counts was sustained.

In Robinson v. State (1909) 56 Tex. Crim. Rep. 62, 118 S. W. 1037, the first count of an indictment charged the defendant with stealing property belonging to one Aderholt, and the second count charged the stealing of the same property from the possession of Aderholt, but alleged that it belonged to some person to the grand jury unknown. After the evidence was given, the defendant asked for an election by the state as to the count on which it would rely for a conviction. In holding that a denial of the defendant's request was not error, the court said: "It is well settled in this court that the state will not be required to elect between counts where the same transaction is embraced in any number of distinct counts, and where the same offense is charged and each count alleges a different mode or means of doing the same act constituting the same offense, or where the distinct ways of doing the same thing are not antagonistic to each other. In such case they may be alleged conjunctively in the same count, and the prosecution has the right to proceed upon all the means alleged. Again, where the different counts in an indictment are in substance but different ways of charging the same offense, and are pleaded for the purpose of meeting the evidence as it may transpire, the state cannot be required to elect and confine itself to one count upon which it shall rely for conviction."

Likewise, in Irving v. State (1880) 8 Tex. App. 46, it was held to be proper to charge the defendant in one count of an indictment with the theft of money belonging to a certain person named therein and in another count with the theft of the same money belonging to some person to the grand jurors unknown. See to the same effect, McLaughlin v. State (1896) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 34 S. W. 280.

In Kennedy v. State (1893) 31 Fla. 428, 12 So. 858, it was held not to be error to refuse to quash an indictment for larceny on the ground that the first count thereof alleged the money stolen to be the property of certain persons and a second count alleged the same money to be the property of another person. The decision was based on a statute providing that no indictment should be quashed or judgment arrested or new trial granted on account of any defect in the form of an indictment, or of misjoinder of offenses, or for any cause whatsoever, unless the court should be of the opinion that the indictment was so vague, indistinct, and indefinite as to mislead the accused and embarrass him in the preparation of his defense, or expose him, after conviction or acquittal, to substantial danger of a new prosecution for the same offense.

In Com. v. Sullivan (1870) 104 Mass. 552, the defendant was charged in one count of an indictment with larceny of the goods of one person and in another count with the larceny of the goods of another person. It appeared that all of the goods were taken from the same wagon at the same time, but from different parts of the wagon. The court, in holding that it was not error to refuse to require the prosecuting attorney to make an election between the counts, said: "Distinct larcenies may be presented in different counts of one indictment; and whether the district attorney shall be ordered to elect between them is within the discretion of the presiding judge, and not a subject of exception. . . . The stealing at the same time and by one taking of several articles belonging to different persons is larceny of the whole and of each article; and may be indicted either in one aspect or the other,—as one entire crime, or as several distinct offenses. If indictments or counts for one taking of several articles are unreasonably multiplied, the court, in superintending the course of trial and in passing sentence, will see that justice is done and oppression prevented." See to the same effect, Bushman v. Com. (1885) 138 Mass. 507.

Likewise, in Bell v. State (1873) 42 Ind. 335, the overruling of a motion to quash an indictment was held not to be error where the different counts alleged the theft of different property owned by different persons, but it did not appear that the property was taken at different times or places.

If the transaction is the same, counts may be joined which charge the defendant with receiving stolen property belonging to different persons. Castner v. People (1919) 67 Colo. 327, 184 Pac. 387; State v. Teideman (1850) 35 S. C. L. (4 Strobb.) 300; Reg. v. Beeton (1849) 2 Car. & K. (Eng.) 960, 1 Den. C. C. 414, Temple & M. 87, 4 New Sess. Cas. 60, 18 L. J. Mag. Cas. N. S. 117, 13 Jur. 394, 3 Cox, C. C. 451.

In State v. Teideman (1850) 35 S. C. L. (4 Strobb.) 300, supra, the defendant was charged in one count of an indictment with receiving stolen property belonging to a person named therein, and in another count with receiving the same stolen property belonging to a person unknown. The court held, without discussing explicitly the joinder of the counts, that there was sufficient evidence for the jury to find that the property belonged to the person named as owner in one of the counts of the indictment, but that the question was immaterial, since, if the evidence was insufficient to prove ownership, the property belonged to a person unknown, as alleged in the other count.

Likewise, in Reg. v. Beeton (Eng.) supra, the defendant was charged in five different counts of an indictment with receiving stolen goods belonging respectively to five different persons. The counts apparently referred to a single transaction. After a plea of not guilty, and before the prosecution opened its case, the defendant asked for an election by the prosecution on which count it would proceed. The refusal of the request was held by the exchequer chamber not to be error.

Moreover, in a prosecution for receiving stolen goods it has been held that there was no error in denying a motion made after the evidence for the state was completed, to require the prosecuting attorney to elect on which count he would proceed, where different counts of an information alleged a different ownership of the same goods. Castner v. People (Colo.) supra, wherein the court said: "Counsel for defendants admit . . .

that this motion was addressed to the sound discretion of the court. In view of the fact that the goods mentioned in each count of the information were the same, and the further fact that neither defendants nor their counsel could have been misled thereby, we see no reason to conclude that the trial court's discretion was improperly exercised."

Counts based on separate transactions.

Even where the counts of an indictment or information relate to distinct transaction, it is generally held that the defendant may be charged in separate counts with the theft of property, or the receiving of stolen property, belonging to different persons; and that the state is not required in such a case to elect on which count it will rely for a conviction unless it appears to the trial court, in the exercise of a sound discretion, that an election is necessary to avoid embarrassment or prejudice to the defendant in making his defense. State v. Nelson (1849) 29 Me. 329. See also Hoiles v. United States, 3 MacArth. (D. C.) 370, 36 Am. Rep. 106; Branch v. State (1918) 76 Fla. 558, 80 So. 482. And see the reported case (SHEPPARD v. STATE, ante, 1074). Compare United States v. Beerman (1838) 5 Cranch, C. C. 412, Fed. Cas. No. 14,560, and, as to necessity for election, Pisano v. State (1895) 34 Tex. Crim. Rep. 63, 29 S. W. 42.

Thus, it was held in State v. Nelson (Me.) supra, that three distinct larcenies committed at different times, of the goods of different persons, were properly charged in one indictment, where each larceny was alleged in a separate count. The court said: "Each one of these larcenies is charged in separate counts. And such course is admissible where the offenses are of the same nature. . . . If the counts are so numerous as to embarrass the defense, the court, in the exercise of its discretion, may compel the prosecutor to elect on which charge he will proceed."

In the reported case (SHEPPARD v. STATE, ante, 1074) it is held that a refusal to require an election between different counts based on different transactions, and respectively charging a defendant with receiving stolen property belonging to different persons, is not error where it appears that the defendant has not been embarrassed or prejudiced in making his defense. It is also held that the question whether an election is necessary to prevent such embarrassment or prejudice is largely within the discretion of the trial court. The defendant requested an election at the beginning of the trial, and the refusal of the request is upheld on the ground that practically all of the evidence relating to the crimes charged in the other counts was admissible to show a scienter under the count on which the defendant was convicted.

In Branch v. State (1918) 76 Fla. 558, 80 So. 482, it was held not to be error to refuse to require a prosecuting attorney to elect on what count he would proceed, where a tax collector was charged in certain counts of the indictment with embezzling money belonging to the state, and in other counts with embezzling on other dates money belonging to a county. The court said: "By § 3962, General Statutes of 1906, it is provided that 'no indictment shall be quashed or judgment arrested or new trial be granted on account of any defect in the form of the indictment, or of misjoinder of offenses or for any cause whatsoever, unless the court shall be of the opinion that the indictment is so vague, indistinct, and indefinite as to mislead the accused and embarrass him in the preparation of his defense, or expose him after conviction or acquittal to substantial danger of a new prosecution for the same offense.' If there was no misjoinder of offenses in the information, it was not error to refuse to require the state to elect upon which count it would stand for a conviction, and, furthermore, it is well settled here that whether the prosecutor will be required to elect upon which of several counts he will try the accused is within the sound discretion of the trial court."

In Pisano v. State (1895) 34 Tex. Crim. Rep. 63, 29 S. W. 42, the defendant was charged in one count of an indictment with the theft of four horses belonging to one person and in another count with the theft of four horses belonging to another person. On an appeal from a conviction it was held that there was no error in refusing to quash the indictment for duplicity or repugnancy. The court said: "In order to constitute duplicity, two or more distinct felonies must be averred in the same count. In this indictment, distinct offenses are apparently set out in different counts. This is the proper practice. If the evidence develops distinct transactions, the state should be required to elect upon which count the conviction would be asked. As to repugnancy, it may be stated, in a general way, to consist in pleading two inconsistent allegations in the same count. It does not apply to repugnancy which of necessity exists between different counts in the same indictment."

In United States v. Beerman (1838) 5 Cranch, C. C. 412, Fed. Cas. No. 14,560, the defendant was convicted on five separate indictments of stealing, on the same day, the property of five different persons. In upholding the conviction it was said that if the offense had been charged in different counts of a single indictment, the indictment, under the practice of the English courts at least, could be quashed if the objection was discovered before the defendant put in his plea, and if it was not discovered until the trial the prosecutor could be put to his election on which count he would proceed. In Hoiles v. United States, 3 MacArth. (D. C.) 370, 36 Am. Rep. 106, the court, after criticizing United States v. Beerman (Fed.) supra, said: "Where the indictment contains several counts, each stating a different owner for distinct portions of the goods taken at the same time, or where, as in this case, there are different informations, each containing an averment of ownership for distinct parcels of the goods, there can be but one judgment and one term of imprisonment." W. S. R.

CHICAGO BONDING & INSURANCE COMPANY, Appt.,
v.
ABRAHAM OLINER.

Maryland Court of Appeals—November 16, 1921.

(— Md. —, 115 Atl. 592.)

Damages — insurance — theft of whisky.

1. The damages to be allowed for loss by theft of whisky insured against theft after prohibition went into effect are the fair value of the whisky, in determining which the cost of the liquor may be considered.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1084.]

Insurance — nature of contract.

2. An insurance contract is one whereby for a stipulated consideration one party undertakes to compensate the other for loss on a specified subject by specified perils.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court of Baltimore City (Duffy, J.) in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a burglary insurance policy. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Edwin W. Wells and Edward L. Ward for appellant.

Mr. Myer Rosenbush, for appellee:

The limitation in the policy is that the amount for which defendant shall be liable shall not be in excess of the actual cash value, but the jury may fix any sum, in their judgment, they believe the plaintiff to be entitled to, below the limitation fixed in the policy. The term "actual cash value" and other similar expressions are practically synonymous.

16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 840; Martinez v. State, 16 Tex. App. 128; Jonas v. Noel, 98 Tenn. 440, 36 L.R.A. 862, 39 S. W. 724; Cummings v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 101 U. S. 162, 25 L. ed. 906; Murray v. Stanton, 99 Mass. 348; Cliquot's Champagne, 3 Wall. 114, 18 L. ed. 116; Sanford v. Peck, 63 Conn. 493, 27 Atl. 1057.

The damages which a plaintiff is entitled to recover for a breach of contract should be such as may fairly and reasonably be considered as either arising, according to the usual course of things, from such breach of contract itself, or such as may reasonably be supposed to have been in contemplation of both parties at the time they made the contract as the probable result of a breach of it.

Hadley v. Baxendale, 9 Exch. 341, 156 Eng. Reprint, 145, 2 C. L. R. 517, 23 L. J. Exch. N. S. 179, 18 Jur. 358,

2 Week. Rep. 302, 5 Eng. Rul. Cas. 502; Swain v. Schieffelin, 134 N. Y. 471, 18 L.R.A. 385, 31 N. E. 1025; Shafer v. Wilson, 44 Md. 268; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Pumphrey, 59 Md. 400; Furstenburg v. Fawsett, 61 Md. 187; Howard v. Stillwell & B. Mfg. Co. 139 U. S. 207, 35 L. ed. 147, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 500; Creamery Package Mfg. Co. v. Benton County Creamery Co. 120 Iowa, 588, 95 N. W. 188; Connersville Wagon Co. v. McFarland Carriage Co. 166 Ind. 123, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 709, 76 N. E. 294.

The mere fact that the value of a thing is difficult of ascertainment does not prevent a recovery, and the courts have never hesitated to establish new standards whereby a fair value may be arrived at, when the usual and ordinary means of determining the same cannot be used.

Equitable Gaslight Co. v. Baltimore Coal Tar & Mfg. Co. 65 Md. 73, 3 Atl. 108; Planters' Mut. Ins. Co. v. Rowland, 66 Md. 244, 7 Atl. 257; Green v. Boston & L. R. R. Co. 128 Mass. 226, 35 Am. Rep. 370; Stickney v. Allen, 10 Gray, 352; Niagara F. Ins. Co. v. De Graff, 12 Mich. 135; Robinson v. Harman, 1 Exch. 855, 154 Eng. Reprint, 365, 18 L. J. Exch. N. S. 202; Simpson v. L. & N. W. R. L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. 274, 45 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 182, 33 L. T. N. S. 805, 24 Week. Rep. 294; Wakeman v. Wheeler & W. Mfg. Co.

101 N. Y. 205, 54 Am. Rep. 676, 4 N. E. 264; Jonas v. Noel, 98 Tenn. 444, 36 L.R.A. 862, 39 S. W. 724; Murray v. Stanton, 99 Mass. 348; People v. Wilson, 298 Ill. 257, 131 N. E. 609; State v. May, 20 Iowa, 305; Erb v. German-American Ins. Co. 98 Iowa, 606, 40 L.R.A. 845, 67 N. W. 583; Bales v. State, 3 W. Va. 685; Com. v. Smith, 129 Mass. 111; Osborne v. State, 115 Tenn. 717, 92 S. W. 853, 5 Ann. Cas. 797; Wolfe v. Howard Ins. Co. 7 N. Y. 583; Western Assur. Co. v. Chesapeake Lighterage & Towing Co. 105 Md. 253, 65 Atl. 637, 11 Ann. Cas. 956.

Stockbridge, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellee, Abraham Oliner, resided at the time of the occurrence hereinafter mentioned in the Lake Court Apartments, on Linden avenue, and had been engaged in the liquor business at Howard and Camden streets. When what is known as the "War-time Prohibition Act" (40 Stat. 1045) went into effect, he closed out his business at Howard and Camden streets and moved up certain unsold liquors to the apartment house building where his apartments were located. In the cellar of that building was a locker room, and in that he placed some of the whisky moved, and, by way of protecting himself against possible loss, took out an insurance policy of the species known as burglary, larceny, or theft insurance. This policy was issued to Mr. Oliner on the 18th of September, 1919. Thereafter, and sometime between the issuance of the policy and the 25th of September, his locker was broken into and there were taken from it fifteen cases of whisky of the brands known as Three Feathers, Canadian Club, Green River, original Roxbury Rye, and Hayner.

The policy issued by the appellant to Mr. Oliner expressly covered property of this description by providing that it should cover money, sterling silverware, precious stones, watches and jewelry, plated ware, wearing apparel, furs, laces, rugs, tapestries, paintings, clocks, bronzes, bric-a-brac, library books, musical and professional instruments, sporting outfits, bicycles, and household goods and personal effects common in residences generally, including cigars, wines, liquors, and family stores, also gas and electric light fixtures, and plumbing, excluding articles listed in statement No. 10 of the schedule, §§ (b), (c), (d) and (e)."

This liquor, which was so taken, had been purchased by Mr. Oliner at some time previous to the closing of his store at Howard and Camden streets, at various prices, and upon the discovery of his loss Mr. Oliner made the demand on the company for loss in accordance with the terms of the policy.

Eight exceptions were reserved during the trial, but for the purposes of this appeal they may all be considered together, as they form part of a connected whole.

No question is raised by the insurance company as to the loss by Mr. Oliner of the property in question, and the defense upon which the insurance company relies to exonerate it from liability is that, the prohibition order having gone into effect at the time the liquors were taken, they were of no value, and therefore Mr. Oliner suffered no loss. This is raised by objections to evidence which constitute the first seven bills of exception and the ruling of the court on the defendant's second prayer, which ruling is made the defendant's eighth bill of exceptions.

In discussing the case in its entirety, it will be sufficient, therefore, to see whether or not the trial court committed any error of such a character as to work a serious injury to the insurance company. To answer this satisfactorily there are one or two facts to be borne in mind, the first of which is a correct conception of the nature of a contract like the one here presented. Thus an insurance contract is one whereby for a stipulated consideration one party undertakes to compensate the other for loss on a specified subject by specified perils. Black's Law Dict. 2d ed. p. 641. This is sometimes spoken of as a contract of indemnity. 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 840; 14 R. C. L. 839.

Insurance—nature of contract.

A large number of cases were cited, and others might have been, descriptive of the contract wherein the contract is defined in the same or equivalent terms. Nor does this court understand that there was any serious contention made upon this matter by counsel for the appellant. The real question comes in fixing the rule of damages in such a case.

When we turn to an examination of the various cases, we encounter the expressions "value," "market value," and "fair market value;" but for the present purpose these may all be regarded as synonymous. The larger part of the exceptions was taken to the admission as evidence of the prices paid by Mr. Oliner for the whiskies.

In the strict use of language the terms "market value," "value," and "fair market value," may all be dealt with together. It is perfectly true that at the time of the loss in this case whiskies of any of the brands mentioned were not in any regular market reports, and therefore the ordinary methods by which value was proven were not available in this instance. But simply because a particular article is not quoted in the daily paper affords no sufficient ground for saying that it has no value at all. Thus it may have a distinct value as an heirloom or growing out of association which the then owner of it cherishes for reasons of his own. In the present case, Mr. Oliner testified without contradiction that he had reserved these various kinds of whisky for his own individual use and that of his friends. It is perfectly true that it was no longer an article of merchandise permitted to be dealt in by government, but that is a very different thing from saying that it had no value. This inhibition on the part of the government against the sale of it would have made traffic in it illegal, that is all; and following the accepted rule of damages in such cases, the damage was its fair value at the time when the burglary or stealing was committed. The general rule of damages was clearly stated by Judge Robinson in Webster v. Woolford, 81 Md. 329, 32 Atl. 319. See also 5 Words & Phrases, 1st series, pp. 4384 et seq., and cases therein collected, and especially Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Stanford, 12 Kan. 354, 380, 15 Am. Rep. 362, where it was held that "if there is no market at the place for the particular goods destroyed, some other criterion of value must be adopted."

See also 3 Words & Phrases, 2d series, pp. 301 et seq.

This forms, therefore, an exception to the general rule as to the method by which the value of property is to be estimated, and when coupled with the well-known fact that the effect of the order of prohibition tended to increase rather than decrease the price at which these liquors could be obtained, while ^{Damages—}~~insurance—~~ ^{theft of whisky.} not giving us exact data as to its value at the time of the burglary or larceny, the cost price paid by Mr. Oliner was as close an approximation to it as it was possible to give. Conditions regulating the traffic in liquors were comparatively a new thing at that time, but the courts must take cognizance of the conditions as they then prevailed; and as exact evidence of the value at the time of the burglary or theft was not available, the cost of the same would afford some ground, sufficient to base a verdict on, in estimating the loss to Mr. Oliner, plaintiff in the case. This, therefore, makes, as already noted, an exception to the rule with regard to proving value or market value at the actual time of the loss.

The attitude of the insurance company was that the plaintiff had not offered any adequate proof of the market value of the property stolen, and that therefore the verdict should be in favor of the defendant company. The company had collected from Mr. Oliner the premium for the insurance amounting to $60.50. It had not given Mr. Oliner any notice of the termination of that policy or of its desire to terminate it. It had thus manifested its willingness to carry the risk so long as no claim was made against it, and it was not until after the loss had occurred that they fell back upon the theory that the property stolen had no value whatever. It follows from these conditions that the court below committed no error in its rulings upon the questions of evidence submitted to it, and that the defendant's second prayer, as modified by the court, by which the amount of recovery was limited to the time of the theft, worked no prejudicial injury to the defendant, and the judgment appealed from will accordingly be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed, with costs.

ANNOTATION.

Insurance covering intoxicating liquor.

Validity.

A property right which is insurable is generally recognized in intoxicating liquor, although it is capable of unlawful uses. Mechanics' Ins. Co. v. C. A. Hoover Distilling Co. (1910) 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 873, 105 C. C. A. 128, 182 Fed. 590; Feibelman v. Manchester F. Assur. Co. (1895) 108 Ala. 180, 19 So. 540; Erb v. German-American Ins. Co. (1896) 98 Iowa, 606, 40 L.R.A. 845, 67 N. W. 583; Insurance Co. of N. A. v. Evans (1902) 64 Kan. 770, 68 Pac. 623; Niagara F. Ins. Co. v. De Graff (1863) 12 Mich. 124; Kellogg v. German-American Ins. Co. (1908) 133 Mo. App. 391, 113 S. W. 663; Carrigan v. Lycoming F. Ins. Co. 53 Vt. 418, 38 Am. Rep. 687.

But in some cases the contract of insurance covering such liquors has been held so closely related to the unlawful act as to be a part of that transaction and therefore invalid. Wood v. First Nat. F. Ins. Co. (1917) 21 Ga. App. 333, 94 S. E. 622; Kelly v. Home Ins. Co. (1867) 97 Mass. 288; Lawrence v. National F. Ins. Co. (1879) 127 Mass. 557; Johnson v. Union M. & F. Ins. Co. (1879) 127 Mass. 555.

It has been held that spirituous liquors, though kept for sale in violation of law, may be lawfully insured against destruction by fire, as such liquors are capable of lawful uses, and the insurance attaches to the property only, and the risks insured against are not the consequences of illegal acts, but of accidents. Niagara F. Ins. Co. v. De Graff (1863) 12 Mich. 124. The court said: "It was claimed on behalf of the plaintiffs in error, that if these liquors can be allowed to be included in a policy, the policy will be to all intents and purposes insuring an illegal traffic; and several cases were cited involving marine policies on unlawful voyages, and lottery insurances, which have been held void on that ground. These cases are not at all parallel, because they rest upon the fact that in each instance it is made a necessary condition of the policy that the illegal act shall be done. The ship being insured for a certain voyage, that voyage is the only one upon which the insurance would apply, and the underwriter becomes thus directly a party to an illegal act. So, insuring a lottery ticket requires the lottery to be drawn in order to attach the insurance to the risk. If this policy were, in express terms, a policy insuring the party selling liquors against loss by fine or forfeiture, it would be quite analogous. But this insurance attaches only to property, and the risks insured against are not the consequences of illegal acts, but of accident. Our statute does not in any way destroy or affect the right of property in spirituous liquors, or prevent title being transmitted, but renders sales unprofitable by preventing the vendor from availing himself of the ordinary advantages of a sale, and also affixes certain penalties.

Hibbard v. People (1856) 4 Mich. 125; Bagg v. Jerome (1859) 7 Mich. 145. If the owner sees fit to retain his property without selling it, or to transmit it into another state or country, he can do so. By insuring his property the insurance company has no concern with the use he may make of it, and as it is susceptible of lawful uses, no one can be held to contract concerning it in an illegal manner unless the contract itself is for a directly illegal purpose. Collateral contracts, in which no illegal design enters, are not affected by an illegal transaction with which they may be remotely connected."

And the rule was adopted in Erb v. German-American Ins. Co. (1896) 98 Iowa, 606, 40 L.R.A. 845, 67 N. W. 583, that a contract of insurance upon intoxicating liquors, susceptible of legitimate use, is collateral to, and too remotely connected with, the illegal use to which such goods are put, to be affected by it, where no illegal design entered into the making of the contract at its inception. And it was held that insurance on merchandise kept for an illegal business, such as a stock of drugs and liquors maintained by a dealer who did not have the permit required by law to sell them, was not void as against public policy.

And in Feibelman v. Manchester F. Assur. Co. (1895) 108 Ala. 180, 19 So. 540, subsequent appeal in (1897) 118 Ala. 308, 23 So. 759, it was held that the fact that the insured had not obtained a license to sell liquor had nothing to do with insurance on the liquors and fixtures, and constituted no defense to an action on the policy.

And in People's Ins. Co. v. Spencer (1866) 53 Pa. 353, 91 Am. Dec. 217, evidence in an action on an insurance policy on the stock of a brewery, that at and before the fire the insured had no license from the government as distiller, was not admissible for the purpose of showing that he was acting in violation of law.

And in Insurance Co. of N. A. v. Evans (1902) 64 Kan. 770, 68 Pac. 623, a recovery was allowed on a policy covering a stock of drugs and other merchandise, including intoxicating liquor, and, in answer to the defendant's contention that the policy was avoided by illegal sales by the insured of intoxicating liquors from the property insured, the court said: "It appears that the court permitted evidence to be given and a defense to be made that Frank Evans and Louis Evans, sons of the plaintiff below, who had charge of the drug store, had made illegal sales of intoxicating liquors. The contention is that the insurance of the stock encourages and promotes a violation of the law and is against public policy, and that the contract is therefore unenforceable. The property insured, as stated in the policy, was a 'general stock of merchandise, consisting principally of drugs, chemicals, patent medicines, oils, paints, glass, wines, drug-store sundries, liquors, and notions.' The indemnity contracted for was on this stock, against loss by fire, and was not an indemnity relating to the conduct of the business or against the consequences of the way the property was used or the business conducted. Nothing in the terms of the contract indicates a purpose to violate the law or in any way encourage its violation. If the contract appeared to have been made with a view to protecting illegal sales, or of indemnifying the parties against fines or forfeitures because of illegal sales, there would be force in the contention; but there is an entire absence of any such provisions in the policy itself, and there is nothing to show that the insured entered into a contract of insurance to protect herself in illegal acts. The present case cannot be likened to the insuring of an illegal traffic or of a business that directly and necessarily violates the law, such as policies on lotteries or marine insurance on unlawful voyages. The distinction is pointed out in Armstrong v. Toler (1826) 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 271, 6 L. ed. 468, which is to the effect that if the consideration is illegal, or if the direct purpose of the contract is to advance or encourage acts in violation of law, it is void, but if the contract to be enforced is collateral and independent, though to some extent connected with acts done in violation of law, the contract is not void;" and in conclusion the court said: "Under our Constitution and statutes, liquor may be lawfully kept, and for some purposes it may be legally sold, and, being recognized as property, it constitutes a legitimate subject of insurance. Where the sale of liquors thus insured is merely incidental, and the policy does not provide against the use or sale of liquors, and the insurance is not effected with a purpose to advance and encourage acts in violation of law, as in this case, the validity of the policy is not affected by the fact that some illegal sales were subsequently made."

And in Mechanics' Ins. Co. v. C. A. Hoover Distilling Co. (1910) 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 873, 105 C. C. A. 128, 182 Fed. 590, it was held that a contract of insurance of whisky stored in a bonded warehouse in Iowa was not void on the ground that it tended to assist the insured to violate the public policy and laws of Iowa against the possession and sale of intoxicating liquors therein. The court said: "Conceding, however, that the general policy of the state is to forbid its manufacture or sale, and conceding that its possession, in the absence of proof of a lawful intent—and there was no such proof in this case—was evidence of an illegal purpose and rendered its possession unlawful, it does not follow that its insurance against fire was either illegal or violative of the prohibition policy of the state. This whisky was stored in a bonded warehouse, and the insurance of it against fire neither violated nor had any direct tendency to violate the policy of the state which forbade its manufacture and sale. While the whisky remained stored, it could be neither made nor sold. If the whisky burned it could not be thereafter sold, and neither the payment nor the contract to pay its value in the event that it was burned could make its manufacture, storage, or sale after the burning, possible. Even if these contracts of insurance had the effect to make the business of the manufacture and sale of the liquor less hazardous, and in that way to encourage the conduct of that business, nevertheless that encouragement was not the chief purpose or direct effect, but was a mere incident of the indemnity against loss by fire which the policies were made to secure. The laws of Iowa contain no express prohibition of the insurance of intoxicating liquors against fire, its supreme court had sustained a contract for such insurance (Erb v. Fidelity Ins. Co. (1896) 99 Iowa, 733, 69 N. W. 261), there was no moral turpitude in the making or the performing of this contract, and the mere fact that an agreement, the consideration and performance of which are lawful, incidentally assists one in evading a law or a public policy, is no bar to its enforcement. . . . And it is no defense to a contract that has been performed by the promisee, that the promisor knew that the agreement or its performance might aid the promisee to violate the law or to defy the public policy of the state, when the promisor neither combined nor conspired with the promisee to accomplish that result, nor shared in the benefits of such a violation."

And in Carrigan v. Lyching F. Ins. Co. (1881) 53 Vt. 418, 38 Am. Rep. 687, it was held that a contract of insurance on a stock of one who carried on a business as a druggist, using alcoholic liquors legitimately in his drug trade, and occasionally selling them in violation of law, where no illegal design entered into its inception, would be so far collateral to the illegal acts as not to render it invalid. But it was held that a contract directly insuring liquors intended for illegal sale is invalid as one made to afford protection for illegal acts, and that if an illegal traffic in intoxicating liquors is the principal business of a druggist insuring his stock of goods, and his other business is a mere cover for the purpose of enabling him to secrete and disguise his real business, the insurance is a contract to protect him in his illegal venture, and is therefore void.

And the question whether or not the sale of intoxicating liquor by such druggist was the principal part of his business, and his dealing in drugs a mere cover to enable him to secrete and disguise his illegal traffic, so as to invalidate a fire insurance policy on his stock, was held one of fact for the jury.

And in Kellogg v. German-American Ins. Co. (1908) 183 Mo. App. 391, 113 S. W. 663, it was held that intoxicating liquors were property, and were insurable, but that if the insured at the time he took the policy intended to conduct an unlawful liquor business, the contract would be void, as such a contract tended to protect him in his purpose, and the question of his unlawful intent was held for the jury. The court said: "Intoxicating liquors, being recognized as property in this state, are insurable, and their presence in a drug store is not necessarily indicative of a purpose on the part of their owner to violate the liquor laws by making illegal sales of them. If, at the making of the contract of insurance, plaintiff intended to conduct an unlawful business, the contract of insurance should be held void on the ground that its direct effect was to protect plaintiff in his purpose to violate the law. If, on the other hand, plaintiff at the time the insurance was procured was actuated by the intent to conduct a legitimate drug store, and to use intoxicating liquors in connection with that business only, in the usual and lawful manner, we perceive no reason for declaring the contract void. There is nothing on its face to bespeak such improper purpose. As before stated, it deals with a legitimate subject of insurance, and the indemnity provided is for the accidental loss or injury of the property by fire, and not against loss sustained in consequence of a violation of law. We cannot say, as a matter of law, that the presence in the stock at the time the insurance was contracted, of ten barrels of beer and seventy gallons of whisky, indubitably stamped the business and practices of plaintiff as unlawful, nor should we indulge in such inference from the additional facts that, after the insurance was procured, plaintiff occasionally made unlawful sales and had a very thriving trade in whisky and beer. Such facts tend to prove the existence of unlawful intent, but they are not conclusive, and, in effect, go no further than to raise an issue of fact for the solution of the jury."

In Wood v. First Nat. F. Ins. Co. (1917) 21 Ga. App. 333, 94 S. E. 622, where the policy insured a stock of liquors and other merchandise while contained in a certain building occupied for "mercantile purposes," and it appeared that the liquors were kept for the purpose of illegal sale, it was held that the contract covering the liquors was so closely related to the unlawful act as to be part of that transaction, and void. The court, in distinguishing some of the cases, said: "Here, by the terms of the policy sued on, it was expressly agreed that the property insured was to be kept and maintained in violation of law, and thus it is clear that the compliance with such unlawful agreement and the aid of such illegal transaction is necessary to the establishment of plaintiff's case. Even in those jurisdictions where the validity of somewhat similar insurance policies has been sustained as not contravening public policy, the courts have laid down legal principles which we think are in entire harmony with the doctrine we now set forth. In Niagara F. Ins. Co. v. De Graff (1863) 12 Mich. 124, the policy included, among other things, groceries, among which were liquors, and it was contended that the policy was void, because to sustain the policy with liquors included would be insuring an illegal traffic. In sustaining the validity of this policy, the court said: 'By insuring his property the insurance company has no concern with the use he may make of it, and, as it is susceptible of lawful uses, no one can be held to contract concerning it in an illegal manner unless the contract itself is for a directly illegal purpose. Collateral contracts, in which no illegal design enters, are not affected by an illegal transaction with which they may be remotely connected.' In Carrigan v. Lycoming F. Ins. Co. (1881) 53 Vt. 418, 38 Am. Rep. 387, the court, said: 'If the purpose of the contract in question had been to protect the assured in the sale of intoxicating liquors, it would have been null; but the greater part of the property insured consisted of goods, insurance upon which was subject to no objection. The contract was legal upon its face, nothing appearing to show that the wines and liquors were intended for illegal sale. . . . There was evidence tending to show that he illegally sold them, including those not used in compounding medicines; and the fact may have been that the latter trade was the larger and his main one. If such illegal traffic was the business of the assured, and his legal traffic and transactions with other property a mere cover, ostensibly carried on for the purpose of enabling him to secrete and disguise his iniquity, the purpose of the contract would be to protect him in his illegal ventures, and it would therefore be void; but if he carried on business, using alcoholic liquors legitimately in his drug trade, and occasionally sold them in violation of law, we think that, if no illegal design entered into the making of the contract in its inception, that it would be so far collateral to the illegal acts that it would be inconsistent, and in accordance with no well-adjudged case, to hold it null.' In the case now before us it cannot be said that the contract was legal upon its face, since not only would it seem to have been manifest that the stock of merchandise was kept for illegal sale, but furthermore, the illegal design as entered into by each of the contracting parties was clearly expressed in that the intoxicants, under the terms of the policy, were to be kept in the place of business of the insured, used for mercantile purposes, and since this provision is not susceptible of an interpretation that the keeping of the intoxicants was lawful, it follows that the contract itself is, on its face, made in direct furtherance of an illegal purpose."

In Kelly v. Home Ins. Co. (1867) 97 Mass. 288, it was held that a policy against loss by fire of intoxicating liquors kept by the insured for sale in violation of law was for the direct purpose of enabling him to continue his offense with the greatest safety, and was therefore in contravention of law, and void. The court said: "The same principle upon which it is held that goods which are carried for an illegal purpose, or in an illegal manner, cannot be the subject of a valid insurance against the perils of the sea, applies, with at least equal force, to an insurance against fire upon goods which are so unlawfully kept in a store that the owner is liable to fine and imprisonment, the store made a nuisance, and the goods subject to seizure and forfeiture. In the present case, the insured was the guilty party; and his direct purpose in taking the policies was that he might continue his offense with the greater safety. His contract was in contravention of law, and void as to him, because he entered into it in order to protect himself in his illegal acts."

And it has been held that a fire insurance policy on saloon furniture and stock consisting principally of wines, and liquors is invalid, and never attaches, where the insured was engaged in the unlawful business of selling intoxicating liquor without a license at the time it was issued and for a month afterwards. Lawrence v. National F. Ins. Co. (1879) 127 Mass. 557.

And in Johnson v. Union M. & F. Ins. Co. (1879) 127 Mass. 555, a policy on intoxicating liquors, owned and kept for sale by both persons to whom the policy was issued, while only one of them had a license, and also upon fixtures, billiard tables, etc., kept without a license for a hire, was held illegal and void where the whole was carried on as one business.

Amount of recovery.

It will be observed that in the reported case (CHICAGO BONDING & INS. Co. v. OLNER, ante, 1081), where the insurer had collected and retained the premium on a burglary, larceny, and theft policy covering intoxicating liquor, and had manifested no desire prior to a loss to cancel the policy, it was held that it could not escape liability on the policy on the theory that because of the "War-time Prohibition Act" the liquors had no value, the court holding that although the liquor had no market value it was not valueless, and that the cost price paid for it was as close an approximation to its value as it was possible to give, and that evidence of this was proper.

Under a policy providing that the insurer should not be liable beyond the actual cash value of the property covered by the policy at the time any loss or damage occurred, and that the liability should in no event exceed what it would cost the insured to repair or replace the property lost or damaged with material of like kind and quality, it was held that the measure of a manufacturer's cost of replacing whisky and like products whose manufacture occupies considerable time and whose value increases with age is not the cost of the raw material, of which a like product may be made, and of the labor required to make it, but that it is the cost of immediately replacing the article by a like product in the most inexpensive way by purchase or otherwise, and that he is entitled to the actual cost value at the time of the fire, although a profit or loss results to him. Mechanics' Ins. Co. v. C. A. Hoover Distilling Co. (1910) 31 L.R.A. (N.S.) 873, 105 C. C. A. 128, 182 Fed. 590.

And in another case involving a like provision to that in the preceding case, it was held that in case of loss of whisky of different inspections, the insured was not restricted to the simple cost of reproducing the whisky, it appearing that aging was an important element entering into the value of whisky, but that he was entitled to have it replaced as of the date of the loss with material of like kind and quality, the court holding that the cost value of the particular brand of whisky in the wholesale market on the date it was destroyed was the measure of damages. Frick v. United Firemen's Ins. Co. (1907) 218 Pa. 409, 67 Atl. 743.

And under a policy insuring whisky, and providing that the cost value of property destroyed or damaged should in no case exceed what would be the cost to the insured, at the time of the fire, of replacing the same, it was held that the insured was entitled to recover the market value of the whisky at the time of the fire, but that this was not to be fixed at the high local value caused by the scarcity of corn in the section where the insured lived, it appearing that he was near a railroad and that the other markets of the country were open to him. Fisher v. Crescent Ins. Co. (1887) 33 Fed. 544. J. T. W.

HERMAN C. NEWMAN, Plff. in Err.,

v.

THEO ELIZABETH NEWMAN et al.

THEO ELIZABETH NEWMAN et al., Plffs. in Err.,

v.

HERMAN C. NEWMAN.

Ohio Supreme Court—July 12, 1921.

(— Ohio St. —, 133 N. E. 70.)

Fraudulent conveyance — fraud on purchaser — remedy.

1. Where the party to whom the consideration has been paid under an oral agreement to convey real estate is insolvent and has given or granted the property concerned to another without consideration, the remedy is by an action to subject the property to the payment of the debts of the insolvent person.

Headnotes by the COURT.

18 A.L.R.—69.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1098.]

Specific performance — payment of price — effect.

2. Where there is a verbal agreement for the conveyance of real estate or an interest therein, payment of the consideration will not take the case out of the operation of the Statute of Frauds, in the absence of deceit or fraud used to induce the payment.

[See 25 R. C. L. 267, 268, 544.]

— fraud — effect.

3. A court of equity will grant relief in such case where the oral promise was made as a means of imposition and deceit to secure the consideration. The ground upon which the court will interfere in such cases is that of fraud; and the exercise of the jurisdiction is based not on the oral agreement, but on the fraud. A mere refusal to perform a parol agreement void under the statute is not of itself a fraud either in law or in equity.

ERROR to the Court of Appeals for Lorain County to review a decree in favor of defendants in an action brought to subject certain land held by them to a lien in favor of plaintiff. Affirmed.

ERROR to the Court of Appeals for Lorain County to review a decree fixing a lien on certain property for the amounts claimed by plaintiff. Reversed.

Statement by Johnson, J.:

The original action, cause No. 16,734, was begun by Herman C. Newman in the common pleas of Lorain county to subject certain land held by the defendants in error to a lien in his favor.

The petition alleges that the property was conveyed to Theo Elizabeth Newman on or about the 30th of April, 1918, and was thereafter conveyed by her to McKeehan, as trustee, to hold for her benefit.

The petition alleges that within thirty days prior to the date of the deed to Theo Elizabeth Newman, her husband, Edward E. Newman, since deceased, requested the plaintiff to advance to him the sum of $5,000 for the express purpose of buying the real estate, and that the said Edward E. Newman did thereupon covenant and agree with the plaintiff that if the real estate was so purchased by the use of the plaintiff's money he would cause a mortgage to be duly executed in favor of and delivered to the plaintiff, covering said real estate as security for the money; that, relying on the promise of said Edward E. Newman, the plaintiff did advance the

$5,000 as requested, and as a preliminary step to the giving of the security agreed upon before the real estate was purchased said Edward E. Newman executed and delivered to the plaintiff his promissory note for the sum of $5,000, dated April 1, 1918, payable one year after date; that said Edward E. Newman purchased said real estate, using the $5,000 so advanced by the plaintiff for that purpose, and caused the title to the same to be taken in the name of Theo Elizabeth Newman, his wife; that the latter paid no consideration whatever for such real estate, and took the title of the same at the request of and for the benefit of said Edward E. Newman, well knowing that the plaintiff had advanced the money with which it was paid, and knowing the obligation of Edward E. Newman to the plaintiff in regard to it; that Edward E. Newman did in fact partially prepare the mortgage in plaintiff's favor, covering the real estate, and other real estate the purchase price of which was likewise advanced by the plaintiff to Edward E. Newman, and was about to carry out his agreement with the plaintiff when his death occurred on the 25th of December, 1918; that defendant Theo Elizabeth Newman now refuses to recognize the right and interest which plaintiff has in the premises, and is about to dispose of the same; and that the assets of said Edward E. Newman are wholly insufficient to satisfy plaintiff's claim against the estate, or any considerable part thereof, and plaintiff has no adequate remedy at law.

The petition prays that the real estate be decreed to be subject to a lien in plaintiff's favor in the sum of $5,000, with interest, and for such other equitable relief as is proper.

The answer of the defendant Theo Elizabeth Newman admits that McKeehan holds the legal title, as trustee, for her, subject to a lien in his favor of $1,000, and that said real estate was conveyed to her on or about the date alleged, and that she conveyed the same to McKeehan, trustee; it admits that Edward E. Newman was her husband, and that he died on December 25, 1918, and that the estate left by him was insufficient to pay the plaintiff's claims in full. Not intending to deny that plaintiff holds a promissory note of the said Edward E. Newman for the amount and of the date alleged, defendant denies all the other allegations not expressly admitted.

The answer of the defendant McKeehan sets forth that the transfer of the real estate to him as trustee was made for the purpose of preserving the status quo while the controversy concerning the matter now in dispute was being investigated. He sets up a lien for $1,000, and denies the other allegations of the petition. In cause No. 16,734 the court of appeals found in favor of the defendant, and rendered judgment accordingly.

In cause No. 16,770 the same parties were plaintiff and defendants, and the petition in that case alleged that some months after the transaction set up in the petition in No. 16,734, the said Edward E. Newman, desiring to buy an adjoining piece of property to the one referred to in 16,734, made an arrangement with his father by which his father loaned him $4,900 for that purpose, and that Edward E. Newman agreed at the same time that if the plaintiff would advance the said $4,900, he would cause a mortgage to be executed and delivered to plaintiff for the full sum of both loans, to wit, $9,900, covering both pieces of real estate; and the petition contained the same allegations touching the transaction as were contained in the other petition, and the answers were to the same effect.

In cause No. 16,770 the court of appeals found on the issues in favor of the plaintiff, and entered its decree, fixing the lien on the property for the amounts claimed.

Messrs. Garfield, MacGregor, & Baldwin and Philip R. White, for Herman C. Newman:

A parol agreement to give a mortgage, coupled with part or complete performance on the part of the person advancing the money, will be upheld in equity, to the extent that equitable relief is necessary in order to prevent a fraud either actual or constructive.

Beach, Contr. § 360; Allender v. Evans-Smith Drug Co. 3 Ind. Terr. 628, 64 S. W. 558; 1 Jones, Mortg. § 164; Murphree v. Countiss, 58 Miss. 713; Poole v. Tannis, 137 Wis. 363, 118 N. W. 188, 864; Cole v. Cole, 41 Md. 301; Sprague v. Cochran, 144 N. Y. 104, 38 N. E. 1000; King v. Williams, 66 Ark. 333, 50 S. W. 695; Smith v. Smith, 125 N. Y. 224, 26 N. E. 259; Foster Lumber Co. v. Harlan County Bank, 71 Kan. 158, 114 Am. St. Rep. 470, 80 Pac. 49, 6 Ann. Cas. 44; Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, 97 Kan. 408, 155 Pac. 791; Perry v. Board of Missions, 102 N. Y. 105, 6 N. E. 116; Baker v. Baker, 2 S. D. 261, 39 Am. St. Rep. 776, 49 N. W. 1064; Dean v. Anderson, 34 N. J. Eq. 496; Gunter v. Halsey, 2 Ambl. 586, 27 Eng. Reprint, 381; Walker v. Walker (1740) 2 Atk. 100, 26 Eng. Reprint, 462; Clinan v. Cooke, 1 Sch. & Lef. 41; Buckmaster v. Harrop, 7 Ves. Jr. 346, 32 Eng. Reprint, 139; Frame v. Dawson, 14 Ves. Jr. 386, 33 Eng. Reprint, 569, 9 Revised Rep. 304; Phillips v. Thompson, 1 Johns. Ch. 149; McCarty v. Brackenridge, 1 Tex. Civ.

App. 170, 20 S. W. 997; Ulrich v. Ulrich, 17 N. Y. S. R. 414, 1 N. Y. Supp. 777; Irvine v. Armstrong, 31 Minn. 216, 17 N. W. 343; Heran v. Elmore, 37 S. D. 223, 157 N. W. 820; Hollister v. Sweet, 32 S. D. 141, 142 N. W. 255; Williams v. Rice, 60 Mich. 102, 26 N. W. 846; Mathews v. Leaman, 24 Ohio St. 615; Watson v. Erb, 33 Ohio St. 35; Gramann v. Borgmann, 14 Ohio N. P. N. S. 449.

Messrs. Dustin, McKeehan, Merrick, Arter, & Stewart, H. H. McKeehan, and Warren M. Briggs, for Theo Elizabeth Newman et al.:

The transaction created in no sense a trust.

Whaley v. Whaley, 71 Ala. 159; Martin v. New York & St. L. Min. & Mfg. Co. 91 C. C. A. 348, 165 Fed. 398; Pom. Eq. Jur. 4th ed. § 1038; 1 Perry, Trust, § 133; 1 Tiffany, Real Prop. 2d ed. § 107, p. 399; 39 Cyc. 135; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1149; Surasky v. Weintraub, 90 S. C. 522, 73 S. E. 1029; Durant v. Davis, 10 Heisk. 522; Stansell v. Roberts, 13 Ohio, 148, 42 Am. Dec. 193.

A parol agreement to give a mortgage on realty is unenforceable, both under our statute as to conveyances and our statute against frauds and perjuries.

Page, Contr. § 1260; 27 Cyc. 984; Ogden v. Ogden, 4 Ohio St. 182; Edwards v. Scruggs, 155 Ala. 568, 46 So. 850; Slack v. Collins, 145 Ind. 569, 42 N. E. 910; Hackett v. Watts, 138 Mo. 502, 40 S. W. 113; Boehl v. Wadgy-mar, 54 Tex. 589; Ex parte Broderick, L. R. 18 Q. B. Div. 766, 56 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 635, 35 Week. Rep. 613; Clabaugh v. Byerly, 7 Gill, 354, 48 Am. Dec. 575; Six v. Shaner, 26 Md. 425; Marquat v. Marquat, 7 How. Pr. 417; Washington Brewery Co. v. Carry, — Md. —, 24 Atl. 151; Pierce v. Parrish, 111 Ga. 725, 37 S. E. 79; Roberts v. Terry, 161 Ky. 397, 170 S. W. 965; Curle v. Eddy, 24 Mo. 117, 66 Am. Dec. 699; Bloomfield State Bank v. Miller, 55 Neb. 243, 44 L.R.A. 387, 70 Am. St. Rep. 381, 75 N. W. 569; Poarch v. Duncan, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 275, 91 S. W. 1110; Thompson v. George, 86 Ky. 311, 5 S. W. 760; Bailey v. Rockafellow, 57 Ark. 216, 21 S. W. 227; Albert v. Winn, 5 Md. 66; Browne, Stat. Fr. § 267; Allen v. Mitchell, 99 Wash. 305, 169 Pac. 826; Frank Clothing Co. v. Deegan, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 204 S. W. 471; McCue v. Smith, 9 Minn. 257, Gil. 237, 86 Am. Dec. 103; Heaton v. Eldridge, 56 Ohio St. 87, 36 L.R.A.

817, 60 Am. St. Rep. 737, 46 N. E. 638; Clark v. Guest, 54 Ohio St. 298, 43 N. E. 862; Yeager v. Tuning, 79 Ohio St. 121, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 700, 128 Am. St. Rep. 679, 86 N. E. 657; Shahan v. Swan, 48 Ohio St. 38, 29 Am. St. Rep. 517, 26 N. E. 222.

The refusal to perform an oral promise to give a mortgage is not fraud so as to give a court of equity jurisdiction.

Watson v. Erb, 33 Ohio St. 35; Newton v. Taylor, 32 Ohio St. 399; Crabill v. Marsh, 38 Ohio St. 331; Irwin v. Hubbard, 49 Ind. 350, 19 Am. Rep. 679; Wooldridge v. Scott, 69 Mo. 669.

The insolvency of the estate of Edward Newman does not bar the operation of the Statute of Frauds.

Brown v. Drew, 67 N. H. 569, 42 Atl. 177; Pomeroy, Eq. Jur. 4th ed. § 2246; Miller v. Lorentz, 39 W. Va. 160, 19 S. E. 391; M'Kee v. Phillips, 9 Watts, 85; Bradley v. Owsley, — Tex. —, 19 S. W. 340; Townsend v. Fenton, 32 Minn. 482, 21 N. W. 726; 36 Cyc. 651.

Johnson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In the case which involved the property first purchased, the testimony of Herman C. Newman, the plaintiff in the action, was the only evidence in support of some of the material allegations of his petition. In the case which concerned the property purchased several months later, the allegations of the petition were supported by the testimony of a son Arthur, brother to Edward E. Newman.

On the trial of the first case in the court of appeals, on appeal, that court held that, as Edward, the son to whom the money was loaned, had died, the father, Herman C. Newman, the plaintiff, was incompetent as a witness, and that the competent evidence introduced was not of sufficient probative force to warrant the relief prayed for.

It is contended that the rejection of the father's testimony by the court of appeals was error. Its holding was based upon § 11,495, General Code, the pertinent part of which follows: "A party shall not testify when the adverse party . . . is an executor or administrator, or claims or defends as heir, grantee, assignee, devisee, or legatee, of a deceased person."

Certain specified exceptions are stated, and then follows the clause: "And when a case is plainly within the reason and spirit of the next three preceding sections, though not within the strict letter, their principles shall be applied."

It was the view of the court of appeals, that, although Theo Elizabeth, the wife of the deceased son, was not the grantee or devisee of a deceased person, yet the case was plainly within "the reason and spirit of the next three preceding sections."

The plaintiff in error earnestly insists that the cases of Cochran v. Almack, 39 Ohio St. 314, and Cockley Mill. Co. v. Bunn, 75 Ohio St. 270, 116 Am. St. Rep. 741, 79 N. E. 478; 9 Ann. Cas. 179, sustain his contention.

In the Cochran Case it is held in the syllabus: "A defendant is a competent witness to transactions with a deceased agent of plaintiff, though not occurring in his presence, if within the scope of such agent's authority."

It would seem to be clear that a deceased agent does not sustain a relation analogous to any of the persons named in the section. In the opinion the three sections of the statute here involved are discussed by the court, and it concludes by saying: "It follows that if a case is provided for, by the terms of either of the sections, no occasion can arise for invoking the spirit and reason of the statute to supply the omission of its letter or terms."

I do not think that conclusion logically follows.

In the Cockley Case it is held that the general manager of a corporation in a suit against an executor or administrator is not disqualified by § 5242, Revised Statutes (now § 11,495, General Code), to testify to facts occurring before the death of the decedent.

In Elliott v. Shaw, 32 Ohio St. 431, it is pointed out that, in its original form, the section only excluded the party when the adverse party was an executor or administrator, and that since then numerous amendments have been made from time to time. In that case the question was whether, in a suit by an assignee of a chose in action from a deceased person, the opposing party is barred. The court held that, as assignees were not mentioned in the statute, it did not apply. But the following year the legislature amended the statute so as to read in its present form, and in that amendment the reason and spirit clause was inserted.

The inference would seem to be reasonable that the legislature, by the insertion of the clause, intended to abrogate the construction requiring absolute particularity, which had theretofore been applied, and therefore enacted that when a case came within the reason and spirit of the sections the provision should apply, although it might not come within the letter.

Section 11,493, General Code, makes all persons competent witnesses except those of unsound mind, etc. Section 11,494, General Code, excludes privileged communications to attorneys, physicians, etc. Section 11,495, General Code, places a limit on the full competency of the party, and makes the party incompetent when the adverse party defends as grantee, devisee, etc., of a deceased person. And then comes the reason and spirit clause. Under this section Mr. Newman, the father, would be incompetent if the wife of the deceased son, Theo Elizabeth, was the grantee of her husband. She is not the grantee of her husband, but she is to all intents and purposes the grantee of her husband,—his real grantee. If the deceased son had taken the title in his own name, the title would have passed to his heir on his death, and the father in that event would be incompetent as a witness. If the son had taken the title and had willed the property to his wife, the father would be incompetent, and if the son had taken the title and later conveyed it direct to his wife, as grantee, the father could not have testified.

Does the fact that the husband caused the grant to be made direct from the original owner to her, instead of to himself and then to her, change the spirit of it? I think not. The case is within the reason and spirit of the sections. To hold that if a witness came within either of the three sections he would be competent would be to regard only the letter of the statute. It would disregard and disobey the mandate of the legislature that courts should observe the reason and spirit of the statute.

However, the court is not agreed upon the question as to the competency of the father, and we come to the contention of counsel for the wife of the deceased son, that if it be conceded that an oral agreement was made by the son to give his father a mortgage, the agreement was void under the Statute of Frauds.

The facts shown are that in April, 1918, the father loaned to Edward, the son, $5,000, and received from him his promissory note for that sum, payable in one year from its date; that the loan was made at the request of the son, who told his father he would use the money for the purchase of the land described in the petition, and that if his father would loan him the amount he would give him a mortgage on the property to secure the loan; that the loan was made pursuant to that arrangement; that the property was purchased, and on the son's direction was deeded directly to his wife, the defendant, Theo Elizabeth Newman; and that the mortgage was never delivered, and the son died from influenza in Kansas City the following Christmas.

As to the property subsequently purchased, the father, in June, 1918, loaned Edward $4,900, and received his promissory note therefor, and the son Arthur testified that his brother told him he was going to give the father a mortgage on both parcels for the entire amount loaned. The father had also testified to this; and his testimony was, as above stated, excluded in the court of appeals. No mortgage on either piece of property was ever signed, and the father holds the two notes—one for $5,000 and one for $4,900—unpaid.

There is no charge of actual fraud in the case, and the father, on the witness stand, expressly disclaimed that the son had any intent to cheat or deceive him, and no claim is made that the son overreached the father in any way. It is conceded that the son was an honest and conscientious business man.

The situation presented is that the father loaned the son the sums of money stated, and the son promised to give a mortgage to secure the promissory notes given to the father for the loans. Was the agreement to give the mortgage void within the Statute of Frauds? Were the circumstances such as to invoke the equity powers of the court to impress a trust on the property?

It is contended by counsel for the wife of Edward that the parol agreement to give the mortgage on the real estate is unenforceable under our statutes (Gen. Code, §§ 8620, 8621) as to conveyance and frauds and perjuries; that no trust was created by the transaction; that nothing akin to a vendor's lien is involved in it; that the failure to give the mortgage does not constitute a fraud, so as to give a court of equity jurisdiction; and that the insolvency of the estate of Edward does not prevent the operation of the Statute of Frauds.

Section 8620, General Code, provides: "No . . . interest . . . in, or out of lands, . . . shall be assigned, or granted except by deed, or note in writing, signed by the party so assigning or granting it, . . . or by act and operation of law."

Section 8621, General Code, provides: "No action shall be brought, whereby . . . to charge a person . . . upon a contract or sale of lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or interest in, or concerning them; . . . unless the agreement upon which such action is brought, or some memorandum or note thereof, is in writing, and signed by the party to be charged therewith."

On the other hand counsel for the father contend that equity will not allow one party to be unjustly enriched by retaining benefits received under a contract, which is within the Statute of Frauds, and they contend that this is a case of unjust enrichment. They agree that the transaction itself did not create a trust in the property. But they ask the court to construct a trust as a remedy to prevent unjust enrichment. They do not claim that the transaction created a vendor's lien. They concede, as obviously it must be conceded, that the father does not stand in the position of one having a vendor's lien; that he could not enforce his claim against a creditor of Theo Elizabeth Newman who had levied on the property, or claimed a preference, in case she went into bankruptcy. They concede that a parol agreement to give a mortgage is, on its face, within the Statute of Frauds, and that, strictly speaking, the contract itself is unenforceable, although courts of equity do not always make this distinction. They insist that it may or may not be true that the refusal to perform an oral promise to give a mortgage "is not such fraud as to give a court of equity jurisdiction," but they contend that if the refusal amounts to a fraud, in that it allows one party to retain an unconscionable advantage, such refusal does perpetrate a fraud and give a court of equity jurisdiction. They rest their case on the proposition that equity will prevent an unjust enrichment under certain facts and circumstances, and contend that this case presents such a situation.

The briefs of counsel on both sides contain many authorities touching various phases of the questions presented. The authorities cited by counsel, in which propositions are stated upon which relief has been granted, or in which relief has been refused, do not in either alternative agree upon the grounds on which their conclusions are rested.

It is also apparent that in some jurisdictions courts have followed a different rule from that which has been consistently followed in Ohio; and likewise in a number of cases it is shown that the court in the exercise of its equity powers has, because of the peculiar circumstances of the cases, felt called upon to impress a trust upon the property involved.

In this state there has been a very substantial adherence to the rule that, upon parol contract for an interest in lands, mere payment of the consideration does not take the case out of the Statute of Frauds and Perjuries.

Specific performance—payment of price—effect.

In Stansell v. Roberts, 13 Ohio, 148, 42 Am. Dec. 193, it appeared that one Jennings loaned to Roberts the money to make the first payment on land purchased. Roberts executed a mortgage in Jennings's favor, but Jennings neglected to have his mortgage recorded until after a mortgage to Stansell was recorded. The claim of Jennings's counsel was that as Stansell knew of Jennings's mortgage, his lien must be postponed to that of Jennings's. In disposing of Jennings's claim that his lien was in the nature of a vendor's lien, the court says: "The purchase money is what passes between vendor and purchaser, and the lien is the right of the vendor to look to the thing sold, for the price for which it was sold. But money advanced by a third person, to enable the purchaser to buy, is no part of this transaction; nor is he who advances privy to the sale. Nor can it be construed into a resulting trust; that exists where land is purchased with the money of another."

In the case before us the property was not purchased with the money of Herman Newman, the father.

He concedes he loaned the money to Edward and received his note for it. He testifies that after he loaned it he had no right to direct what Edward was to do with it.

In Watson v. Erb, 33 Ohio St. 35, it is held that "the fraud against which equity will grant relief, notwithstanding the Statute of Frauds, consists in the refusal to perform an agreement upon the faith of which the plaintiff has been misled to his injury, or the defendant has secured an unconscionable advantage, and not in the mere moral wrong involved in a refusal to perform a contract which, by reason of the Statute of Frauds, cannot be enforced by action."

In the opinion at page 48, it is said: "It must appear that the promise was used as a means of imposition and deceit. If the case taken as a whole is one of fraud, the verbal promise may be received in evidence as one of the steps by which the fraud was accomplished. To deduce the fraud from the contract and then give effect to the contract on the score of fraud is reasoning in a circle. The fraud which will give jurisdiction to compel a performance of the parol trust must consist in something more than a mere breach of parol undertaking."

In the case before us it is not claimed that the son Edward sought to cheat and defraud his father by anything that was said or done in the making of the oral agreement. H. C. Newman, the father himself, disclaims that his son had any such purpose, or did anything to deceive him. There is no contention that Theo Newman, the wife of the son, was party to any arrangement, or has been in any of the transactions guilty of any fraud.

It is further said in Watson v. Erb, supra, page 48:

"Thus, if the actual purchaser agreed to buy and hold for the real purchaser, with money loaned by him to the latter for that purpose, he is a trustee of the title for the borrower. [Citing cases.]

"Upon the same principle, a deed absolute on its face may be converted into a mortgage, by showing that it was in consideration of a loan, and equity will treat the grantee as a trustee of the title, and compel a reconveyance on payment of the debt. This is so whether there was a verbal defeasance or not. But the mere breach of a parol agreement is not such a fraud as takes the case out of the statute. [Citing cases.]

"If this were not so, the consequence would be that the common-law rule that parol contemporaneous evidence cannot be admitted to vary the terms of a written agreement, and also the provisions of the Statute of Frauds, would be abrogated."

In Newton v. Taylor, 32 Ohio St. 399, it is held: "An implied or constructive trust may be established from the acts of a party who has obtained money upon the faith of his agreement to buy lands in the name of his wife, and, having bought them, takes the title to himself."

"If the husband is a participant in inducing the purchase for the wife's benefit, receives the money for that purpose to invest in her name, and then buys for himself, this is such a fraud as will create a trust against him and those claiming under him with notice."

In the opinion, at page 409, it is said: "The opinion, however, of Browne, in his treatise on frauds, seems to be that the fraud which suffices to lay the foundation of a trust is not simply that fraud which is involved in every deliberate breach of contract. There must have been some agency in bringing about the result, without which a mere refusal to perform the trust is not enough. . . . And Perry says that the mere breach of a parol agreement will not create a trust. . . . Washburne also seems to entertain the same opinion expressed by Perry and Browne, that a mere subsequent refusal to do what had been agreed is not such a fraud as will create a constructive trust."

In Crabill v. Marsh, 38 Ohio St.

331, it is held that, "on a verbal agreement for the conveyance of land, the payment of the purchase money, whether made in money or services, will not take the agreement out of the operation of the Statute of Frauds."

In the opinion, at page 338, it is said: "That mere payment of the purchase money, whether made in money or services, will not take the case out of the operation of the statute, we regard as well settled. . . . The ground upon which courts of equity interfere, in such cases, is that of fraud. The jurisdiction is founded not upon the agreement, but upon the fraud. And a mere refusal to perform a parol agreement, void under the Statute of Frauds, is in no sense fraud, either in law or equity."

The Statute of Frauds is founded in wisdom, and has been justified by long experience. As was said by Mr. Justice Grier in Purcell v. Miner, 4 Wall. 513, 517, 18 L. ed. 435, 436: The statute is "absolutely necessary to preserve the title to real property from the chances, the uncertainty, and the fraud attending the admission of parol testimony."

It should be enforced. Courts of equity, to prevent the statute from becoming an instrument of fraud, have in many instances relaxed its provisions. But this case is barren of any averment or proof, or offer of proof, which ought to induce a court of equity to afford relief.

It is said in 39 Cyc. 135: "It is a well-settled rule that where money is advanced by way of a loan to be used by the borrower in the purchase of property in his own name, no resulting trust arises in favor of the lender, although the money is loaned under a parol agreement that the borrower's interest in the property shall rest in the lender to the extent of his loan."

In the brief of counsel for Theo Elizabeth Newman many authorities are cited in support of their contentions as to the various phases of the case, but, as is the case in the brief of counsel for the father, they differ widely upon the grounds on which their conclusions are reached.

Concerning the contention of counsel for Herman C. Newman that the court should construct a trust as a remedy to prevent the unjust enrichment complained of, we think it may be said that in Ohio it is not the rule that the mere payment of the money in pursuance of the verbal contract is such a part performance as to take the case out of the operation of the statute, or, in the absence of fraud, that it is such a circumstance as would invoke the equity jurisdiction of the court to impress a trust upon the property for the security of the loan.

There is general concurrence in the view, which is obviously just and equitable, that if one has been induced to enter into and perform, or partly perform, an oral agreement concerning an interest in land by fraudulent misrepresentations as to existing conditions, financial ability of a party, or under circumstances which amount to fraud, a court of equity should refuse to let the statute be used as an instrument of fraud or to operate to prevent equitable relief. And there may be such part performance of a particular contract as to justify relief. As said in Shahan v. Swan, 48 Ohio St. 25, at page 40, 29 Am. St. Rep. 517, 26 N. E. 226: "Notwithstanding that it is the established rule in Ohio that the payment of the consideration, even in the personal services of the party seeking relief, does not ordinarily constitute such part performance as will take a case out of the operation of the Statute of Frauds, we do not wish to be understood to hold that cases may not arise wherein specific performance of a contract in parol may be had on the ground that the consideration had been paid in personal services, not intended to be, and not susceptible of being, measured by a pecuniary standard."

But where the entire transaction leading up to the loan of money and the making of the verbal contract to execute the mortgage to secure the loan is open and free from fraud or false representation, the subsequent failure to give the mortgage is not such a circumstance as to amount to fraud. Such a holding would open the door to the nullification of the Statute of Frauds under most any set of circumstances.

As we view the case, it was a simple transaction by which Edward, the son, bought a piece of real estate and borrowed the money from his father to pay for it. He gave his promissory note to his father, payable in one year after date, with interest, and promised at the time that when he had received the deed and the title he would give his father a mortgage to secure the note. Some months afterwards the son died while absent from home, without having executed and delivered the mortgage. When the father loaned the son the money, and received the note, the money became the property of the son.

When the father was on the witness stand he testified as follows:

Q. As far as Ed's making it out to Theo was concerned, that would be all right to you?

A. After I loaned him the money I had no right to direct what he was to do with it. He was to buy the property.

We see no feature in that transaction out of which a trust can arise or can be impressed on the land. Moreover, while we are convinced that there is no ground upon which to grant the relief prayed for in this case, the father is not without his proper remedy. The estate of Edward Newman is indebted to his father, Herman C. Newman, in the sum of approximately $10,500.

It is conceded that when Edward Newman gave the money borrowed from his father to his wife to buy the property, or when he paid the money to the owner of the property for the deed to his wife, he gave or transferred it to her without consideration, and it is conceded that he was insolvent. Under these circumstances the gift or transfer was void as to existing creditors. The father is entitled to proceed by suit to set aside the gift or transfer and subject the property to the benefit of the creditors of the son, preserving the legal rights of all parties concerned therein. But holding only the notes as evidence of the indebtedness to him, and not having received the mortgage as security for the notes, there is no ground to prefer the father's claim.

Fraudulent conveyance—fraud on purchaser—remedy.

It is said in 25 R. C. L. 267, § 68: "The courts are practically unanimous that the mere payment of a portion of the purchase money, unaccompanied by any other act, does not amount to part performance of an oral contract sufficient to take the case out of the Statute of Frauds. Even the payment of the whole consideration has been held not to be sufficient for that purpose. This is for the reason that the plaintiff is considered as having a sufficient remedy at law to recover back the money."

In cause No. 16,734, Herman C. Newman v. Theo Elizabeth Newman et al., the judgment of the Court of Appeals is affirmed.

In cause No. 16,770, Theo Elizabeth Newman et al. v. Herman C. Newman, the judgment of the Court of Appeals is reversed.

Hough, Robinson, and Matthias, JJ., concur.

ANNOTATION.

Rights and remedies of one who advances money to purchase real estate under an oral agreement by the vendee to give a mortgage thereon as security.

- I. Resulting trust, 1099.
- II. Vendor's or equitable lien or mortgage, 1100.

It should be observed that, as is indicated in the above title, the present note includes in general only cases in which there is an oral agreement by the vendee to give a mortgage on the property as security. There are several cases referred to in the note in which the court held that an equitable lien or mortgage existed in favor of the lender of money, although there was no oral agreement for a mortgage, but this class of cases is not in general covered, as it does not clearly appear that the same rights and remedies would exist in such cases as where there is an express oral agreement between the parties for a mortgage as security.

1. Resulting trust.

The rule appears to be that the mere fact that one advances money to another to purchase real estate under a parol agreement, which is not carried out and which is unenforceable, for a mortgage on the land as security for the advance, does not entitle the lender in a court of equity to impress a resulting trust upon the land in the hands of the vendee. NEWMAN v. NEWMAN (reported herewith) ante, 1089; Durant v. Davis (1873) 10 Heisk. (Tenn.) 522. See also Loftis v. Loftis (1895) 94 Tenn. 232, 28 S. W. 1091; Rogers v. Simpson (1873) 10 Heisk. (Tenn.) 655; Chapman v. Abrahams (1878) 61 Ala. 108.

The above rule was applied in the reported case (NEWMAN v. NEWMAN) even though the borrower of the money had died insolvent, it being held that, in the absence of actual fraud or deceit, equity would not impress a trust on the property.

And where a married woman obtained a conveyance of land to her separate use, pursuant to an oral agreement with one who furnished a part of the purchase price that the land should be so conveyed and that she would execute a trust deed or mortgage on it to secure the amount borrowed, but afterwards refused to execute such deed or mortgage, the court in Durant v. Davis (Tenn.) supra, held that a resulting trust did not arise in the property in favor of the party so advancing the purchase money. The court, after holding that the lender had no right to subrogation to the vendor's lien, said: "There is equally as little room to maintain the position that the facts raise a resulting trust in favor of complainant in the original bill. It is a case simply of a promise by a married woman to give a mortgage or a deed of trust to secure the payment of money loaned, for which she has given her promissory note. That this promise has been violated is certainly true on the facts in this record; but how this can raise a resulting trust, simply because the money so loaned was paid on a lot purchased by the borrower, we have been unable to see. It is insisted, however, that this is a case of outrageous fraud, and therefore a court of equity must give relief. It certainly has some of the worst elements of bad faith, but no more than in any other case where a party promises that which the law will not enforce, and refuses to comply with his promise. It is not such fraud as a court of equity can relieve against, unless we assume that the courts are authorized to declare such a promise, as is here shown, to be binding, and enforce it, notwithstanding the long-settled principle that such a contract of a married woman is not binding, either at law or in equity. In fact, the promise to give the deed of trust on land would not be enforced in any court, either against a married woman or a party free from disability, not being in writing. It had no binding legal force when made, and it was the folly of the other party to trust to it, against which the courts of equity can give no relief."

Also in Chapman v. Abrahams (Ala.) supra, it was held that one who advanced purchase money for land at the request of the prospective vendee under an agreement apparently in parol, for a mortgage on the land when the conveyance was executed, was not entitled to a resulting trust in the land after the conveyance. There was, however, in this case an actual execution of the mortgage; and the question under consideration was not discussed, the opinion being concerned chiefly with the effect of the mortgage.

And in Loftis v. Loftis (1895) 94 Tenn. 232, 28 S. W. 1091, supra, it was held that an oral agreement made between a husband and wife that the latter should have a charge or lien upon lands which he was about to purchase, for the amount contributed by her as a part of the purchase price, did not establish a resulting trust in the land, on its conveyance to the husband, to the extent of her contribution, but that she was only a general creditor, without lien or priority as against the other creditors of the husband.

Attention is called also to Rogers v. Simpson (1873) 10 Heisk. (Tenn.) 655, holding that no resulting trust or lien could arise in favor of one who advanced money to another to purchase lands under an oral agreement that the interest of the purchaser in the lands should, to the extent of the money advanced, vest in the lender.

II. Vendor's or equitable lien or mortgage.

The cases are not harmonious on the question whether one who advances money to buy real estate, under an oral agreement for a mortgage on the property as security, is entitled to subrogation to the vendor's lien or is entitled to some form of equitable lien or mortgage which can be enforced against the property, where the vendee refuses to carry out the agreement for a mortgage. There are several cases which hold in favor of the right to a lien or equitable mortgage.

Alabama. — See Gibson v. Gibson (1917) 200 Ala. 591, 76 So. 949, infra.

Illinois. — Grigaitis v. Gaidauskis (1919) 214 Ill. App. 111.

Kansas. — Foster Lumber Co. v. Harlan County Bank (1905) 71 Kan. 158, 114 Am. St. Rep. 470, 80 Pac. 49, 6 Ann. Cas. 44.

Maryland. — Cole v. Cole (1875) 41 Md. 301.

Michigan. — Williams v. Rice (1886) 60 Mich. 102, 26 N. W. 846.

Minnesota. — See Hughes v. Mulaney (1904) 92 Minn. 485, 100 N. W. 217, infra.

Mississippi. — Murphree v. Countiss (1881) 58 Miss. 712.

New York. — See Sprague v. Cochran (1894) 144 N. Y. 104, 38 N. E. 1000, infra.

Wisconsin. — Poole v. Tannis (1908) 137 Wis. 363, 118 N. W. 188, 864.

Thus, it was held in Foster Lumber Co. v. Harlan County Bank (Kan.) supra, that if one advances money for the purpose of buying a specific tract of land, on the oral promise of the borrower to secure its repayment by a mortgage upon the property when title thereto is obtained, and, after the conveyance has been procured by the use of the money, the borrower refuses to execute the mortgage, equity will regard that as done which the borrower agreed should be done, and which ought to have been done, and will treat the transaction as creating an equitable mortgage upon the land in favor of the lender. It was held that the lien so created was not obnoxious to the Statute of Frauds because it depended in part upon an oral promise. The court observed that the lender had fully performed its part of the agreement; and quoted the doctrine that courts of equity never allow the provisions of the Statute of Frauds to be perverted and made instrumental in the accomplishment of fraud; that they decree the specific execution of agreements where there has been a performance on the one side, because the refusal to perform on the other side is a fraud, and they will not permit the statute designed to prevent fraud to be made an engine of fraud. Besides this, the court said: The lien decreed might be regarded as resulting from the operation of the law from the entire conduct of the parties, and hence as in terms excluded from the inhibition of the statute.

And the court in Foster Lumber Co. v. Harlan County Bank (Kan.) supra, held that the lender's equitable mortgage would be given precedence over a mortgage on the land taken by a party who had notice of the rights of the lender; and that such mortgage also was superior to the homestead rights of the borrower.

And where money was advanced for the purchase price of land under an oral agreement for a mortgage thereon as security, but the purchaser refused to carry out the agreement, it was held in Grigaitis v. Gaidauskis (Ill.) supra, that the person advancing the money could enforce an equitable lien on the property. The court does not discuss the effect of the Statute of Frauds, but states that pursuant to the maxim that equity will consider that which ought to be done as already in being, the promise to give a mortgage to secure a loan may be treated as an actual mortgage.

Also in Cole v. Cole (Md.) supra, where it was orally agreed that for money advanced to pay the purchase price of land the borrower should execute a mortgage to secure repayment, a note for the advance being given at the time of the execution of the deed to stand as evidence until a mortgage could be executed, it was held in a suit by the borrower against the grantee to compel the sale of the land to satisfy the complainant's claim, or to compel the execution of the mortgage to secure its payment, that the giving of the note did not destroy the right of the complainant to have the mortgage executed; that the borrower was bound in equity and good conscience to performance on his part; that his interest in the property must be held answerable for the same, to the same extent as if the mortgage had been given according to the agreement; that a court of equity would hold him liable, and consider that as done which ought to have been done; and that there was nothing in the Statute of Frauds, if it had been pleaded, to prevent the application of this equitable principle, since courts of equity would not allow its provisions to be perverted and made instrumental in the accomplishment of fraud, but would decree a specific execution of agreements where there had been a performance on the one side, as the refusal to perform on the other side was a fraud. Since the time limited for repayment of the complainant had nearly expired, the court held that the execution of a mortgage might be dispensed with, and the defendant given the benefit of a stay of payment until the claim was due; but that a decree should be entered for the sale of the property and the payment of the complainant's claim unless it was paid by the time specified.

And it being proved that the borrower's wife, who was made a party defendant, had notice of the complainant's equitable demands at the time the property was conveyed to her by her husband, any rights she acquired therein must be held subject to that of the complainant, and the deed to her should be vacated so far as it interfered with the complainant's equitable rights. Ibid.

So, a third party who advanced money for the purchase price of land, pursuant to an oral agreement for a trust deed of the property as security, which the purchaser refused to execute, was held in Murphree v. Countiss (1881) 58 Miss. 712, supra, entitled to an equitable lien on the property for the sum advanced, where the vendee entered into possession without giving a note for the purchase price, under an executory contract for title upon payment, and, when called upon for payment, applied to the third party for assistance, when an agreement was made between the latter and the vendor and vendee that the purchase money should be paid to the vendor by the third party, and that the latter should receive a note therefor and a trust deed as security from the vendee, the agreement being carried out by all the parties except that when the vendee, several weeks later, received a deed, he refused to execute the security. The court under these circumstances held that there was an assignable vendor's lien, and apparently regarded the third party as the equitable assignee of the vendor.

And in Williams v. Rice (1886) 60 Mich. 102, 26 N. W. 846, supra, where one who advanced money to buy real estate under an agreement (apparently by parol) that he should receive from the vendee a mortgage for the amount advanced, which mortgage the purchaser refused to execute, brought suit to establish a vendor's lien and to foreclose the same as a mortgage, the court held that the defendant's refusal to comply with the agreement was unconscionable, and that a decree granting the relief prayed for should be affirmed. The opinion does not, however, discuss the questions of law involved.

And where the plaintiff loaned money to the defendant to buy real estate, under an oral agreement that the premises purchased should be security for the loan (there being no specific finding, however, that the security was to be in the form of a mortgage, as claimed by the plaintiff), but after the purchase the defendant refused to furnish security, it was held in Hughes v. Mullaney (1904) 92 Minn. 485, 100 N. W. 217, that a cause of action arose in the plaintiff to have the amount of the loan, with interest, adjudged a lien upon the premises, and that the same should be sold to satisfy the lien.

And third persons who advanced purchase money for land, under an agreement (whether oral or in writing does not appear) that the deed should be held in escrow until a mortgage to secure the purchase price was executed and delivered to them by the vendee, were held in Gibson v. Gibson (1917) 200 Ala. 591, 76 So. 949, entitled, on failure to execute the mortgage, to subrogation to the vendor's lien which they had discharged.

Although not on facts within the scope of the note, attention is called also to the statement in Sprague v. Cochran (1884) 144 N. Y. 104, 88 N. E. 1000, which supports the doctrine that one who advances money under an oral agreement for a mortgage on certain lands is entitled to an equitable mortgage on the property which is analogous to that of a vendor's lien. The court (arguendo) said: "There can be no doubt, upon the authorities, that where one party advances money to another upon the faith of a verbal agreement by the latter to secure its payment by a mortgage upon certain lands, but which is never executed, or which, if executed, is so defective or informal as to fail in effectuating the purpose of its execution, equity will impress upon the land intended to be mortgaged a lien in favor of the creditor who advanced the money for the security and satisfaction of his debt.

. . . Some of these cases hold that the lien of the party who has advanced money under such circumstances is analogous to that of the vendor of real estate for the unpaid purchase money. The vendor's lien rests solely upon the doctrine of equity that it would be inequitable for the vendee who has received the legal title without payment of the purchase money to hold the estate discharged from the claim of the seller for its price, and it is certainly difficult to see any just distinction between the two cases. In one case a party receives the title to real property, without paying for it, with or without an agreement that his vendor shall be secured in the payment of the purchase price by a lien upon it by way of mortgage or otherwise. In the other case the party advances money under an agreement that its payment shall be secured by mortgage upon specific real estate, but which agreement has never been perfected. The right of the vendor and that of the person who has advanced the money are not essentially different, and each would seem to commend itself with equal force to the conscience of a court of equity. The doctrine of equitable mortgages is not limited to written instruments intended as mortgages, but which by reason of formal defects cannot have such operation without the aid of the court, but also to a very great variety of transactions to which equity attaches that character. It is not necessary that such transactions or agreements as to lands should be in writing in order to take them out of the operation of the Statute of Frauds, for two reasons: First, because they are completely executed by at least one of the parties and are no longer executory; and, secondly, because the statute by its own terms does not affect the power which courts of equity have always exercised to compel specific performance of such agreements."

Where money was advanced by the plaintiff to the defendant, her son, to purchase a lot and to erect a house thereon, under an oral agreement that she should receive a mortgage on the premises to secure the sum advanced, but the defendant refused to execute the mortgage, it was held in Poole v. Tannis (1908) 137 Wis. 363, 118 N. W. 188, that a judgment awarding the plaintiff a vendor's lien on the property was improper, but that by reason of the agreement the plaintiff was entitled to an equitable lien thereon and to enforcement of the same by sale of the property; that under the circumstances in this case there was no material difference in the legal consequences of the two liens, and hence there was no prejudicial error. The court said: "There is no contention in this case that the claim sought to be enforced arises out of a transaction between vendor and vendee, and the facts clearly negative such a relationship. Hence the judgment of the trial court awarding plaintiff a vendor's lien is not well founded. . . . However, the question arises whether the plaintiff, under the established facts, is not entitled to the relief of an enforcement of an equitable lien upon the premises for the sums she contributed to the purchase of the lot and the building of the house thereon, in view of the fact that she relied on the agreement that the property should stand as security for the money she advanced to defendant to purchase and improve the lot, and defendant's refusal, after full performance of the agreement by plaintiff, to so secure the money advanced. It is shown that the money was advanced by the mother to the son upon the understanding that its repayment should be secured by a lien upon the premises, though the agreement established was not sufficiently clear and definite to provide for a mortgage security which she prayed should be specifically enforced. It is also plain that the son, through this arrangement and the confidential relationship between himself and his mother, obtained the money from her to acquire this property, and that he now refuses to carry out the agreement. The mother having advanced the money on the faith of the son's promise, and the defendant having used it for the acquisition of the property, give a basis for the interposition of equity to secure her a lien on the property, and to enforce repayment out of it of the sum so advanced by her."

Cases which uphold the right in general of a third person who advances purchase money to buy real estate, to the benefit of the vendor's lien, would be authority apparently, a fortiori, for the proposition that such a third person has the right to substitution to the vendor's lien, or at least an equitable lien of some kind, where he advances the money under an oral agreement, which is not carried out, for a mortgage on the property,—unless the making of such an oral agreement should be regarded as negating any implied agreement for subrogation to the vendor's lien. But even in the latter event, it would seem that the case would be stronger in favor of the lender's right to an equitable lien than where no oral agreement is made, because, while the agreement itself is unenforceable, it shows that the intention of the parties was not to rely upon the personal security merely of the borrower, but upon the property itself.

As an example of the class of cases last referred to, attention is called to Carey v. Boyle (1881) 53 Wis. 574, 11 N. W. 47, where the court admitted that the extension of the right to a vendor's lien to third persons furnishing the purchase money could not be regarded as sustained by the weight of authority, the courts being in conflict on the question; but stated that so far as that state was concerned, it must be regarded as settled that such third persons are entitled to the full benefit of the vendor's lien. The court, however, said: "It must be understood that the extension of this equity to a third person is strictly confined to those who furnish or advance the purchase money to the purchaser in such manner that they can be said either to have paid it to the vendor, personally, or caused it to be paid on behalf or for the benefit of the purchaser; and to this extent they become parties to the transaction. It must not be a general loan, to be used by the purchaser to pay the consideration of the purchase or to be used for any other purpose at his pleasure. In such case, the simple fact that the money can be traced into the land as having been paid by the purchaser to the vendor, as the whole or part of the purchase money, gives the person who loaned it no such right."

Although there was no agreement to execute a mortgage on the property to be purchased, and the case is, therefore, not on the facts within the scope of the note, attention is called to Leary v. Corvin (1905) 181 N. Y. 222, 106 Am. St. Rep. 542, 73 N. E. 984, 2 Ann. Cas. 664, where the plaintiff advanced money to her parents to buy a house for a home, under an agreement, which was void under the Statute of Frauds, that at their death the plaintiff should have the house; and it was held that, the plaintiff having contributed to the purchase of property on the faith of an agreement which had been violated by a failure to secure the same to her upon their deaths, and the relation being one of trust and confidence, she was entitled to an equitable lien upon the same for principal and interest; and that a decree should be entered for the sale of the property to satisfy the lien.

However, it has been held in several cases that the right to a vendor's or equitable lien does not extend to one advancing money to buy land under an oral agreement for a mortgage on the same as security. It may be observed that if the circumstances are not such that the vendor ever had a lien for the purchase money, then one element favorable to the right of the lender to substitution or subrogation is eliminated, because the view may be taken that there is, strictly speaking, no vendor's lien to which he can be subrogated, or of which he might be regarded as the equitable assignee.

Thus, a loan of money to purchase land, on the promise (presumably oral) of the purchaser to give the lender security on the land, was held in Campan v. Molle (1899) 124 Cal. 415, 57 Pac. 208, not to entitle the latter to a vendor's lien for the money advanced, although the purchaser refused to give the security. The court said: "It is claimed in support of the appeal that, by virtue of the transaction between the plaintiff and the defendants, the plaintiff was subrogated to the rights of the vendor of the land, and is entitled to enforce the claim against the land as fully as could the vendor. The complaint does not, however, contain the contract between the vendor and the defendants, or show the relation between them. Nor does it appear therefrom that the vendor had any rights which he could enforce against them. It merely shows that the defendants had the right to purchase the land for a given sum of money. It does not appear at what time the defendants paid the money to the vendor, or when the land was conveyed to them, and, as the vendor was to retain title to the land until full payment therefor should be made, there was no vendor's lien to which the plaintiff could be subrogated. The transaction between the plaintiff and the defendants was merely a loan of money upon their agreement to give him security, which they afterwards refused to do."

It was held, also, in Campan v. Molle (Cal.) supra, that the lender had no lien upon the land in the nature of an equitable mortgage which would take precedence to the purchaser's declaration of homestead on the land, if the latter was effective, because the statute declared the homestead claim was superior to the lien of a mortgage unless the mortgage was "executed and recorded" prior thereto; and also because, by bringing an action upon the note evidencing the loan after the declaration of homestead had been filed, the lender had elected to look to the personal obligation of the purchaser instead of the security promised, and if he intended to claim priority to the homestead lien he should have asserted it in that action.

So, where a married woman borrowed money to buy a lot, under an oral agreement that the lot should be conveyed to the borrower for her sole and separate use, and that she would execute a trust deed or mortgage on it to secure the sum borrowed, and, after the conveyance to her separate use, she refused to give the mortgage or deed of trust, the court in Durant v. Davis (1873) 10 Heisk. (Tenn.) 522, held that the lender was not entitled to substitution to the vendor's lien for the sum advanced. It was said: "This is clearly no case for substitution to the vendor's lien. The right of substitution grows ordinarily out of a discharge by one joint debtor, of a debt for which the other was primarily liable, as in case of payment by a surety he is entitled to be subrogated to all the liens and securities held by his creditor, for his reimbursement. . . . Nothing of the kind is found here, nor, in fact, any element out of which the right of subrogation can arise. The money was not paid in discharge of the debt due the vendor, which was a lien on the land; on the contrary, it was the cash payment agreed to be made. Again, it was a loan to the purchaser on security of her own note, with a promise of a deed of trust repelling the idea of discharging the purchaser's debt, and looking to substitution as the means of reimbursement. In a word, the simple question is, whether a party who loans another a sum of money to pay a debt, and takes his or her note for its payment, with a promise of a deed of trust to secure it, also, by this transaction, entitles himself, in addition, to be substituted to the right of the creditor whose debt has been paid by the money loaned. To this question, we take it, there can be but one answer, and that in the negative."

It was held in Wooldridge v. Scott (1879) 69 Mo. 669, that one who advances money to a purchaser of land under a bond for title, to pay off the purchase-money note, is not entitled to subrogation to the vendor's lien or to an equitable lien on the property, although the vendee orally agrees that the lender shall have a lien or trust deed as security, which was not given, provided the latter is not guilty of fraud. The court said, however, that if the vendee had made the agreement with a fraudulent purpose of obtaining an advantage and then breaking faith with the lender, it might be disposed to afford relief, notwithstanding the Statute of Frauds.

18 A.L.R.—70.

And one who advanced money to another to purchase real estate, under a parol agreement that the purchaser should execute a mortgage to the lender, which, after the conveyance, the purchaser refused to execute, was held in Marquat v. Marquat (1853) 7 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 417, reversed on other grounds in (1855) 12 N. Y. 336, not entitled to an equitable lien on the property, since the parol agreement was within the Statute of Frauds, and a lien existed in general only as between the vendor and vendee or those representing them. It may be observed that the court of appeal, in affirming a judgment of the trial court, takes no exception to the position of the latter court that the lender was not entitled to an equitable lien, and that the advance of the money on his part was not such a part performance as to take the case out of the Statute of Frauds, but only entitled him to recover back the amount advanced, the agreement being void.

And the court in the reported case (NEWMAN v. NEWMAN, ante, 1089) said that counsel for the plaintiff did not claim that the transaction created a vendor's lien; that they conceded, as obviously it must be conceded, that the plaintiff did not stand in the position of one having such a lien,—the case being one where a son borrowed money from his father to purchase land, giving the latter a note for the amount and agreeing orally to execute a mortgage on the land to be purchased, but died before the mortgage was given, and his wife, in whose name the deed had been taken, refused to carry out the alleged agreement.

One who advanced purchase money for land under an alleged agreement, apparently by parol, for a mortgage when the land was conveyed, was held in Chapman v. Abrahams (1878) 61 Ala. 108, not to have the right to a vendor's lien. But the court does not discuss the question of the effect of the agreement; and the case turns chiefly on the effect of the mortgage which was subsequently executed.

See also Poole v. Tannis (1908) 137

Wis. 363, 118 N. W. 188, 864, supra, and Rogers v. Simpson (1873) 10 Heisk. (Tenn.) 655, under I. supra.

R. E. H.

DAISY PETRO, Admr., etc., of John Petro, Deceased,
v.
WALKER D. HINES, Director General of Railroads, Appt.

Illinois Supreme Court—October 22, 1921.

(299 Ill. 236, 132 N. E. 462.)

Evidence — of habits to show care — questioning veracity of witnesses.

1. The mere fact that the veracity of alleged eyewitnesses to an accident resulting in death is challenged does not admit evidence of the habits of deceased with respect to care and prudence.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1109.]

— burden of proof — care of deceased person.

2. To recover damages for wrongful death, the personal representatives of the deceased person must show that deceased exercised ordinary care to avoid the injury.

[See 8 R. C. L. 859.]

— circumstantial evidence.

3. That one killed by another's negligence was in the exercise of ordinary care to avoid injury may be proved by circumstantial evidence.

[See 8 R. C. L. 867, 868.]

Appeal — when court can find negligence or contributory negligence.

4. Before the appellate court can say that there was no negligence on the part of a railroad company which killed a pedestrian at its crossing, or that there was such contributory negligence on the part of deceased as would defeat a recovery, it must be able to say that all reasonable minds must agree that defendant was not negligent or that the injury was the result of the negligence of deceased.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Appellate Court, Second District, affirming a judgment of the Circuit Court for Kankakee County (DeSelm, J.) in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of her decedent. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. W. R. Hunter and C. M. Clay Buntain, for appellant:

Notwithstanding there were eyewitnesses to the death of deceased, the court, over objection by defendant, permitted plaintiff to prove by witnesses that the deceased was a man of careful habits.

Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Wilson, 225 Ill. 50, 116 Am. St. Rep. 102, 80 N. E. 56; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Clark, 108 Ill. 113.

Proof of habits of deceased is not competent unless there is no living witness as to what was done by deceased just prior to his death.

Illinois C. R. Co. v. Prickett, 210 Ill. 140, 71 N. E. 435.

Proof of habits is admissible only when no one was present or knew how the accident occurred, and only as a matter of necessity, in the absence of better proof.

Gardner v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 17 Ill. App. 262; Jackson v. Johnson, 212 Ill. App. 61; Cox v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 92 Ill. App. 15; Indiana, D. & W. R. Co. v. Koons, 72 Ill. App. 497; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Gunderson, 65 Ill. App. 638.

If a party throws himself into danger when he sees a train approaching, there can be no recovery if he is killed.

Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Bell, 70 Ill. 102; Patterson v. Chicago & W. I. R. Co. 111 Ill. App. 441.

Attempting to beat an on-coming train across a crossing is such contributory negligence as to bar a recovery.

Simon v. Aurora, E. & C. R. Co. 180 Ill. App. 444; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Nichols, 74 Ill. App. 197; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Sunderlin, 2 Ill. App. 307; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Thorson, 68 Ill. App. 288; Cook v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 193 Ill. App. 527; Stein v. Chicago & E. I. R. Co. 199 Ill. App. 48; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Fears, 53 Ill. 115.

It was the duty of deceased to stop, and not attempt to pass in front of the train, which was approaching the farm crossing.

Newell v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 261 Ill. 505, 104 N. E. 223; Toledo, St. L. & W. R. Co. v. Gallagher, 109 Ill. App. 67.

There can be no recovery, because there is no competent proof to sustain the material and necessary allegation that the deceased was in the exercise of due care for his safety.

Casey v. Chicago R. Co. 269 Ill. 386, L.R.A.1916B, 824, 109 N. E. 984; Gibbons v. Aurora, E & C. R. Co. 263 Ill. 266, 104 N. E. 1063; Newell v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 261 Ill. 505, 104 N. E. 223; Vastardes v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 210 Ill. App. 546.

Where there is no competent evidence tending to show that a person was in the exercise of due care and caution for his safety, it is the function and duty of the court to direct a verdict for the defendant.

Devine v. Pfaelzer, 277 Ill. 255, L.R.A.1917C, 1080, 115 N. E. 126, 16 N. C. C. A. 167; Wilson v. Illinois C. R. Co. 210 Ill. 603, 71 N. E. 398; Beidler v. Branshaw, 200 Ill. 425, 65 N. E. 1086, 13 Am. Neg. Rep. 262; Chicago City R. Co. v. Strampel, 110 Ill. App. 482.

The declaration does not state a good cause of action, as there is no averment in either of the counts that the deceased was in the exercise of due care before he got upon the crossing.

Bale v. Chicago Junction R. Co. 259 Ill. 476, 102 N. E. 808; Krieger v. Aurora, E. & C. R. Co. 242 Ill. 544, 90 N. E. 266; Chicago, M. & St. P. R.

Co. v. Halsey, 133 Ill. 248, 23 N. E. 1028.

A person approaching a railroad crossing is bound to know it is a place of danger, and if he permits himself to become oblivious to his present surroundings he does so at his peril.

Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Halsey, supra.

Messrs. Augustine J. Bowe and William J. Bowe for appellee.

Thompson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

April 1, 1918, appellant, Walker D. Hines, as Director General of Railroads, was operating the Chicago & Eastern Illinois Railroad from Chicago south through the state of Illinois. Between Grant park and Momence, in Kankakee county, the road ran through a farm operated by John Petro, deceased. West of the right of way is a wooded hill, on which are located the farm buildings. East of the right of way are level, open fields. There are three tracks on the right of way through this farm. The railroad runs almost directly south from Grant park until it reaches this farm, when it curves to the west around the hill on which the buildings are located. Across the tracks east of the buildings is a farm crossing. The right of way is fenced, and there is a gate in each fence. At the farm crossing the tracks are planked. During the day deceased had worked in one of the fields on the east side of the right of way. About sundown he left his work, and started toward the house. Appellant's south-bound passenger train, due out of Grant park at 7:13 P. M., left there a few minutes late. It was running on the west or south-bound track. The fireman, who was sitting on the left-hand side of the engine cab at the time of the accident, testified that when the train was between 1,000 and 1,300 feet north of the farm crossing he saw deceased at the gate on the east side; that deceased turned from the gate and walked at an ordinary pace toward the tracks; that the engineer sounded the whistle for the crossing about this time and that the bell was automatically ringing; that deceased continued to walk toward the south-bound track, and that he looked toward the train when it was 75 or 100 feet away, and then began to run across the track in front of the train. The engineer, who was sitting on the right-hand side of the engine cab, testified that the first he knew of the presence of deceased was when he saw his body rolling into the ditch on the west side of the track. The train was stopped and deceased was taken to Mokena, where he died without gaining consciousness. Appellee filed her declaration in the circuit court of Kankakee county, in which she charged that appellant operated his train without a headlight after sundown, in violation of the statute, and that he otherwise negligently and carelessly operated and managed said train. A plea of general issue was filed and the cause was submitted to a jury. They returned a verdict of guilty, fixing appellee's damages at $10,000. Judgment was rendered on this verdict, and this judgment was affirmed on review by the appellate court for the second district. A certificate of importance was granted and this appeal prosecuted.

Appellee, over the objection of appellant, was permitted to prove that deceased was a man of careful habits. Such proof is admissible where there are no eyewitnesses to the accident. The rule adopted in this state and approved by repeated decisions requires the plaintiff in a personal injury case to prove that the person injured was in the exercise of due care at the time he sustained the injury for which damages are sought. Where the injury results in death and suit is brought by a personal representative, the personal representative must show that deceased exercised ordinary care to avoid the injury, but it is not necessary, especially where no one saw the killing, to prove such care by direct testimony, but such care may be proven by circumstantial evidence. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Nowicki, 148 Ill. —circumstantial evidence. 29, 35 N. E. 358; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Keenan, 190 Ill. 217, 60 N. E. 107; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Prickett, 210 Ill. 140, 71 N. E. 435; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Wilson, 225 Ill. 50, 116 Am. St. Rep. 102, 80 N. E. 56; Collison v. Illinois C. R. Co. 239 Ill. 532, 88 N. E. 251; Moore v. Bloomington, D. & C. R. Co. 295 Ill. 63, 128 N. E. 721. But where there is an eyewitness who saw the infliction of the injury, the jury must then determine from the testimony of this witness and from the facts and circumstances surrounding the injury whether deceased was careful or negligent, and in such case evidence of the habits of deceased as to care and prudence is not admissible. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Clark, 108 Ill. 113. There was at least one eyewitness to this accident, and the court erred in refusing to exclude this evidence.

The fireman who testified on this trial that he was an eyewitness to the accident had testified at the coroner's inquest and at a former trial of this cause. On both of these occasions he had given substantially the same testimony that he gave on this trial. When appellee offered to show that deceased was a man of careful and prudent habits, appellant objected on the ground that the evidence was incompetent unless appellee could show that there were no eyewitnesses. Counsel for appellee contended that under the rule laid down in Illinois C. R. Co. v. Ashline, 171 Ill. 313, 49 N. E. 521, the testimony was competent if appellee could raise a substantial doubt as to whether there was actually an eyewitness; his point being that the fireman testified falsely, and that he did not actually see deceased go upon the track. The rule announced in the Ashline Case is no different from the rule announced in all other cases in this state on the subject. It was said in the Ashline Case: "The evidence leaves the question in doubt whether any person saw the deceased when he was struck by the train, and when such is the case we are inclined to think the evidence admissible."

Evidence—burden of proof—care of deceased person.

The evidence is not set out in the opinion, and we are not able, from the opinion, to determine exactly what was meant when the court said that there was doubt whether there was an eyewitness. Whatever was meant by the language used, it did not mean that the trial court could permit evidence of habits of care and prudence to go to the jury whenever a party to a suit challenges the veracity of witnesses who

-of habits to show care-questioning veracity of witnesses.

testify that they saw the accident.

If they have a right to challenge the veracity of one witness, they would have an equal right to challenge the veracity of any number of witnesses. Appellant did not tender his witness to appellee at the time he made his objection. Granting, without deciding, that the trial court committed no error by permitting this evidence to go to the jury in the first instance, it was without question error to deny appellant's motion, at the close of all the evidence, to exclude the evidence of careful habits of deceased.

At the close of appellee's evidence, and again at the close of all the evidence, appellant moved the court to instruct the jury to find the defendant not guilty, on the ground that there was not sufficient evidence before the jury to sustain her cause of action. All controverted questions of fact have been settled by the judgment of the appellate court, and we are limited in our review of the case to the determination of the question of law presented by this motion. The general rule is that negligence and contributory negligence are questions of fact for the jury, and so long as a question remains whether either party has performed his legal duty or has observed that degree of care and caution imposed upon him by law, and the determination of the question involves the weighing and consideration of evidence, the question must be submitted as one of fact. Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Hutchinson, 120 Ill. 587, 11 N. E. 855; Austin v. Public Service Co. 299 Ill. 112, 17 A.L.R. 795, 132 N. E. 458. Before we can say as a matter of law, that there was no negligence on the part of the defendant, or that there was such contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff as to defeat recovery, we must be able to say that all reasonable minds must agree that the defendant was not negligent in his acts, or that the injury was the result of plaintiff's own negligence. Inasmuch as we have decided that this judgment must be reversed, we prefer to remand the case for a new trial, and to leave this question open, to be determined in view of whatever evidence may be submitted on that trial.

Appeal—when court can find negligence or contributory negligence.

There are other errors assigned and argued; but, inasmuch as they are not likely to occur on another trial of this cause, we have concluded that to discuss them would unnecessarily lengthen this opinion.

After striking out the evidence of careful habits of deceased, there is no evidence in this record of due care, and the judgments of the Appellate Court and the Circuit Court are reversed, and the cause is remanded to the Circuit Court of Kankakee County for a new trial.

ANNOTATION.

Habit, custom, or reputation of one injured or killed as evidence of his own negligence or freedom from negligence.

(Supplementing annotation in 15 A.L.R. 125.)

It is shown in the prior annotation that the strong current of authority is to the effect that, in the absence of eyewitnesses, evidence of the habits of one killed by the alleged negligence of another is admissible, but if there are eyewitnesses, such evidence is not admissible.

The reported case (PETRO v. HINES, ante, 1106) recognizes this rule, but introduces the somewhat novel proposition that false testimony by the eyewitness will render evidence of habits admissible. The court does not approve of this contention.

The reported case is the only one upon the subject which has been published since the former annotation was prepared, but there are a few cases decided before that time which were not referred to in the former note, to which attention is called in this place.

Jackson v. Johnson (1918) 212 Ill. App. 61, which is referred to in the brief of counsel, and not in the former annotation, was an action by the receiver of a railroad to recover damages for injuries to a train by its derailment through collision with an automobile driven by a person killed in the collision. The court charged that the jury might consider upon the question of negligence of the driver of the automobile, the natural instinct of self-preservation, but the appellate court held that where eyewitnesses have testified to the facts and circumstances surrounding the accident, the rule which entitles the jury to consider the instinct of self-preservation and the presumption which may arise from proof of the habitual exercise of due care on the part of deceased does not apply.

In Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v.

Gunderson (1896) 65 Ill. App. 638, which is also referred to in the brief of counsel, and not in the former annotation, a pedestrian was killed at a railroad crossing by a fast train passing at that point a freight, for the passage of which deceased had waited at the crossing. He was seen standing at the crossing waiting the passage of the train, and the court held it was for the jury to judge, from all the circumstances, whether it was negligence for him to stand or walk on the tracks at the time. It was held that evidence that he was a careful man was improperly admitted, the court saying this class of evidence is only admissible as a matter of necessity in the absence of better proof.

In Moore v. Bloomington, D. & C. R. Co. (1920) 295 Ill. 63, 128 N. E. 721, where a person was killed in a collision between a train and his automobile at a railroad crossing, and his administratrix relied on proof of careful habits to show care on his part, after which defendant produced eyewitnesses, and the court struck out the testimony as to habits of deceased, defendant complained that it was prejudicial to have had the evidence in the record at all, but the court held that, defendant having offered no testimony of eyewitnesses, it was not error to admit testimony of careful habits, and that if defendant knew that it had such witnesses it should have offered them when plaintiff was putting in her evidence if it desired to avoid the effect of having the testimony of habits go before the jury.

H. P. F.

ROBERT BYRAM, Respt.,

v.

JOHN BARTON PAYNE, Agent, etc., of Union Pacific Railroad Company,
Appt.

Utah Supreme Court—August 30, 1921.

(— Utah, —, 201 Pac. 401.)

Carriers — liability for injury to sheep from unwholesome water.

1. A carrier of sheep in interstate commerce is liable for their loss through drinking unwholesome water furnished by it.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1116.]

—absence of knowledge of unwholesomeness—effect.

2. Lack of knowledge of the unwholesome character of water furnished by a carrier for use of sheep in interstate transit does not relieve it from liability for injury caused to the sheep by drinking the water.

Damages — loss of sheep — market value.

3. A shipper of sheep killed in transit by the carrier's negligence is entitled to recover their market value at point of destination.

[See 4 R. C. L. 997.]

Witness — competence — value of sheep.

4. Persons in the sheep business who have sold sheep on a certain market are competent to testify to the value of sheep on that market.

[See 4 R. C. L. 1000; 2 R. C. L. Supp. 1254.]

Evidence — value — absence of prejudice.

5. A carrier is not prejudiced by the reception of evidence of the value of sheep lost through its negligence at a point short of destination, in the absence of anything to rebut the presumption that they would be worth more at destination than at the point mentioned.

Trial — weight of evidence — question for jury.

6. The weight of testimony including that of expert witnesses is wholly a subject for the determination of the jury.

[See 11 R. C. L. 586; 2 R. C. L. Supp. 1276; 16 R. C. L. 183.]

—directed verdict — substantial evidence.

7. A verdict cannot be directed for defendant when there is substantial evidence to support the plaintiff's case.

[See 26 R. C. L. 1077.]

Evidence — shipping contract — lack of pleadings.

8. In the absence of any pleadings of fault on the part of the shipper, the shipping contract is not admissible in evidence on behalf of the carrier in an action to hold it liable for loss of sheep en route.

Appeal — exclusion of evidence — absence of exception.

9. Exclusion of evidence is not reversible error in the absence of exception.

[See 2 R. C. L. 78.]

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Weber County (Agee, J.) denying motions for nonsuit, and for direction of a verdict in his favor, in an action brought to recover damages for loss of sheep through drinking unwholesome water while in transit, for which defendant was alleged to be responsible. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. George H. Smith, John V. Lyle, C. B. Diehl, and C. R. Hollingsworth for appellant:

Where a recovery is sought for the sickness of live stock in transit or for death resulting from sickness, the burden is on the plaintiff to prove the carrier's negligence.

Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. v. Blankenship, — Ind. App. —, 127 N. E. 209; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Word, 149 Ky. 229, 147 S. W. 949; McDowell v. Louisville & N. R. Co. — Ky. —, 113 S. W. 519; Gillespie v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 144 Mo. App. 508, 129 S. W. 277; Weed v. International & G. N. R. Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 53 S. W. 356; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Wathen, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 82, 49 S. W. 185; Boland v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 159 Wis. 609, 150 N. W. 967.

In any event, the measure of plain-tiff's damages is the market value of the sheep at Omaha at the time when they should have arrived there.

Barry v. Los Angeles & S. L. R. Co. — Utah, —, 189 Pac. 70; 10 C. J. 385; Bingham v. San Pedro, L. A. & S. L. R. Co. 39 Utah, 407, 117 Pac. 606; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. McCaull-Dinsmore Co. 171 C. C. A. 561, 260 Fed. 835, affirmed in 253 U. S. 97, 64 L. ed. 801, 40 Sup. Ct. Rep. 504; Williams v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 68 Ind. App. 93, 120 N. E. 46.

The burden was upon the plaintiff to show that the death of the sheep was due to the negligence of the defendant. Plaintiff in his proof failed to make the showing, and the defendant, being required to introduce evidence to sustain the allegation of his answer, proved conclusively that the sheep died of hemorrhagic septicemia.

Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Cecil, 145 Ky. 271, 140 N. W. 186; Hurt v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 116 Ky. 545, 76 S. W. 502; Louisville Gas Co. v. Kaufman, S. & Co. 105 Ky. 131, 48 S. W. 434.

Mr. J. G. Willis, for respondent:

It was not error to deny defendant's motion for a nonsuit.

Illinois C. R. Co. v. Word, 149 Ky. 229, 147 S. W. 949.

Plaintiff was entitled to recover for full loss, full damage, and not damage at any particular place.

Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. McCaull-Dinsmore Co. 171 C. C. A. 561, 260 Fed. 835.

Weber, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Defendant, the Director General of Railroads, appeals from a judgment in favor of plaintiff on two causes of action.

At Huntsville, Utah, on September 6, 1919, plaintiff delivered to defendant, for transportation to Omaha, Nebraska, seven carloads of sheep, and Fred J. Cobabe delivered three carloads of sheep for the same purpose. The ten cars were shipped together. Two hundred and thirty of plaintiff's sheep and 135 of Cobabe's died at North Platte, Nebraska, Cobabe's claim was assigned to plaintiff before this action was brought.

In the first cause of action the allegations of negligence are that plaintiff's sheep were negligently unloaded by defendant from the cars upon which they were being transported into the yards at the station at North Platte, Nebraska, which yards contained water unwholesome and poisonous and dangerous to the life of sheep if partaken of by them, and of which said water the defendant negligently permitted said sheep to drink, from the effects of which they died; and at the time the sheep were placed in the yards by the defendant he knew, or by the exercise of ordinary care might have known, that the yards contained large quantities of said water, and that the sheep were likely to drink of the same and be thereby poisoned. The same allegations of negligence were contained in the second count of the complaint.

The answer denied these allegations of negligence, and averred a separate and distinct affirmative defense to each cause of action, to the effect that whatever, if any, damage was done to the shipment of sheep was caused not by any negligent act of commission or omission on the part of defendant, but by the inherent nature and disposition of said sheep themselves, or by sickness, or disease, or condition existing in said sheep, over which sickness, disease, and condition defendant had no control and of which he had no knowledge.

When plaintiff had completed the presentation of testimony, defendant moved for a nonsuit upon the grounds that there was no evidence that the sheep died from drinking poisonous or unwholesome water; that there was a complete absence of testimony to show that the defendant knew at the time the water to be poisonous, or any testimony to show that by the exercise of ordinary care the defendant might have known that the water was poisonous or unwholesome; and that there was no evidence of the market value of the sheep at Omaha, the destination of the shipment. The motion for nonsuit was denied, and the ruling is assigned as error.

The substance of plaintiff's testimony was that the sheep had been driven from their mountain range, about 35 miles from Huntsville, Utah, eating grass and drinking pure mountain water on the way; that the shipment of the sheep arrived at North Platte at 1:35 P. M., September 9, 1919, and was unloaded between 5 and 6 o'clock of that day; and that the sheep were then driven into a pasture containing a slough of stagnant water, which was testified to as being alkaline. The plaintiff and his assignor were experienced sheep men. They had frequently observed sheep die from drinking alkaline water. They testified that the water which the sheep drank was alkaline and that its drainage was from alkaline land. They further testified that sheep, after being "alkalied," stand and tremble; that some die right away, while others live for a few hours or a day or two afterwards; that the actions, conduct, and appearance of the sheep at North Platte, on the morning after they arrived there, were similar to the conduct and appearance of sheep which the witness had seen die from alkaline water on other occasions. Except two of the sheep that were apparently trampled to death, none of them died before reaching North Platte, and none of them died after leaving that station.

Plaintiff and Mr. Cobabe, plaintiff's assignor, accompanied the sheep. Not having been notified that the sheep would be unloaded at North Platte, they remained on the train and were carried a mile or so beyond North Platte, when the train was stopped, and they walked back to the stockyards. Upon their arrival at the stockyards, the sheep were being unloaded, and 300 or 400 of them were drinking the water in the pasture into which they were being driven. The pasture was described by plaintiff as "a kind of salt grass and alkali field," and was one of the feeding places provided there and covered about 80 acres. The shipment of sheep consisted of lambs, yearlings, two-year olds, and some ewes probably six years old.

After qualifying as a witness as to the market value of the sheep, the plaintiff testified that the 235 head of his sheep which died at North Platte were worth $7.40 per head "right here in Morgan." Plaintiff's assignor, who was also a qualified witness on the subject, testified that he estimated the Byram sheep at $7.40 per head. He himself lost 135 sheep which he said were worth $5.90 per head, the difference in value being because the Byram sheep were in better condition than those owned by the witness.

The defendant claims that the testimony was insufficient to constitute prima facie proof of the averments of plaintiff's complaint. True, plaintiff's evidence is not strong. However, some substantial evidence was produced showing that the water was alkaline, that such water injures and often kills sheep, and that the sheep, which were presumably in good condition and apparently free from disease when delivered to defendant, died from the effects of drinking water furnished by defendant.

This was an interstate shipment. The Federal law provides that when animals are unloaded they "shall be properly fed and watered during such rest either by the owner or person having the custody thereof, or in case of his default in so doing, then by the railroad . . . company." 34 Stat. at L. 608, chap. 3594, § 2, Comp. Stat. § 8652, 1 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 386. It is the duty of the carrier to provide reasonable facilities for feeding, watering, and resting stock during transit, and "where the carrier undertakes to feed and water stock, notwithstanding a contract imposing this duty on the shipper, it is bound to exercise due care to see that the stock are given suitable food and water." 10 C. J. p. 26, § 108. It being the carrier's duty to furnish water, it must furnish wholesome, not poisonous, water. And if it furnishes water that is unwholesome, and sheep drink of it and die from the effects of drinking such water, the carrier is liable. Thus, it has been held that, "if the carrier permits salt water to stand in pens accessible to lambs offered for shipment, it is guilty of negligence and liable for loss occasioned thereby." 10 C. J. p. 80, § 82, citing cases.

It is argued that before defendant could be held liable proof of notice to him, or knowledge by him, of the condition of the water, must be adduced. The fact that a slough existed in the pasture in which there was stagnant water, the color and appearance thereof, together with the alkaline character of the surrounding land, constituted some notice to defendant of the unwholesome condition of the water if notice was necessary to make defendant liable. However, it was defendant's duty to furnish suitable food and wholesome water. If a common carrier furnishes unwholesome and poisonous water to stock that is being transported by it, it is

Carrier—liability for injury to sheep from unwholesome water.

—absence of knowledge of unwholesome-ness—effect.

no defense to say that he did not know the water was unwholesome or poisonous. It is the carrier's duty to know, and if poisonous food or water is furnished the carrier furnishes it at his peril.

The evidence of value of the sheep was definite and exact,—$7.40 per head for some of the sheep and $5.90 per head for others. Byram testified that his sheep were worth $7.40 per head "right here in Morgan," a station on the Union Pacific railroad a few miles east of Ogden; the latter being the nearest railroad station to Huntsville, the initial point of shipment.

Damages—loss of sheep—market
value.

Plaintiff was entitled to recover the market value of the sheep at Omaha, Nebraska, the point of destination. Presumably the market value was higher at Omaha than at Huntsville, Ogden, or Morgan Utah, or North Platte, Nebraska. The value at Huntsville, plus the freight which had been paid, would ordinarily be the market value at Omaha. The market fluctuations might make a decided difference one way or the other. The witnesses were shown to be competent. They had sold their sheep on the Omaha market. They were in the sheep

Witness—competence—value of sheep.

business, and were fully qualified to testify as to the market value in Utah and as to the market value in Omaha. On cross-examination no questions were asked of the witnesses regarding the subject of value. Both parties seemed to be satisfied with the proof.

In Dee v. San Pedro, L. A. & S. L. R. R. Co. 50 Utah, 167, 167 Pac. 246, one of the questions involved was as to the value of horses at Salt Lake City. There was no direct proof at all of the value in Salt Lake City, the place where the value of the horses ought to have been shown. It was shown, however, that the horses were purchased at Pocatello for $125 each, then shipped via Salt Lake City to Los Angeles, the higher market. They were rebilled at Salt Lake City. Referring to the question of value in the Dee Case, at page 179 of the Utah report, Mr. Justice Thurman announces the rule which is applicable here as being: "The presumption is almost conclusive that the horses were worth more in Salt Lake City than in Pocatello, because they were nearer the better market."

Plaintiff established the value of the sheep at Morgan, east of Ogden. Presumably the sheep would have been worth more at North Platte, and still more at Omaha. The defendant, therefore, could not have been prejudiced by proof of value at Huntsville, Ogden, or Morgan, at least in the absence of any evidence rebutting the presumption they were worth more at Omaha.

Evidence—value —absence of prejudice.

Considering all of the testimony produced by plaintiff in the light most favorable to him, it was sufficient to justify the court in denying the motion for nonsuit.

After both parties had rested, the defendant moved for a directed verdict in his favor. The denial of this motion by the court is assigned as error.

On the part of the defendant evidence contradicting that of plaintiff was introduced. The plaintiff was corroborated by the testimony of one of the defendant's witnesses as to the claim of the alkaline nature of the land about North Platte. Evidence was adduced tending to establish the affirmative defense that the sheep died from disease. A veterinarian of North Platte, who examined the sheep, testified that in his opinion they died from hemorrhagic septicemia. Ears were cut from some of the sheep that died and sent to a prominent veterinarian at Kansas City, who made a microscopical examination of blood from each ear sent him. Other tests were made by this veterinarian, and from all of them he concluded that the sheep had died from hemorrhagic septicemia. He said that he found "the presence of a gram of negative bipolar nonmotile hemorrhagic septicemia which fulfils the characteristics of the hemorrhagic septicemia bacterium. How any of the sheep survived is a mystery that "passeth all understanding." From the verdict it is apparent that to the jury this exposé was confusing rather than informative, obfuscating rather than illuminating. Counsel, however, contend that the expert testimony should have been accepted by the jury as conclusive. Possibly the jury failed to give to the testimony of these expert witnesses the weight to which it was entitled, but the weight of testimony, including that of expert witnesses, is wholly a subject for the jury's determination. Doubtless the defendant presented a strong defense, but it is evident from their verdict that the jurors believed the sheep men and farmers, and doubted or rejected the testimony of the veterinarians and biologists. It is not within the province of an appellate court to pass upon the evidence and say that the opinion of the jury was wrong.

Trial—weight of evidence—question for jury.

Counsel for defendant say that, "under the facts and the law of this case the burden was upon the plaintiff to prove the carrier's negligence, that is, that the sheep drank poisonous and unwholesome water in the stockyards at North Platte, and that such condition of the water was known to the defendant and was the cause of the death of the sheep."

The jury were properly instructed that the burden of proof was upon the plaintiff, and while the plaintiff's testimony does not seem especially convincing, there was some substantial testimony from which it could logically be inferred and concluded, not only that the water was unwholesome or poisonous, but that drinking of it killed the sheep. So far as notice of the condition of the water to defendant is concerned, the evidence adduced by plaintiff in rebuttal, to which no objection was made, was sufficient to prove notice to defendant that sheep drinking from this water frequently died. Mr. Marriott, a witness for plaintiff, testified that prior to 1919 he had watered sheep in the pasture connected with the North Platte stockyards, and had sheep die from drinking the water. When in 1919 he selected a pasture south of the stockyards, in which there was no stagnant water, his sheep "did fine." So that, if notice of the condition of the water was necessary to make defendant liable, testimony was produced by plaintiff tending to show that the condition of the water had existed for such length of time that notice of its unwholesome and poisonous character was imputed to defendant.

The request for a directed verdict was therefore properly denied.

—directed verdict—substantial evidence.

When testifying on cross-examination, the plaintiff stated that he had read the contract under which the sheep were transported. Thereupon the defendant offered the shipping contract in evidence for the purpose of showing that the plaintiff himself understood and contracted to unload the sheep. It was claimed that the contract was material because the witness said in direct examination that the carrier drove the sheep into the pasture. In the language of defendant's counsel: "We want to show that if these sheep were permitted to rush to that water and it was going to be detrimental to them, I don't care whether it was fresh or poisonous, then plaintiff himself was to blame."

An objection to the introduction of the contract was sustained by the court. This ruling is assigned as error.

Contributory negligence is not pleaded by the defendant. Nor is any contract imposing special conditions pleaded in the answer. No claim is made in defendant's answer that plaintiff failed to perform any duty that devolved upon him. The objection to the introduction of the contract was therefore properly sustained, for the reason that the proposed proof would have been proper only for the purpose of establishing contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff, and that he did not care for the sheep as he should have done. Another reason why the ruling would not be reversible error is that no exception was taken to the court's ruling.

Evidence—shipping contract—lack of pleadings.

An examination of the court's instructions, to which many exceptions were taken by defendant, discloses no material or prejudicial error. Numerous requests to instruct were made by defendant. Those that were correct and that were applicable to the facts were given in substance.

Appeal—exclusion of evidence—absence of exception.

There being no reversible error in the record, the judgment is affirmed.

Corfman, Ch. J., and Gideon, Thurman, and Frick, JJ., concur.

ANNOTATION.

Liability of carrier for furnishing unwholesome water or food to live stock.

As to duty of carrier as to conditions of stock pens, or yards, see note in 15 A.L.R. 200.

Where live stock is shipped under a contract by which the owner, in person or by his employees, accompanies the stock for the purpose of caring for it during transit, no presumption of negligence arises merely from proof of the fact that loss or injury has attended the shipment, but the burden is on the shipper to show that the loss, if any, was occasioned by the negligence of the carrier. 4 R. C. L. 995.

When an owner or agent attends a shipment of stock as caretaker, and the stock is being fed in the carrier's yard, the carrier, while bound to furnish facilities for feeding, is not liable at common law as an insurer against injury, but is only liable for negligence. Starr v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. (1919) 103 Neb. 645, 173 N. W. 682.

Nor is the common-law liability in that regard changed as to interstate shipments by the Carmack Amendment, that a carrier shall be liable for all injuries "caused by it." Ibid.

So, in absence of a showing of negligence on the part of a carrier, the carrier will not be liable for loss to shipment of horses fed in transit, due to poison in hay which was furnished by the carrier at the shipper's expense, and fed to the horses in the presence of a caretaker furnished by the shipper. Ibid.

In Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Mitchell (1905) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 85 S. W. 286, where it does not appear whether or not the shipment was under a contract calling for a caretaker, it was said that it is prima facie negligence to give cattle water that is injurious in its effect. And see the statement in the reported case (BYRAM v. PAYNE, ante, 1110) that if a common carrier furnishes unwholesome and poisonous water to stock that is being transported by it, it is no defense to say that it did not know that the water was unwholesome or poisonous, that it is the carrier's duty to know, and if poisonous food or water is furnished, the carrier furnishes it at his peril.

It may, perhaps, be doubted whether the court intended to go so far as this language implies toward making the carrier an insurer as regards food and water.

In Russell v. Considine (1917) 101 Kan. 631, 168 Pac. 1095, a carrier was held not liable for the death of cattle which had drunk water from a ditch on its premises, which was polluted by the splashing and overflow of an arsenic solution from a dipping vat, since the dipping vat was operated by a private individual on premises leased from the carrier, and the carrier had nothing to do with the dipping, and was not in control of the cattle while being dipped, or afterwards, and did not know, or have reason to know, that the ditch on its premises was so polluted.

And in Lancaster v. Pitzer (1921) — Tex. —, 228 S. W. 923, where hogs, during delay due to negligence of shipper in getting entrance to a carrier's shipping pen, and while still under the care and control of the shipper, wandered into dipping pens adjoining the shipping pen, but not under the control of the carrier, and ate poison found there, the carrier was held "not to be liable for the consequent injuries," the court citing with approval Russell v. Considine (Kan.) supra.

In Patterson v. Chicago & A. R. Co. (1916) — Mo. App. —, 182 S. W. 1034, an action for damages alleged to have been sustained through negligence of carrier in transportation of cattle, where the evidence of the shipper of cattle, controverted by the carrier, tended to show that his cattle were compelled to drink muddy water, and had difficulty in getting sufficient water, and that they could be fed only by throwing their food upon the ground, but did not show what, if any, injury or damage was occasioned thereby, nor was any distinct loss therefrom shown,—it was held that the action could not be sustained upon the theory of negligence on the part of a carrier in this respect.

It amounts to negligence on the part of a carrier to give live stock alkaline water, which is injurious to cattle not accustomed to it, where, from the contract of shipment, the carrier must have known that such stock was shipped from a place outside of an alkaline district. Ibid,

And that alkaline water was the only water afforded by the section where the cattle were watered en route will not relieve a carrier from liability for the consequences of giving them such water, where there is evidence that water was hauled in for the people of that place, and so it was not impracticable by reasonable efforts to have had other water for the stock. Ibid.

And see the reported case (BYRAM v. PAYNE, ante, 1110).

Permitting salt water to run through pens provided by a carrier of live stock to facilitate shipment, so that it is accessible to animals placed in the pens, is negligence which will render the carrier liable for injuries caused to animals placed in the pens for shipment, by drinking of the water. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Harman (1895) 91 Va. 601, 44 L.R.A. 289, 50 Am. St. Rep. 855, 22 S. E. 490.

Nor is the carrier relieved by the fact that the animals did not die until they were in possession of a connecting carrier. Ibid.

A carrier will be liable for injury to cattle due to negligence and carelessness of its servants or employees in permitting an improper amount of salt to be placed in feeding troughs at place of unloading and feeding. Pecos & N. T. R. Co. v. Meyer (1913) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 155 S. W. 309. But the carrier is not liable if its agent, employees, or servants did not place such salt there and did not know that it was there, and its presence could not have been discovered by them by the exercise of ordinary care. Ibid.

The knowledge of the seller of live stock to be delivered in the shipping pen, of a railroad, of the existence of salt water therein, does not charge the buyer, who has contracted for their transportation, with contributory negligence precluding recovery for damages to stock from drinking such water. Ibid.; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Harman (Va.) supra.

But an owner experienced in the care of sheep, who accompanies a shipment, is guilty of contributory negligence so as to bar recovery for loss of shipment due to overeating in a rich pasture furnished en route by a railroad company, where, with personal knowledge of the richness of the pasture, he permits them to overeat. Short v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. (1914) 190 Ill. App. 25.

J. H. B.

THEODORE L. HENSLEY, Admr., etc., of William J. Smith, Deceased, Appt.,

v.

HERMAN E. RICH et al.

PATRICK F. RYAN, Foreign Admr., etc., of William J. Smith, Deceased.

Indiana Supreme Court—November 1, 1921.

(— Ind. —, 132 N. E. 632.)

Executors and administrators — conflict between rights of domiciliary and ancillary administrators.

1. A foreign domiciliary administrator has no right as against a domestic ancillary administrator, to recover on a note held by decedent against a resident of a state other than that of the holder's residence, and secured by mortgage on real estate located at the maker's residence, where there are debts of the holder at the place of the maker's residence.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1125.]

— right to remove assets from state.

2. At common law the assets of a nonresident decedent could not be removed from the state until claims of citizens of the state were first paid or provided for.

[See 11 R. C. L. 437, 441; 2 R. C. L. Supp. 1250.]

— extent of authority of administrator.

3. The authority of an administrator appointed in a county where assets are found extends to all the estate of decedent in all counties of the state, to the exclusion of all other administrators.

[See 11 R. C. L. 438; note in 1 A.L.R. 1359.]

— locality of promissory note as assets.

4. A past-due promissory note held by a citizen of one state against one of another is not assets at the domicil of the creditor rather than at the domicil of the maker.

[See 11 R. C. L. 71, 72.]

Estoppel — from questioning validity of judgment.

5. An ancillary administrator, by preventing the repayment of money collected by a domiciliary administrator under a judgment against a local debtor to the debtor, and also preventing the money from earning interest for the debtor, estops himself as against the judgment debtor from questioning the validity of the judgment under which the domiciliary administrator collected the money.

Appeal — from unfavorable portion of judgment.

6. One accepting the benefit of a judgment and taking the money recovered thereunder cannot appeal from a refusal to allow attorney's fees.

[See 2 R. C. L. 63; 2 R. C. L. Supp. 379.]

— right of one who has satisfied judgment to be heard.

7. A mortgagor who procures satisfaction of the mortgage upon the record after paying a judgment for its amount recovered by a domiciliary administrator has no further interest to be heard in the controversy between the domiciliary and the ancillary administrator as to the right to the proceeds.

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Madison County (Pence, J.) in favor of defendant Ryan on his cross complaint and overruling a motion for new trial in an action on a promissory note, with interest and attorneys' fees, and to foreclose a mortgage on certain land by which the note was secured. Affirmed in part.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. James W. Noel, Hubert Hickam, Willis Hickam, Sr., and Willis Hickam, Jr., for appellant:

The situs of the debt and the right to collect it is in the Indiana administrator, and the judgment should have been for him instead of for Ryan, the Tennessee administrator.

State ex rel. McClamrock v. Gregory, 88 Ind. 110; Young v. O'Neal, 3 Sneed, 55; McIlvoy v. Alsop, 45 Miss. 366; McCully v. Cooper, 114 Cal. 258, 35 L.R.A. 494, 55 Am. St. Rep. 66, 46 Pac. 82; Abbott v. Coburn, 28 Vt. 663, 67 Am. Dec. 735; Jones v. Drewry, 72 Ala. 311; Grayson v. Robertson, 122 Ala. 330, 82 Am. St. Rep. 80, 25 So. 229; Banta v. Moore, 15 N. J. Eq. 97; 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1227, B; Holyoke v. Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. 22 Hun, 75; 12 C. J. p. 470, § 64; Dial v. Gary, 14 S. C. 573, 37 Am. Rep. 737; Moore v. Jordan, 36 Kan. 271, 59 Am. Rep. 550, 13 Pac. 337; Reynolds v. McMullen, 55 Mich. 568, 54 Am. Rep. 386, 22 N. W. 41; Wyman v. Halstead (Wyman v. United States) 109 U. S. 654, 27 L. ed. 1068, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 417; 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 933; Reed v. Bishop, 51 Ind. App. 187, 97 N. E. 1025; Bishop v. Ross, 56 Ind. App. 610, 103 N. E. 505; Owen v. Miller, 10 Ohio St. 136, 75 Am. Dec. 502; Atty.-Gen. v. Bouwens, 4 Mees. & W. 171, 150 Eng. Reprint, 1390, 1 Horn & H. 319, 7 L. J. Exch. N. S. 297; Pinney v. McGregory, 102 Mass. 186; Clark v. Blackington, 110 Mass. 369; Maas v. German Sav. Bank, 176 N. Y. 377, 98 Am. St. Rep. 689, 68 N. E. 658; Story, Conf. L. 8th ed. 514b; Ela v. Edwards, 13 Allen, 48, 90 Am. Dec. 176; Fletcher v. Sanders, 7 Dana, 345, 32 Am. Dec. 96; Shinn's Estate, 45 Am. St. Rep. 656, note, 166 Pa. 121, 30 Atl. 1026, 1030; Merrell v. New England Mut. L. Ins. Co. 103 Mass. 245, 4 Am. Rep. 549; Vaughn v. Barrett, 5 Vt. 333, 26 Am. Dec. 306; Catlin v. Hull, 21 Vt. 152; New Orleans v. Stempel, 175 U. S. 309, 44 L. ed. 174, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 110; Klein v. French, 57 Miss. 670; Cosby v. Gilchrist, 7 Dana, 207; Nathan Miller & Sons v. Blinn, 219 Mass. 266, 106 N. E. 985; Richardson v. Busch, 198 Mo. 174, 115 Am. St. Rep. 472, 95 S. W. 894; Murphy v. Crouse, 135 Cal. 14, 87 Am. St. Rep. 90, 66 Pac. 971; Fletcher v. American Trust & Bkg. Co. 111 Ga. 300, 78 Am. St. Rep. 179, 36 S. E. 767; Kennedy v. Hodges, 215 Mass. 112, 102 N. E. 432.

The mortgage could only be enforced in the Grant circuit court by an administrator empowered to bring such suit. Ryan, as a foreign administrator, had no such power, as against Hensley, the Indiana administrator.

Dial v. Gary, 14 S. C. 573, 37 Am. Rep. 737; Banta v. Moore, 15 N. J. Eq. 97; State ex rel. McClamrock v. Gregory, 88 Ind. 115; McCully v. Cooper, 114 Cal. 258, 35 L.R.A. 494, 55 Am. St. Rep. 66, 46 Pac. 82; Wyman v. Halstead (Wyman v. United States) 109 U. S. 654, 27 L. ed. 1068, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 417; Moore v. Jordan, 36 Kan. 271, 59 Am. Rep. 550, 13 Pac. 337; Reynolds v. McMullen, 55 Mich. 568, 54 Am. Rep. 386, 22 N. W. 41; Abbott v. Coburn, 28 Vt. 663, 67 Am. Dec. 735; 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 933; Vaughn v. Barrett, 5 Vt. 333, 26 Am. Dec. 306; Reed v. Bishop, 51 Ind. App. 187, 97 N. E. 1023; Bishop v. Ross, 56 Ind. App. 610, 103 N. E. 505; Grayson v. Robertson, 82 Am. St. Rep. 80, note, 122 Ala. 330, 25 So. 229; Merrell v. New England Mut. L. Ins. Co. 103 Mass. 245, 4 Am. Rep. 549; 16 C. J. Conflict of Laws, 470; 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1227, B.

The debt, the debtors, and the creditors, as well as the land mortgaged, are all in Indiana, and there are no intervening rights of other parties that affect the rights of the Indiana administrator to collect it.

Wyman v. Halstead (Wyman v. United States) 109 U. S. 654, 27 L. ed.

1068, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 417; McCully v. Cooper, 114 Cal. 258, 35 L.R.A. 494, 55 Am. St. Rep. 66, 46 Pac. 82; 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 934; 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1227, B.

The authority of an administrator does not extend beyond the jurisdiction of the government or state appointing him.

Apple's Estate, 66 Cal. 432, 6 Pac. 7; McCully v. Cooper, 114 Cal. 258, 35 L.R.A. 494, 55 Am. St. Rep. 66, 46 Pac. 82; Abbott v. Coburn, 28 Vt. 663, 67 Am. Dec. 735; 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1227, B, supra; Grayson v. Robertson, 122 Ala. 330, 82 Am. St. Rep. 80, 25 So. 229; 12 C. J. Conflict of Laws, p. 470.

A foreign administrator can only be permitted to sue in the ancillary jurisdiction by applying for and obtaining letters of administration in that jurisdiction, and where there are next of kin or creditors applying for letters in the ancillary jurisdiction, the domestic administrator cannot obtain letters of administration, and it was the duty of the domiciliary administrator, Ryan, to turn over the note and mortgage to the ancillary administrator for collection.

Bishop v. Ross, 56 Ind. App. 610, 103 N. E. 505; Reed v. Bishop, 51 Ind. App. 187, 97 N. E. 1023; State ex rel. McClamrock v. Gregory, 88 Ind. 110.

Messrs. Philip B. O'Neill and Bagot & Free for appellees.

Ewbank, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellant, as administrator de bonis non of the estate of William J. Smith, deceased, appointed by the circuit court of Owen county, Indiana, brought suit in the circuit court of Grant county, Indiana, upon a promissory note for $8,000, with interest and attorney fees, and to foreclose a mortgage on lands in Grant county, by which the note was secured, and the cause was removed by change of venue to Madison county. The note was dated at Jonesboro, Indiana, August 14, 1911, and was payable to William J. Smith at the Jonesboro Bank five years after date, with 6 per cent interest, payable annually, and attorney fees, and both it and the mortgage of the same date were executed by the appellees, Herman E. Rich and Rachael J. Rich, husband and wife. This action was commenced October 13, 1916, sixty days after the maturity of the note. The complaint alleged that said appellees executed the note and mortgage; that the debt was due and unpaid; that the payee, William J. Smith, had died on April 2, 1912, a resident of Sullivan county in the state of Tennessee, leaving property there, and also leaving real and personal property in Owen county in the state of Indiana, and leaving unpaid debts owing to creditors in Owen and Grant counties in the state of Indiana, but leaving neither heirs nor devisees in this state; that on April 6, 1912, the appellee Patrick F. Ryan was appointed and confirmed as administrator of the estate of said decedent in Sullivan county in the state of Tennessee, and on April 23, 1912, an administrator of said estate was appointed in Owen county in the state of Indiana, who collected the annual instalments of interest on the said note and mortgage as they became due, except the interest for the last year before maturity, and then died; that on April 1, 1916, appellant was duly appointed as administrator de bonis non of the estate of said William J. Smith by the circuit court of Owen county, Indiana, after the appellee Patrick J. Ryan had asked for such appointment and had been refused, and that appellant duly qualified as such administrator; that many claims had been filed and allowed against the estate in Owen county, Indiana, which appellant could not pay without the collection of the demand sued on; that appellant had been compelled to employ an attorney, for whose services $500 would be a reasonable fee, and that the appellee Ryan, as administrator in Tennessee, had possession of the note, and was claiming an interest in it and the right to collect the debt in question.

To this complaint the appellee Ryan filed an answer of denial, and a cross complaint alleging many of the same facts as above set out, and denying certain others, and further averring that he received the note and mortgage sued on in the state of Tennessee, of which he was then a resident, as part of the assets of the estate of William J. Smith, and that they had since remained in his custody and possession as administrator under appointment in the state of Tennessee, and that he was charged therewith as part of his inventory in that state, and had paid tax on them in Tennessee, and had never surrendered them to anybody.

The appellees Rich & Rich filed an answer of general denial, and also a special denial of the fact that the nonpayment of the note at maturity was due to any default on their part. They also filed what they called an "interpleader," which, as amended, admitted the execution of the note and mortgage, and that the note and interest for one year were due, and asked for an order of court that they might pay the sum of $8,480 into court and be discharged from liability, because of certain alleged facts. No such order was made, however, and the court found against them on the issue tendered by the answer.

The evidence consisted chiefly of an agreed statement of facts, and the facts as above set out were proved without conflict, together with the following additional facts:

That claims aggregating $12,800.94 against the estate of said William J. Smith, deceased, had been filed in Owen county, Indiana, by eleven different claimants, of which the claims of nine persons had been allowed in the total sum of $9,175.81, and that two others for the aggregate sum of $725.13 were unadjudicated and still pending; that the allowance of one of said claims, in the sum of $7,100, was contested, and an appeal therefrom had been taken to the supreme court; that of the claims allowed $1,231 was for notes given by William J. Smith in the state of Indiana, which were debts owed by him at the time when he removed from Indiana to Tennessee; that the amounts stated do not include court costs or interest from the dates when said claims were severally allowed; and that if he is entitled to recover attorney fees, $300 would be a reasonable fee for appellant's attorneys.

The court found against the appellant (plaintiff) that he was not entitled to recover anything, and in favor of the appellee Ryan, the foreign administrator, that he was entitled to recover the face of the note, with interest to the date of the finding, in the total amount of $9,880, but without attorney fees, and the foreclosure of the mortgage as against the appellees Rich & Rich for that sum. Judgment was rendered accordingly. The appellant thereupon filed his motion for a new trial for the alleged reasons that the decision was not sustained by sufficient evidence and was contrary to law, which motion the court overruled, and appellant excepted. Thereafter the appellant duly perfected a vacation appeal, and has assigned as error the overruling of his motion for a new trial, which is the only alleged error discussed by appellant's brief.

The first question presented is whether a domiciliary administrator, appointed by a court of Tennessee, who applied for and was refused ancillary letters of administration in a county of this state, was entitled to recover judgment in a court of this state for the amount of a past-due note, and the foreclosure of a mortgage securing it, which constituted part of the estate of his decedent, and were found among his effects in Tennessee after his death there, when an administrator to whom a court in a county of the state of Indiana, where the deceased left personal and real property and debts, had granted letters of ancillary administration, was in court, seeking to recover on the same note and mortgage, and it was made to appear that valid debts in excess of all other personal property of the decedent in Indiana had already been filed with and allowed by such Indiana administrator, and that other claims filed but not yet passed on, and still others allowed but in controversy in pending appeals, brought the total of all claims filed to an amount exceeding the amount due on the note and all other personal estate in Indiana, combined.

At common law the assets of a nonresident decedent could not be removed from the state until the claims of citizens of the state were first paid or provided for. Wyman v. Halstead (Wyman v. United States) 109 U. S. 654, 27 L. ed. 1068, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 417. And so far from changing the rule at common law, our statute (Burns's Anno. Stat. 1914, § 2746) must be deemed a legislative declaration that it is the policy of the state of Indiana that where a resident of another state has died the owner of property located here, and there are creditors, legatees, or heirs entitled to distribution who are inhabitants of this state, and they take out letters of administration in a county in this state, the further authority of the foreign domiciliary administrator is limited to receiving for final distribution the residue of assets in Indiana which shall remain after the local ancillary administrator shall have reduced all such assets to possession and paid the lawful demands of inhabitants of this state. Burns's Anno. Stat. 1914, § 2746.

Executors and administrators—right to remove assets from state.

Assets having been found in Owen county, Indiana, and the appellant having been granted letters of administration in that county, his right of administration extended to all the estate of the decedent in all counties of the state, to the exclusion of all other administrators. Burns's Anno. Stat. 1914, § 2743; Sample v. Adams, 54 Ind. App. 680, 100 N. E. 573; Marchant v. Olson, 184 Ind. 17, 110 N. E. 200. We have found only one decision, hereinafter distinguished, of a court of last resort in any jurisdiction, where a foreign domiciliary administrator and a domestic ancillary administrator were both before the court, each contesting the right of the other to recover a debt due from an inhabitant of the state to their decedent, in which the court held the foreign administrator entitled to prevail. But many cases have held that an administrator appointed in one state could not recover on the note of a resident of another state, secured by mortgage on lands in such other state, even where no letters of ancillary administration had been taken out in the latter state, unless specially authorized by statute. McCully v. Cooper, 114 Cal. 258, 35 L.R.A. 492, 55 Am. St. Rep. 66, 46 Pac. 82; Moore v. Jordan, 36 Kan. 271, 59 Am. Rep. 550, 553, 13 Pac. 337; Abbott v. Coburn, 28 Vt. 663, 67 Am. Dec. 735, 738, 739; Grayson v. Robertson, 122 Ala. 330, 82 Am. St. Rep. 80, 25 So. 229; Grimball v. Patton, 70 Ala. 626; Merrill v. New England Mut. L. Ins. Co. 103 Mass. 245, 4 Am. Rep. 548; Reynolds v. McMullen, 55 Mich. 582, 54 Am. Rep. 386, 22 N. W. 41.

—extent of authority of administrator.

And obviously the appointment of an administrator in the state where the intestate died could not affect the duty or the right of the administrator in this state to proceed with diligence to collect debts due the estate here. State ex rel. McClamrock v. Gregory, 88 Ind.

110, 115. But the title of the ancillary administrator to assets within his state is exclusive, until the local claims against such assets have been satisfied or otherwise discharged. 18 Cyc. 1228 (2) and authorities cited.

—conflict between rights of domiciliary and ancillary administrators.

Where a person domiciled and dying in one state is indebted to persons living in another state in which there are personal assets of the deceased, "it would be a great hardship upon such creditors to allow the original executor or administrator to withdraw those funds from (such other state) without the payment of such debts, and thus to leave the creditors to seek their remedy in the domicil of the original executor or administrator, and perhaps there to meet with obstructions and inequalities in the enforcement of their own rights from the peculiarities of the local law." Story, Conf. L. 8th ed. § 512, p. 713; Moore v. Jordan, 36 Kan. 271, 59 Am. Rep. 550, 13 Pac. 337.

In Ames v. Citizens Nat. Bank, 105 Kan. 83, 181 Pac. 564, where the foreign administrator had presented some certificates of deposit to the bank which issued them and demanded payment, and had brought suit on them some weeks before an administrator was appointed in Kansas, and it appeared that the only indebtedness of the estate in Kansas was for $2.50, which the foreign administrator promptly paid, the court decided that a judgment in favor of the ancillary administrator was erroneous, and that the foreign administrator was entitled to the money. And in St. John v. Hodges, 9 Baxt. 334, where a resident of Alabama died the owner of notes executed by a resident of Arkansas, and the administrator appointed in Alabama sent them for collection to an attorney at Memphis, Tennessee, who, without authority from his principal, procured an administrator to be appointed in Arkansas, and in his name compromised the claim for one twentieth of the face of the notes in cash, together with one fourth of their face in new notes, it was held that the Alabama administrator, having taken out letters in Tennessee, could there sue in attachment on the original notes. The right result may have been reached in each of these cases upon the facts there involved. But the proposition that a promissory note, even though past due and to be collected by suit at the home of the debtor as part of the assets of the estate, is assets at the domicile of the intestate, and not where the debtor resides, on which proposition both decisions purport to be based, does not appeal to us as being sound.

It was error to overrule the motion of appellant for a new trial.

Appellant further urges that he was entitled to recover an attorney fee of $300 under the undisputed facts. But it appears from the records of this court that at the time the appellant filed his transcript and assignment of errors he also filed his own affidavit, stating that the appellees Rich & Rich had paid the judgment appealed from, in the sum of $10,024.85, and the costs, and that the appellee Ryan, as administrator, had received from the clerk of the court below the full amount of the judgment and interest to the date of such payment, in the sum of $10,024.85, and still had said money in his possession and under his control, but was about to carry it away, out of the state of Indiana. And by means of that affidavit, appellant procured an order of this court to issue, commanding that the appellee Ryan, individually and as administrator, be and thereby was "enjoined from withdrawing the said sum of $10,024.85 received by them upon the judgment of the Madison circuit court . . . from which this appeal is taken, and they are further restrained and enjoined from removing the same . . . from the state of Indiana, or from the jurisdiction of this court, and from in any way expending or disposing of said moneys or any part thereof . . . (and) are hereby ordered by the court to return said moneys and to pay the same forthwith to the clerk of this court, to be held until the final determination of this appeal, and to be paid out only upon the order of this court as hereinafter made."

Upon the hearing it was made to appear that the money was on deposit in a bank at Indianapolis, and by agreement of parties the injunction was made permanent; pending the appeal, but was modified so as to provide that the money should remain in the bank, "and that said funds be removed from the custody of said bank only on the order of this court." Until this order was issued the appellees Rich & Rich remained liable to appellant for any judgment which appellant might recover against them upon a retrial of this case, if the first judgment should be reversed, and appellee Ryan remained liable for whatever he held of the money or property of Rich & Rich to which he was not entitled, in case it should be adjudged on appeal that he had no right of action. But so far as appellant was concerned, if he chose to stand on his right to recover upon a second trial of the case, such right would not have been affected if Ryan had paid the money back to Rich & Rich, or had put it out at interest for their benefit.

—locality of promissory note as assets.

By electing to follow the specific funds paid into court by Rich & Rich in satisfaction of the judgment and decree, and obtaining an order of court which necessarily operated to prevent Rich & Rich from receiving their money back, and prevented the money from earning interest for their benefit in the hands of Ryan, appellant has estopped himself to challenge the judgment as against the appellees Rich & Rich. A party cannot seize upon and hold for his own benefit the amount of a judgment paid in by the party against whom the judgment was recovered, and at the same time successfully maintain an appeal on the ground that there was no valid judgment. Williams v. Richards, 152 Ind. 528, 53 N. E. 765; Western Constr. Co. v. Carroll County, 178 Ind. 684, 688, 98 N. E. 347; Ewbank, Manual, 2d ed. §§ 112, 112a.

Estoppel—from questioning validity of judgment.

The statute granting appeals provides that "the party obtaining judgment shall not take an appeal after receiving any money paid or collected thereon." Burns's Anno. Stat. 1914, § 671.

And while as between appellant and appellee Ryan the appellant could not be deemed to have "received" the money deposited in the bank, we think that obtaining an injunction which forbade it to be drawn out of the bank was a sufficient "receipt" of the money, as between appellant and the debtors who paid it on the judgment, to constitute a binding election that the fund thus seized upon should be substituted for the original debt.

Therefore we must decline to pass on the question whether or not the finding and judgment should have included a fee for appellant's attorney.

Appeal—from unfavorable portion of judgment.

The appellees Rich & Rich did not assign cross errors, but have devoted their brief to an attempt to show that the judgment ought to be affirmed. It appears without dispute that they have procured the clerk of the circuit court to satisfy the mortgage of record, which could only be lawfully done on the ground that a valid judgment of foreclosure had been rendered and paid. Burns's Anno. Stat. 1914, § 1155.

Therefore they have no further interest which can be affected by treating this appeal as a controversy between the two administrators to determine which of them shall receive the money recovered by this action, and we shall not consider or pass upon any questions as to the judgment being for the correct amount.

—right of one who has satisfied judgment to be heard.

The facts are not in dispute. All the facts that control the decision as to which of the administrators shall receive the money recovered were agreed upon by the parties, and were presented to the court by an agreed statement of facts that was read in evidence. No good purpose could be served by ordering a new trial, and we shall proceed to enter final judgment upon the facts as so established.

So much of the finding and judgment as found and adjudged that the administrator of the estate of William J. Smith, deceased, was entitled to recover judgment on the note sued on for the sum of $9,880 and costs, with a decree foreclosing the mortgage sued on, is affirmed.

But so much thereof as found and adjudged that the appellee Patrick

F. Ryan, as administrator of said estate in the state of Tennessee, was entitled to the money so recovered, is reversed. And it is considered and adjudged by this court that the appellant, Theodore L. Hensley, as administrator of the estate of William J. Smith, deceased, shall recover from the appellee Ryan, as administrator, the possession and control of the sum of $10,124.83 paid by the appellees Herman E. Rich and Rachael J. Rich, in satisfaction of the judgment and decree recovered against them in this action, and receipted for by said appellee Patrick F. Ryan, as administrator of the estate of William J. Smith, deceased, which money is now held under an order of this court in the Continental National Bank of Indianapolis, Indiana, and that said money shall be paid by the said Continental National Bank of Indianapolis, Indiana, to the said Theodore L. Hensley, administrator of the estate of William J. Smith, deceased, and shall be receipted for by him, and shall be and constitute assets of said estate in his hands to be disposed of according to law, and that such payment, and the indorsement of his receipt for the same, as such administrator, on the judgment docket of this court, shall constitute a complete satisfaction of this judgment in favor of said bank and all of the appellees.

ANNOTATION.

What actions may be maintained or rights vindicated by ancillary executor or administrator.

The question what actions may be maintained and what rights vindicated by an ancillary executor or administrator was exhaustively discussed in the annotation in 1 A.L.R., beginning at page 1359. The reported case (HENSLEY v. RICH, ante, 1118) seems to be the only subsequent case considering that question. It is held in that case that when an ancillary administrator is appointed, his power to administer the assets in the state of his appointment extends to all the counties thereof, to the exclusion of all other administrators. W. A. S.

FREDERICK McFERREN, Appt.,

v.

GOLDSMITH-STERN COMPANY.

Maryland Court of Appeals — January 13, 1921.

(137 Md. 573, 113 Atl. 107.)

Husband and wife — liability of husband for necessities — separate means of wife.

1. That a wife has means of her own does not prevent her pledging her husband's credit for necessities with which he fails to supply her.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1131.]

— when right to pledge credit arises.

2. The right of a woman to pledge her husband's credit for necessities arises only when he fails to provide them, or furnish her with means to procure them.

[See 13 R. C. L. 1199.]

Evidence — burden of proof — failure to furnish necessities.

3. One seeking to charge a man for purchases on credit by his wife has the burden of showing that he furnished neither the necessities nor the means of procuring them.

[See 13 R. C. L. 1199.]

—effect of payment of alimony.

4. Where a man separated from his wife furnishes her maintenance by payment of money at stated intervals, either under order of court or under an agreement between them, fixing an amount as adequate and satisfactory, she cannot pledge his credit for necessities.

—right of wife to pledge husband's credit.

5. The right of a wife to procure articles on the credit of her husband is not established merely by the fact that he had paid for similar articles procured by her on former occasions.

—presumption that letter was received.

6. The presumption that a letter properly addressed and mailed reached the addressee is not conclusively rebutted by his testimony that he did not remember seeing it.

[See 21 R. C. L. 769.]

Trial — instruction — omitting necessary element.

7. In an action to hold a man liable for necessities furnished his wife, a prayer should be refused which withdraws from the consideration of the jury an alleged payment by him to her of periodical instalments of money which had been agreed upon as sufficient for her maintenance.

—basing recovery on fault of husband.

8. An instruction in an action to hold a man liable for necessities furnished his wife should be refused which does not require the jury to find that plaintiff supplied the alleged articles, and bases the right to recover on the mere fact that the wife was without the necessary articles through the fault of the husband.

—withdrawal of cause of action from jury.

9. The court cannot withdraw from the jury, in an action to hold a man liable for necessities furnished his wife, the consideration of evidence tending to show that his wife was his actual agent for the purpose of securing such articles.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court of Baltimore City (Heusler, J.) in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the price of certain wearing apparel alleged to have been furnished by it to defendant's wife. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. Harry N. Abercrombie for appellant.

Mr. B. H. Hartogensis, for appellee:

Defendant and his wife were not separated at the time the purchases were made by her.

Jewsbury v. Newbold, 40 Eng. L. & Eq. Rep. 518; Noel v. O'Neill, 128 Md. 206, 97 Atl. 513; Schouler, Dom. Rel. 5th ed. p. 101, § 63; 13 R. C. L. 1178.

The husband will be answerable for goods purchased after the wife leaves him without cause, to a person from whom she had previously bought goods, paid for by her husband, if such person has no knowledge or reason to know of the separation.

Anthony v. Phillips (Cowell v. Phillips) 17 R. I. 188, 11 L.R.A. 182, 20 Atl. 933; 13 R. C. L. § 211, p. 1181; Vanuxen v. Rose, 7 Ind. 222; Norton v. Fazan, 1 Bos. & P. 226, 126 Eng. Reprint, 873.

A husband will be liable for necessities furnished his wife where the allowance which he promised to make has not been paid, or if he does not pay it regularly.

Baker v. Barney, 8 Johns. 72, 5 Am. Dec. 326; Fredd v. Eves, 4 Harr. (Del.) 385; Beale v. Arabin, 36 L. T. N. S. 249.

The husband's liability in case of a separation does not cease, but it depends on the circumstances and causes of separation.

Dixon v. Hurrell, 8 Car. & P. 717; 13 R. C. L. §§ 237, 238; Lidlow v. Wilmot, 2 Starkie, 86, 19 Revised Rep. 684; Brown v. Brown, 5 Gill, 255; 1 Poe, Pl. § 368; Schouler, Dom. Rel. p. 108; Fredd v. Eves, 4 Harr. (Del.) 385; Ott v. Hentall, 70 N. H. 231, 51 L.R.A. 226, 47 Atl. 80.

Pendency of divorce proceedings will not relieve a husband from liability for his wife's support, who is living apart from him, where no alimony has been decreed, and he has not made any other provision for her maintenance.

Johnstone v. Allen, 6 Abb. Pr. N. S. 306; Minck v. Martin, 22 Jones & S. 136; Denver Dry Goods Co. v. Jester, L.R.A.1917A, 969, note; Keegan v. Smith, 8 Dowl. & R. 118, 5 Barn. & C.

375, 108 Eng. Reprint, 140, 4 L. J. K. B. 189, 29 Revised Rep. 273; 13 R. C. L. 1182; Anthony v. Phillips, supra; Constable v. Rosener, 82 App. Div. 155, 81 N. Y. Supp. 376; Wanamaker v. Weaver, 176 N. Y. 75, 65 L.R.A. 529, 98 Am. St. Rep. 629, 68 N. E. 135; Crittenden v. Schermerhorn, 39 Mich. 661, 33 Am. Rep. 440; Schindel v. Schindel, 12 Md. 108.

Offutt, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appeal in this case was taken from a judgment of the superior court of Baltimore city against the appellant in favor of the plaintiff in an action in assumpsit brought by the appellee against the appellant and Adelaide McFerren, his wife, to recover the price of certain wearing apparel alleged to have been furnished by it to the said Adelaide McFerren.

The theory upon which the plaintiff sought to recover against the appellant was that the articles furnished were necessities suitable to the wife's station in life, which her husband refused to supply, and which he furnished her no means to procure, and that therefore she was entitled to purchase them upon his credit, and that he thereupon became obliged to pay for them.

The wife's defense to the suit was that she had been compelled to separate from her husband because of his cruelty and abuse, and that, after the separation, she was in need of wearing apparel, and since her husband did not supply her with the means to procure it, she was compelled to buy it on his credit, and that he, and not she, was responsible for the payment of the debt so incurred.

The husband's defense was that he supplied his wife with such things as were necessary to her comfort and convenience in their station in life, and that when she separated from him, she did so voluntarily and without any fault on his part, and that, during the separation, he paid her a fixed weekly sum for her support and maintenance as alimony in a divorce proceeding which she has instituted; that the sum so aforesaid was fixed by agreement, and that he had notified the plaintiff, before a part of the goods for the price of which the suit was brought had been purchased, that he would not be responsible for any purchases not made by him in person.

Since the legal sufficiency of the evidence is not in issue, and as we are not called upon to weigh it, it is unnecessary to review it in detail, and it is sufficient to say that there was testimony in the case tending to support each of these conflicting contentions.

The record contains seven exceptions, the first six of which relate to questions of evidence and one to the rulings on the prayers.

The six exceptions relating to the admissibility of evidence may be grouped, as they all relate to the action of the lower court in refusing to allow questions asked in the cross-examination of Adelaide McFerren, a witness for the appellee, which were designed to show that at the time she purchased the articles in question she had means of her own, not furnished by her husband for her support, from which she could have paid for them. The proposition upon which the court's rulings in respect to the questions involved in these exceptions rests is that the husband's obligation, arising from the marriage relation, to supply his wife with necessities suitable to her station in life, is not affected by the fact that she may have means of her own from which she could procure them. While this question, in the precise form in which it occurs in this case, does not appear to have arisen in this state, the general principles controlling it have been frequently stated by this court. In Jones v. Gutman, 88 Md. 364, 41 Atl. 794, the court said: "The husband is bound to provide his wife with such necessities as, in her situation in life, are suitable and proper, and if he fail in the performance of this duty she may contract debts for them, and it will be presumed as matter of law that she had the power to do so. 1 Bl. Com. 443. In all such cases a presumption conclusively arises, whether the parties live together or not."

And that this principle is not affected by the fact that she had means of her own is to be inferred from the language used in Stonesifer v. Shriver, 100 Md. 30, 59 Atl. 141, where there was an effort to charge the wife's separate estate with her funeral expenses and medical attendance. In holding that these expenses could not be charged against the wife's estate, it was said: "The duty of a husband to bury his wife in a suitable manner is involved in the obligation to maintain her while living," etc.

And in Wanamaker v. Weaver, 176 N. Y. 75, 65 L.R.A. 529, 98 Am. St. Rep. 621, 68 N. E. 135, cited in Noel v. O'Neill, 128 Md. 205, 97 Atl. 513, it is said: "It is a settled principle in the law of husband and wife that, by virtue of the marital relation, and in consequence of the obligations assumed by him upon marriage, the husband is legally bound for the supply of necessities to the wife, so long as she does not violate her duties as wife."

If, then, the husband's duty to supply his wife with necessities depends upon the marital relation and the obligations incident thereto, it cannot be said to depend upon or be affected by her ability to procure such necessities from her separate estate, and such seems to be the general view. Although there are decisions to the contrary (see Hunt v. Hayes, 64 Vt. 89, 15 L.R.A. 661, 33 Am. St. Rep. 917, 23 Atl. 920), it is "generally held that a husband's duty of support exists though his wife has a statutory or equitable separate estate" (13 R. C. L. p. 1202; Cunningham v. Reardon, 98 Mass. 538, 96 Am. Dec. 670; Moore v. Copley, 165 Pa. 294, 44 Am. St. Rep. 664, 30 Atl. 829; Ott v. Hentall, 70 N. H. 231, 51 L.R.A. 226, 47 Atl. 80). Many of the cases dealing with this question are collected in a note to the case of Wanamaker v.

Weaver, 98 Am. St. Rep. 644, in which, after referring to the cases holding a contrary view, it is said: "The soundness of these decisions may well be doubted. The right of a wife to support from her husband, and his duty to support her, do not depend upon the inadequacy of her means, but upon the marriage relation. Her implied authority to pledge his credit springs from his obligation, as husband, to provide for her, and not from the fact that otherwise she will be destitute."

And, in our opinion, the principles so stated are not only established by our decisions, but are entirely consonant with reason and the best-considered authority elsewhere.

Applying these principles to the question before us, in our opinion, there was no error in the rulings involved in these six exceptions.

The plaintiff offered five prayers, the defendant Adelaide McFerren two, and the defendant Frederick C. McFerren seven. All the prayers of the plaintiff and the defendant Adelaide McFerren were granted, as were the first, third, fourth, and fifth prayers of the appellant, and the others were refused.

The legal principles controlling the rights of the several parties to the case in which this appeal was taken present no difficulty. The husband was obliged to provide his wife such necessities as were appropriate to her station in life, and when, and only when, he failed to provide them, or furnish her means to procure them, she became authorized to pledge his credit to obtain them.

The agency thus presumed is one which arises ex necessitate, and is not the conventional agency created by express language, or implied from the conduct and course of dealing of the principal. This is obviously true because, if the existence of the facts from which this agency of necessity is implied is established, the husband will not be allowed either to revoke it or deny its existence; whereas, in the case of an actual conventional agency, he could terminate the agent's right to act under it at any time. 2 Mechem, Agency, ¶ 563.

Husband and wife—liability of husband for necessities—separate means of wife.

—when right to pledge credit arises.

But the rule thus stated rests upon the assumption that the husband has neither furnished the necessities nor the means to procure them; and if it appear that he has supplied either the one or the other, then there is no presumption of an agency of necessity, and whoever seeks

Evidence—burden of proof—failure to furnish necessities. to charge the husband for purchases on his credit by the wife must prove agency as in other cases when her right to pledge his credit is questioned. And where the husband and wife are separated, and he provides for her maintenance and support by the payment of money or other valuable commodity at stated intervals, either as alimony, under an order of —effect of payment of alimony. some court of competent jurisdiction, or in accordance with an agreement between the husband and wife, fixing such an amount as adequate and satisfactory, then she is not authorized to pledge his credit under the presumed authority of an agency of necessity; and the person seeking to charge the husband under such circumstances assumes the burden of proving an agency in fact. Jones v. Gutman, 88 Md. 361, 41 Atl. 792.

These principles, which are generally approved and may be regarded as settled law, are very clearly stated in Crittenden v. Schermerhorn, 39 Mich. 661, 33 Am. Rep. 442, where it is said: "In the absence of any express promise, the power of a wife separated from her husband without her fault rests on an implied authority to bind him for necessities, when he has made no sufficient provision for her support. If he makes sufficient provision, or if he makes provision to an amount she assents to receive without coercion, he is not bound to make good her contracts for necessities. This is not questioned."

Applying these principles to the questions involved here, in our opinion there was error in the rulings of the lower court on the prayers.

By the appellee's first prayer the jury was told that if the garments for the price of which the suit was brought were purchased upon the credit of the appellant by his wife, and that she had purchased from the appellee "similar garments on many occasions," and her husband had in each case paid for them, the plaintiff was entitled to recover, unless her husband had provided her with necessary wearing apparel, or with sufficient money "to procure the same." By this prayer the appellee's right to recover rested upon the hypothesis of an agency in fact, not arising from or necessarily incident to the marriage relation; and as the authority of the agent under such circumstances could have been terminated by the principal at any time before it was executed (1 Mechem, Agency, ¶ 563), —right of wife to pledge husband's credit. whether the principal had terminated his wife's agency before she purchased the articles in question was, under the circumstances of the case, a material and important fact to be considered by the jury in determining whether, at the time Mrs. McFerrer made the purchase, she was acting as her husband's agent. There was proof in the case that the appellee had been notified by the appellant, prior to the day on which the greater part of the articles were purchased, that he would not be responsible for any debts not contracted by him personally. He testified that he himself signed such a notice and mailed it, properly addressed, to the appellee, and upon that proof a presumption arose that the appellee received it; and while one of appellee's officers testified he did not remember seeing the letter, and he was sure it had not been received, such —presumption that letter was received. testimony did not conclusively rebut the presumption of its receipt arising from the proof that it had been mailed, but was to be considered by the jury, together with any other facts or circumstances tending to rebut such presumption. Lawrence Bank v. Raney & B. Iron Co. 77 Md. 328, 26 Atl. 119; Southern Engine & Boiler Works v. Vaughan, 98 Ark. 388, 135 S. W. 913, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1062, 49 L.R.A. (N.S.) 468, note.

And since the statement in the prayer that the plaintiff was entitled to recover if the jury found the facts stated therein in effect withdrew from their consideration the question of the revocation of the agency, it should not have been granted. Corbett v. Wolford, 84 Md. 429, 35 Atl. 1088.

The plaintiff's second prayer submitted in somewhat greater detail the same proposition as was set forth in its first prayer, and since it ignored entirely the testimony concerning the revocation of the wife's agency to purchase the articles in question, for reasons already assigned, it, too, should have been refused.

By the plaintiff's third prayer the jury were told, in effect, that if McFerren and his wife were separated as a result of his misconduct, he was responsible for necessary apparel furnished by the plaintiff; and if she "had not means of supplying herself therewith," their verdict should be for the plaintiff.

Its fourth prayer instructed the jury that if the "male and female defendants herein" separated by mutual consent "after May 7, 1919, and nothing was said then" as to his providing for her necessary wearing apparel, and that the articles purchased on May 20th were necessary wearing apparel, that the jury could infer that he intended that his credit should be pledged with the plaintiff, and the verdict should be for the plaintiff.

The propositions announced by these two prayers, while inartificially phrased, are, in the main, correct statements of law, and the fourth prayer was properly granted; but the third prayer is exceedingly misleading, in that it, in effect, withdraws from the consideration of the jury the testimony tending to show that the appellant paid his wife a definite weekly allowance for her maintenance and support, the amount of which was fixed as sufficient for such purpose by agreement made by their respective counsel, which she ratified. For reasons already stated, such an agreement, if it existed, went to the very root of the appellee's case, and there was error in withdrawing it from the consideration of the jury, and for this reason this prayer should have been refused.

Trial-instruction—omitting necessary element.

The plaintiff's fifth prayer instructed the jury, in effect, that if the wife was without necessary wearing apparel through the fault of her husband, the appellant, and if she received "no money from him for such necessary garments," their verdict should be for the plaintiff, even though it had been notified on May 20th not to credit the wife. This instruction is palpably defective, in that it failed to require the jury to find that the plaintiff sold or supplied the articles in question, or, indeed, anything at all, either to the appellant or to his wife; and since, in any possible aspect of the case, the mere fact that Mrs. McFerren was without necessary wearing apparel through the fault of her husband did not in itself create a cause of action in favor of the plaintiff, it follows that this prayer should have been refused.

—basing recovery on fault of husband.

Two prayers were granted at the instance of Mrs. McFerren, but as the objections to them were not pressed in this court, and as no reversible error has been discovered in the rulings in regard to them, they need not be further discussed.

The appellant's second, sixth, and seventh prayers, while they were, for reasons already stated, otherwise valid, were properly refused because they withdrew from the consideration of the jury the evidence in the case tending to show that the appellee was warranted in inferring from the appellant's course of dealing and his conduct that his wife was his agent in fact as distinguished from an agent in law or of necessity for him. There —withdrawal of cause of action from jury.

was proof in the case from which such an inference could have been drawn, and its weight was for the jury, to whom it should have been submitted.

Because of the errors pointed out in the rulings of the lower court on the prayers, it follows that the judgment appealed from must be reversed.

Judgment reversed with costs, and cause remanded for a new trial.

Petition for rehearing denied March 3, 1921.

ANNOTATION.

Duty of husband to provide necessaries for wife as affected by her possession of independent means.

I. Scope, 1131.

II. In general, 1131.

III. Liability of husband through whose fault wife is living apart from him, 1136.

IV. Separation by mutual consent or agreement, 1139.

V. Precarious or uncertain income of wife, 1140.

I. Scope.

The annotation is confined to civil cases, and does not include the question of criminal responsibility.

There are a considerable number of cases which may with propriety be regarded as assuming or supporting by inference the view that, notwithstanding the fact that the wife is possessed of a separate estate or income, the husband remains liable for necessaries furnished to her; at least, where they are living together. While a few of these cases are referred to, the note, in the main, has been confined to cases which have directly considered the point under annotation, as to the effect of the possession by the wife of separate means or income upon the husband's duty to support her. This question may arise where it is attempted to hold the husband liable for necessaries furnished to the wife, and it appears that the latter had available separate resources to pay for such necessaries. There are cases also presenting the question where the action was by the wife, to obtain reimbursement from the husband or his estate for advances out of her own property for necessaries. The liability of a married woman for necessaries is treated in the annotation in 15 A.L.R. 833. And the cases on that question are not considered in the present annotation, either for their direct decisions or for any implication that they may carry upon the question now under annotation.

It should be observed, also, that the question of the husband's liability for necessaries furnished to the wife may depend upon the question whether credit was given exclusively to the wife; this class of cases should be distinguished from that under consideration. Thus, it was held in Connerat v. Goldsmith (1849) 6 Ga. 14, that the husband was not liable to a third party for household furniture, furnished to the wife, and used by them jointly, because the evidence showed that the credit was given to the wife, who had a large separate estate, the plaintiff having given her a receipt and taken her note for the property. The court said that the idea of agency was precluded, because, the wife having a separate estate and being competent to contract so as to bind such estate, the court had the right to infer that the plaintiff contracted with her as a feme covert having a separate estate, and, as to that estate, a feme sole; and she was, therefore, the principal in the contract.

II. In general.

The primary duty of supporting the wife and family rests, of course, upon the husband, and ordinarily he is not relieved of this duty merely because the wife may have a separate estate or means of her own, available for her support. As sustaining this general proposition the following cases may be cited:

Alabama. — See Neil v. Johnson (1847) 11 Ala. 615, infra.

California.—Meyer's Estate (1878) Myrick, Prob. Ct. Rep. 178; Shebley v. Peters (1921) — Cal. App. —, 200 Pac. 364.

Colorado.—Poole v. People (1898) 24 Colo. 510, 65 Am. St. Rep. 245, 52 Pac. 1025.

Illinois.—H. G. Goelitz Co. v. Industrial Bd. (1917) 278 Ill. 164, 115 N. E. 855; American Mill. Co. v. Industrial Bd. (1917) 279 Ill. 560, 117 N. E. 147.

Iowa.—See State v. Hill (1913) 161 Iowa, 279, 142 N. W. 231 (rule recognized).

Maine. — See Thorpe v. Shapleigh (1877) 67 Me. 235, infra.

Maryland. — McFERRIN v. GOLD-SMITH-STERN Co. (reported herewith) ante, 1125.

Minnesota. — Kosanke v. Kosanke (1917) 137 Minn. 115, 162 N. W. 1060.

New Hampshire.—Ott v. Hentall (1900) 70 N. H. 231, 51 L.R.A. 226, 47 Atl. 80.

Oklahoma.—Sodowsky v. Sodowsky (1915) 51 Okla. 689, 152 Pac. 390.

Texas. — Callahan v. Patterson (1849) 4 Tex. 61, 51 Am. Dec. 712.

Virginia.—Mihalcove v. Holub (1921) — Va. —, 107 S. E. 704.

England.—Re Wood (1863) 1 DeG. J. & S. 465, 46 Eng. Reprint, 185, 9 Jur. N. S. 589, 32 L. J. Ch. N. S. 400, 8 L. T. N. S. 476, 11 Week. Rep. 791.

Canada. — Griffin v. Patterson (1881) 45 U. C. Q. B. 536.

The rule was laid down in Callahan v. Patterson (Tex.) supra, that the husband is bound to support the wife out of his own property, if able to do so, without resorting to her separate property; but that, if he is not able to support the wife and children, her separate property may be resorted to and made liable for that purpose.

It was held in Re Wood (Eng.)

supra, where the husband had been placed in an asylum and found to be a lunatic, and the wife, during a delay in the payment of her separate income, borrowed certain sums of money for maintenance, that these sums should be allowed against his estate, the contention being overruled that the circumstances should be regarded as constituting a separation by consent, and that, where the wife is living separate from her husband and has a separate income, she is not entitled to pledge her husband's credit. It may be observed that the smallness of the wife's separate income apparently affected this decision, the combined incomes of husband and wife amounting to less than £250 per annum, and that of the wife being less than half this amount. The court said that the amount of the income in this case made it unnecessary to give any opinion on the cases cited; that the husband's income was wholly applied for his benefit, and the wife was supplied with these small sums in payment of her necessary expenses; and that the decision of the lower court was clearly right, and the appeal frivolous.

And in Meyer's Estate (1878) Myrick, Prob. Ct. Rep. (Cal.) 178, supra, the husband applied for an order on the guardian of the wife, who was insane, to refund out of her estate the amount which he had expended for her support, it appearing that she had a large separate estate and that he also was wealthy. The court, in denying the application, said that it was the duty of the husband to maintain the wife, and that while he had the ability so to do, resort could not be had to her estate.

In discussing the question of damages for the death of the husband through the defendant's negligence the court, in Shebley v. Peters (1921) — Cal. App. —, 200 Pac. 364, supra, in holding that evidence should not have been admitted of the dependence of the widow and children upon the husband for support, said: "The admissibility of evidence to show that they were dependent upon the decedent for support depends upon the question whether that fact does or does not enhance their loss. We think it is clear that such evidence is not admissible, and that this is so because their loss is the same, regardless of their dependence upon him for support. They were entitled to demand of him a support in accordance with his station in life. Such support it is the right of every wife and minor child to receive from the husband and father, even if they are not dependent upon him at all, but have ample means of their own."

That a husband owes the duty of maintaining his wife notwithstanding she has a dower estate in lands of a former husband finds support in Neil v. Johnson (1847) 11 Ala. 615, supra, where, however, the question was as to the liability of the widow's dower to levy and sale under execution for debts of the second husband.

In Poole v. People (1898) 24 Colo. 510, 65 Am. St. Rep. 245, 52 Pac. 1025, supra, a prosecution under a statute making it unlawful for any man residing in the state wilfully to neglect, fail, or refuse to provide reasonable support and maintenance for his wife, and providing that any person guilty of such neglect, upon the complaint of the wife, should, on conviction, be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor, and committed to jail, unless it appeared that, owing to physical incapacity or other good cause, he was unable to furnish such support, the court, in affirming a conviction, said that the husband was not relieved from furnishing support on account of the financial means of his wife, either by the general law or the statute; and that therefore the offer of the plaintiff in error to prove that the prosecuting witness had means of her own, at a time several months prior to the institution of the proceedings, was wholly immaterial, it not being claimed that such means were obtained from the husband.

The rule that the husband's duty to support the wife exists although the wife has a separate estate is recognized in State v. Hill (1913) 161 Iowa, 279, 142 N. W. 231, also, although it does not appear that the question was presented in this case.

The rule that, as between husband and wife who are living together, the former must pay for household necessities, although the wife has separate property, is supported also by Griffin v. Patterson (1881) 45 U. C. Q. B. 536, supra, where, in an action by a third party against the husband and wife for goods sold to the latter, who had a separate estate, the court, in holding that she was not liable, said: "No case, as far as I am aware, has decided that a married woman living with her husband and family must be held to pledge her personal credit or bind her separate estate merely by ordering goods for the ordinary wear, use, or support of herself, her husband, and children. I certainly am not prepared, unless bound by authority, to accede to such a proposition.

. . . I cannot believe that the legislature ever intended that a married woman, living with her husband and family, becomes, by the mere fact of her possessing some separate provision, liable for the household stuff or provisions ordered by her in the ordinary way as managing the household."

And it was said in American Mill Co. v. Industrial Bd. (1917) 279 Ill. 560, 117 N. E. 147, that the duty to support the wife is imposed by law on the husband, and this duty does not depend upon the adequacy of the wife's means, but upon the marriage relation. The particular question involved in this case, as to the right of the wife under the Workmen's Compensation Act,—that is, whether it is necessary for her to prove that she was dependent upon the husband in order to recover under the act for his death,—is beyond the scope of the note. The statute provided for recovery if the employee left a widow "whom he was under legal obligation to support" at the time of the injury. And the court held that there could be recovery without proof that the deceased made contributions to his wife for her support, and that she was dependent upon and relied upon such contributions for support.

To similar effect, holding that the "legal obligation" of the husband to support the wife within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Statute of that state does not depend on the inadequacy of the wife's means, but on the marriage relation, is H. G. Goelitz Co. v. Industrial Bd. (1917) 278 Ill. 164, 115 N. E. 855.

The question under consideration was presented, but was found not essential to the decision, in Dolan v. Brooks (1897) 168 Mass. 350, 47 N. E. 408, where the court expressly stated that it did not mean to intimate that the fact that a wife has an income of her own will relieve the husband from his obligation to support her, or absolve him from liability for suitable clothing bought by her in consequence of his refusal or neglect to provide it for her. In this case the wife, who, for several years, had purchased dresses from the plaintiff, had been accustomed to pay for the same from her separate income, with her own check, and the plaintiff had sent the bills to the wife. It did not appear that the husband had refused or neglected to provide the wife with suitable clothing. And it was held that a finding for the defendant, in an action against the husband for the price of a dress furnished by the plaintiff to the wife, could be sustained, either on the ground that credit was given to the wife, and not to the husband, or that, assuming that the dress was suitable to the wife's station in life, it was not a necessary for which he would be liable.

That the husband is primarily liable for household necessities, even though the wife has a separate estate, and that this rule is not affected by statutory provisions making husband and wife jointly and severally liable for all necessary household articles and supplies furnished to and used by the family, is supported by Kosanke v. Kosanke (1917) 137 Minn. 115, 162 N. W. 1060, supra, where the wife was held entitled to reimbursement from the husband's estate for amounts paid by her from her separate property for household necessities furnished to them while they were living together, on the ground that the payments were made by her with the expectation of repayment by the husband.

And that, if the husband and wife are living together, it is his duty to support her, without regard to whether she has separate means of support, and that the same is true if they are living apart without her fault, at least unless she had ample separate means, was the rule laid down in Sodowsky v. Sodowsky (1915) 51 Okla. 689, 152 Pac. 390, which was decided under the Oklahoma statutes providing that "the husband must support himself and his wife out of his property or by his labor;" that the wife must support the husband, when he has not deserted her, out of her separate property when he has no separate property, and is unable, from infirmity, to support himself; that the separate property of the wife is not liable for the debts of the husband; and expressly declaring the common-law rule that if the husband neglects to make adequate provision for the support of the wife, any other person may, in good faith, supply her with articles necessary for her support, and recover the reasonable value thereof from the husband. The question arose on the pleadings, and it does not expressly appear whether the parties were living separate, or whether the wife had ample, or any, means of her own. The court said: "In view of the independent legal status and remedies vouchsafed to her in respect to her personal rights and property by the several sections of the statutes hereinbefore quoted, it appears that if he breaches his duty of support, while she is living with him as his wife, or apart from him, through no fault of her own, and especially if without ample means of her own, and she involuntarily expends her own separate means in procuring articles necessary to her support, he is in duty bound to reimburse her, and she may, after due demand, or where it is evident that such demand would be futile, sue and recover judgment against him for the same. . . . None of the provisions of the statutes relating to the question of the support of the wife predicate her right and her husband's duty in regard to her support upon any question of her ability to support herself by her own labor or out of her own separate property; and we do not feel warranted in construing the statutes as limiting this duty, as it existed at common law, and imposing it upon the husband only when the wife is unable to support herself."

There are other cases indirectly supporting the doctrine of the husband's primary obligation to pay for necessities furnished the wife, although she has a separate estate, which do not discuss the question under consideration. Thus, in Underhill v. Mayer (1917) 174 Ky. 229, 192 S. W. 14, the court held that a wife was not liable on a note given by her to a physician for his services in attendance on her, the services being furnished at the instance and upon contract with the husband, and being charged to him, since the husband was primarily liable for such necessities, and, this being his debt, her estate could not become bound for it, under a statute of that state, except by deed or mortgage.

That the husband continues liable for necessities furnished the wife while they are living together, although she has a separate estate, seems to be assumed in Moore v. Copley (1895) 165 Pa. 294, 44 Am. St. Rep. 664, 30 Atl. 829, where it was held that the wife's separate estate was not liable for medical services rendered to herself and children while living with her husband, the court saying that while the power of the husband over the separate estate of the wife had been taken away, his liability for her support and that of his children remained; that he was liable for necessities furnished the wife and children, whether with or without his knowledge, and that she was not liable unless she expressly engaged to become so.

So, the rule that the husband must provide necessities even though the wife has a separate estate is assumed also in Anderson v. Davis (1904) 55 W. Va. 429, 47 S. E. 157, where the court took the view that, the husband being the head of the family, and under a legal duty to support it, the separate estate of the wife is not liable for family necessities supplied by a third person, when it is not shown that she has agreed to pay for them, or has estopped herself from denying liability therefor.

And in Israel v. Silsbee (1883) 57 Wis. 222, 15 N. W. 144, it is held that the husband alone is liable for support of his wife and child, unless she expressly made the amount chargeable upon her separate estate.

And the doctrine that the husband may be liable for necessities furnished the wife, although she has a separate estate, seems supported also by such cases as Ketterer v. Nelson (1911) 146 Ky. 7, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 754, 141 S. W. 409, where it was held that, as the husband was primarily liable for such necessities as the physician's and nurse's bill for the wife and her burial expenses, he was not entitled to be reimbursed out of her estate the amount which he had paid therefor. And to a similar effect, see Stonesifer v. Shriver (1904) 100 Md. 30, 59 Atl. 141, set out in the reported case (McFERREN v. GOLDSMITH-STERN, Co. ante, 1125).

It appears to be assumed also in Bowen v. Daugherty (1915) 168 N. C. 242, 34 S. E. 265, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 1161, that the fact that the wife has a separate estate does not prevent recovery from the husband for necessities furnished to her while they are living together, in the absence of an express agreement by the wife to pay therefor, it being held in this instance that although, under the Married Women's Act, the wife might bind herself by contract, her estate could not be held liable for expenses of doctor's bills and nursing during her last illness, and her funeral expenses, the primary obligation being upon the husband.

And among other cases which, on principle, seem to support the doctrine of the husband's liability for necessaries even though the wife has a separate estate, is Staple's Appeal (1884) 52 Conn. 425, holding that a husband cannot charge his wife's estate for her funeral expenses.

III. Liability of husband through whose fault wife is living apart from him.

The better rule appears to be that even though husband and wife are living apart because of his desertion or misconduct, the wife, if without fault, is still entitled to his support for necessities, and this right does not depend upon the question whether she has means of her own, available for that purpose. Some of the cases do not go to the full extent of this rule, but, subject to the explanation of individual cases given below, it finds support in the following:

Maine. — Thorpe v. Shapleigh (1877) 67 Me. 235.

Maryland. — McFERRIN v. GOLDSMITH-STERN Co. (reported herewith) ante, 1125.

Massachusetts. — Hall v. Weir (1861) 1 Allen, 261.

New Hampshire. — Ott v. Hentall (1900) 70 N. H. 231, 51 L.R.A. 226, 47 Atl. 80.

New York. — Brauwer v. Brauwer (1911) 203 N. Y. 460, 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) 508, 96 N. E. 722; Weiserbs v. Weiserbs (1918) 169 N. Y. Supp. 111.

Oklahoma. — Sodowsky v. Sodowsky (1915) 51 Okla. 689, 152 Pac. 390, under II. supra.

Pennsylvania. — Cunningham v. Irwin (1821) 7 Serg. & R. 247, 10 Am. Dec. 458.

Virginia. — Mihalcoe v. Holub (1921) — Va. —, 107 S. E. 704.

Where the defendant's wife, who, for good cause, had separated from him, owned a dwelling house and furniture exceeding in value the amount of the plaintiff's claim for alleged necessities furnished to the wife, it was held in Thorpe v. Shapleigh (Me.) supra, that the court properly refused to instruct the jury that the plaintiff could not recover from the defendant for necessities furnished to his wife while she was the owner of a dwelling house and land which she omitted to appropriate to the relief of her necessities. The court said: "The request was properly refused. When a husband wrongfully turns his wife away, he is by law liable for her support. A dwelling house would seem to be as much a necessity for a wife and family, to protect her from the inclemencies of the weather, as food to save her from starvation. The request implies an obligation to appropriate what is, in and of itself, a necessity, to procure other necessities, which would not be more needed than the one omitted to be appropriated. Whether, if the wife had sufficient means of her own, or was able to earn a living for herself, the husband would be liable to support her, has been questioned. Johnston v. Sumner (1858) 3 Hurlst. & N. 261, 157 Eng. Reprint, 469, 27 L. J. Exch. N. S. 341, 4 Jur. N. S. 462, 6 Week. Rep. 574; Lidlow v. Wilmot (1817) 2 Starkie (Eng.) 86, 19 Revised Rep. 684; 1 Chitty, Contr. 241. But it is not necessary to determine this question."

In the reported case (McFERRIN v. GOLDSMITH-STERN Co. ante, 1125), where the husband and wife were living apart because, as she contended, of his misconduct, it was held that the husband's obligation, arising from the marriage relation, to supply his wife with necessities suitable to her station in life, was not affected by the fact that she might have means of her own from which she could procure them. It will be observed that the court, while reaching a conclusion which is in accord with what appears to be the weight of authority, seemingly adopts the doctrine of agency of necessity, which would appear to be a doubtful theory under the circumstances.

In Hall v. Weir (Mass.) supra, the defendant, who had wrongfully deserted his wife and family, and furnished no adequate means for their support, was held liable for necessities furnished them by the plaintiff, although she received the monthly earnings of her two daughters, who lived with her, which earnings, combined, it appeared, were nearly equal to those of the husband.

In Ott v. Hentall (1900) 70 N. H.

231, 51 L.R.A. 226, 47 Atl. 80, in holding that a wife's financial ability to provide for herself does not deprive her of the right to pledge her husband's credit for necessities, when she is living apart from him on account of his misconduct, the court said that the wife's marital rights and the husband's correlative duty did not depend upon the inadequacy of the wife's means, but upon the marriage relation; that the husband's obligations created the necessity for the wife's agency, if it be so termed, not the fact that she would otherwise be destitute. Continuing, the court said: "The husband is by nature, as well as by law, the leading and responsible party in the undertaking. Among other things, he takes upon himself the duty of providing a home, and suitably maintaining the wife and children. The wife's ability to provide herself with the necessities of life does not relieve him from the duty while they live together; and no good reason is perceived why it should do so while she is living apart from him in consequence of his misconduct. The duty is taken into consideration in awarding alimony to the wife in connection with or after a divorce. . . . If the wife does not desire a divorce, or the husband's misconduct has not continued a sufficient length of time to constitute a cause for divorce, the court, upon petition of the wife, 'may make to her reasonable allowance out of the estate of the husband for the support of herself and children.' . . . The fact that the wife has means of her own does not deprive her of the right to alimony in the one case, or to an allowance, in the other. So far as her right and the husband's correlative duty are concerned, the necessity for clothing her with authority to obtain necessities upon the husband's credit exists when she has means, the same as when she has none. This is the necessity upon which the law bases the husband's implied promise when he fails in the performance of his duty."

That the husband is under obligation to support the wife after he has abandoned her, although she has a separate estate, consisting in part of the proceeds of her own labor and in part of money received by inheritance, is apparently assumed in such cases as Brauwere v. Brauwere (1911) 203 N. Y. 460, 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) 508, 96 N. E. 722, where it was held that since the passage of the Married Women's Act, a wife who had been deserted by her husband could maintain an action against him to recover the amount which she had expended from her separate estate for the necessary support of herself and her children.
18 A.L.R.—72.

To the same effect is Weiserbs v. Weiserbs (1918) 169 N. Y. Supp. 111, holding that the wife could recover from the husband for money expended by her out of her separate estate for necessities for herself and children, where the husband had failed to furnish adequate and proper support.

It was held in Cunningham v. Irwin (1821) 7 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 247, 10 Am. Dec. 458, that if husband and wife are living separate, without her fault, the liability of the husband for necessities furnished by a third person is not the difference between what she can earn by her own labor and the amount necessary for her support. The court said that the husband had no right to say to the wife that she should earn all she could by her own labor, and he would be answerable only for the difference, as indicated; that he must support his wife himself, or pay those who do support her in a reasonable manner.

In Mihalcov v. Holub (1921) — Va. —, 107 S. E. 704, the court said: "A husband is bound to support his wife. This is his legal duty, independent of any separate estate which she may possess. . . . When they live apart through no fault of the wife, the husband's duty to support her is not affected by the fact of the separation, and he is liable to third persons who furnish her with the necessary means of support on his credit. She has the authority, growing out of his legal duty, to pledge his credit for this purpose."

There are, however, authorities which are opposed to the above, and which hold that the power of the wife necessaries even though the wife has a separate estate, is Staple's Appeal (1884) 52 Conn. 425, holding that a husband cannot charge his wife's estate for her funeral expenses.

III. Liability of husband through whose fault wife is living apart from him.

The better rule appears to be that even though husband and wife are living apart because of his desertion or misconduct, the wife, if without fault, is still entitled to his support for necessities, and this right does not depend upon the question whether she has means of her own, available for that purpose. Some of the cases do not go to the full extent of this rule, but, subject to the explanation of individual cases given below, it finds support in the following:

Maine. — Thorpe v. Shapleigh (1877) 67 Me. 235.

Maryland. — McFERREN v. GOLDSMITH-STERN CO. (reported herewith) ante, 1125.

Massachusetts. — Hall v. Weir (1861) 1 Allen, 261.

New Hampshire. — Ott v. Hentall (1900) 70 N. H. 231, 51 L.R.A. 226, 47 Atl. 80.

New York. — Brauwer v. Brauwer (1911) 203 N. Y. 460, 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) 508, 96 N. E. 722; Weiserbs v. Weiserbs (1918) 169 N. Y. Supp. 111.

Oklahoma. — Sodowsky v. Sodowsky (1915) 51 Okla. 689, 152 Pac. 390, under II. supra.

Pennsylvania. — Cunningham v. Irwin (1821) 7 Serg. & R. 247, 10 Am. Dec. 458.

Virginia. — Mihalcoe v. Holub (1921) — Va. —, 107 S. E. 704.

Where the defendant's wife, who, for good cause, had separated from him, owned a dwelling house and furniture exceeding in value the amount of the plaintiff's claim for alleged necessities furnished to the wife, it was held in Thorpe v. Shapleigh (Me.) supra, that the court properly refused to instruct the jury that the plaintiff could not recover from the defendant for necessities furnished to his wife while she was the owner of a dwelling house and land which she omitted to appropriate to the relief of her necessities. The court said: "The request was properly refused. When a husband wrongfully turns his wife away, he is by law liable for her support. A dwelling house would seem to be as much a necessity for a wife and family, to protect her from the inclemencies of the weather, as food to save her from starvation. The request implies an obligation to appropriate what is, in and of itself, a necessity, to procure other necessities, which would not be more needed than the one omitted to be appropriated. Whether, if the wife had sufficient means of her own, or was able to earn a living for herself, the husband would be liable to support her, has been questioned. Johnston v. Sumner (1858) 3 Hurlst. & N. 261, 157 Eng. Reprint, 469, 27 L. J. Exch. N. S. 341, 4 Jur. N. S. 462, 6 Week. Rep. 574; Lidlow v. Wilmot (1817) 2 Starkie (Eng.) 86, 19 Revised Rep. 684; 1 Chitty, Contr. 241. But it is not necessary to determine this question."

In the reported case (McFERREN v. GOLDSMITH-STERN CO. ante, 1125), where the husband and wife were living apart because, as she contended, of his misconduct, it was held that the husband's obligation, arising from the marriage relation, to supply his wife with necessities suitable to her station in life, was not affected by the fact that she might have means of her own from which she could procure them. It will be observed that the court, while reaching a conclusion which is in accord with what appears to be the weight of authority, seemingly adopts the doctrine of agency of necessity, which would appear to be a doubtful theory under the circumstances.

In Hall v. Weir (Mass.) supra, the defendant, who had wrongfully deserted his wife and family, and furnished no adequate means for their support, was held liable for necessities furnished them by the plaintiff, although she received the monthly earnings of her two daughters, who lived with her, which earnings, combined, it appeared, were nearly equal to those of the husband.

In Ott v. Hentall (1900) 70 N. H.

231, 51 L.R.A. 226, 47 Atl. 80, in holding that a wife's financial ability to provide for herself does not deprive her of the right to pledge her husband's credit for necessities, when she is living apart from him on account of his misconduct, the court said that the wife's marital rights and the husband's correlative duty did not depend upon the inadequacy of the wife's means, but upon the marriage relation; that the husband's obligations created the necessity for the wife's agency, if it be so termed, not the fact that she would otherwise be destitute. Continuing, the court said: "The husband is by nature, as well as by law, the leading and responsible party in the undertaking. Among other things, he takes upon himself the duty of providing a home, and suitably maintaining the wife and children. The wife's ability to provide herself with the necessities of life does not relieve him from the duty while they live together; and no good reason is perceived why it should do so while she is living apart from him in consequence of his misconduct. The duty is taken into consideration in awarding alimony to the wife in connection with or after a divorce. . . . If the wife does not desire a divorce, or the husband's misconduct has not continued a sufficient length of time to constitute a cause for divorce, the court, upon petition of the wife, 'may make to her reasonable allowance out of the estate of the husband for the support of herself and children.' . . . The fact that the wife has means of her own does not deprive her of the right to alimony in the one case, or to an allowance, in the other. So far as her right and the husband's correlative duty are concerned, the necessity for clothing her with authority to obtain necessities upon the husband's credit exists when she has means, the same as when she has none. This is the necessity upon which the law bases the husband's implied promise when he fails in the performance of his duty."

That the husband is under obligation to support the wife after he has abandoned her, although she has a separate estate, consisting in part of the proceeds of her own labor and in part of money received by inheritance, is apparently assumed in such cases as Brauwere v. Brauwere (1911) 203 N. Y. 460, 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) 508, 96 N. E. 722, where it was held that since the passage of the Married Women's Act, a wife who had been deserted by her husband could maintain an action against him to recover the amount which she had expended from her separate estate for the necessary support of herself and her children.
18 A.L.R.—72.

To the same effect is Weiserbs v. Weiserbs (1918) 169 N. Y. Supp. 111, holding that the wife could recover from the husband for money expended by her out of her separate estate for necessities for herself and children, where the husband had failed to furnish adequate and proper support.

It was held in Cunningham v. Irwin (1821) 7 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 247, 10 Am. Dec. 458, that if husband and wife are living separate, without her fault, the liability of the husband for necessities furnished by a third person is not the difference between what she can earn by her own labor and the amount necessary for her support. The court said that the husband had no right to say to the wife that she should earn all she could by her own labor, and he would be answerable only for the difference, as indicated; that he must support his wife himself, or pay those who do support her in a reasonable manner.

In Mihalcoe v. Holub (1921) — Va. —, 107 S. E. 704, the court said: "A husband is bound to support his wife. This is his legal duty, independent of any separate estate which she may possess. . . . When they live apart through no fault of the wife, the husband's duty to support her is not affected by the fact of the separation, and he is liable to third persons who furnish her with the necessary means of support on his credit. She has the authority, growing out of his legal duty, to pledge his credit for this purpose."

There are, however, authorities which are opposed to the above, and which hold that the power of the wife

to pledge the husband's credit for necessities, where they are living apart because of his misconduct and through no fault of hers, depends upon the question whether she has property or means of her own available for her support, and the adequacy of such means. If the doctrine of agency may be regarded as the ground upon which the wife's right rests,—an agency implied from the fact of cohabitation or her necessity,—then these cases are apparently sound. But if, as appears to be the better doctrine, the wife's right is founded on the obligations and duties arising from the marriage relation, then these decisions appear at least doubtful.

That the husband is not liable for the support of the wife after he has left her, if she is able to earn her own living, was possibly, although not clearly, the holding in an early case. War v. Huntly (1703) 1 Salk. 118, 91 Eng. Reprint, 111, the entire report of which is as follows: "The case was: an ordinary workingman married a woman of the like condition; and after cohabitation for some time the husband left her, and during his absence, the wife worked; and this action being brought for her diet, it was held that the money she earned should go to keep her."

And the doctrine is laid down in Lidlow v. Wilmot (1817) 2 Starkie (Eng.) 86, 19 Revised Rep. 684, that while a husband who turns his wife out of doors, or, by the indecency of his conduct, precludes her from living with him, is bound to provide her means of support adequate to her situation, yet if, either from the husband or from other sources, she is possessed of such means, the law gives no remedy against the husband for necessities furnished her by third persons. The court said the husband was liable only in case of the insufficiency of her funds; and that the only credit given to the husband is an implied one, arising from his situation and the inadequacy of the funds of the wife; and that if she is adequately provided for, the circumstance repels all idea of implied credit.

The court also, in Hunt v. Hayes

(1891) 64 Vt. 89, 15 L.R.A. 661, 33 Am. St. Rep. 917, 23 Atl. 920, took the position that a wife wrongfully turned away by her husband could not pledge his credit for necessities if she had an adequate income of her own with which she could supply herself. But it may be observed that in this case the wife's separate income was apparently derived from the husband, there being an antenuptial contract by which the wife was to be paid $2,000 per year, which it was conceded, had been regularly paid. The husband, in an action against him by a third person for necessities furnished the wife when they were living apart, contended that he was not liable except for such support as he failed to furnish, or as his wife had not the means of obtaining. But the lower court ruled that he was liable for her proper support notwithstanding the provisions contained in the antenuptial contract and their performance, as fully as though the contract had not been executed and performed. It was held that this ruling was erroneous. The court said if the husband's liability, when he has turned his wife away, is put upon the ground of agency arising from necessity, as many of the cases place it, it logically follows that when there is no necessity, there can be no agency; and that there can be no necessity when the wife has means of her own with which she can supply herself. The court, however, approved the rule that a precarious income is not enough; and stated that in cases like the one before it, the question is for the jury to determine whether the wife has adequate means or not for her support.

So, in Prescott v. Webster (1900) 175 Mass. 316, 56 N. E. 577, the court, after stating that the general rule is that, when the wife lives apart from her husband, without any fault on her part, the husband is liable for her adequate maintenance in her station in life, and, in case he fails in that duty, is liable to a third person for necessities furnished to the wife, said that the husband was not so liable if the wife had property adequate to her support; that he was liable only upon the ground of reasonable necessities; but that, where the wife had some means, the question as to whether, in any particular case, her means are such as to relieve the husband from liability for the articles furnished, is generally a question of fact, and not of law. It was held that the court had properly declined to rule that, "the wife having property of her own, the husband was not liable for necessities furnished to her without his knowledge or assent, by one who knew the wife's circumstances," where it appeared that the wife, who had been deserted by her husband, the defendant, without justifiable cause, owned only a $2,000 equity of redemption in a house, the rents of which were not more than enough to pay interest and taxes. In this case the plaintiff, who had furnished board to the defendant's wife, recovered therefor, it being said that whether the wife's necessity was so great as to make the defendant liable was a question of fact, and not of law.

And it was held in Litson v. Brown (1866) 26 Ind. 489, that if the husband and wife separate and live apart, even though that condition is due to his improper conduct, the implied agency of the wife to contract for necessities, arising from cohabitation, no longer exists, and in the absence of an express promise to pay, the husband is thereafter liable for necessities furnished the wife only in case she has no means of her own for her support. The court said: "If the wife, of her own will, elopes or leaves the husband, without his fault, he is not responsible even for necessities furnished her by one having a knowledge of the separation. But if the husband expels the wife from his house without her fault, or compels her to leave his house by cruelty to her, and without the means of support, he sends with her credit for her reasonable expenses. This liability does not, in such case, rest upon an implied agency, but is an obligation imposed by the law from necessity, and is founded on the marital relation and the duty of the husband to maintain the wife. If the husband, who, in violation of his marital obligations, drives his wife from his house without the means to procure the necessities of life, could also deny the credit to supply them, she would be liable to suffer or perish from want. The law, therefore, from necessity, authorizes anyone to supply her necessary wants, under such circumstances, and to look to the husband for compensation. But if she has the means of support, while so separated from her husband, come from what source they may, whether furnished by the husband or arising from her separate estate, no necessity exists that they should be furnished by others, and in such case the husband could only be held liable upon an express promise to pay."

And where, after the wife had left the husband because of his misconduct, she was, for a time, destitute of means, so that the husband was rendered liable for necessities furnished to her by a third person, it was held, in Litson v. Brown (Ind.) supra, that the husband's liability, having once attached, was not discharged by the subsequent receipt by the wife of money in her own right, although, for necessities furnished after the receipt of such money, the husband, it was held, would not be liable.

The court, also, in Johnston v. Sumner (1858) 3 Hurlst. & N. 261, 157 Eng. Reprint, 469, 27 L. J. Exch. N. S. 341, 4 Jur. N. S. 462, 6 Week. Rep. 574, was inclined to the view that although the husband, by his fault, caused his wife to leave him, he might not be liable to a third person for necessities furnished to her if she had sufficient separate income. See this case under IV. infra.

IV. Separation by mutual consent or agreement.

The authorities are to the effect that if the husband and wife separate by mutual consent or agreement, it must be shown that the wife is without adequate means or property of her own, in order to warrant recovery from the husband for necessities furnished her by a third party. Thus, it was held in Decker & Bros. v. Moyer (1910) 121 N. Y. Supp. 630, that, under the laws of New Jersey, a husband was not liable for necessities supplied to his wife when they were living apart, except in cases where the separation was due to his fault, or where, the separation being by agreement, the wife was without means of her own; and that the husband was not liable in this action for necessities furnished a wife where, although the plaintiff proves that he was not furnishing her with money, it was not shown that she had no separate estate, or that the husband was not justified in leaving her.

And in Fredd v. Eves (1846) 4 Harr. (Del.) 385, the court held that where the husband and wife separate by mutual agreement, and live apart by mutual consent, the husband will not be liable for necessities furnished the wife, if she has a sufficient separate maintenance, although no part of it is supplied by the husband.

The view was taken in Dixon v. Hurrell (1838) 8 Car. & P. (Eng.) 717, that if a husband and wife separate by mutual consent, the husband is liable for necessities supplied to the wife, unless she has a competent provision, either from the husband or from her own resources; and that the question of the sufficiency of her separate provision, where it is shown that she has one, is for the jury to determine, depending on the station of the parties and the circumstances of the particular case.

And it was held in Johnston v. Sumner (1858) 3 Hurlst. & N. 261, 157 Eng. Reprint, 469, 27 L. J. Exch. N. S. 341, 4 Jur. N. S. 462, 6 Week. Rep. 574, that a third party who sues the husband for the value of articles furnished for the personal use of the wife after their separation by mutual consent has the burden of proving that the wife's separate allowance is insufficient, so as to show an implied authority, arising from necessity, to pledge his credit. In this case, where the wife had an income of £200 a year, covenanted to her by her mother at the time of the marriage, for her separate use, and on the separation of the husband and wife it was agreed that the wife should continue to receive this yearly sum for her sole use, it was held that the plaintiff, who sued for the value of wearing apparel furnished the wife after the separation, was properly nonsuited, as she had failed to produce evidence sufficient for the jury that the allowance was insufficient, and that the plaintiff was authorized to charge the husband. The court, it may be observed, was doubtful whether, even if the husband had wrongfully turned the wife away, she would have implied authority to pledge his credit for necessities if she had a sufficient separate income. It was said: "If the husband turns his wife away, it is not unreasonable to say she has an authority of necessity; for she by law has no property, and may not be able to earn her living; but we should hesitate to say that, if a laboring man turned his wife away, she being capable of earning, and earning as much as he did; or if a man turned his wife away, she having a settlement double his income in amount, the wife in such cases could bind the husband."

V. Precarious or uncertain income of wife.

The doctrine that a precarious or uncertain income belonging to the wife will not relieve the husband from liability for her support is supported by Thompson v. Hervy (1768) 4 Burr. 2177, 98 Eng. Reprint, 136, where it was held that the fact that a wife had a pension granted to her in her own name from the Crown, terminable at the will of the Crown, would not prevent recovery against the husband for necessities furnished by third parties to the wife, after he had wrongfully compelled her to leave his house. The court said that the pension was only a voluntary grace and bounty of the Crown, and only during the pleasure of the Crown, and was not what any creditor of hers, even for her necessary subsistence, could be supposed to give her credit upon.

That a precarious income belonging to the wife will not relieve the husband from the duty to support her is approved also by the Vermont court in Hunt v. Hayes (Vt.) under III. supra. R. E. H.

ROBERT L. STEVENS et al., Exrs., etc., of Frederick C. Stevens, Deceased, Respts.,

v.

MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK, Appt.

New York Court of Appeals—January 6, 1920.

(227 N. Y. 524, 125 N. E. 682.)

Insurance — validity of provision.

1. A stipulation by one borrowing money on a paid-up life insurance policy that the policy may be canceled upon nonpayment of the loan, without notice to the borrower, is not illegal or inequitable.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1145.]

—cancellation of paid-up policy — necessity of notice.

2. Notice to insured who has borrowed money on his paid-up life policy, of cancellation for nonpayment of a loan at maturity, is not necessary where the note provides for cancellation without notice.

[See note in 4 A.L.R. 896.]

—delay in declaring cancellation — effect.

3. A delay by a life insurance company of forty-five days before canceling a paid-up policy according to its right under the contract for nonpayment of a loan at maturity is immaterial.

—extension of time for payment.

4. Extension of time for repaying a loan on a paid-up insurance policy so as to prevent cancellation of the policy according to the terms of the contract is not effected by letters written before and after maturity of the loan, informing insured as to the date of maturity, that the policy had lapsed, but might be reinstated by prompt action, and asking insured to take up the matter of restoring the policy.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Fourth Department, affirming a judgment of a Trial Term for Wyoming County (Brown, J.) in favor of plaintiffs, and from an order denying a motion for new trial, in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due under five life insurance policies. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. Murray Downs, with Mr. Frederick L. Allen, for appellant:

Defendant was not required to make any demand for payment of the loan or interest, or to give the insured notice of cancellation, or, having canceled, to give notice of the application of the cash-surrender consideration to the payment of the loans, or that there was a surplus.

Clare v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 201 N. Y. 492, 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1123, 95 N. E. 1075; Palmer v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 38 Misc. 318, 77 N. Y. Supp. 869; Frese v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 11 Cal. App. 387, 105 Pac. 265; Fountain v. Security Mut. L. Ins. Co. 20 Ga. App. 483; 93 S. E. 118; Eagle v. New York L. Ins. Co. 48 Ind. App. 284, 91 N. E. 814; Wilson v. Royal Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. 137 Iowa, 184, 114 N. W. 1051; Ruane v. Manhattan L. Ins. Co. 194 Mo. App.

214, 186 S. W. 1188; Cilek v. New York L. Ins. Co. 95 Neb. 275, 145 N. W. 693; Salig v. United States L. Ins. Co. 236 Pa. 460, 84 Atl. 826; Mills v. National L. Ins. Co. 136 Tenn. 350, 189 S. W. 691; Hiscock v. Varick Bank, 206 U. S. 28, 51 L. ed. 945, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 681; Fidelity Mut. Ins. Co. v. Oliver, 111 Miss. 133, 71 So. 302; Hartford L. Ins. Co. v. Benson, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 187 S. W. 351; Sherman v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 53 Wash. 523, 102 Pac. 419.

This is also true where policies have been used as collateral for the payment of interest upon notes given in part payment of premiums, and particularly where the policies were paid-up policies upon which the insured was no longer required to pay premiums.

Fowler v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 116 N. Y. 389, 5 L.R.A. 805, 22 N. E.

576; People v. Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co. 103 N. Y. 480, 9 N. E. 35; Holman v. Continental L. Ins. Co. 54 Conn. 195, 1 Am. St. Rep. 97, 6 Atl. 405; Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co. v. Dietz, 52 Md. 16; Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co. v. Harlan, 56 Miss. 512; Patch v. Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. 44 Vt. 481.

The trial court applied the rule laid down in fire insurance policy cases, which rule has no application to life insurance contracts, and thereby committed error.

Weyand v. Park Terrace Co. 202 N. Y. 231, 36 L.R.A. (N.S.) 308, 95 N. E. 723, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1010; 31 Cyc. 866, ¶ d; Jones, Collateral Securities, 3d ed. §§ 649, 650, pp. 774, 776.

There is no statutory procedure for canceling life policies.

New York Security & T. Co. v. Saratoga Gas & E. L. Co. 88 Hun, 569, 34 N. Y. Supp. 890; Pizer v. Herzig, 120 App. Div. 102, 105 N. Y. Supp. 38; Hothorn v. Louis, 52 App. Div. 218, 65 N. Y. Supp. 155, 170 N. Y. 576, 65 N. E. 1096.

Payment of surplus to Stevens was no part of the cancellation.

Lockwood v. New York L. Ins. Co. 175 App. Div. 24, 161 N. Y. Supp. 700, 223 N. Y. 714, 120 N. E. 867; Gately-Haire Co. v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. 221 N. Y. 162, 116 N. E. 1015, Ann. Cas. 1918C, 115; Crown Point Iron Co. v. Aetna Ins. Co. 127 N. Y. 608, 14 L.R.A. 147, 28 N. E. 653; Buckley v. Citizens' Ins. Co. 188 N. Y. 399, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 889, 81 N. E. 165; Board of Assessors v. New York L. Ins. Co. 216 U. S. 517, 54 L. ed. 597, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 385.

Mr. Louis L. Babcock, with Messrs. Stevens & Reynolds, for respondents:

The notes in question, as well as the notices served, should be liberally construed in favor of the assured.

Hoffman v. Aetna F. Ins. Co. 32 N. Y. 405, 88 Am. Dec. 337; Marshall v. Commercial Travelers' Mut. Acci. Asso. 170 N. Y. 434, 63 N. E. 446; Janneck v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 162 N. Y. 576, 57 N. E. 182.

Defendant was obligated, if it desired to cancel, to make that act complete by complying with the terms of the note. It was bound to deliver up the notes, to inform Mr. Stevens what had been done, and to tender him in cash what was his due.

Van Valkenburgh v. Lenox F. Ins. Co. 51 N. Y. 465; Tisdell v. New Hampshire F. Ins. Co. 155 N. Y. 163, 40 L.R.A. 765, 49 N. E. 664; Richards, Ins. Law, § 288.

Defendant did not elect within a reasonable time to cancel the policies. On the contrary, it elected to continue the policies in force, and communicated this intention to the insured.

Modern Woodmen v. Vincent, 40 Ind. App. 711, 80 N. E. 427, 82 N. E. 475, 14 Ann. Cas. 89; Glens Falls Ins. Co. v. Michale, 167 Ind. 659, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 708, 74 N. E. 964, 79 N. E. 905; Croft v. Lumley, 6 H. L. Cas. 705, 10 Eng. Reprint, 1472, 27 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 321, 4 Jur. N. S. 903, 6 Week. Rep. 523; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. French, 30 Ohio St. 240, 27 Am. Rep. 443; Toplitz v. Bauer, 161 N. Y. 325, 55 N. E. 1059; Bailey v. American Deposit & Loan Co. 52 App. Div. 402, 65 N. Y. Supp. 380, affirmed in 165 N. Y. 672, 59 N. E. 1118; Titus v. Glens Falls Ins. Co. 81 N. Y. 410; Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co. v. Norton, 96 U. S. 234, 24 L. ed. 689; Bishop, Contr. §§ 784, 844; Bigelow, Estoppel, p. 696; Ewart, Estoppel, p. 133; Thomson v. Poor, 147 N. Y. 402, 42 N. E. 13; Dunn v. Steubing, 120 N. Y. 232, 24 N. E. 315; Gallagher v. Nichols, 60 N. Y. 438.

Andrews, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On May 16, 1914, Frederick C. Stevens held five paid-up life policies issued by the Mutual Life Insurance Company. On that day he borrowed from the company $1,837 on each policy and executed five notes, in each promising to pay that sum and interest on January 24, 1915, and in each stating that he had deposited with and assigned to the company as collateral security one of such policies, and agreeing that, if he failed to repay the note or interest when due, the company, "without further notice and without further demand for payment, may cancel said policy as of the date of default," and apply to the payment of the note and interest $1,920, fixed as the cash-surrender value of the policy, and pay the balance (if any) on demand to the parties entitled thereto. The notes also provided that upon request and upon the payment of interest the time for their payment might be extended for six months or one year. If that was done the same provisions for cancellation were applicable, except that the amount fixed for the cash surrender value might be increased.

On January 24, 1915, all interest was paid and the loan extended to January 24, 1916. At some time, apparently prior to that date in view of the language used, five notices were sent to Mr. Stevens, each stating that the loan and interest would be payable on January 24th, and asking him, if he wished to continue the loan, to remit the interest. The notices also contained certain statements not applicable to paid-up policies. No attention was paid to these notices and no payments made. The company did not, however, at once cancel the policies. As thirty days' grace is allowed for the payment of premiums its custom is said to be to allow the same privilege for the payment of interest and fifteen days in addition so as to enable it to hear from distant points and make certain that no payments have in fact been made. Instead, on February 12th it wrote to Mr. Stevens on what were evidently forms relating to the nonpayment of premiums, that interest on each loan "will expire on January 24, 1916," and that it trusts he will remit "before that time, . . . that the insurance may not lapse," the interest and 46 cents, which was evidently compound interest from January 24, 1916. It further stated that, unless a remittance was received before the date of expiration, restoration of the insurance would be subject to certain conditions, and asked Mr. Stevens to give the matter his prompt attention. Still nothing was done, and on February 28th five other letters were sent by the company. Like the last, they were a clumsy attempt to adapt a form letter as to premiums to the circumstances surrounding the loans. They each notified Mr. Stevens that he had allowed his "policy to lapse" by default in the payment of interest. They then discussed matters in terms not appropriate to paid-up policies. But they say that a policy is too valuable an asset to be cast aside, and ask Mr. Stevens to take up the matter of restoring those issued to him. Finally a note at the end distinctly gives the number of the policy referred to, states that it is paid up, and that $110.22 interest on a loan was due January 24, 1916. Once more no notice was taken of these letters, and on March 9th the company canceled each policy by pasting upon it a cancellation slip as of January 24, 1916. On the 13th the company wrote him that each policy had been canceled because the loan had not been paid or renewed, gave a statement of the transaction, and inclosed a check of $28.78 on each policy, being the balance due. These letters and checks were forwarded to the defendant's agents at Washington, and were there mailed to Mr. Stevens at his home in Attica before his death, which occurred suddenly on the 14th. They were not received, however, until afterwards, and the checks were then returned to the company by his executors. These executors now claim that they are entitled to the face value of the paid-up policies less the amount due on the loans. To recover that amount this action is brought.

The trial court directed a verdict for the plaintiffs on the ground that the cancellation of the policies did not become effective until notice thereof reached Mr. Stevens and until he was either paid the balance due or was informed that the company held that sum subject to his demand. The appellate division did not adopt the reasoning of the trial judge, but affirmed his action on the ground that the company had waived its right to cancel without further notice of such intention. We think the action cannot be maintained on either theory.

The contract is clear. Its terms are not ambiguous. On default the company may cancel the policy without further notice or further demand. This cancellation is the basis for further action. After it, but necessarily only after it has cancellation of paid-up policy—necessity of notice.

Insurance—

been effected, the company applies the surrender value of the policy to the payment of the note. If any balance remains, it will pay it to the borrower on demand. The provisions are independent. They do not resemble those in fire policies where the manner in which cancelation may be effected is prescribed. Here the borrower expressly agrees that —validity of provision.

the cancelation may be made without notice by the action of the company. Such an agreement is not illegal. Clare v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 201 N. Y. 492, 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1123, 94 N. E. 1075. Nor is it inequitable. The borrower knows when the loan is due. He knows the privilege he has conferred. He knows it will generally be to the advantage of the company to enforce the cancelation. It is for him to ascertain if cancelation has been effected because of his default, and, if so, to demand any balance that may be due to him. In most banking loans on collateral the bank reserves the right to sell the collateral on default or to retain it itself at a fair value and apply the proceeds on the loan. Any balance due belongs to the borrower. But it has never been held that the transaction is not closed until notice is given that such a balance is in its hands.

As we have said, the time of payment of the notes was extended until January 24, 1916. The evidence of interest payments and the statements of plaintiffs' counsel show this fact beyond a doubt. If so, a mere delay of forty-five days in canceling the policy is immaterial.

—delay in declaring cancelation—effect.

Nothing in the collateral note required the company to exercise its option to cancel on the very day it became due. The agreement expresses the contrary intent. The cancelation is to be made "as of the date of default." This implies action subsequent to that date. It is true the delay might be so great as to permit an inference of fact that the company had made an election not to cancel. Once made, the insured might rely upon such election, and cancelation would require reasonable notice and demand. But such a delay as here occurred would not of itself permit such an inference.

Is there anything in the letters and notices that requires a different result? If the company extended indefinitely the time for the payment of the principal and interest, or if because of its actions the insured was justified in believing such an extension had been granted, and failed to make required payments, relying on such a belief, again no cancelation could be had without reasonable notice and demand.

The defendant does not appear to have knowingly and intentionally extended the time. Nor do the letters and notices justify a belief on the part of Mr. Stevens that such an extension had been granted. He was a business man and had been a banker. We must infer in him a reasonably intelligent appreciation of the meaning of them. The first simply informed him that his loan would become due on January 24, 1916, and that some action on his part was required if it was to be extended. Certain provisions on the back of this paper referring to loans on ordinary policies, and to extensions of loans if premiums were promptly paid, he knew did not apply to him. From that of February 12th the most that he could infer was that, although in default, he might still be permitted, if he acted immediately, to pay his interest as of January 24th and so obtain an extension. The word "lapse" was inappropriate; but a business man, as was Mr. Stevens, could not have understood he was given an indefinite time within which to make his payments, and that good faith, therefore, required a further notice before cancelation was enforced. The letter of February 25th was entirely unfitted to the circumstances; but at least it was a clear notice that the policies were no longer in force and that further negotiations were required to restore them. Finally, there is no direct evidence that Mr. Stevens understood an extension was granted him, and no facts appear from which the inference may be drawn either that he so believed or that he relied on such belief. The truth probably is that he intended to allow his policies to be canceled so as to pay his notes.

—extension of time for payment.

As we find no question of fact to be submitted to a jury, the judgments of the Trial Term and of the Appellate Division should be reversed, and the complaint dismissed, with costs in all courts.

Hiscock, Ch. J., and Hogan, Cardozo, McLaughlin, and Elkus, JJ., concur.

Pound, J., not voting.

ANNOTATION.

Cancellation of paid-up life insurance policy for nonpayment of loan.

As to breaches of loan agreements in insurance policies, see annotation in 4 A.L.R. 895.

Where the cash surrender value allowed by the insured is the actual cash surrender value, and not one arbitrarily fixed, the right of an insurer to cancel a paid-up insurance policy for the nonpayment of a loan is generally sustained under loan agreements giving the insurer a right, upon default, to cancel the policy, apply the surrender value to the satisfaction of the loan, and pay the balance to the insured.

It will be observed that in the reported case STEVENS v. MUTUAL L. INS. CO. ante, 1141) it was held that notice to insured, who had borrowed money on his paid-up life policy, of cancellation for nonpayment of a loan at maturity, was not necessary where the note provided for cancellation without notice, the court holding that the agreement by the borrower that the policy might be canceled upon nonpayment of the loan, without notice to the borrower, was not illegal or inequitable.

And in the following cases, where the holder of a paid-up policy obtained a loan under an agreement similar to that in STEVENS v. MUTUAL L. INS. CO., which also authorized the insurer, upon default, to apply the customary cash surrender value then allowed to the payment of the loan, and pay the balance, if any, to the insured, the agreement and a cancela-tion thereunder were held valid. Clare v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. (1911) 201 N. Y. 492, 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1123, 95 N. E. 1075; Sherman v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. (1909) 53 Wash. 523, 102 Pac. 419.

And in Palmer v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. (1911) 114 Minn. 1, 130 N. W. 250, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 957, where a loan was made by the insurer to a holder of one of its paid-up policies, which contained no agreement as to the surrender or loan value under an agreement like those in the preceding cases, it was held that if the cash surrender consideration allowed by the insurer was the actual cash surrender value, and not an amount arbitrarily fixed by the insurer without regard to the actual value, the agreement was valid, and that a cancellation by the insurer for default in the payment of the loan terminated the rights under the policy, but that if the actual value of the policy exceeded the customary surrender value allowed by the insurer the contract would be one exacting a penalty, and invalid. The court said: "For the purpose of insuring the payment of the loan, and, in case of default, of foreclosing the rights of the pledgee in the pledged property, the contract in the case at bar provides for a forfeiture of the policy, and authorized defendant to cancel the same by applying the 'customary cash surrender consideration then allowed by the company for the surrender for cancellation of similar policies, namely, $1,445,' to the payment of the loan, paying the balance, if any, to the pledgeor. The debt was not paid and defendant exercised the right thus conferred, and canceled the policy. The general rule of the common law for the enforcement of pledge contracts, in the absence of special agreement otherwise providing, requires a sale of the property upon due notice to the pledgeor, and an application of the proceeds to the payment of the debt, the surplus, if any, going to the pledgeor. The rule is, however, not of universal application, and does not apply to commercial paper, and perhaps other species of choses in action. But it is well settled that the parties may stipulate the terms and methods of enforcement, and that agreements in this respect, not obnoxious to the law, will control the rights of the parties.

... Even this rule is not without its exceptions, for it has been held that an agreement that the pledgee may appropriate the property to the satisfaction of the debt is void and not enforceable. ... The rule requiring the sale of the property cannot well be made applicable to a life insurance policy, pledged to the company issuing it as security for the payment of a loan; for, whether fully paid or not, it has no marketable sale value, and an attempt to thus dispose of it would be futile. So that some method of enforcement, other than a sale, or unconditional relinquishment of ownership by the pledgeor, must be resorted to. A careful consideration of the subject leads to the conclusion that the remedy by cancellation at the cash surrender value of the policy is not inconsistent with sound public policy or violative of the substantial rights of the pledgeor. On the contrary, it is a reasonable and practicable method of bringing the contract to a final termination. ... But a contract providing for that remedy should not be construed to vest in the pledgee the right arbitrarily to determine the value of the policy at a sum substantially less than its actual cash surrender value. Pledge contracts so construed have been held to impose a penalty for the nonpayment of the debt, and therefore void. . . . If the contract provides for an application of the actual cash surrender value of the policy to the payment of the debt, and the surplus to the pledgeor, the result grants to the pledgeor all that he is entitled to, and the law is in no sense offended. And if the 'cash surrender consideration . . . allowed by the company,' upon which the cancellation of the policy in question was based, was the actual cash surrender value, and not an amount arbitrarily fixed by defendant, without regard to the actual value, the cancellation of the policy was valid, and plaintiffs have no cause of complaint. It is not conclusive that the parties, by the contract, agreed upon a surrender value of the policy. If the value so agreed upon resulted, in fact, in imposing upon Palmer a penalty for his default, the agreement is none the less invalid because assented to by him. While the law seldom interferes with the right of contract, and permits parties to enter into such agreements as their interests may seem to them proper, yet there are instances where the law steps in to prevent unfair and unreasonable advantage being taken by one of the contracting parties. Express agreements fixing an amount to be paid for the breach of a contract, if entered into fairly and without fraud, and the amount agreed upon be not greatly disproportionate to the actual loss sustained in consequence of the breach, are valid, and the courts uphold them. But where the agreed compensation for the failure of performance is out of all proportion to the loss suffered, and the actual injury or damage may be readily ascertained and determined, not left to conjecture or speculation, the agreed amount is, by the authorities, treated as a penalty, and not enforceable. . . . The rule is especially applicable to contracts between the necessities borrower and the money lender. The determination of the question in the case at bar should be guided by this rule; and if it shall be made to appear with reasonable certainty that the sum of $1,445, the amount agreed upon as the surrender value, in view of all pertinent facts and circumstances, is substantially disproportionate to the actual value of the policy, the agreement for cancelation will fall within the rule of prohibited penalties, and fail of force or effect. It is alleged in the complaint that the actual value of the policy exceeded the customary surrender value allowed by the company by several hundred dollars, and if these allegations be sustained by sufficient competent evidence on the trial, the result necessarily will be that defendant by the contract exacted of Palmer a penalty for his default, which the law will not approve. The allegations of the complaint in this respect, though to some extent mingled with conclusions of law, present issues of fact, and the case must, therefore, go back for trial."

The decision in the preceding case was held the law of the case on a subsequent appeal in (1913) 121 Minn. 395, 141 N. W. 518, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 160, where a finding that the value of the policy fixed by the insurer was $512 less than its true value was held sustained by the evidence, and this sum was held to be so large as to amount to a penalty and render the agreement and cancelation thereunder invalid; and it was also held that a cancelation not based on the agreement was not an appropriate remedy to enforce payment of the loan, where no notice was given.

And in Palmer v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. (1902) 38 Misc. 318, 77 N. Y. Supp. 869, where the holder of a policy obtained a loan and assigned the policy under an agreement like that in the foregoing cases, and subsequently, upon default, this policy was exchanged for a paid-up policy, with reference to which the same loan agreement was made, and upon a default in the payment of the loan the insured notified the insured, canceled the paid-up policy, retained the amount of the debt due to it, and paid the balance of the surrender value to the insured,—it was held that the insured could not thereafter maintain an action to redeem or to reinstate the policy. The court said: "Without questioning the accuracy of the plaintiff's statement of the law defining the rights of the debtor with respect to the property pledged or mortgaged by him, it does not seem to me, however, that, under the circumstances in this case, the equitable right of redemption, which is said to be 'inseparably attached to every pledge or mortgage, and of which a borrower is incapable, in the instrument of pledge or mortgage, of parting with, can here and now permit him to redeem, or secure the restoration or reinstatement of his policy, upon payment of the debt and interest, as a pledgee or mortgagor is ordinarily permitted to do. The agreement of the parties, containing the assignment of the policy as collateral security, did not expressly provide that the legal right, title, and interest in and to the policy should vest in the assignee subject to defeasance upon the payment of the debt for which it was assigned as security, nor did it expressly state that, as in the case of the ordinary pledge, the legal title should remain in the assignor and that the assignee should have only a special interest therein. A policy of insurance is, however, a non-negotiable chose in action, subject to the legal rules applicable to that class of property. Under an assignment thereof as security for a debt the legal title passes to the assignee. The only interest remaining to the assignor is what remains of the policy after the advances have been satisfied; the assignee may recover the whole amount of the policy from the insurer, but he acquires only such an interest in the proceeds of the policy as may be necessary to discharge the indebtedness and represent the advances made by him. . . . And, as in the case of any pledge, the assignee or pledgee has the right, upon a default in payment at maturity of the debt for which the property is held as security, to dispose of or realize upon the pledge, that he may thereby obtain the amount of his debt; and his character is that of a trustee for the pledgeor, for these purposes—first, to pay the debt; and, second, to pay over the surplus. In accordance with these legal rules, as above briefly stated, the parties expressly provided that, upon default in payment of the debt at maturity, the policy pledged as security therefor should be disposed of, and its value should be ascertained according to adopted and ‘customary’ standards, and should be agreed upon as thus determined, and the proceeds should be applied to the payment of the indebtedness, the balance to be turned over to the pledgeor. The debt became due and was unpaid at maturity. The defendant was under no obligation, and probably possessed no power, to maintain the policy until its maturity, by the payment of premiums thereon. On the other hand, it then had the right, both in law and by its express agreement with the plaintiff, to secure the payment of its debt by disposing of or realizing upon the pledge of the policy in the form and manner prescribed. Owing to the peculiar nature of that property it could not make a sale thereof for these purposes, and it was therefore necessary to dispose of the policy in some way, and to determine in some way its value as of the time of the default. Instead of, as in the case of an ordinary pledge, leaving the value to be determined by a sale by the pledgee as trustee for the pledgeor, the parties agreed that the value of the pledged policy should be its customary cash surrender value, and agreed upon that value in advance, and the defendant secured the same for the benefit of itself as a creditor and of the plaintiff as pledgeor by the cancelation of the policy in accordance with the agreement and with the practice of companies such as the defendant. The defendant has done no more than the law permits the ordinary creditor with whom property is pledged to do, and no more than the parties agreed that it should have the right to do. The property pledged as security for the defendant is not now owned, held or possessed by the defendant; it is no longer in existence; in accordance with law and with the agreement of the parties, it has been disposed of in the only manner possible and as agreed upon by the borrower and lender. Upon this disposition its value was determined, not arbitrarily, not by any advantage taken of the lender by the borrower, but according to a prescribed, adopted, uniform standard, and the amount thereof has been divided among the parties, the plaintiff receiving, accepting, and retaining his share of the proceeds.”

And it has been held in other cases that provisions in paid-up policies, which were issued in lieu of other policies, on which notes had been given in payment of part of the premiums, that they should be void in case the interest on such notes was not paid when due, were not unconscionable or oppressive, and that the policies might be terminated on default in the payment of interest. Atty. Gen. v. North America L. Ins. Co. (1880) 82 N. Y. 172; Fowler v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. (1889) 116 N. Y. 389, 5 L.R.A. 805, 22 N. E. 576.

In Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co. v. Harlan (1879) 56 Miss. 512, where insured, after having for some years paid the cash half of the premium and given notes for the credit part, surrendered the policy for “a paid-up” policy of a less amount, and executed a note for the credit part of the premiums on the old policy, the new policy providing that, if the interest on the note given should not be paid, the insurer should not be liable to pay the sum assured, or any part thereof, and that the policy should cease and determine and become null and void without notice to any parties interested, it was held that the policy was a “paid-up” one only in name, and that the right to recover the sum assured was to be earned only by the prompt payment of the interest on the note mentioned, and that no recovery could be had by the beneficiary after the insured’s death, where there had been a default in the payment of the interest on the note, since the policy was forfeited.

In New York L. Ins. Co. v. Curry

(1902) 115 Ky. 100, 61 L.R.A. 268, 103 Am. St. Rep. 297, 72 S. W. 736, where an insurer made a loan to the holder of one of its paid-up policies, a provision in the loan agreement like that involved in the reported case was held invalid. The court said: "In the case at bar there is no perceivable reason why the insurance company lending the money is, or can be, in a different position from any other lender of the money, had the policy been assigned to the latter as collateral, and a default in payment of the interest had occurred. If it loans money on its policies held by its policyholders, its rights as lender are exactly what they would be if, instead of the policies, the borrower pledged stocks, bonds, or policies in other companies, or gave a chattel or real estate mortgage to secure the loan. There is nothing in appellant's business, or charter rights, so far as we are advised, which entitles it to privileges, when loaning its money, not enjoyed generally by banks, trust companies, and other corporations and individuals. We are of opinion that the provision in the loan agreement for a surrender or forfeiture of the policy upon the nonpayment of the interest upon the loan is void.

And, citing New York L. Ins. Co. v. Curry (Ky.) supra, the court in Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Twyman (1906) 122 Ky. 513, 121 Am. St. Rep. 471, 92 S. W. 335, said that an insurer which had made a loan to a holder of a paid-up policy, under an agreement like that in the Curry Case, had not the right, upon default in the payment of the loan, arbitrarily to cancel the policy at its own option, and certainly not upon such an inequitable basis as to deprive the insured of any part of the surrender value over and above the amount of the loan. The court said: "When the appellee James C. Twyman failed to pay the note due appellant, and accrued interest, according to the terms of the contract, the latter, instead of treating such failure as a forfeiture of the assigned policy, and, without his consent, arbitrarily fixing its cash surrender value, should, like any other creditor holding a debt secured by lien, have resorted to a court of equity for the enforcement of its rights. . Though, in an action for such a purpose, a decree for the sale of the policy, as other collateral or mortgaged property may be sold, would not be allowed, for the sale of a policy of insurance in that way, as already said, is forbidden by law, the court could decree its cancellation upon allowing to the insured its full cash surrender value, less appellant's debt."

In Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Lazenby (1918) 16 Ala. App. 549, 80 So. 25, certiorari denied in (1918) 202 Ala. 207, 80 So. 29, where an insured holding a paid-up policy obtained a loan from the insurer, and pledged the policy under an agreement providing that if default should be made in the payment of the principal of the loan, or of the interest thereon, for thirty-one days after they should become payable, then the insurer should pay to the insured, upon execution and delivery of a surrender deed, the excess, if any, of the cash value of the contract pledged, and that upon such default the provisions of the contract for the payment of the principal sum at death, or for extended or paid-up insurance values, should be void,—it was held, a default in the payment of the loan and interest having occurred, and there having been no demand for repayment of the principal, nor an execution and delivery of a surrender deed of the policy by the insured up to the time of his death, and no foreclosure by due process of law, that the insurer acquired no legal title to the policy, and could not cancel it, and that the stipulation in the loan agreement could not be enforced as a penalty, so that the policy was in full force at the time of the insured's death. The court said: "In the present case, the question of the payment of premiums being eliminated, the question stands exactly in the position of any other party lending the money and taking the policy as a pledge to secure its repayment. There is no need for us to look to other facts or to phrases in the loan contract in order to see what that transaction was.

By the terms of the agreement between the parties the deposit of the 'paid-up policy' was a pledge, and, as such, the title remained in the pledgee or (31 Cyc. 789; Williamson v. Culpepper (1849) 16 Ala. 211, 50 Am. Rep. 175; Denis, Contr. of Pledge, ¶ 306), with the right in the pledgee to sell in case of default, but not to confiscate. Where the provision is that, upon the debtor's default, the title shall become absolute in the pledgee, it is void. 31 Cyc. 790; Williamson v. Culpepper (1849) 16 Ala. 211, 50 Am. Rep. 175, supra; Smith v. 49 & 56 Quartz Min. Co. (1859) 14 Cal. 242. The sale is necessary because, by default of payment or redemption, the pledge does not become the property of the pledgee. He has only a lien on it. There must be a foreclosure of the pledge to pass the ownership of the thing either to the pledgee himself or to another purchaser. Denis, Contr. of Pledge, chap. 25, ¶ 306. There is nothing in the loan contract that provides for the extinguishment of the debt without the execution of a deed to the policy, the provision of paragraph (b) being for a settlement of the debt upon the execution and delivery of a surrender deed upon the company's form. This is the only provision in the contract for a foreclosure of the pledge, except the penalty, which, if exercised before the deed is executed, would leave the debt still owing to the company secured by a pledge of less value. This clause recognizes the necessity for a change of title to the policy, and there is no pretense that this transfer was ever made. Until the title to the policy is transferred according to its terms, or foreclosed by due process, the title is still in the insured, with a debt owing by the insured to the company, with nothing to prevent the company from enforcing its claim by suit or otherwise; but it cannot penalize the insured by voiding and rendering less valuable the security which it holds. Such a rule would be unconscionable, and not to be tolerated. Appellant refers to the policy as having lapsed. There is no such thing as a lapsed paid-up policy. These policies may be transferred by contract, so that for nonpayment of the amount borrowed, with interest, the title may pass, as with any other property that may be pledged or mortgaged, with the right in the pledgee to become the purchaser, and, of course, when the pledgee does become the purchaser, the insurance may be canceled, but this is not a lapse." The court here distinguished Palmer v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. (1911) 114 Minn. 4, 130 N. W. 250, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 957, on the ground that the contract there purported, at the insurer's option, to transfer the title to the policy to the insurer in case of default; while in the case at bar the policy was merely placed as a pledge. J. T. W.

CHARLEY GORDON, Appt.,

v.

STATE OF MISSISSIPPI.

Mississippi Supreme Court (Division B)—December 12, 1921.

(— Miss. —, 90 So. 95.)

Criminal law — effect of passing indictment to files.

1. Passing an indictment to the files is in no sense an acquittal of the charge, and is not a bar to further prosecution of the indictment, and, with the consent of the court, an indictment which has been passed to the files may be withdrawn and reinstated for trial at any future term of the court.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1153.]

Headnotes by COOK, J.

Judgment — former conviction — intoxicating liquor — possessing and making.

2. A conviction for unlawfully possessing intoxicating liquors does not bar a second prosecution of the defendant for feloniously making or distilling the same liquor.

[See 8 R. C. L. 148.]

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Forrest County (Hall, J.) convicting him of manufacturing intoxicating liquor. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Davis & Hill, for appellant:

Where there is one continuous transaction or act, the act constitutes only "one offense," for which there can be but one punishment.

1 Bishop, New Crim. Law, § 1060; Holles v. United States, 3 MacArth. 370, 36 Am. Rep. 106; State v. Mickel, 23 Utah, 507, 65 Pac. 484; State v. Mjelde, 29 Mont. 490, 75 Pac. 87; People v. Johnson, 81 Mich. 573, 45 N. W. 1119; State v. Larson, 85 Iowa, 659, 52 N. W. 539; Dalton v. State, 91 Miss. 162, 124 Am. St. Rep. 637, 44 So. 802; State v. Sampson, 157 Iowa, 257, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 967, 138 N. W. 473; State v. Warren, 77 Md. 121, 39 Am. St. Rep. 401, 23 Atl. 500; Furnace v. State, 153 Ind. 93, 54 N. E. 441; State v. Quintini, — Miss. —, 51 So. 276.

If the evidence which is necessary to support the second indictment is admissible under the former, is related to the same crime, and is sufficient, if believed by the jury, to have warranted a conviction of that crime, the offenses are identical, and a plea of former conviction or acquittal is a bar.

16 C. J. § 445. (b), p. 265; Rocco v. State, 37 Miss. 357; 1 Bishop, New Crim. Law, § 1049, subd. 2; Henry v. State, 97 Miss. 787, 53 So. 397.

Messrs. Frank Roberson, Attorney General, and H. Cassedy Holden, Special Assistant Attorney General, for the State:

Defendant was rightfully convicted of manufacturing intoxicating liquor.

Teat v. State, 53 Miss. 439, 24 Am. Rep. 708; Johnson v. State, 59 Miss. 543; Smith v. State, 67 Miss. 116, 7 So. 208; Ball v. State, 67 Miss. 358, 7 So. 353.

Cook, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant was convicted of manufacturing intoxicating liquor, and sentenced to the penitentiary for a period of three years, and from this conviction and sentence prosecutes this appeal.

At the November, 1920, term of the circuit court of Forrest county, there were two charges pending against appellant, one for unlawfully and feloniously making intoxicating liquor, which had been preferred by indictment returned by the grand jury at that term, and one for unlawfully having intoxicating liquor in his possession, which last charge had been preferred by affidavit before a justice of the peace, and which was in the circuit court by appeal from a conviction in the justice court. When these cases were called in the circuit court, the defendant entered a plea of guilty to the misdemeanor. The felony charge was thereupon passed to the files by the district attorney, and the defendant, having paid the fine and costs imposed in the case in which he had entered a plea of guilty, was discharged.

At the April, 1921, term of the court, the district attorney filed a motion to withdraw from the files the indictment for making intoxicating liquors, and to redocket the same for trial. This motion was sustained, and defendant was put to trial on this indictment and convicted. Before the jury was impaneled, the defendant interposed two pleas of former jeopardy, one setting up that he had entered a plea of guilty to the charge of unlawfully having whisky in his possession under an agreement with the district attorney that the indictment upon which he was then arraigned would be passed to the files; that said indictment had been previously passed to the files, and that this constituted an acquittal of the charge; the other plea setting up autrefois convict, in that both charges grew out of the same transaction and were predicated upon the same facts. Demurrers were interposed and sustained to each of these pleas.

The argument in support of the first plea proceeds upon a total misconception of the effect of passing an indictment to the files. The district attorney may be willing to pass an indictment to the files pending good behavior, or for other cause, when he would be unwilling to recommend a nolle prosequi, and it often happens that a defendant is willing to accept this arrangement as the best settlement available. It may be that the passage

Criminal law—effect of passing indictment to files.

of an indictment to the files is usually the end of the matter, but it is in no sense an acquittal of the charge. It simply postpones the evil day, if the district attorney shall, in the future, elect to withdraw it and proceed with the trial.

Appellant complains that the district attorney has violated his agreement, and that for this reason a further prosecution of this indictment should not be permitted. We do not so understand the averments of the plea. The district attorney did not agree that the indictment would not be withdrawn in the future (if, indeed, he has any authority to make such an agreement), but the plea shows that he fully complied with the agreement. We think the demurrer to this plea was properly sustained.

The plea of autrefois convict avers, among other things, that officers raided the home of defendant and found therein a still and intoxicating liquors which had just been manufactured by the defendant, and that the liquors which defendant was charged with having in his possession were the identical liquors which he was charged with making; that the offense of unlawfully having intoxicating liquors in his possession is a necessary element or ingredient of the offense of feloniously making the same liquors; that, if mistaken in the averment that the misdemeanor was a constituent part of the felony, then, since the two charges grow out of the same transaction, the evidence necessary to support the indictment for the felony was necessary to support, or would have been admissible to prove, the charge of unlawfully having the same liquors in his possession, to which charge he had previously entered a plea of guilty, and that for these reasons he cannot be prosecuted under the indictment for making the liquors.

The charge against this defendant of unlawfully having the liquor in his possession originated in the justice court, and upon appeal the circuit court had no other jurisdiction than such as the justice court had, and for this reason we think § 1412, Code of 1906 (§ 1167, Hemingway's Code), is a sufficient answer to appellant's contention. This section provides: "The acquittal or conviction of a person by a justice of the peace, on a charge of being guilty of a misdemeanor, shall not be a bar to a prosecution for a felony in the same matter; but thereafter, on indictment for the felony, if the accused be acquitted thereof, he shall not be convicted of the constituent misdemeanor; and, if convicted of the felony, the court may moderate the sentence so as not to punish for the constituent misdemeanor."

However, since the prosecution for this misdemeanor might have originated in the circuit court upon an indictment by the grand jury, we do not rest our decision solely upon this statute. We recognize the rule that, where an indictment contains a minor offense inclosed in a major, a conviction or acquittal of the minor bars the major, but we think the offenses here involved are separate and distinct. Under the indictment for either of these offenses the defendant could not have been convicted of the other, and therefore, since there could have been no conviction of the major offense under the first indictment, a conviction under the first indictment does not bar a second prosecution for the major offense. This rule is announced in Wharton's Criminal Procedure, vol. 2, § 1396, where it is said: "Where, under the first indictment, there could have been no conviction of the major offense, then a conviction or acquittal of the minor on the first indictment does not bar a second indictment for the major offense."

Again in the same volume, § 1407, Mr. Wharton says: "But so far as the strict rule of law is concerned, the proceedings on the first trial cannot bar a prosecution for an offense on which there could be no conviction on the first trial."

We conclude, therefore, that the demurrer to this second plea was properly sustained, and the cause is affirmed.

ANNOTATION.

Effect of passing indictment to files.

Right to redocket.

Cases considering the effect of passing an indictment to the files, or filing away an indictment, as it is sometimes called, are not numerous. The question appears to have arisen most frequently in connection with the right to redocket or reinstate the indictment for trial after an order filing it away has been made. That the right to redocket exists seems to be quite generally conceded, the courts holding that the making of an order filing away the indictment does not amount to a nolle prosequi or discontinuance of the case. Thus, in Com. v. Dowdican (1874) 115 Mass. 133, the court said: "It has long been a common practice in this commonwealth, after verdict of guilty in a criminal case, when the court is satisfied that, by reason of extenuating circumstances, or of the pendency of a question of law in a like case before a higher court, or other sufficient cause, public justice does not require an immediate sentence, to order, with the consent of the defendant and of the attorney for the commonwealth, and upon such terms as the court in its discretion may impose, that the indictment be laid on file; and this practice has been recognized by statute. Stat. 1865, chap. 223; 1869, chap. 415, § 60. Such an order is not equivalent to a final judgment, or to a nolle prosequi or discontinuance, by which the case is put out of court; but is a mere suspending of active proceedings in the case, which dispenses with the necessity of entering formal continuances upon the dockets, and leaves it within the power of the court at any time, upon the motion of either party, to bring the case forward and pass any lawful order or judgment therein."

18 A.L.R.—73.

In the reported case (GORDON v. STATE, ante, 1150) it is held that the passing of an indictment to the files does not constitute an acquittal or nolle prosequi of the charge, but simply postpones the day of trial if the prosecution elects in the future to reinstate the indictment.

In Ashlock v. Com. (1846) 7 B. Mon. (Ky.) 44, it appeared that after an indictment had been found against the defendant, without service of process on him, the court granted an order striking the case from the docket, with leave to reinstate by motion. Subsequently process issued on the indictment and was served on the defendant, the case was reinstated on the docket, and there was a trial, resulting in the conviction of the defendant. In considering the exception taken to the orders filing away and redocketing the case, the court said: "An order striking a suit from the docket, made on motion of the plaintiff, and without reservation or qualification, we should be inclined to regard as a voluntary dismissal or discontinuance, and as placing the case, after the term when the order was made, beyond the power of the court. But here, the right to reinstate the case upon the docket being expressly reserved, the order, we think, should not be construed as a dismissal or discontinuance, but as a mere removal, or omission of the case upon the docket. If right in this construction of the order, the case was still in court, and the issuing and service of process before it was replaced upon the docket was not unauthorized or invalid. The order is, however, in our opinion, unusual, and we would not be understood as approving such a rule of practice, perceiving no necessity or sufficient reason for it, and it may have the effect to delude and entrap litigants."

In accord with the foregoing decision is a later case in the same jurisdiction (Com. v. Bottoms (1899) 105 Ky. 222, 48 S. W. 974), involving the construction of an order whereby several indictments were filed away, with leave to reinstate without notice, with the consent and on the promise of the defendant that he would not again commit a crime similar to that charged. Subsequently, however, a conviction for a similar offense was had, and the indictments in question were redocketed, and process was issued thereon against the defendant, who appeared and moved to strike the indictments from the docket, which motion was sustained. In reversing the judgment of the lower court, the court of appeals said: "When the defendant is before the court, and the case stands for trial, we are not aware of any law or rule of practice that would authorize the attorney for the commonwealth, on his own motion, to file the indictment away, on conditions, and hold the prosecution in terrorem over the defendant; and we do not approve of such practice. However, such was done in this case, and with the consent of appellee, and upon terms; and, it being shown that the terms had been violated by appellee, he should not complain if the attorney for the commonwealth prosecutes the indictment to trial, as the agreed order recites he may do. Nor is there anything in the order itself, or its effect, that forbids such action by the commonwealth. The legal effect of such an order was simply a continuance indefinitely, and an exoneration of any bail for appearance, unless the contrary should appear in the order; and, upon reasonable notice being given to the accused, the case might stand for trial at any term of court. We think this might be done without showing a violation of the promise to abstain from further violations. We are of opinion that this order did not discontinue the prosecution, and that the Statute of Limitations does not apply as a bar by reason of the order." See to the same effect, Jones v. Com. (1903) 114 Ky. 599, 71 S. W. 643, wherein the propriety of an order filing away an indictment was discussed at length.

Where the defendant is not before the court, not having been apprehended, the filing away of an indictment does not amount to a nolle prosequi, and the indictment may be reinstated on the arrest of the defendant. Gross v. Com. (1904) 118 Ky. 907, 82 S. W. 618.

Effect to discharge bail.

It has been held in several cases in Kentucky that the passing of an indictment to the files, at a time when the accused is out on bail, discharges the sureties on the bail bond.

Thus, it was said in Miller v. Com. (1921) 192 Ky. 709, 234 S. W. 309: "To file away an indictment with leave to reinstate it does not have the effect to nolle prosequi the indictment, or to dismiss it, but the effect is to continue it indefinitely, and possibly for all time, and, if the defendant is upon bail, the sureties are discharged from liability upon the bond, because the state has, by its action in 'filing away' the indictment, made it useless for the sureties to deliver the defendant to the jailer, as he would be entitled to immediate release from custody, because the state could not hold a citizen in prison upon a charge which it had filed away and refused to try him upon, or to give him an opportunity to be delivered according to law."

In Hall v. Com. (1895) 17 Ky. L. Rep. 231, 30 S. W. 877, the liability of the sureties on a recognizance for the amount of bail required for the appearance of the defendant was the question for decision, and the court said: "If it be true that the indictment in question was filed away, as claimed by appellant, then there was no prosecution pending in law at the June term; hence no order forfeiting the bond could be legally made, nor could any judgment be legally rendered upon said bond; and such judgment would be clearly erroneous, if not absolutely void. If, however, the judgment is not void, the filing away of the indictment would have the effect to release the surety in the bail bond; and that fact, if pleaded and proven by appellant, would have been a good defense."

In Miller v. Com. (Ky.) supra, a similar question was involved. The sureties contended that, as the indictment had been ordered filed away, with leave to reinstate on notice to the defendant, they were released from liability. The court upheld their contention, saying: "The order did not direct the indictment to be filed away with leave to reinstate it in words, but it was similar in effect to such an order, and must be held to have carried with it the same consequences. The indictment was never to be reinstated upon the docket for trial until after thirty days' notice to the defendant, nor did the defendant have to appear in court to answer to it until he had received such notice, and whether or not such notice would ever be given was problematical. The indictment, in the meantime, remained in the same place, and in the same condition, as if it had been filed away. The consent of the sureties was not obtained for this proceeding, and it was had without their knowledge, so far as the record indicates, and they could not have contemplated, when executing the bond, that any such turn would ever take place in the prosecution, or that they would be required to assume the additional liability of seeing that their principal appeared to answer the indictment at the pleasure of the prosecution, and not at the times provided by law. It would have been useless for them to have arrested the principal and delivered him to the jailer, and thus automatically discharged themselves from liability on the bond in the ordinary way, because, the state having in effect filed the indictment away with leave to reinstate it, and declined to try the defendant until at an indefinite time, or probably never, it surely could not have held the defendant in jail until such time as the state should determine to proceed against the defendant, after having his agreement which prevented him from at any time demanding a trial until thirty days' notice should have been given him of the purpose of the state to bring him to trial."

L. F. C.

REVEREND C. G. GERLACH, Respt.,

v.

FRANK GRUETT, Appt.

Wisconsin Supreme Court — November 15, 1921.

(— Wis. —, 185 N. W. 195.)

Libel — effect of express malice on privilege.

1. Express malice will destroy the conditional privilege of one who, believing the truth of a publication, makes a libelous communication to proper persons upon a proper occasion.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1160.]

Evidence — libel — irrelevant testimony.

2. In an action for libel in charging a preacher with immorality, evidence is not admissible that during the war he insisted on preaching in the German language.

— morals of preacher.

3. In an action for libel for charging a preacher with immorality, evidence is not admissible that a stricter rule of morals was required of him than of persons in ordinary life.

Trial — submission of issues without evidence.

4. Issues as to truth of charges alleged to have constituted a libel should not be submitted to the jury where the evidence is too vague and inconclusive to sustain a finding that they were true.

[See 14 R. C. L. 786; 17 R. C. L. 428.]

New trial — option — rule for fixing damages.

5. In giving the option to plaintiff, who has recovered a verdict for damages for publication of a libel, to accept a less amount, or submit to new trial, the amount named should be as low as an impartial jury on the evidence would probably name.

[See 20 R. C. L. 315, 316.]

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Fond du Lac County (Fowler, J.) in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for alleged publication of a libel. Affirmed on condition.

Statement by Vinje, J.:

Action for libel based upon three letters written by the defendant, a member of the church of which plaintiff was the minister, and addressed respectively to Reverend A. F. Augustin, Eau Claire, Wisconsin, Reverend O. Gammelin, Beaver Dam, Wisconsin, and Reverend A. Pilger, Ripon, Wisconsin, which letters were received and read by the respective persons to whom they were addressed. The letters were written in the German language and were translated as follows:

"Rosendale, Wis., Aug. 20, 1919.

"Esteemed Pastor:—In the synodical report on page twenty, I read that it is really pleasant that the pastor in Rosendale was justified from the charges resting against him. If the synod has no other justification than one of this character, then not very many of the dearly purchased souls of our Savior will enter into the haven (harbor) of the eternal home, for that very girl, which at the meeting at Rosendale was declared to be an honorable girl, and which Gerlach held in his arms, the one which Gerlach called to himself into the automobile, and said (to her), 'Come let us anger Gruett,' that girl now has, since the 7th day of August, a strapping boy; she has no husband (man); and for the child, they cannot find the father or discover him. Perhaps the committee could help out again, the adage says, 'Tell me with whom you associate, and I will tell you who you are.' It transpired here, as the Scriptures say, 'For wheresoever the carcass is, there will the eagles be gathered together.' And such a girl the local pastor takes around, and the synod rejoices because he has been justified. I can tell, only tell you, there was a commotion and a row here, and it is still going on. If I would be in Gerlach's place, I would be gone over all hills. I only have to wonder that such men (people) dare to hang around (occupy) Lutheran pulpits. It cannot go on this way for very long any more, for the attendance at the services is constantly growing worse, and the members are getting less. It is no wonder that the judgments of God are being wreaked so heavily upon mankind. Yes, we have all reasons to sing with that poet, 'Awake, you spirit of the early witnesses, which stood upon the walls as faithful watchmen.' Just here there is something missing in the upright faithfulness. Faithful in actions, faithful in life, if it would be thus, all things would be well. I am surprised that the synod does not step in here, and bring about a change of pastors. Always more witnesses are appearing here (stepping up) to testify that my claims are resting upon truth.

"Now, Mr. Pastor Augustin, I should think that this would suffice to cause you, as the president of the district, to do some serious thinking.

"With sincere greetings, signs

"Frank Gruett. [Signed.]"

"Rosendale, Wis., August 21, 1919.

"Mr. Reverend O. Gammelin,

Beaver Dam.

"Dear sir:—

"In the synodical report it is stated: We are pleased that the pastor at Rosendale was cleared from the charges resting against him. A sorry justification, for that girl, which was declared to be an honorable girl at the meeting of March 25th, the one which Gerlach embraced in an automobile, the one which Gerlach called into his automobile with the words, 'Come, let us anger Gruett,'—this very girl has since the 7th day of August a strapping youngster; she has no husband, and the boy has no father, neither can they find one for him; how easily could an (investigating) visiting commission help out again here. However, it is a disgrace and a sin that such men (people) are permitted to hang around (occupy) Lutheran pulpits. It is no wonder that the judgments of God are wreaked over humanity. Enough; I hope that this will suffice to cause you to do some very serious thinking.

"Greetings from

"F. Gruett. [Signed.]"

"Rosendale, Wis., August 21, 1919.

"Mr. Reverend Pilger,

"Ripon.

"Esteemed Pastor:—

"In the synodical report I read that we are pleased that the pastor in Rosendale was cleared from the charges resting against him. If the synod has no other justification than one of that character, then not very many of the dearly purchased souls of our Savior will enter into the haven (harbor) of the eternal home; for that girl, which at that meeting here in Rosendale on March 25th was declared to be an honorable girl, the one which Gerlach embraced, the one which Gerlach called into the automobile, 'Come, let us anger Gruett,' this very girl now has since the 7th day of August a strapping boy. She has no husband (man), and the poor boy, it seems, has no father, neither can they find one. Perhaps a committee could help out again here. I do not want to write a great deal, the whole business is nauseating to me already, it is a disgrace and a sin that such men (people) are permitted to hang around (occupy) Lutheran pulpits. I once more would like to speak to you personally. When you were in Green Lake, I was there too; but at that time, I knew nothing about this row.

"With friendly greetings, signs

"F. Gruett. [Signed.]"

The answer put in issue the libels alleged in the complaint, and the jury returned a special verdict as follows:

"(1) Did the defendant write the letter to Reverend Augustin for the purpose of procuring a rehearing of the charges previously preferred against the plaintiff, believing the Reverend Augustin a proper officer of the synod through whom to procure such rehearing, and with an honest belief that the plaintiff was guilty of all the misconduct as a clergyman imputed to him by said letter? Answer: Yes.

"If to 1 you answer 'Yes,' answer 2.

"(2) Was the defendant actuated by malice in writing said letter? Answer: Yes.

"(3) What sum will compensate the plaintiff for the injury to his reputation, feelings, and his professional standing caused by the writing of the libelous matter in the letter to Reverend Augustin? Answer: Two thousand dollars.

"(4) Did the defendant write the letter to Reverend Gammelin for the purpose of procuring a rehearing of the charges previously preferred against the plaintiff, believing the Reverend Gammelin a proper officer of the synod through whom to procure such rehearing, and with an honest belief that the plaintiff was guilty of all the misconduct as a clergyman imputed to him by said letter? Answer: Yes.

"If to 4 you answer 'Yes,' answer 5.

"(5) Was the defendant actuated by malice in writing said letter? Answer: Yes.

"(6) What sum will compensate the plaintiff for the injury to his reputation, feelings, and his professional standing caused by the writing of the libelous matter in the letter to Reverend Gammelin? Answer: One thousand five hundred dollars.

"(7) What sum will compensate the plaintiff for the injury to his reputation, feelings, and his professional standing caused by the writing of the libelous matter in the letter to Reverend Pilger? Answer: One thousand five hundred dollars."

The court gave plaintiff the option to take judgment for $500 on each cause of action, or a new trial, because he was convinced that the jury "failed to give proper consideration to the limitation of the publication, and wrongfully charged up to defendant, as an element of damage in this case, the harm done and injury wrought by the previous proceedings and the public hearing respecting matters involved and the extended publication and wide notoriety consequent thereto."

Plaintiff early in the trial waived punitive damages and accepted judgment for $1,500 and costs, from which judgment the defendant appealed.

Mr. T. L. Doyle, for appellant:

Where a writing may be taken as a general charge of misconduct, specific instances of misconduct are admissible in evidence to prove the truth of the charge.

Ingalls v. Morrissey, 154 Wis. 632, 143 N. W. 681, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 899;

Cook v. Gust, 155 Wis. 594, 145 N. W. 225.

The language of the letters should be interpreted by the jury as it was understood by the readers, taking into consideration the surrounding circumstances which were known to the readers.

25 Cyc. 357; Robertson v. Edelstein, 104 Wis. 440, 80 N. W. 724.

The court committed prejudicial error in refusing to receive evidence offered by the defendant.

Pfister v. Milwaukee Free Press Co. 139 Wis. 627, 121 N. W. 938.

Expenses of suit are improper elements of damage.

Hicks v. Foster, 13 Barb. 663; Halstead v. Nelson, 24 Hun, 395.

Damages for prospective suffering are not recoverable in a libel suit.

Bradley v. Cramer, 66 Wis. 297, 28 N. W. 372.

No damages for future injury can be allowed in libel and slander. A judgment for plaintiff is supposed to render other injury from defamation impossible.

Halstead v. Nelson, 24 Hun, 395.

It was error to fix the amount of plaintiff's compensatory damages at $1,500, thereby invading the province of the jury, and fixing such damages in excess of the amount of compensatory damages suffered by the plaintiff.

Eviston v. Cramer, 57 Wis. 570, 15 N. W. 760; 17 R. C. L. 444; Luther v. Shaw, 157 Wis. 234, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 85, 147 N. W. 18; Morse v. Modern Woodmen, 166 Wis. 194, 164 N. W. 829, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 480; Secard v. Rhineland Lighting Co. 147 Wis. 614, 133 N. W. 45.

Vinje, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It was suggested upon the oral argument that there was an inconsistency between answers to questions 1 and 2 and 4 and 5, because questions 1 and 4, as answered, included a finding that defendant was actuated by good-faith motives, not by malice, and hence contradicted the answers to questions 2 and 5, finding malice. In view of the instructions given and the wording of the questions, we think the answers to questions 1 and 4 found only that the purpose for which the letters were written, and the persons to whom they were directed, were within the field of conditional privilege, and that the defendant believed the charges to be true, but that they did not find entire good faith, and absence of malice. One may believe charges to be true, be within the field of conditional privilege so far as purpose of communication and persons addressed are concerned, and yet be actuated by express malice. If express malice be found, it destroys the conditional privilege that would otherwise obtain. Rude v. Nass, 79 Wis. 328, 24 Am. St. Rep. 717, 48 N. W. 555; Joseph v. Baars, 142 Wis. 390, 135 Am. St. Rep. 1076, 125 N. W. 913; Arnold v. Ingram, 151 Wis. 458, 138 N. W. 111, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 976; Williams v. Hicks Printing Co. 159 Wis. 90, 150 N. W. 183. So we conclude there is no inconsistency between the answers to the specified questions.

Libel—effect of express malice on privilege.

We shall refer briefly to only a few assignments of errors because, for reasons to be stated, the case must go back for a new trial unless the plaintiff accepts the option granted by this court.

The court struck out a portion of defendant's answer which alleged, in substance, that during the war plaintiff refused to preach in the English language, though petitioned to do so by members of the parish, thus indicating, it is alleged, a lack of patriotism. We fail to see how that was relevant to any issue arising out of the alleged libel. Its only purpose could have been to prejudice the plaintiff in the eyes of the jury, and the court properly struck out that portion of the answer.

Evidence—libel—irrelevant testimony.

The court likewise properly refused to receive evidence as to the duties of a Lutheran minister to his congregation, to the effect that a stricter rule of morals was required than in ordinary —morals of preacher.

life, because the conduct charged in the letters is adequately condemned by the prevailing code of morals, as well as by the law.

The court also properly refused to submit questions eliciting the fact as to whether or not the matters charged in the letters were true, because the evidence was too vague and inconclusive to sustain a finding that they were true.

Trial—submission of issues without evidence.

We shall not examine the alleged erroneous portions of the charge relating to damages, because the verdict as to damages was set aside by the trial court, and we must set aside his assessment because he erred in making it. He gave an option to plaintiff to take $500 compensatory damages for each letter written, stating that he did so because he considered "that a jury moved by proper considerations in this respect would hardly go above $500 as damages for each of the letters, or $1,500 in gross." In giving the option to the plaintiff he should have placed the amount as low as an impartial jury on the evidence would probably name, not as high as such jury would probably go.

New trial—option—rule for fixing damages.

The latter must be done when the option is given to the defendant. Heimlich v. Tabor, 123 Wis. 565, 68 L.R.A. 669, 102 N. W. 10; Beach v. Bird & W. Lumber Co. 135 Wis. 550, 116 N. W. 245; Katz v. Miller, 148 Wis. 63, 133 N. W. 1091, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 1199; West v. Bayfield Mill Co. 149 Wis. 145, 135 N. W. 478; Krawiecki v. Kieckhefer Box Co. 151 Wis. 176, 138 N. W. 710; Poler v. Mitchell, 152 Wis. 583, 140 N. W. 330.

For the purpose of permitting this unfortunate litigation to end, we have concluded to give plaintiff the option to take judgment for $200 as compensatory damages for each letter published, or $600 in gross, or a new trial, such option to be exercised within thirty days from the date of the receipt by the Circuit Court of Fond du Lac County of the record from this court.

Ordered accordingly, with costs on this appeal to the defendant.

ANNOTATION.

May actual malice which will defeat conditional privilege in libel or slander coexist with belief in truth of imputation.W. S. v. S. S. Supr. Ct., 1921

The holding of the reported case (GERLACH v. GRUETT, ante, 1155), to the effect that within the law of libel one may believe charges made by him to be true, and yet be actuated by express malice sufficient to destroy a conditional privilege, is supported by what appears to be the only other authority directly in point on the proposition.

Thus, in Tanner v. Stevenson (1910) 138 Ky. 578, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 200, 128 S. W. 878, an action brought by an applicant for a state license to teach school, to recover against a county school superintendent for libel in charging her, in a letter to the state board of examiners, with lack of good moral character, it was held that, if actual malice which would defeat the qualified privilege of the superintendent prompted the publication of the charge, belief in its truth would not allow him to escape from the consequences of his act. The court said: "If the person making the publication is prompted by actual malice or ill will towards the persons concerning whom it is written or spoken, then the fact that it was believed to be true, or the fact that it was made in good faith, or the fact that it was made under circumstances that, except for this notice, would make it privileged, will not be allowed to save the person making the publication from the consequences of his act."

There are, however, two additional cases which seem to support the foregoing view, holding that where the imputation is made with a belief in its truth on a qualifiedly privileged occasion, it is necessary to prove actual malice in order to defeat a conditional privilege. In Joseph v. Baars (1910) 142 Wis. 390, 135 Am. St. Rep.

1076, 125 N. W. 913, the court said: "When the prima facie case of privilege has been thus made by proof that the communication was made in the course of public duty, from a sense of public duty, and with an honest belief in its truth, it becomes the duty of the plaintiff, as in other cases of communications conditionally privileged, to prove actual malice by some facts tending to prove a malicious or guilty motive."

In Hemmens v. Nelson (1893) 138 N. Y. 517, 20 L.R.A. 440, 34 N. E. 342, it appeared that the defendant was principal and executive head of a charitable institution, and had power to employ and dismiss all employees. The plaintiff was one of the employees of the institution. The defendant's wife received through the mail an obscene and indecent letter which she turned over to the defendant, who compared the handwriting thereon with specimens of the plaintiff's handwriting, and arrived at the conclusion that the plaintiff had written the same. Subsequently, at a meeting of the executive committee of the institution, the defendant openly charged the plaintiff with sending the letter, as a result of which she was discharged. The court said: "If the defendant believed that the plaintiff was the person who sent the letter, it was his duty to communicate the fact to the executive committee and the president, all of whom had a corresponding duty with respect to everything that concerned the welfare of the institution; and his statements, under such circumstances, were confidential and privileged, until the plaintiff removed the privilege by proof, on her part, of actual, or, as it is sometimes called, express malice, or malice in fact." L. F. C.

AMERICAN INSURANCE UNION, Appt.,
v.
J. H. MANES.

Arkansas Supreme Court—October 31, 1921.

(— Ark. —, 234 S. W. 496.)

Insurance — right to question of insurable interest.

1. A corporation which has taken over the contracts of an insurance company, and agreed to perform them, cannot raise the objection that a policyholder has no insurable interest in the life of the insured.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1163.]

—insurable interest — life of father-in-law.

2. One has no insurable interest in the life of his father-in-law, upon whom he is in no way dependent for support.

[See 14 R. C. L. 919.]

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Searcy County (Shinn, J.) in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a life insurance policy. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. Basil Baker for appellant.

Mr. W. F. Reeves for appellee.

McCulloch, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action instituted on a life insurance policy or certificate of membership issued by the Home Protective Association, a domestic corporation, to Jesse Welborn, the plaintiff, J. H. Manes being named as beneficiary. Welborn lived nearly four years after the policy was issued, and all of the premiums or assessments were paid up to his death. During his lifetime the defendant, American Insurance Union, a foreign corporation, entered into a contract with the Home Protective Association, whereby it took over all the memberships of the latter association and assumed its obligations to its members, and issued to Welborn a certificate in the form of a rider to the original benefit certificate, certifying that the obligations of the original insurer were assumed by defendant.

Defendant denies liability on the ground that plaintiff, the specified beneficiary in the certificate, had no insurable interest in the life of Welborn, and that the certificate constituted a wager contract, unenforceable on grounds of public policy. This is the sole defense offered in the case. According to the evidence adduced, plaintiff was the son-in-law of Welborn at the time the latter became a member of the Home Protective Association, and was not dependent in any wise on Welborn. Welborn was solicited to join the association, and declined, but stated that he was willing for any of his children to take a policy on his life. Thereupon the agent of the Home Protective Association procured an application from Welborn, and plaintiff was present and signed Welborn's name to the application. It was agreed in advance between Welborn and plaintiff that the latter should pay the assessments and all other expenses necessary to obtain and maintain the membership. This evidence establishes the fact that the contract was, under our decisions,

Insurance—
insurable interest—life of father-in-law.

a wager contract, and void in its inception. Langford v. National Life & Acci. Ins. Co. 116 Ark. 527, 173 S. W. 414, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 1081; Cotton v. Mutual Aid Union, 132 Ark. 458, 201 S. W. 124; Home Mut. Ben. Asso. v. Keller, 148 Ark. 361, 230 S. W. 10.

In Langford v. National Life & Acci. Ins. Co. supra, we held that "a person may take out insurance on his own life, and name anyone that he pleases as beneficiary," even though the beneficiary has no insurable interest at the time the policy is taken out; but that "an agreement between the assured and the beneficiary, having no insurable interest, . . . to the effect that the latter shall pay the premiums, and that the policy shall be taken out in his name," and "shall be assigned to the person having no insurable interest," will render the policy void as a wagering contract.

The above declaration of the law is applicable to the present policy in its inception.

However, it has been ruled by this court, in line with the weight of authority, that only the insurer can take advantage of the ineligibility of the beneficiary in such a certificate or policy of insurance. Johnson v. Knights of Honor, 53 Ark. 255, 8 L.R.A. 732, 13 S. W. 794; Longer v. Carter, 102 Ark. 74, 143 S. W. 575. Defendant is not the original insurer, but entered into a contract to perform the original contract of insurance entered into between Welborn and the Home Protective Association. This contract contains some of the elements of one for reinsurance, in which both the original beneficiary and the insurer are interested. The contract with defendant is, in other words, one to pay the amount of the policy according to its terms, and constitutes an absolute obligation on the part of defendant which precludes inquiry as to the validity of the original contract, which the original insurer alone could question. There is great diversity among the authorities on the various phases of liability or nonliability under a wager contract, and no case similar to the one at bar has been brought to our attention; but we think that the rule that only the insurer can take advantage of the fact that the policy is invalid applies with full force to the defendant in the present case, who, having obligated himself to perform the contract, is in no attitude to take advantage of a defense which the original insurer alone could have asserted.

For these reasons the judgment was correct upon the undisputed facts, and the same will be affirmed. It is so ordered.

Hart, J., concurring:

I do not think that this case is controlled by the rule announced in Home Mut. Ben. Asso. v. Keller, 148 Ark. 361, 230 S. W. 10. There the policy did not show the relationship between the parties. Here it does. The difference is vital.

In the application Jesse Welborn, the insured, designated the relationship between himself and J. H. Manes, the beneficiary, as father-in-law and son-in-law. The company conducted a co-operative mutual life insurance business. By his application Welborn made a proposition to become a member of the association upon the distinct understanding that J. H. Manes should receive the insurance in the event of his death while a member. The application is a part of the policy. The association received the proposition, and it was accepted by the directors of the association, and a certificate of membership was given to Welborn. Thereafter the association accepted the dues for a period of more than four years until the death of Welborn.

There was no misrepresentation and no mistake. This is no case of waiver by an unauthorized agent. It was the act of the association itself, and it ought to be estopped to say that the acceptance was upon a condition utterly at variance with the proposition for membership, and one which would render the certificate wholly inoperative as regards the express intent of the insured. The association had a right to make a contract with Welborn to become a member and to designate his son-in-law as the beneficiary, provided the latter had a pecuniary interest or expectation in his life. Home Mut. Ben. Asso. v. Keller, supra.

(— Ark. —, 234 S. W. 496.)

The act of the association, under the circumstances, must be held to have constituted an agreement between itself and Welborn that Manes had an insurable interest in his life, and, having received his dues under this presumption, it cannot now introduce proof to show that Manes had no insurable interest in his life. Smith v. People's Mut. Ben. Soc. 64 Hun, 534, 19 N. Y. Supp. 432.

Therefore, I concur in the judgment.

Petition for rehearing denied November 28, 1921.

ANNOTATION.

Right of reinsurer to question the insurable interest or eligibility of beneficiary.

A search upon this subject has revealed no other cases, besides the reported case (AMERICAN INS. UNION v. MANES, ante, 1161), which holds that a reinsurer has no right to question the insurable interest or the eligibility of the beneficiary in a life insurance policy or certificate of membership issued by a benefit society or association, but that the original insurer alone can take advantage of the lack of insurable interest or ineligibility of the beneficiary in such a certificate or policy of insurance. G. V. I.

STATE OF WASHINGTON, Respt.,

v.

FREDERICK S. WILES, Appt.

Washington Supreme Court (Dept. No. 1) — July 27, 1921.

(— Wash. —, 199 Pac. 749.)

License — to use highway — duty of mail contractor to secure.

One contracting to transport United States mail is not absolved from the duty of obtaining state licenses for motor trucks used in the business.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1169.]

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for King County (Frater, J.) convicting him of violating the Motor Vehicle License Law. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Elias A. Wright and Sam A. Wright, for appellant:

The state of Washington had no authority to exact the license tax from the defendant as a condition precedent to the operation of his motor vehicles in the carrying of the United States mails.

Williams v. Talladega, 226 U. S. 404, 57 L. ed. 275, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 116; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Texas, 105 U. S. 460, 26 L. ed. 1067; Johnson v.

Maryland, 254 U. S. 51, 65 L. ed. 126, 41 Sup. Ct. Rep. 16; Osborne v. Bank of United States, 9 Wheat. 867, 6 L. ed. 234.

Mr. Robert C. Saunders for the United States.

Messrs. Malcolm Douglas and Arthur Schramm, for respondent:

Even agents of the United States are amenable to the reasonable rules and regulations governing the use of the highways.

Com. v. Closson, 229 Mass. 329, L.R.A.1918C, 939, 118 N. E. 653; Ex parte Marshall, 75 Fla. 97, L.R.A. 1918C, 944, 77 So. 869.

The license fee sought to be collected is not a tax upon the business of carrying the mails, but upon the means chosen by defendant for executing his contract.

Ficklen v. Taxing Dist. 145 U. S. 1, 36 L. ed. 601, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 79, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 810; Lumberville Delaware Bridge Co. v. State Assessors, 55 N. J. L. 529, 25 L.R.A. 134, 26 Atl. 711; Commercial Electric Light & P. Co. v. Judson, 57 L.R.A. 79, note.

Bridges, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant was charged by information with unlawfully using and operating a motor truck on the public highways of the county of King, state of Washington, without first obtaining a license therefor, as required by the state laws. He was found guilty, and has appealed from a judgment imposing a fine.

The facts are simple and stipulated, and are as follows: Prior to his arrest appellant had entered into a written contract with the United States government, whereby, for certain considerations, he agreed to carry the United States mail in the city of Seattle, Washington, between the various depots, wharves, docks, postoffice, and substations therein. In carrying out his contract with the government, he used various motor trucks, including the one which he is accused of operating, without first having obtained a license. These trucks were used by the appellant only in the business of carrying the mail under his contract. They had painted on them the usual insignia of vehicles used for these purposes, including the words, "United States Mail." The terms of his contract required him to provide vehicles for the carriage of the mail, and to keep them properly equipped and in repair, and he was required also to furnish all necessary oil, gasoline, tires, upkeep, and drivers. The contract further provided that such trucks should be used only in the business of carrying United States mail. At the time of his arrest, the appellant was in the exercise of the duties imposed upon him under his contract.

The 1915 Session Laws (Laws 1915, p. 385), as amended by chapter 46, Session Laws of 1919 (Laws 1919, p. 90), provide, among other things, that it shall be unlawful to operate automobiles and motor trucks on the public highways of the state without first having obtained a license therefor. The minimum license fee required of a motor truck is $10 per annum, and the fee increases as the weight and capacity of the truck increase. The 1919 Act especially exempts "all motor vehicles owned by the United States government, and used exclusively in its service."

Appellant's argument is that the United States government has the constitutional right to carry its mails in any manner it may see fit, and without let or hindrance from any person or state; that in the use of his trucks he was in the performance of a governmental duty; that he was an instrumentality selected by the United States government for the purpose of carrying out and putting into effect its constitutional duty of carrying, delivering, and caring for the mail; that such a tax or license fee could not be lawfully imposed on the government itself, if it had owned the trucks and operated them in the performance of the work which appellant was doing, and that, since he is doing for the government what it might do for itself, to impose a tax on him would be in fact to impose it on the government, because any private person carrying the mail must require the government to pay him an additional amount equal to any such taxation as he might be required to pay. The principal cases cited by the appellant in support of his argument are the following: Osborn v. Bank of United States, 9 Wheat. 738, 6 L. ed. 204; M'Culloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 4 L. ed. 579; Williams v. Talladega, 226

U. S. 404, 57 L. ed. 275, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 116; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Texas, 105 U. S. 460, 26 L. ed. 1067; and Johnson v. Maryland, 254 U. S. 51, 65 L. ed. 126, 41 Sup. Ct. Rep. 16.

On the other hand, the respondent contends that the license fee is a tax imposed on the right to operate a motor truck on the public highways of the state, and is not a tax imposed on the right to carry the United States mail; that the state has sole control of its roads and highways, and that the agents of the United States are amenable to the reasonable rules and regulations governing the use of such highways; that the immunity of the Federal government from state taxation is not negotiable to the extent that it can transfer that immunity to every person who contracts with it to do any act for the furtherance of governmental business; that the mail contract between an individual and the Federal government does not render the former an essential governmental agent, and confer on him freedom from state control. In support of its argument respondent cites and relies upon the following, among other cases: Com. v. Closson, 229 Mass. 329, L.R.A.1918C, 939, 118 N. E. 653; Ex parte Marshall, 75 Fla. 97, L.R.A.1918C, 944, 77 So. 869; Searight v. Stokes, 8 How. 151, 11 L. ed. 537—to which may be added: Dickey v. Maysville, W. P. & L. Turnp. Road Co. 7 Dana, 113; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Richmond (C. C.) 178 Fed. 310, id., 224 U. S. 160, 56 L. ed. 710, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 449; Fidelity & D. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 240 U. S. 319, 60 L. ed. 664, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 298; Lumberville Delaware Bridge Co. v. State Assessors, 55 N. J. L. 529, 25 L.R.A. 134, 26 Atl. 711.

The single leading question involved in this case is an interesting one. Although the same question, based upon identical facts, must exist in nearly every state of the Union, we have not been cited to a single case which is directly in point, nor has our independent search resulted in finding one.

We are of the opinion that the judgment appealed from must stand. It is doubtless true that the states may not directly tax the property of the Federal government, or the instrumentalities which it uses to discharge any of its constitutional functions, nor may a state, by taxation or otherwise, materially interfere with the due, expeditious, and orderly procedure of that government while in the exercise of its constitutional powers. When it acts within its powers it is supreme, and all the states are subordinate to it. Being supreme, it must maintain its supremacy in order that our form of government shall continue to be stable and lasting. It is on this broad principle, as we understand it, that the Federal Supreme Court has always held that a state may not tax the Federal government for its instrumentalities, or do aught which would directly interfere with its lawful operations, because, had the various states such powers, they might slowly, but surely, undermine and weaken its foundations, independence, and acknowledged supremacy. It was on these grounds and for these reasons that the United States Supreme Court held, in the epoch-making cases of M'Culloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 4 L. ed. 579, and Osborn v. Bank of United States, supra, that a state did not have power to directly tax the right of the United States Bank to do business in such states.

But the law of those cases is not applicable to the facts of this case. In those cases the bank was chartered by the United States, and controlled by congressional acts as to the manner of doing business. It was the direct issue and immediate instrumentality of the government. Its private property within the state might be taxed like any other property, but for the state to require it to pay a tax for the right to do business was equal to requiring the government itself to pay a tax for the privilege of performing, within the borders of the state, functions authorized or imposed on it by the Federal Constitution. But the case at bar cannot come within the scope of spirit of those decisions. Here there is no effort to tax the business of carrying the mail. The appellant is not a direct instrumentality of the government; he is a personal contractor, doing certain work for the government, at a fixed compensation. In no sense is he the representative or agent of the government, or an integral part of it. As was said by the Federal Supreme Court in the case of Fidelity & D. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 240 U. S. 319, 60 L. ed. 664, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 298 (which case we will later notice in more detail): "But mere contracts between private corporations and the United States do not necessarily render the former essential governmental agencies and confer freedom from state control."

A person building a state road is nothing but a contractor; he is no part of the state or its agencies, and does not thereby inherit the various immunities of the state. There is nothing in appellant's contract which indicates that the government intended to pass its immunities on to him. Under these circumstances it should be presumed that it was the intention that he should be subject to the general laws of the state.

Nor are those cases out of the Supreme Court of the United States concerning taxation in interstate commerce in point. Such were the cases of Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Texas, 105 U. S. 460, 26 L. ed. 1067, and Williams v. Talladega, 226 U. S. 404, 57 L. ed. 275, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 116. The state of Texas passed a law imposing taxes on every chartered telegraph company doing business in the state, and each such company was thereby required to pay a tax of 1 per cent for each full-rate message sent, and one half cent for each message the toll for which was less than full rate. The telegraph company was incorporated under the laws of the state of New York. Many years ago the Congress of the United States passed an act authorizing telegraph companies to place their poles and other apparatus on all government property, reservations and post roads, in consideration of which government messages should have certain preferences in transmission. The Texas act was held unconstitutional, in that it undertook to impose a direct tax on messages sent and received by and on behalf of the government, and on interstate messages. The Williams Case, supra, was of like general character. We think it will at once be observed that these cases are not controlling of the case at bar. In discussing a somewhat similar question in the case of Johnson v. Maryland, supra, cited by the appellant, the court said: "The cases upon the regulation of interstate commerce cannot be relied upon as furnishing an answer. They deal with the conduct of private persons in matters in which the states, as well as the general government, have an interest, and which would be wholly under the control of the states, but for the supervening destination and the ultimate purpose of the acts. Here the question is whether the state can interrupt the acts of the general government itself."

That case is probably more nearly in point here than any of the cases cited by appellant, or which we have found. Johnson was an employee of the Postoffice Department of the United States, and, while driving a government motor truck in the transportation of mail over certain highways in the state of Maryland, was arrested, convicted, and fined for driving such truck without having a personal license, as required by the laws of that state. The court stated the question involved to be "whether the state has power to require such an employee to obtain a license, by submitting to an examination concerning his competence and paying

$3, before performing his official duty in obedience to superior command."

In determining the matter adversely to the state, the court said: "It seems to us that the immunity of the instruments of the United States from state control in the performance of their duties extends to a requirement that they desist from performance until they satisfy a state officer, upon examination, that they are competent for a necessary part of them, and pay a fee for permission to go on. Such a requirement does not merely touch the government servants remotely by a general rule of conduct; it lays hold of them in their specific attempt to obey orders, and requires qualifications in addition to those that the government has pronounced sufficient. It is the duty of the Department to employ persons competent for their work, and that duty it must be presumed has been performed."

There is a wide and fundamental distinction between that case and the one at bar, in that, in that case, the government owned the truck, and the person required to pay the fee and obtain the license was its direct employee, engaged in the performance of his duties, while here the person required to pay the license fee was a simple contractor, a resident of the state, the owner and operator of the truck in question, and engaged in a work which was to be performed entirely within the state. There the tax was, in effect, directly against the government, while here it is directly on the individual, and affects the government only indirectly and incidentally.

In the recent case of Fidelity & D. Co. v. Pennsylvania, supra, it was held by the Federal Supreme Court that a surety company does not, by becoming, conformably to an act of Congress, surety on bonds required by the United States, become a Federal instrumentality, so as to be exempt from a state tax on the premiums received. Mr. Justice McReynolds, speaking for the court in that case, said: "That the challenged tax 'is an exaction for the privilege of doing business' seems plain; . . . and undoubtedly a state may not directly and materially hinder exercise of constitutional powers of the United States by demanding, in opposition to the will of Congress, that a Federal instrumentality pay a tax for the privilege of performing its functions.

. . . But mere contracts between private corporations and the United States do not necessarily render the former essential governmental agencies, and confer freedom from state control.

Moreover, whatever may be their status, if the pertinent statute discloses the intention of Congress that such corporations, contracting under it with the Federal government, shall not be exempt from state regulation and taxation, they must submit thereto."

If the bonding company in that case was subject to the laws of that state, the appellant in this case ought to be subject to the laws of this state.

In the case of Com. v. Closson, 229 Mass. 329, L.R.A.1918C, 939, 118 N. E. 653, it was held that one in charge of a vehicle transporting United States mail is not exempt from the operation of state statutes and municipal ordinances regulating traffic on the highways, although by Federal statutes the highways are post roads. In that case Closson was arrested for violating a state statute concerning the conduct and operation of motor vehicles on the public highways. He defended on the ground that, being employed as a mail carrier, using a vehicle for the delivery of mail, he was immune from prosecution and punishment under the statute. The court said: "The designated streets or ways are not, however, instrumentalities created by the general government, where 'exemption from state control is essential to the independent sovereign authority of the United States within the sphere of their delegated powers.' . . . Nor do the facilities thereby afforded for transportation of the mails confer extraordinary rights upon the mail carriers to use the ways as they please, or necessarily, or impliedly, do away with the power of supervision and control inherent in the state."

The case of Ex parte Marshall, 75 Fla. 97, L.R.A.1918C, 944, 77 So. 869, is an instructive and interesting one. During the World War, a military encampment of United States soldiers was located near Jacksonville, Florida. The officer in charge of that camp made a contract with Marshall, authorizing him to transport by motor bus the soldiers from the camp to the city of Jacksonville, upon certain terms and conditions particularly set out. He was arrested for not complying with a certain state law imposing a license tax somewhat similar to that involved in this case. He defended on the ground that he was engaged in the business of the United States government, and was its constituted agent for the purpose of transporting soldiers. He cited practically the same cases cited by the appellant in this case. Concerning them the court said: "We are in accord with the holdings of all these cases, . . . but unfortunately for the petitioner, none of them fits the facts of the case in hand. In all of them a license tax was sought to be imposed by a state, county, or municipality, upon the right to do business either by a bank, a railroad company, or telegraph company that had been chartered, and had been granted its franchise and right to do business by the Congress of the United States, and in all of them it was held, in effect, that such a license tax was invalid because it was an unwarranted invasion of rights properly granted by the Federal government, and amounted virtually to an attempt to annul such Federal grant."

The judgment and sentence were affirmed.

But appellant further contends that to impose the license tax upon him would, in effect, be to impose it upon the Federal government in the transaction of its constitutional functions. This argument, however, proves entirely too much. The appellant admits, and under like circumstances all the courts have held, that the state has the right to levy a property tax on motor trucks owned by him and used in the transportation of the mail. In making his contract with the government he doubtless took into consideration this tax, and it would be in effect passed on to the government in identically the same way that he contends the license tax must be passed on to the government. We have in this state a statute which requires every person driving or operating a motor vehicle to obtain a driver's license before he will be permitted to operate such vehicle. If the state cannot compel appellant to pay the motor license tax, for the same reason it cannot compel him to license his drivers or himself as a driver. We also have a law in this state imposing a small tax on each gallon of gasoline sold. This tax is by the gasoline companies charged to the consumer, including the appellant, and he doubtless will, if he should renew his contract with the government, pass that tax also on to the government; and, if he be exempt from the motor tax, he is for the same reason exempt from the gasoline tax. Other like illustrations might be given.

While it is true, generally speaking, that a state may not, by its laws, hamper and interfere with the free and orderly performance of governmental functions, by taxation or otherwise, yet that interference must be substantial and direct. Every indirect and immaterial interference with the conduct of government business is not violative of the principles upon which the Federal government is founded and performs its duties. The rule of reason must control in all such questions; otherwise the states will be greatly hampered in the conduct of their affairs, without any corresponding benefit flowing to the national government.

We are confident that the appellant is not, because of the facts of this case, relieved from complying with the state statute imposing upon him the motor truck license fee.

License—to use highway—duty of mail contractor to secure.

The judgment is affirmed.

Parker, Ch. J., and Mackintosh, Fullerton, and Holcomb, JJ., concur.

ANNOTATION.

Applicability of state or municipal traffic or vehicle regulations to those engaged in handling United States mail.

As to immunity of public officer from criminal arrest, see annotation in 1 A.L.R. 1156.

Generally, as to criminal or penal responsibility of public officer or employee, for violating speed regulations, see annotation in 9 A.L.R. 367.

As to applicability of automobile regulations to public officials or employees, see annotation to Balthasar v. Pacific Electric R. Co. 19 A.L.R. —.

It will be observed that in the reported case (STATE v. WILES, ante, 1163) it was held that one contracting to transport United States mail was not absolved from the duty of obtaining state licenses for motor trucks used in the business, the court holding that such a person was not a direct instrumentality of the government, or a representative or integral part of it, but merely a personal contractor, doing certain work for it at a fixed compensation.

And it has been held that one in charge of a vehicle transporting United States mail is not exempt from the operation of state statutes and municipal ordinances requiring travelers to keep to the right-hand side of the way, and, in turning to the left on an intersecting street, to go beyond the center of the intersection, although by Federal statutes the highways are post roads. Com. v. Closson (1918) 229 Mass. 329, L.R.A. 1918C, 939, 118 N. E. 653. The court said: "The defendant does not contend that the rules and regulations of the respective commissioners of parks and of streets had not been duly promulgated, or were not in force at the time 18 A.L.R.—74.

stated in the complaints, or that he did not violate those rules which require the drivers of vehicles to keep to the right-hand side of the way, and when passing on his left to an intersecting street, he must, before turning, proceed to the right until beyond the center of the intersecting street. It is immaterial that he was not actuated by any criminal intent. In prosecutions for misdemeanors created by statute under the exercise of the police power, proof of a guilty mind or corrupt purpose is not essential to a conviction. Com. v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1909) 202 Mass. 394, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 350, 132 Am. St. Rep. 507, 88 N. E. 764, 16 Ann. Cas. 587. But by the plea to the jurisdiction, requests for rulings, and exceptions to a portion of the instructions, his defense rests upon the ground that, being employed as a mail carrier using a vehicle for the delivery of mail, he is immune from prosecution and punishment. The designated streets or ways are not, however, instrumentalities created by the general government, where 'exemption from state control is essential to the independent sovereign authority of the United States within the sphere of their delegated powers.' If they were, the defendant has committed no offense. Com. v. Clary (1811) 8 Mass. 72; Newcomb v. Rockport (1903) 183 Mass. 76, 66 N. E. 587. While, undoubtedly, they are post roads under Act of Congress March 1, 1884, chap. 9, enacting that 'all public roads and highways, while kept up and maintained as such, are hereby declared to be post routes' (23 Stat. at

L. 3, chap. 9, Comp. Stat. § 7457, 8 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 188), and whoever knowingly and wilfully obstructs or retards 'the passage of the mail, or any carriage, . . . driver, or carrier, . . . ' is upon conviction subject to fine or imprisonment, or both, by U. S. Rev. Stat. § 3995, Act of March 4, 1909, chap. 321, § 201, 35 Stat. at L. 1127, Comp. Stat. § 10,371, 7 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 777, yet the ways remain public ways, laid out and maintained by the commonwealth, which has the exclusive power not only of alteration and of discontinuance, but to make and enforce reasonable regulations for their use. Nor do the facilities thereby afforded for transportation of the mails confer extraordinary rights upon mail carriers to use the ways as they please, or necessarily or impliedly do away with the power of supervision and control inherent in the state. The use of the streets by travelers of every description is not prohibited. It is only the mode of operation by drivers of vehicles which is regulated, and, being reasonable, because well adapted for the security and protection of all travelers, the rules are constitutional, and their violation is punishable as a criminal offense."

And in Hall v. Com. (1921) — Va. —, 105 S. E. 551, it was held that the provisions of the state automobile law, fixing a speed limit, must be obeyed by an employee of the United States while engaged in transporting United States mail in a truck owned by the government, pursuant to the direction of the Postmaster General, where the schedule for carrying the mail did not require the employee to violate the provisions of the state statute. The court here said: "It does not follow from the facts shown in evidence concerning the scheduled time at which the accused was required to reach Winchester, and from the fact that he reached that point seventeen minutes late, on the trip on which he exceeded the speed limit of the state statute while passing through the town of Leesburg en route from Washington via Leesburg to Winchester, that the direction of the Postmaster General required the accused to violate the state statutory speed limits in order to reach Winchester on schedule time. The record does not show the scheduled time for leaving Washington, or for the arrival or the time of the actual arrival at Leesburg postoffice, or the distance from Washington to Leesburg postoffice, or from the latter postoffice to Winchester postoffice, along the post routes between those places. That is to say, the record in this case does not show that the speed-limit provisions of the state statute are at all in conflict with the aforesaid direction of the Postmaster General, or that they at all interfere with the performance by the accused of his duties as an employee of the Federal government. So far as the record before us discloses, the Federal statutes on the subject, and regulations thereunder, are in entire accord with the state statute aforesaid; no conflict appearing to exist between them. Such being the situation, we have no hesitancy in holding that the state statute in question is a valid exercise of the police power of the state, in so far as its speed-limit provisions are involved in this case, and should have been obeyed by the accused. The mere fact that the provisions of the state statute in question affect a Federal employee or instrumentality is immaterial; and certainly, where the statute does not attempt to control, and does not in its operation even incidentally interfere in any way with, the performance of duty of the Federal employee, it is valid." The court here distinguished the case from Johnson v. Maryland (U. S.) infra, on the ground that in that case there was an actual conflict between the state and Federal laws, but that in the case at bar there was no such conflict.

In Johnson v. Maryland (1920) 254 U. S. 51, 65 L. ed. 126, 41 Sup. Ct. Rep. 16, just referred to, it was held that one employed by the government to drive a government motor truck in the transportation of mail over a post road was immune from a state regulation requiring drivers to obtain a license by submitting to an examination concerning their competency and paying a certain fee. The court said: "Of course, an employee of the United States does not secure a general immunity from the state law while acting in the course of his employment. That was decided long ago by Washington, J., in United States v. Hart (1817) Pet. C. C. 390, Fed. Cas. No. 15,316, 5 Ops. Atty. Gen. 554. It very well may be that, when the United States has not spoken, the subjection to local law would extend to general rules that might affect incidentally the mode of carrying out the employment—as, for instance, a statute or ordinance regulating the mode of turning at the corners of streets. Com. v. Closson (1918) 229 Mass. 329, L.R.A.1918C, 939, 118 N. E. 653. This might stand on much the same footing as liability under the common law of a state to a person injured by the driver's negligence. But even the most unquestionable and most universally applicable of state laws, such as those concerning murder, will not be allowed to control the conduct of a marshal of the United States, acting under and in pursuance of the laws of the United States. Re Neagle (1890) 135 U. S. 1, 34 L. ed. 55, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 658. It seems to us that the immunity of the instruments of the United States from state control in the performance of their duties extends to a requirement that they desist from performance until they satisfy a state officer upon examination that they are competent for a necessary part of them and pay a fee for permission to go on. Such a requirement does not merely touch the government servants remotely by a general rule of conduct; it lays hold of them in their specific attempt to obey orders, and requires qualifications in addition to those that the government has pronounced sufficient. It is the duty of the Department to employ persons competent for their work, and that duty, it must be presumed, has been performed." This case was distinguished in the reported case (STATE v. WILES, ante, 1163), where the court stated that in the Johnson Case the government owned the truck, and the person required to pay the fee and obtain the license was its direct employee, engaged in the performance of its duties, while in the WILES CASE the person required to pay the license fee was a simple contractor, a resident of the state, the owner and operator of the truck in question, and engaged in work to be performed entirely within the state, and that the tax in the Johnson Case was, in effect, directly against the government, while in the WILES CASE it was directly on the individual and affected the government only indirectly.

Attention may also be called to United States v. Hart (Fed.) supra, where a constable, who was indicted for knowingly and wilfully retarding the passage of the mail, attempted to justify his conduct on the ground that the driver of the vehicle carrying the mail was violating an ordinance, subjecting every person to a fine who should drive at an immoderate rate in the city, or should drive a carriage on runners without bells on the horses. With respect to this defense, Washington, J., said: "If the ordinance of the city is in collision with the act of Congress, there can be no question but that the former must give way. The Constitution of the United States, and the laws made in pursuance thereof, are declared by the Constitution to be the supreme law of the land; and the judges, both of the Federal and state courts, are bound thereby, anything in the Constitution or laws of any state to the contrary notwithstanding. But there is in truth no collision between this ordinance and the act of Congress on which this indictment is founded. If the mail carrier should violate the ordinance, the act of Congress does not shelter him from the penalty imposed by the ordinance. But the ordinance does not authorize any officer to stop the mail, and consequently he cannot justify his having done it, under that ordinance."

J. T. W.

MINNIE E. CASE et al.

v.

SUPREME TRIBE OF BEN HUR, Appt.

Nebraska Supreme Court—May 16, 1921.

(— Neb. —, 184 N. W. 75.)

Insurance — fraternal — change of by-laws.

1. When an insured in a fraternal benefit association agrees to be bound by future changes of the by-laws, the association may make amendments increasing the rates and changing the plan of assessments for the general good of the order, so long as such changes do not work an injustice between the individual members, are not discriminatory, and are reasonable.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1180.]

—presumption of reasonableness of change.

2. In the absence of averment or proof to the contrary, it will be presumed that an increase of rates or change of plan of assessments to increase revenues was reasonable as to the amount of increase in the charges, when it appears that the amended regulation was duly enacted.

—prohibitive rates — reasonableness.

3. Though the increase of assessments adopted by a fraternal association should be so high as to make it unprofitable and prohibitive to older members, that fact, standing alone, would not make the rate unreasonable, if the assessment is no more than experience has shown is necessary to properly meet the cost of covering such individual with insurance at his attained age.

[See 19 R. C. L. 1211, 1212; note in 11 A.L.R. 654.]

—classification — reasonableness.

4. Where such an association, by amendment of its by-laws, divides its members into two classes, placing all members belonging to the association prior to a certain date in one class, and all who have joined or should join after that date in another class, and provides that each class shall raise its own funds and pay its own losses, and that the former class is to continue without the aid of growth and the addition of young blood, and makes it necessary, where a member of the former class should desire to change and become a member of the latter class, that he surrender what rights he had in the funds of the former class and surrender that security furnished by the mutual promises of members of that class, held, that the classification is discriminatory and unreasonable as against the members of the former class, and will not be upheld.

[See note in 11 A.L.R. 655.]

—changing contract — impairing vested rights.

5. Where a benefit certificate provided that, in case insured should reach seventy years of age and be disabled, he should receive disability benefits, and his policy then be considered paid up, an amendment to the by-laws, made prior to insured's reaching seventy years of age and becoming disabled, which required payment of assessments during the period of such disability, after the age of seventy, impairs no vested rights under the policy, and is not to be treated as a reduction in the amount of benefits provided by the policy.

[See 19 R. C. L. 1206, 1207.]

—signing statement — waiver of rights.

6. Where the insured, on the representation to him by the agent of the association that his policy was paid up, and that he would not be required to make any further payments, signed a statement presented to him by the agent, which contained in it a printed clause agreeing that insured would pay additional assessments during such period of disability, but where no consideration moved from the association to him for such agreement, and there were no elements of estoppel shown and none pleaded, held, insured had not waived his right to object to the discriminatory classification of members, and was not bound by such signed statement; it being further shown that the amount he had paid to the association in the past was sufficient to cover all payments due, or to become due, on his policy, in accordance with the association's rules as they existed prior to the establishment of rates upon the discriminatory basis complained of.

(— Neb. —, 184 N. W. 75.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Lancaster County (Morning, J.) in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to recover the balance alleged to be due on a benefit certificate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Garlow & Long for appellant.

Messrs. Burr & Brown, for appellees:

Both defendant and plaintiffs having moved for an instructed verdict, the case was never submitted to the jury, and the court did not need to, and presumably did not, consider any incompetent testimony.

Simons v. Fagan, 62 Neb. 287, 87 N. W. 21; Citizens' Ins. Co. v. Herpolsheimer, 77 Neb. 232, 109 N. W. 160; Palmer v. McFarlane, 78 Neb. 788, 111 N. W. 794.

Under a clause in a benefit certificate stipulating that the member will be bound by the laws then in force, or those which may thereafter be adopted, the member is not bound by subsequently passed laws which are unreasonable in their nature.

Lange v. Royal Highlanders, 75 Neb. 188, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 666, 121 Am. St. Rep. 786, 106 N. W. 224, 110 N. W. 1110; Wright v. Knights of Maccabees, 196 N. Y. 391, 81 L.R.A.(N.S.) 423, 134 Am. St. Rep. 888, 89 N. E. 1078; Wilcox v. Court of Honor, 134 Mo. App. 547, 114 S. W. 1155; Sisson v. Supreme Court of Honor, 104 Mo. App. 54, 78 S. W. 297; Zimmermann v. Supreme Tent, K. M. 122 Mo. App. 591, 99 S. W. 817; O'Neill v. Supreme Council, A. L. H. 70 N. J. L. 410, 57 Atl. 463, 1 Ann. Cas. 422; Gaut v. American Legion of Honor, 107 Tenn. 603, 55 L.R.A. 465, 64 S. W. 1070; Knights Templars' & M. Life Indemnity Co. v. Jarman, 44 C. C. A. 93, 104 Fed. 638; Modern Woodmen v. Wieland, 109 Ill. App. 340; Morton v. Supreme Council, R. L. 100 Mo. App. 76, 73 S. W. 259; Smith v. Supreme Lodge, K. P. 83 Mo. App. 512; Weber v. Supreme Tent, K. M. 172 N. Y. 490, 92 Am. St. Rep. 753, 65 N. E. 258; Olson v. Court of Honor, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 521, and note, 100 Minn. 117, 117 Am. St. Rep. 676, 110 N. W. 374, 10 Ann. Cas. 622; Monger v. New Era Asso. 156 Mich. 645, 24

L.R.A.(N.S.) 1027, 121 N. W. 823; Parish v. New York Produce Exch. 169 N. Y. 34, 56 L.R.A. 149, 61 N. E. 977; Weller v. Equitable Aid Union, 92 Hun, 277, 36 N. Y. Supp. 734; Beach v. Supreme Tent, K. M. 74 App. Div. 527, 77 N. Y. Supp. 770, affirmed in 177 N. Y. 100, 69 N. E. 281; Bottjer v. Supreme Council, A. L. H. 37 Misc. 406, 75 N. Y. Supp. 805; Wuerfler v. Grand Grove, W. O. D. 116 Wis. 19, 96 Am. St. Rep. 940, 92 N. W. 433; Supreme Conclave, I. O. H. v. Rehan, 119 Md. 92, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 308, 85 Atl. 1035, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 58; Taylor v. Modern Woodmen, 72 Kan. 443, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 283, 83 Pac. 1099; Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. v. Haddock, 72 Kan. 35, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1064, 82 Pac. 583; Ayers v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. 188 N. Y. 280, 80 N. E. 1020.

Flansburg, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action on a benefit certificate issued by the Supreme Tribe of Ben Hur, a foreign fraternal beneficiary association. The defendant contends that the policy had become forfeited by default of payment of the assessments. These assessments were levied by virtue of amendments to the by-laws made after the certificate sued on was issued, and plaintiffs claim the amended by-laws were unreasonable, impairing vested rights under the benefit certificate, and were therefore not binding on insured. At the close of the testimony the court directed a verdict for the plaintiffs. Defendant appeals.

The certificate sued on contained the usual provision that the insured would be bound by all the laws, rules, and regulations of the society thereafter enacted. It was in the amount of $500, and was issued to John Case in 1901, when he was fifty-four years of age. Plaintiffs were named as beneficiaries.

At the time this certificate was issued the by-laws of defendant association provided for the monthly payments of $1 for insurance, the amount of the benefit being rated according to age, so that while members entering between the ages of eighteen and twenty-five received benefit certificates in the amount of $1,500 for a monthly payment of $1, members entering at fifty years of age received certificates of $500 only. All members were also required to pay a per capita tax of 75 cents semiannually, together with lodge dues, or what were called "court dues," levied by the subordinate court.

The benefit certificate in question provided that, in the event of the insured becoming physically disabled from old age after reaching seventy years and making proof of such fact, he should receive one tenth of the face of the policy that year and a like sum each year thereafter until the whole benefit was paid or until the member should die, and it also, however, further provided "that such member shall continue to pay his or her court dues and per capita tax" though the monthly payments for insurance were not required from that time forward.

In May, 1908, the by-laws of this defendant association were amended in the manner of which plaintiffs complain, whereby all holders of benefit certificates issued prior to July 1, 1908, were put in what is called class A, and all holders of certificates issued after that time were put in class B. The two classes were kept distinct. Each, it was provided, should raise its own funds and pay its own losses. In case the monthly payments of class A members, as previously fixed, should be insufficient, additional payments would be required to be paid from time to time. The rates required to be paid by the class B members were determined by valuation upon the basis of tables of mortality, and the rate was to be fixed according to the age attained by the member at his entrance.

It was further provided that any class A member could, at any time up to July 1, 1910, by surrendering his certificate and paying the rates fixed by the age of such member at such time, according to the schedule of rates adopted for class B members, become a member of class B without being required to pass medical examination, such examination, however, to be required in case he desired a disability clause in his certificate such as appears in the certificate here involved, and in that case it was necessary, before a transfer would be allowed, that he be found to be in good health, and not physically disabled at the time of the transfer. It was further provided by these amended rules that the disability benefit for members in either class A or class B would be allowed only upon the condition that, after such disabilities were proved and insured became entitled to the disability benefit, he would still continue not only to pay the per capita tax and court dues as theretofore provided, but would, in addition, continue to pay all monthly payments and assessments required. In order to change from class A to class B, in other words, it was necessary for the class A member to surrender his certificate and take a new one at a rate based upon his age at the time of the transfer, as if he were an entirely new applicant for insurance in the association, and, except in the instances as stated, he would not be required to pass a medical examination.

The insured, after these amendments were adopted, remained in class A and made all payments called for up to September 1, 1916. On July 12, 1916, he became seventy years of age, and on September 12, 1916, he applied for the old age disability benefit. His application was approved, and he was paid the first instalment of $50. In this application, signed by insured, which was on a printed form furnished by the company, there was a printed statement that insured agreed to continue to pay, in addition to the court dues and the per capita tax, the monthly insurance payments and assessments during the continuation of such policy and during the period when he was entitled to the disability benefits.

It is claimed by plaintiffs that insured did not know of this statement in the application. The officer of the defendant association, whose duty it was to help make out and receive such applications, testified, and her testimony stands on that issue, that she read the application to him and also that she told him it was her understanding that no further payments were required from him thereafter except the per capita tax and dues, and that his policy, so far as insurance payments were concerned, was fully paid up.

From the time that the association allowed insured the disability benefit in September, 1916, and paid him the $50 instalment, he made no further insurance payments, as provided by the amended by-laws, or in accordance with the statement made in the application just above referred to. The per capita tax and court dues were tendered by insured, but the defendant refused to accept these, and demanded the regular monthly payments and assessments as fixed at that time, and so the matter stood from September, 1916, until the insured died in February, 1917; the association claiming that the insured's policy had lapsed by reason of his failure to pay the regular monthly payments and assessments for insurance from and after the time of the granting of the disability benefits to him.

The questions presented are: (1) Whether the classification under the amended by-laws was unreasonable and discriminatory so as to make invalid the increased assessments levied upon the insured in this case; (2) whether the provision that insured should continue to pay insurance rates, when, by the terms of his certificate, it was to be paid up in case of disability at seventy, in effect reduced the benefits and thereby destroyed vested rights under the contract; and (3) whether insured had waived his rights to refuse to pay insurance rates after reaching seventy, by signing the agreement to pay such additional assessments when he signed his application for the disability benefit.

It is the rule in this state that, when an insured agrees to be bound by future changes of the by-laws, a fraternal association may make amendments increasing the rate and changing the plan of assessments for the general good of the order, so long as such changes do not work an injustice between the individual members, are not discriminatory, and are reasonable. Insured, in the case before us, remained in the class of old members who had entered the association prior to 1908. The exact amount of increase in assessments levied against him the record does not disclose. There is no averment or proof that the assessments made were unreasonable in amount, or greater than sufficient to the proper operation of this division of the association as a separate entity, raising its own funds and paying its own losses. On the other hand, it does not appear that the rates fixed for the members of the new class were more than were necessary to the operation of that class, or larger than required to properly raise funds to prepare against and pay death claims as they should accrue. The rates in this class were based upon mortality tables and in accordance with the principle that each member should pay in proportion to the hazard of his own individual risk.

The next question is, therefore, whether the creation of the two divisions of members, each operating independently of the other, did in itself work an unjust discrimination as against the plaintiff. There is no vested right to a continuance of a plan of insurance which expe-

Insurance—
fraternal—change of by-laws.

rience might demonstrate would result disastrously to the society or its members. Wright v. Minnesota Mut. L. Ins. Co. 193 U. S. 657, 48 L. ed. 832, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 549; Polk v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 207 U. S. 310, 52 L. ed. 222, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 65. It is also true that, in the absence of averment or proof to —presumption of reasonableness

of change.

the contrary, it will be presumed that on increase of rates or change of plan of assessment to increase revenues was reasonable as to the amount of the increase in the charges, if the amended regulation was duly enacted by the association. Supreme Council, C. K. A. v. Fenwick, 169 Ky. 269, 183 S. W. 906; Demings v. Supreme Lodge, K. P. 131 N. Y. 522, 30 N. E. 572; Supreme Lodge, K. H. v. Bieler, 58 Ind. App. 550, 105 N. E. 244. It is unnecessary, therefore, to discuss the amount of assessments in this case, since there is no proof of the financial condition of the company and no evidence tending to show that the assessments were more than were reasonably necessary to carry out the objects of the order.

Considering the class B members as a separate division, the plan devised of requiring each member to pay a rate in conformity to the costs of insurance based on age is a reasonable regulation as among the members in that class. And it would further, as settled by the laws of this state, have been a reasonable regulation to have required all the members of this association at the time when the amended by-laws were enacted to have commenced anew and to have paid assessments based upon mortality tables, the amount of such rate to be determined by the age attained by the respective members at the date of such change in the rule of assessment. Funk v. Stevens, 102 Neb. 681, 11 A.L.R. 639, 169 N. W. 6; Thomas v. Knights of Maccabees, 85 Wash. 665, L.R.A.1916A, 750, 149 Pac. 7, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 804; Hollingsworth v. Supreme Council, R. A. 175 N. C. 615, 96 S. E. 81, Ann. Cas.

1918E, 401; Supreme Lodge, K. P. v. Mims, 241 U. S. 574, 60 L. ed. 1179, L.R.A.1916F, 919, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 702; Reynolds v. Supreme Council, R. A. 192 Mass. 150, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1154, 78 N. E. 129, 7 Ann. Cas. 776. Though the increase of the assessment provided by a fraternal association should be so high as to make it unprofitable and prohibitive to older members, that fact, standing alone, would not make the rate unreasonable, if the assessment is no more than experience has shown is necessary properly to meet the cost of covering such individual with insurance at his attained age. It may be here, and in fact in most, if not all, such fraternal companies, insurance has been furnished in the past at rates far below cost. The member has lived and had the value of his assessments in the protection given him, and, when it is found that each must pay in exact accord with the risk the company has assumed in carrying him, he cannot complain. As Judge Holmes said in Supreme Lodge, K. P. v. Mims, 241 U. S. 574, 60 L. ed. 1179, L.R.A.1916F, 919, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 702: "It is proper to remember that for many years the plaintiff has been insured, and although by what he is not likely to regard as bad fortune his beneficiary has not profited by it, she would have if he had died. As he happily has lived, he has to bear the burdens incident to the nature of the enterprise into which he went open-eyed."

—prohibitive rates—reasonableness.

But when such increase in assessments is made it must progress upon a uniform plan. It must be remembered that the promises of this association are the mutual promises of all the members in it, individually and collectively, to one another. Each member also has the right to see that all new members shall equally assume such mutual obligations. The basis for rates must be just, and not discriminative. In this case all members of the order, prior to 1908, are severed from the association and become a distinct entity apart from it. It is manifest that to thus cut off the old members, undesirable risks, into a company by themselves and make them pay their own losses and raise their own funds without the aid of growth and the addition of young blood, since no new members can, under the amended by-laws, be placed in this division, would result in a separate division of membership; in fact, a distinct company in itself, which would have a constantly dwindling membership and a rapidly increasing assessment until the lone survivor would have to pay his own death claim. Such classification and division of members, destroying the mutuality of the promises of the members of the association as a whole, and requiring older members to be thrown out upon their resources and alone compelled to proceed without the accession of new members, which destroyed the very working power of the plan under which they were operating, has been held an effectual repudiation of the contract obligation owing them by the society, and has quite universally been held an unreasonable and unjust regulation as to them, and therefore void. Wilson v. Supreme Conclave, I. O. H. 174 N. C. 628, 94 S. E. 443; Williams v. Supreme Conclave, I. O. H. 172 N. C. 787, 90 S. E. 888; Strauss v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 126 N. C. 971, 54 L.R.A. 605, 83 Am. St. Rep. 699, 36 S. E. 352; Tusant v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. 183 Iowa, 489, L.R.A.1918F, 452, 163 N. W. 690; Parks v. Supreme Circle, B. A. 83 N. J. Eq. 131, 89 Atl. 1042; Benjamin v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 146 Cal. 34, 79 Pac. 517; Ebert v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 81 Minn. 116, 83 N. W. 506, 834, 84 N. W. 457.

In the cases just cited the facts as to classification and assessment were in all instances very similar, and in some identical, with the method followed in the case at bar. In Tusant v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. 183 Iowa, 489, L.R.A.1918F, 452, 163 N. W. 690, members joining before a certain date were put in class A, and those joining after, in class B, each operating separately as if a distinct association, raising its own funds and paying its own losses. Class A was assessed on the old plan, by increasing amount of assessment, and was allowed no new members, and class B was assessed upon an insurance risk basis as determined by the age of the member. The court in that case said: "It is sufficient to say that it is of the very essence of mutual insurance and of the efficiency thereof that it shall grow, and that it shall continue to receive new and younger blood. . . . When these men joined the order, they joined themselves to a membership many of whom had already reached their expectancy. These plaintiffs began at once to pay death losses on such. When they paid such losses they had nothing to expect in return from those whose membership had ceased by death. Their only way of compensation was from those who should come after. They relied, and had a right to rely, for the security of their insurance, upon the new blood which was to come."

By this reasoning it is shown how the shutting off of new members into class A, operating under the old plan, in effect actually destroyed its working ability. Obviously, then, if this class were to be continued under the old plan, the shutting off of new members was in fact an actual destruction of their plan of operation. Defendant's answer to this is, however, that insured had the option of joining class B with the new members and taking insurance at his then-attained age. But, in order to do that, it was necessary that he part from the class in which he then was and surrender up all rights that he had therein. He was entitled to share in the funds of this class, and was entitled to have that fund, as well as the mutual promises of all the other members of that class, as his security, and these we do not believe he could be required to release without his consent. These, by going into class B, he would be required to lose. In class B he would begin again upon his then-attained age, losing the right to benefit or credit by reason of funds already accumulated in class A, and losing the added security that would be given him were he still allowed protection of such fund and mutual promises. In 1908, when the amendment divided the membership and allowed a transfer from class A to class B, no provision was made for any transfer of the funds. This, at that time, could only have been effected by a transfer of the entire class, and, of course, power of insured was limited to transferring his own membership only. In 1916, it is true, the by-laws were amended providing for the transfer of a pro rata portion of the funds of class A to the funds of class B, following the transfer of a member, but this amendment was enacted only a month before the insured reached the age of seventy, and so short a time before his proof of disability that he, no doubt, could not have passed the necessary physical examination were he to keep alive the old age disability clause of his contract, and, furthermore, a transfer of the pro rata portion of the fund was not all that plaintiff was entitled to; he was entitled to have that fund in its entirety continue for his security. As we view it, he was entitled to belong to the association as he had joined it and what it had grown to be, protected by the mutual promises of all, and not required to release any part of the funds accumulated under the previous plan of assessment.

It is unnecessary to discuss at length the cases above cited holding the classification discriminative. In all those cases the classification and method followed were the same as in the case at bar, with this exception, that in some of those cases no right of transfer was allowed by the older members to the new class, and in the others—the cases of Wilson, Williams, Tusant, and Parks—such transfer was allowed; but in some of those cases, at least, the rule was stated that in the allowance of such transfer the old members were discriminated against, since they were required to rerate on their then-attained ages, and hence surrender rights that they had become entitled to by their long-time membership and contributions to the society. As an abstract principle of law, under our holding in Funk v. Stevens, 102 Neb. 681, 11 A.L.R. 639, 169 N. W. 6, and other cases cited, this last statement of principle is incorrect. But the distinction must be borne in mind that, when all members of the association are required to rerate, instead of causing a division of membership into classes, the beneficial interest of each individual member in the funds and assets of the society remains unaffected. The accumulated funds still remain as his security, and the mutual promises of all its members still afford him protection; while in the transfer of an old member from class A to class B he surrenders all interest and rights to security in the funds and promises of all class A members, and in fact joins a new company as a new member.

It seems to us that in the latter case cited it was those rights, required to be surrendered up, which the courts had principally in mind when they said that to require the old members to enter the class of new members destroyed what rights those members had theretofore attained. This must have been so in the North Carolina cases. In that jurisdiction it has been held in Hollingsworth v. Supreme Council, R. A. 175 N. C. 615, 96 S. E. 81, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 401, following the same principle as enunciated in the holding of our court in Funk v. Stevens, supra, that an amendment of the by-laws requiring all members to rerate according to their attained age on the basis of risk as based on mortality tables was a reasonable and valid regulation, and the court in that case, referring to the North Carolina cases, above cited, which hold the classification in question discriminatory, said: "There is another ground of distinction between the Strauss, Williams, and Wilson Cases, and the other cases cited in them, on the one hand, and our case on the other. In the former, there was not only a raising to a higher figure of the rates, but there also were classification and discrimination. That is, the old members were put in one class and the new members in another, and the losses (death benefits) in the old class were paid from the funds collected from that class, while the losses in the new class were paid from the funds collected from that class; but in this case it appears that all moneys collected from assessments are mingled or blended in one fund, and losses paid solely out of it. It is, therefore, a single or common fund for the payment of death benefits. In the one case there are classification and discrimination, while in the other, there is neither."

(— Neb. —, 184 N. W. 75.)

It therefore appears to us that the increased and added assessments upon the certificate of insured in this case, being based upon an unjust discrimination, were illegal and unenforceable. Insured, however, paid the increased assessments until in September, 1916, when, being seventy years of age and disabled on that account, he received his first instalment of disability benefit, and he refused from that time on up to the time of his death, a few months later, to pay the insurance assessments, contending that his policy was fully paid up, and, according to its terms and the rate of assessment fixed prior to the amendment complained of, such was the fact.

Plaintiffs contend further that, since the benefit certificate itself did not provide for payment of insurance assessments after disability was proved, an amendment of the by-laws requiring payment of the assessments during such period was in effect a reduction of the benefits and impaired vested rights of insured under the policy.

—classification—
reasonableness.

—changing contract—
impairing vested rights.

We think this position is untenable. The argument put forth by plaintiff that an increase of rates reduces benefits has been adopted in some states, but not in ours. It is true that an increase in rates diminishes the marginal return on the policy in the instances here presented, and in fact in every insurance contract. Our court, however, in accord with the generally accepted rule upon that subject, holds that reasonable increases in assessments do not impair vested rights in the nature of a direct reduction of the benefit to be derived from the policy. Had the insured reached the age of seventy and his policy been matured so that his rights thereunder had become vested before the by-laws were amended, a different question would have been presented; but here, in advance of any rights becoming vested, it was determined for what period of time assessments should be made. This alone we do not believe would invalidate the assessments, which, it was provided, should become due after the disability rights under the contract accrued.

We come, then, to the question of whether the insured had waived his right to attack the unwarranted increase in the amount of assessments, or the levy of the additional illegal assessments, here complained of. The payment of the increased assessments up to the time of his applying for disability benefit in September, 1916, would not prevent him from claiming subsequent assessments unlawful; there being no element of estoppel shown and none pleaded or urged in this action upon that ground. The record is silent upon facts pertaining to that question. It is true the printed application which was signed by insured recited an agreement to pay these illegal assessments from that time forward, but the officer of the company whose duty it was to collect assessments explained to him when he signed the application that the policy was then paid up and no further assessments could be required of him. When the next following in-insurance payment became due, insured refused to pay it. He did not become in default as to payment of the per capita tax and court dues called for in his certificate.

His action in signing the statement in the face of the explanation of the company's agent, and his attitude from that time on, could not be construed as a waiver of his right to object to these assessments, since it was apparent to all parties that ~~—signing statement—waiver of rights.~~ no waiver was intended. No estoppel could be based upon this statement signed by him; the company did not change its position toward him; he had made every payment called for or due at the time this first instalment was delivered to him; neither party disputed his right to collect this $50 payment; such payment could not be made to depend upon a promise by him that he would meet future insurance assessments as they became due; the association, in other words, paid him only what the policy in terms and what the law then bound it to do. The statement could not be considered a contract or agreement to pay a further assessment, since there was no consideration moving to insured from the company to support it. Though it be a fact that insured signed this statement that he would pay a future unenforceable assessment, that certainly would not bind him, unless the company had been misled or changed its position in some way, or unless the insured received some consideration for the promise. Neither of such facts appears in this case.

We therefore are of opinion that plaintiffs in this case are entitled to recover upon the policy, and that the judgment of the lower court should be affirmed.

Petition for rehearing denied.

ANNOTATION.

Right of mutual benefit association to raise rates.

(Supplementing annotation in 11 A.L.R. 644.)

It is stated in the annotation to Funk v. Stevens, 11 A.L.R. 639, that the question whether or not a mutual benefit society might be allowed to raise its rates had proved a most difficult question for the courts to answer. On the one hand, rates which would be adequate to pay for the insurance of the older members at their attained age would be nearly prohibitive and cause them to lose the benefit of the assessments paid during all the years that they had been members of the society. On the other hand, unless there could be an increase of rates, the societies would almost inevitably become insolvent. Under these circumstances, the courts have struggled to permit the societies to take such action as was necessary to preserve their solvency, and at the same time have tried to prevent a destruction of the contracts of the members. It may be suggested that one element of the problem has not received the attention which it deserves. While it is a hardship to deprive a member of his contract at an advanced age by the establishment of prohibitive rates, it must be kept in mind that he has had the protection during all the years that his certificate has been in force, and that the protection during that time was all that he was paying for, as in the case of fire, liability, or other kinds of insurance. The only hardship comes in being unable to continue his protection on the same favorable basis which he has enjoyed in the past. As seen in the former annotation, there are many questions yet unsettled, but the general tendency is to permit reasonable changes in rates, especially if the member, in his contract, agreed to be bound by the subsequently enacted by-laws, which provision appears very generally in the mutual benefit contracts. The cases which have been decided since the former annotation have added little to the general law upon the question. The reported case (CASE v. SUPREME TRIBE, B. H. ante, 1172) recognizes the rule that assessments may be increased when necessary if the member has agreed to be bound by future changes in by-laws, but holds in accordance with the prevailing rule, that a classification is not proper which will throw the older members into a class by themselves, and compel them to carry their own insurance or surrender all rights under the former insurance, and enter anew at the rate for their attained age.

In Fowler v. Sovereign Camp, W. W. (1921) — Neb. —, 183 N. W. 550, it was conceded on the authority of Funk v. Stevens, supra, that if the members have agreed to be bound by a change of by-laws, the rates may be raised as may be reasonably necessary, and that if the changes made are unreasonable or confiscatory, and operate unjustly or wrongfully to deprive the member of the benefits of the insurance contract, or place undue and unreasonable burdens on one class of members, from which others are excepted, such changes are void. The court said that the questions involved were largely ones of fact in the case before it. It was contended that the adoption of a rate adequate to carry the cost of insurance based on the attained age at the time the rates went into effect was discriminatory and unfair, although the accumulated emergency fund was to be applied to the relief of the older members. Also that the loading for expenses on a percentage basis rather than a per capita basis was unfair. The court examined both claims and held that unfairness was not made to appear, but suggested that if the rate proved to be too high, an assessment might be omitted from time to time.

Sawyer v. Sovereign Camp, W. W. (1920) 105 Neb. 395, 181 N. W. 191, involved the effect of a change of by-law so as to require payments of an increased assessment in case of adoption of a more hazardous employment.

Insured had agreed to comply with subsequently enacted by-laws, but it was contended that forfeiture of the insurance was not within the purview of a future by-law. The court says that it may be conceded that the universal principle of the courts is that no unreasonable or confiscatory by-law enacted by a fraternal beneficiary association is binding on a member. But it says the test of validity is reasonableness, when the purposes, powers, and duties of the society are considered in connection with the by-law challenged as interfering with vested rights. And the court held that the by-law before it was not unreasonable and might be enforced.

Where the contract does not fix any rate of assessment, but makes the continuance of the contract conditional upon payment of all assessments and dues that may be levied during the time the holder of the certificate shall remain a member of the order, such assessments may be levied as are necessary to pay matured claims in full and provide the necessary funds, even though it requires an increase of the assessments. The court says, Especially is this true if the society offers to permit the member to continue at the lower rate upon his consenting to a reduction of benefits. Sealy v. Sovereign Camp, W. W. (1921) — Ga. App. —, 107 S. E. 417.

In Independent Order of Puritans v. Parker (1921) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 228 S. W. 363, the society provided that the benefit should be the amount which the rate the insured was paying at time of death would purchase. The court applied the Texas statute, permitting the raising of rates, and held the provision limiting the recovery to the amount paid for by the assessments paid valid. But the provision was held to be inapplicable to the insured in the case, because proper notice of the necessity of paying a higher rate to keep the full amount of the policy in force was not given to assured. H. P. F.

FRANK H. SCHURMANN, Appt.,

v.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Ninth Circuit—May 3, 1920.

(264 Fed. 917.)

Aliens — cancelation for fraud — allegiance to foreign government.

1. The certificate of naturalization of a former German subject may be canceled for fraud if, during a war with that country, he shows by word and action that his sympathies are entirely on the side of that government, and attempts to further its cause, as against that of this country, so clearly as to indicate that he swore falsely when he obtained his certificate.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1185.]

—cancelation of naturalization certificate — jurisdiction.

2. The provisions of the Act of Congress of 1906, relating to cancelation of certificates of naturalization, apply to all such certificates which may have been issued by any court exercising jurisdiction in naturalization proceedings.

APPEAL by defendant from a decree of the District Court of the United States for the territory of Hawaii (Vaughan, J.) canceling his certificate of naturalization in a suit for its cancelation for alleged fraud of defendant. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Argued before Gilbert and Hunt, Circuit Judges, and Wolverton, District Judge.

Messrs. C. H. McBride and S. Joseph Theisen, for appellant:

Proceedings for naturalization are conducted in courts of record, and the decree of naturalization is, in effect, a judgment of like dignity and bearing, like finality and conclusiveness, as any other judgment of a court of record having jurisdiction.

Spratt v. Spratt, 4 Pet. 393, 7 L. ed. 897; Stark v. Chesapeake Ins. Co. 7 Cranch, 420, 3 L. ed. 391; United States v. Aakervik, 180 Fed. 137; Ex parte Cregg, 2 Curt. C. C. 98, Fed. Cas. No. 3,380; Re McCoppin, 5 Sawy. 630, Fed. Cas. No. 8,713; Dolan v. United States, 69 C. C. A. 274, 133 Fed. 440.

A judgment will not be set aside for perjury or misrepresentation in its procurement.

United States v. Throckmorton, 98 U. S. 61, 25 L. ed. 93; United States v. Gleeson, 33 C. C. A. 272, 62 U. S. App. 311, 90 Fed. 778; Tinn v. United States Dist. Atty. 148 Cal. 773, 113 Am. St. Rep. 354, 84 Pac. 152; Hanley v. Hanley, 114 Cal. 690, 46 Pac. 736.

There is no fraud charged in the bill.

United States v. Norsch, 42 Fed. 417; United States v. Rockteschell, 125 C. C. A. 532, 208 Fed. 530; 20 Cyc. 96; 9 Enc. Pl. Pr. 686.

Mr. T. H. Theisen also for appellant.
Mrs. Annette Abbott Adams and Mr. E. M. Leonard for the United States.

Hunt, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

Schurmann appeals from a decree canceling a certificate of naturalization issued to him by the superior court of Los Angeles county, California, on December 17, 1904. The complaint alleges that the certificate of citizenship was procured by fraud, in that, at the time Schurmann, a native of Germany, made the oath of allegiance, he falsely and fraudulently swore that he absolutely renounced and abjured all allegiance and fidelity to every foreign prince, potentate, state, or sovereignty whatever, and particularly to the Imperial German government and William II, German Emperor, whereas Schurmann did not, at the time and place stated, absolutely and entirely abjure and renounce all allegiance and fidelity to every foreign state or sovereignty whatever, particularly to the Imperial German government and to William II., German Emperor, but did then and there fraudulently reserve and keep, in whole or in part, his allegiance and fidelity to the Imperial German government and to William II., German Emperor.

(264 Fed. 917.)

The suit is brought under the Act of Congress of June 29, 1906, chap. 3592, § 15, 34 Stat. at L. 596, 601, Comp. Stat. § 4374, 6 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 987, by which it is made the duty of the United States district attorneys, "upon affidavit showing good cause therefor, to institute proceedings in any court having jurisdiction to naturalize aliens in the judicial district in which the naturalized citizen may reside at the time of bringing the suit, for the purpose of setting aside and canceling the certificate of citizenship on the ground of fraud or on the ground that such certificate of citizenship was illegally procured." The provisions of the section apply, not only to certificates of citizenship issued under the provisions of the act referred to, but to all certificates of citizenship which may have been issued heretofore by any court exercising jurisdiction in naturalization proceedings under prior laws. After demurrer had been overruled, Schurmann answered, denying all the material allegations as to fraud and alleging loyalty. Testimony was introduced on behalf of the government and Schurmann, and the court directed cancellation of the certificate of citizenship. Schurmann appealed, and relies upon assignments presenting the question of the sufficiency of the evidence and the applicability of the statute to the facts proven.

Aliens—cancellation of naturalization certificate—jurisdiction.

In behalf of the United States there was abundant evidence that, before and after the declaration of war between the United States and Germany, Schurmann frequently praised the attitude of the Germans, defended the sinking of the Lusitania, said that he wanted to get over to Germany to be a surgeon in the German hospitals, anything Germany did was justified by her right to be supreme, said that America was wrong in entering the war, and that it was impossible to defeat Germany, advised against "waste" of money in buying Liberty bonds, said he wanted to get into Mexico, and by many other remarks indicated beyond any possible doubt that his feelings were entirely on the side of Germany as against the United States, as well as the other countries at war with Germany. Included in the record was a book of 142 pages, written by Schurmann and published by him in August, 1916. The title is

"The War as Seen Through German Eyes." After reading the book, we may well approve of that portion of the opinion of the judge of the district court, who said: "The respondent admits it was propaganda, and that it was intended to create sentiment to prevent the United States from going to war with Germany. It is a bitter denunciation of all men and nations standing in the way of German success, and a laudation of all things German. It is full of falsehoods in regard to the origin, cause, and conduct of the war, and of false accusations against the allied nations and against the government and people of the United States and the President of the United States. . . .

—cancellation for fraud—allegiance to foreign government.

In it respondent complains against the United States and the President, because of the sale of arms and munitions by citizens of the United States to Great Britain and her Allies, and complains against the President for 'killing' the resolutions offered in Congress to warn Americans to keep off the ships of the Allies, and he justifies and applauds the murdering of 114 Americans on board the Lusitania, when she was sunk in violation of law and in violation of the rights of every person on board. He accuses the owners of the Lusitania of being 'guilty of this terrible calamity,' because, as he charges, the vessel was laden with arms and ammunition, and they 'knew the submarines would lay for her;' and he denounces the United States government as guilty because it did not prevent anyone from sailing on the doomed ship, and he denounces 'the reckless passengers themselves, who disregarded the often-repeated and earnest warnings, not only published by the German authorities, but also sent by the German authorities to each of these passengers individually.' But for the murderers who committed the crime he sings a hymn of praise, and says he would do as they did, himself, if he were in command of a submarine and had the opportunity, and that he knows 'you' would do so, also."

After war between the United States and Germany was declared, Schurmann desired to continue to sell his book, but, fearful lest it might be unlawful so to do, asked the United States district attorney in Honolulu for an opinion whether the book could be lawfully sold. He was advised that it would be unlawful to circulate the book, but Schurmann was not satisfied, and wished the matter referred to the Attorney General of the United States. The question was so referred, and the Attorney General concurred in the judgment of the United States attorney.

We take the question at issue to be whether, in 1904, Schurmann obtained his certificate of citizenship illegally, or by false and fraudulent representations, as alleged; and, in arriving at decision of the question as stated, we are mindful that the courts should be very careful to avoid depriving one of citizenship upon evidence which, although proving lack of allegiance at the time of the investigation, may not, by relation, establish that there was lack of true faith and allegiance at the time of the issuance of the certificate to the applicant. It may not be impossible for a man in perfect good faith to make renunciation of an allegiance to a foreign state, and swear true faith and allegiance to the constitution of a new country, and yet, after lapse of years, by reason of events which he could not have foreseen, honestly feel a change in his sense of obligation to the country of his adoption, and a returning genuine wish to surrender his acquired obligations in order to return to his original political status. Analogy is found in this: Many young Americans went to Canada in 1916, and before April, 1917, and, in order to fight for the cause of the allied countries against Germany, expatriated themselves through patriotic motive, and took oaths of allegiance to the King of England, and thereby became his subjects, and enlisted in his service; but after the United States entered the war with Germany, many of them obtained honorable discharge from the British service, and under the act of Congress (40 Stat. at L. pp. 340, 545, chaps. 68, 69, Comp. Stat. § 4352, subd. 12, Fed. Stat. Anno. Supp. 1918, p. 492) resumed their citizenship in the United States and served in the American Army.

Was the lower court justified in holding that Schurmann, by reason of his attitude and declarations and expressions during the years 1916 and 1917, before and after the United States was at war with Germany, swore falsely in 1904 when he declared that he absolutely and entirely renounced and abjured all allegiance and fidelity to the German government and Emperor. Under the circumstances of the case, the only way of arriving at what the fidelity and allegiance of Schurmann were in December, 1904, is by trying out his attitude of mind and heart in the later years of 1916 and 1917, when, under then-existing conditions, men were specially aroused to give utterance to their real sentiments, and to avow loyalty to one or another of the belligerent nations. Prior to 1916 his life seems to have been without special event indicative of patriotic feeling. But it was in the crucial times of 1917 that the respondent failed in the fundamental obligation to his oath of true faith and allegiance in 1904. Not only did he conduct himself, prior to May and June, 1917, as already indicated, but after war was declared between the United States and Germany, upon being asked by an American whether it were possible that he would not defend the shores of the United States, respondent replied: "Well, Allen, I will tell you. I have sworn allegiance to your flag or country; but I am going to tell you this much, that I didn't swear away my birthright. . . . And this is the crisis where every German, whether he is a Socialist or not, this is the time it is up to him to defend the fatherland."

One who spoke in that way, and whose frequent expressions were so plainly against the United States and in favor of Germany, must have taken the oath of full faith and allegiance with a reserved determination, to be kept down, but nurtured, until a momentous time might come. In years, however, the time did come, and the criterion of original fraud must be the later conduct, which, in its relation to the earlier attitude, will furnish safe ground for judgment. United States v. Ness, 245 U. S. 319, 62 L. ed. 321, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 118; Luria v. United States, 231 U. S. 9, 58 L. ed. 101, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 10; Johannessen v. United States, 225 U. S. 227, 56 L. ed. 1066, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 613; United States v. Ginsberg, 243 U. S. 472, 61 L. ed. 853, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 422; United States v. Spohrer (C. C.) 175 Fed. 440; United States v. Wursterbarth (D. C.) 249 Fed. 908; United States v. Swelgin (D. C.) 254 Fed. 884; Grahl v. United States (C. C. A.) 261 Fed. 487; United States v. Kramer (C. C. A.) 262 Fed. 395.

Our conclusion is that the District Court was justified in canceling the certificate.

Affirmed.

Appeal dismissed by the Supreme Court of the United States, January 16, 1922 (U. S. Adv. Ops. 1921-22, p. 203) — U. S. —, 66 L. ed. —, 42 Sup. Ct. Rep. 185.

ANNOTATION.

Disloyalty or mental reservation as ground for cancelation of certificate of citizenship.

As to collateral attack on order admitting to citizenship, see annotation following Oehlert v. Oehlert, 6 A.L.R. 406.

By the Act of Congress of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat. at L. 596, chap. 3592, § 15, Comp. Stat. § 4374, 6 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 987), it was expressly provided that certificates of citizenship might be canceled, either on the ground of "fraud," or on the ground that they were "illegally procured," which statute, it was declared, should apply not only to certificates of citizenship issued thereafter, but also to all such certificates of citizenship which may have been issued theretofore. The question, then, which we have presented in the present annotation, is whether or not disloyalty amounts to fraud or illegality within the meaning of the statute. It may also be stated that fraud was a ground for revocation of a certificate of citizenship even before the Act of 1906, but there seem to have been no early decisions which involved the question of disloyalty as a ground for cancelation.

18 A.L.R.—75.

The authorities are unanimous to the effect that disloyalty, mental reservation when taking the required oath of allegiance, or ulterior purpose in obtaining a certificate of citizenship, may constitute such fraud or illegality as will warrant the cancellation of a certificate and impeachment of the naturalization under the Act of 1906. Luria v. United States (1913) 231 U. S. 9, 58 L. ed. 101, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 10; United States v. Kramer (1919; C. C. A.) 262 Fed. 395; SCHURMANN v. UNITED STATES (reported herewith) ante, 1182; United States v. Mansour (1909) 170 Fed. 671, affirmed without opinion in (1912) 226 U. S. 604, 57 L. ed. 378, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 217; United States v. Ellis (1911) 185 Fed. 546; United States v. Olsson (1912) 196 Fed. 562, reversed pursuant to stipulation of the parties, and without opinion, in (1913) 119 C. C. A. 667, 201 Fed. 1022; United States v. Wursterbarth (1918) 249 Fed. 908; United States v. Darmer (1918) 249 Fed. 989; United States v. Swelgin (1918) 254 Fed. 884; United States v. Stuppiello (1919) 260 Fed. 483; United States v. Herberger (1921) 272 Fed. 278.

For example, it has been expressly held that acts and statements of a naturalized citizen, even though done or made subsequent to the naturalization proceedings, which show disbelief in the existing form of government and opposition to the provisions of the Constitution, or disloyalty to our government and continued adherence to his former sovereign, are sufficient to show that the papers were fraudulently obtained within the meaning of the Act of 1906. United States v. Kramer (1919; C. C. A.) 262 Fed. 395 (defendant repeatedly made disloyal remarks, saying that he would do all he could against the United States; that he favored Germany in the war, and would help her by sending all military information that he could get; that he intended to return to that country after the war, etc.); SCHURMANN v. UNITED STATES (reported herewith) ante, 1182 (holding that statements by a naturalized citizen of German birth, made during the World War, showing that his feelings and sympathies were entirely on the side of

Germany as against the United States, were sufficient to show that he must have taken the oath of full faith and allegiance to the United States with a reserved intent which rendered the obtaining of his papers fraudulent); United States v. Herberger (1921) 272 Fed. 278 (holding that letters written during the World War by a naturalized citizen of German birth to his sister in Germany, in which he criticized American war methods, used language indicating contempt for the American people, and said that if it had not been for America's friendship England would have long since been brought to her knees by hunger, and that "it is hoped that some day Germany may repay America like with like," etc., showed disloyalty sufficient to justify the reasonable conclusion that such state of feeling existed, although possibly not realized, at the time of the naturalization, the failure to disclose which at such time rendered it a legal fraud, sufficient, in the absence of a showing of change of heart after naturalization, to warrant cancellation of the naturalization order and certificate); United States v. Olsson (1912) 196 Fed. 562, reversed pursuant to stipulation of the parties, and without opinion, in (1913) 119 C. C. A. 667, 201 Fed. 1022 (defendant advocated elimination of the ballot and property rights, believing as a consequence that the existing political government would be abrogated, which belief defendant admittedly entertained prior to his naturalization); United States v. Wursterbarth (1918) 249 Fed. 908 (respondent, a native of Germany, stated that he would do nothing to help defeat Germany, that he did not want America to win the war, and that he was only temporarily in this country, etc.); United States v. Darmer (1918) 249 Fed. 989 (defendant, a native of Germany, during the World War, repeatedly made statements tending to show loyalty and allegiance to Germany rather than to the United States, sufficient to give rise—at least, when uncontradicted—to a presumption of continuity and duration of existence reaching back to 1888, the year of his naturalization); United States v. Swelgin (1918) 254 Fed. 884 (defendant was opposed to constitutional government and was a member of the Industrial Workers of the World, which organization advocated anarchy and the overthrow of the government by any means available); United States v. Stuppiello (1919) 260 Fed. 483 (defendant was an anarchist when admitted to citizenship).

In the Kramer Case, in answering the contention that evidence of acts of disloyalty occurring after the defendant's admission to citizenship was not sufficient to show want of good faith and fraudulent intention at the time he was admitted, the court said: "The statute under the provisions of which defendant was admitted to citizenship provides that if a naturalized citizen returns to the country of his nativity, or goes to any other foreign country, and takes permanent residence therein, within five years after his certificate of citizenship is issued to him, it shall be prima facie evidence of lack of intention to become a permanent citizen at the time of filing his application for citizenship, in the absence of countervailing evidence. Section 15, Act June 29, 1906 (Comp. Stat. § 4874, 6 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 987); Luria v. United States, 231 U. S. 9, 58 L. ed. 101, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 10 [set out and quoted infra]. Congress thereby clearly indicated that subsequent acts of a naturalized citizen would be sufficient evidence of his fraudulent intention at the time of his admission. If mere removal is sufficient evidence of fraud, why not subsequent acts of disloyalty, or statements indicating his want of allegiance? In the nature of things it is impossible for the government to make more than a cursory examination into the loyalty of the general character of the applicant for citizenship before admission, and the court must, of necessity, rely upon the good faith and truthfulness of the applicant when appearing before it and taking the oath of allegiance. In a criminal case, a man's intention may be judged by his acts. A conspiracy to defraud is usually proven by showing what the defendants did after the date upon which the conspiracy is alleged to have been formed, and the jury may consider such evidence in opposition to the testimony of defendant on the question of intention, and render a verdict of guilty upon it. Why not the same rule in a suit to cancel a certificate of naturalization? American citizenship is a priceless possession, and one who seeks it by naturalization must do so in entire good faith, without any mental reservation whatever, and with the complete intention of yielding his absolute loyalty and allegiance to the country of his adoption. If he does not, he is guilty of fraud in obtaining his certificate of citizenship. There can be no doubt that, had the defendant in this case been guilty of the utterances with which he is charged before his naturalization, and that fact had been known to the court, he would not have been admitted. The proof makes out a prima facie case of the disloyalty of the defendant, and shows his continuing allegiance to the German Emperor." And in United States v. Wursterbarth (Fed.) supra, the following argument was advanced by the court: "The respondent, although a citizen of this country, on three separate occasions (several months having intervened between each) since the outbreak of the war with Germany, gave vent to expressions which clearly indicate that he at this time bears an allegiance to the country of his origin, superior to that which he recognizes to this country. While his present state of mind is, of course, not the main fact in issue, yet, if at the time the certificate of citizenship was granted to him he retained the same allegiance to Germany as he now manifestly has, it is not contended, and, indeed, it would not seem to be debatable, that any other conclusion could be reached than that the certificate had been procured by fraud, because the provisions of the Naturalization Act, at the time the respondent's certificate was issued (§ 2165 of the Revised Statutes), required that before he could be admitted to citizenship he should declare on oath that he would support the Constitution of the United States, and that he absolutely and entirely renounced and abjured all allegiance and fidelity to any foreign sovereignty. The question, therefore, on which the decision of this case depends, is whether it may be legitimately inferred as a fact, from his present state of mind, coupled with the circumstances to be hereinafter referred to, that he was of the same mind at the time he took the oath of allegiance and renunciation. . . . It must be borne in mind that the respondent did not express any dissatisfaction with the aims and purposes of this country in the present war, or with the reasons which had induced Congress to declare war, but that he boldly took the position that he would do nothing to injure the country of his birth, and did not wish the country to win the present war, because of the ties which bound him to Germany. As the years succeeding his naturalization passed, coupled with the fact that he continued to dwell in our midst, associate with our citizens, receive the benefits which this nation and its institutions have conferred upon him, acquire property here, and hold public office (as the proofs show that he did), it is natural to presume that his affection and feeling of loyalty and allegiance to this country would increase, and that any ties which bound him to the country from which he came would correspondingly decrease. If, therefore, under such circumstances, after thirty-five years, he now recognizes an allegiance to the sovereignty of his origin, superior to his allegiance to this country, it seems to me that it is not only permissible to infer from that fact, but that the conclusion is irresistible, that at the time he took the oath of renunciation he did so with a mental reservation as to the country of his birth, and retained towards that country an allegiance which the laws of this country required him to renounce before he could become one of its citizens. Indeed, for the reasons just stated, his allegiance to the former must at that time have been stronger than it is at present. Whatever presumption might otherwise arise in his favor, from the apparent fact that during the intervening years he has lived as a good citizen of his country, is of no weight when it is considered that nothing has happened during that time to call forth a manifestation of his reserved allegiance, and that as soon as something did happen—i. e., the war between this country and Germany—he immediately manifested it." And in United States v. Olsson (1912) 196 Fed. 562, supra, the court said: "The people of this country ordained the Constitution of the United States to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to themselves and their posterity, and thereby establish a national government, to endure permanently. The notion that citizens of this country may absolve themselves from allegiance to the Constitution of the United States, otherwise than by expatriation, is a dangerous heresy. The nation generously and cordially admits to its citizenship aliens having the qualifications prescribed by law, but, recognizing the principle of natural law called the law of self-preservation, it restricts the privilege of becoming naturalized to those whose sentiments are compatible with genuine allegiance to the existing government, as defined by the oath which they are required to take. Those who believe in and propagate crude theories hostile to the Constitution are barred. . . . He [the defendant] has no reverence for the Constitution of the United States, or intention to support and defend it against its enemies, and he is not well disposed toward the peace and tranquillity of the people. His propaganda is to create turmoil and to end in chaos. But, in order to secure a certificate of naturalization, he intentionally made representations to the court which necessarily deceived the court, or his application for naturalization would have been denied. Therefore, by the petition which he was required to file and his testimony at the final hearing of his application, and by taking the oath which was administered to him in open court, he perpetrated a fraud upon the United States, and committed an offense for which he may be punished as provided by law." And again, in United States v. Swelgin (1918) 254 Fed. 884, supra, in commenting upon the beliefs and the purposes of the organization known as the "I. W. W.," in which defendant was an organizer and worker, as affecting the question of intent in taking the oath of allegiance to the United States, the court said: "It is really opposed to all forms of government. It advocates lawlessness, and constructs its own morals, which are not in accord with those of well-ordered society. Its adherents are antipatriotic. They own no allegiance to any organized government. And I am unable to understand by what right such of them as come from another country can claim that they are entitled to be admitted to citizenship under the stars and stripes. The very oath they take, avowing their allegiance to this government, is to them a worthless ceremony, for they do not intend to submit themselves to its Constitution, laws, rules, and regulations, or to defend it in time of insurrection, or against an aggression from abroad, or when it is at war with other nations. When, therefore, the defendant declared that he was attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States, and was well disposed to the good order and happiness of the same, he made avowal of that which was not in his heart, and thereby deceived the court. And further, he was a disbeliever in, and opposed to, organized government, and he fraudulently misled the court as to that. So that the government's case is clear that defendant's certificate of naturalization was procured by fraud and deception, imposed upon the court which directed its issuance, and the annulment of the certificate must follow."

And the lack of an intention of becoming a permanent citizen at the time of the obtaining of citizenship papers has been held to constitute such fraud or illegality as will avoid a naturalization at the suit of the government. Luria v. United States (1913) 231 U. S. 9, 58 L. ed. 101, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 10 (holding that the certificate of citizenship of one who, shortly after the obtaining of such certificate, took up his permanent residence in a foreign country, should be canceled); United States v. Ellis (1911) 185 Fed. 546 (holding same). And on the question of the effect of lack of intention, see United States v. Mansour (1908) 170 Fed. 671, affirmed without opinion in (1912) 226 U. S. 604, 57 L. ed. 378, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 217. In the Luria Case the conclusion was based upon the theory that the provisions of the Naturalization Act plainly contemplate that the applicant, if admitted, should be a citizen in fact as well as in name, or, in other words, "it was contemplated that his admission should be mutually beneficial to the government and himself, the proof in respect of his established residence, moral character, and attachment to the principles of the Constitution being exacted because of what they promised for the future, rather than for what they told of the past." In this case the court also said: "By the clearest implication those laws show that it was not intended that naturalization could be secured thereunder by an alien whose purpose was to escape the duties of his native allegiance, without taking upon himself those of citizenship here, or by one whose purpose was to reside permanently in a foreign country, and to use his naturalization as a shield against the imposition of duties there, while by his absence he was avoiding his duties here. Naturalization secured with such a purpose was wanting in one of its most essential elements—good faith on the part of the applicant. It involved a wrongful use of a beneficent law. True, it was not expressly forbidden; neither was it authorized. But, being contrary to the plain implication of the statute, it was unlawful; for what is clearly implied is as much a part of a law as what is expressed." And in United States v. Ellis (Fed.) supra, the court said that, under the law as it was prior to 1906, "only those persons possessing the necessary qualifications and intending bona fide to become citizens could be naturalized, so that, if the defendant did not in good faith intend to become a permanent citizen, and made his oath with a mental reservation to that effect, he was guilty of fraud in procuring the decree," sufficient to warrant its cancelation under the Act of 1906. And these decisions were also influenced by the express provisions of § 15 of the Act of 1906, to the effect that if any naturalized citizen shall within five years "return to the country of his nativity, or go to any other foreign country, and take permanent residence therein, it shall be considered prima facie evidence of a lack of intention" on the part of such person to become a permanent citizen of the United States at the time of filing his application for citizenship, and, "in the absence of countervailing evidence, it shall be sufficient in the proper proceeding to authorize the cancelation of his certificate of citizenship as fraudulent."

And that an ulterior motive in obtaining citizenship papers, such, for instance, as procuring them for the purpose of obtaining protection in a foreign country in which the applicant wishes to reside, constitutes a fraudulent or illegal purpose, see United States v. Mansour (Fed.) supra.

But it has been held that criticism by a naturalized citizen of German birth, of the "slam-bang" methods of Americans in connection with the war with Germany, is not "essentially disloyal," and even when considered with expressions of refusal to believe stories to the effect that German soldiers wantonly killed and mutilated women and children, which belief, it has been said, is not "necessarily dishonorable," does not show disloyalty sufficient to require cancelation of his certificate of citizenship. United States v. Herberger (1921) 272 Fed. 278.

However, as some of the cases indicate, and as was expressly held in United States v. Herberger (Fed.) supra, a showing of treason upon the part of a naturalized citizen is not essential to the cancelation of his naturalization order and certificate under the Act of 1906, for disloyalty.
G. J. C.

GRAND LODGE OF THE BROTHERHOOD OF RAILROAD TRAIN-MEN, Appt.,

v.

FRANK S. CLARK.

Indiana Supreme Court — May 12, 1920.

(— Ind. —, 127 N. E. 280.)

Pleading — laws of sister state.

1. It is not sufficient to plead merely the effect of the laws of a sister state.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1197.]

—complaint on insurance policy — sufficiency.

2. A complaint on a life insurance policy is not demurrable for failure to state an obligation between plaintiff and defendant.

— failure to attach policy.

3. A complaint on an insurance policy is not demurrable for failure to incorporate or attach the policy in or to it.

— failure to state time of payment of premiums.

4. Failure to state that all premiums were paid before due does not make a complaint on a life insurance policy demurrable.

Rescission — insurance policy. — necessity of prompt action.

5. One seeking to rescind a life insurance policy for fraud must do so within a reasonable time or with reasonable promptitude after knowledge of the facts relied upon for rescission, and must return or offer to return the consideration.

[See 14 R. C. L. 1019, 1020.]

Pleading — answer — action on insurance policy — breach of warranty.

6. An answer in an action on a life insurance policy, relying on breach of warranty, must show a return of or an offer to return, the premiums within a reasonable time after discovery of the alleged breach.

Trial — reasonable time for avoiding insurance policy — question of law or fact.

7. In an action upon a life insurance policy where a breach of warranty is relied on, the reasonable time for return of premiums is ordinarily a question of fact, but where the facts are ascertained, undisputed or admitted, the question is one of law.

Insurance — to whom premiums must be tendered.

8. After the death of insured a tender of premiums for avoidance of the policy for breach of warranty or fraud must be made to the beneficiary.

Tender — payment into court — sufficiency.

9. A payment into court seventeen months after learning of breach of warranty in an application for life insurance, of the premiums paid, without tendering them to the beneficiary, who became entitled to them because of the death of the insured, is not within reasonable time, and is not sufficient.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Marion County (Clifford; J.) in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a benefit insurance policy. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. M. L. Clawson for appellant.

Messrs. Bailey & Young for appellee.

Willoughby, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a suit brought by appellee against appellant to recover upon a beneficiary certificate or policy of insurance issued by appellant to the decedent and the insured, who was a brother of the appellee, in which suit the appellee recovered a judgment against the appellant in the sum of $1,650, from which judgment appellant appeals, and alleges that the court erred in overruling appellant's demurrer to appellee's amended complaint, and that the court erred in sustaining the demurrer of appellee to appellant's amended second paragraph of answer to the amended complaint.

The complaint alleges that the defendant, appellant, is a fraternal benefit association doing business under the laws of Ohio; that the policy was in the sum of $1,500, and was payable to the appellee, Frank Sylvester Clark, upon the death of the insured, George Clark, pursuant to the application by assured. A copy of the application is filed with the complaint and made a part thereof, marked exhibit A. A copy of the policy is also filed and made a part of the complaint, and marked exhibit B. The complaint alleges that the premiums were paid, and that the insured and decedent had done all that was required of him under the terms of the contract of insurance; that the insured, George Clark, died on June 23, 1913; that all assessments and obligations on the part of the assured had been paid and satisfied before his death.

It further alleges that proof of death was made to the lodge of which deceased was a member; that the appellant, defendant in the suit below, refused to pay; and plaintiff alleges that on account of the unnecessary delay in the payment of said policy there is interest due on same from the date of decedent's death, amounting in all, principal and interest, to $1,650.

Defendant filed a demurrer to the complaint, and the demurrer, omitting the caption and signature, is as follows:

"The defendant, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, demurs to plaintiff's amended complaint herein, and for cause of demurrer says:

"(1) That said amended complaint does not state any obligation between plaintiff and defendant.

Pleading—complaint on insurance policy
—sufficiency.

"(2) That the basis of plaintiff's complaint is the insurance policy issued by defendant to plaintiff, and that it is not a part of said amended complaint, either in body thereof, or attached by exhibit thereto.

—failure to attach policy.

"(3) That said amended complaint does not state that all payments by the insured prior to his death were made at or before the times required by said defendant in its said insurance application and policy. The amended complaint simply says that said payments were made prior to the insured's death."

—failure to state time of payment of premiums.

The complaint was good as against the objections urged, and no error was committed by the court by overruling it. See § 344, Burns's Anno. Stat. 1914; Conrad v. Hansen, 171 Ind. 43, 85 N. E. 710, and cases there cited; State v. Katzman, 161 Ind. 504, 69 N. E. 157; Oglebay v. Tippecanoe Loan & T. Co. 41 Ind. App. 481, 82 N. E. 494.

Appellant filed an answer in two paragraphs. The first paragraph was a general denial. The second paragraph, referred to as the second amended paragraph, alleged fraudulent misrepresentations by decedent to procure the issuance of the policy sued on, and alleged that the applicant falsely stated that for the five years prior to January 9, 1913, the general condition of his health was good. After alleging that decedent knew of the condition of his health, and that it was bad, and that he had been an inmate of various sanitariums, and had been treated by a physician for myalgia and rheumatism within the last five years preceding his application, said defendant goes on to state that the policy was issued under the laws of the state of Ohio, and that the construction and interpretation of the laws of the state of Ohio were to the effect that said beneficiary certificate issued to plaintiff was null and void by reason of the said false and fraudulent representations in the application made by decedent, and a refund of premiums by defendant was unnecessary, but that on the 11th day of March, 1916, the said defendant paid to the clerk of the court, for the use and benefit of the plaintiff, the sum of $23.50, being in full of all premiums, dues, fines, and assessments paid by decedent to the defendant, with interest at 6 per cent from the time of payment; that on September 28, 1914, defendant had knowledge that decedent had made said fraudulent misrepresentations in said application; that said decedent at the time of his death was in good standing with defendant organization, and had paid all fines, dues, and assessments and premiums required by said defendant under and by the terms of his application and certificate, and was not in arrears in any way, and that said decedent died on the 23d day of June, 1913. Appellant also alleges in said paragraph of answer that the decedent made certain misrepresentations as to his qualifications for membership in the appellant association, but does not allege any facts showing injury to appellant by reason of such misrepresentations.

To said paragraph of answer plaintiff demurred, for the reason that said paragraph does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of defense. This demurrer was sustained. The defendant excepted, and withdrew his first paragraph of answer, which was a general denial, and refused to plead further. The court then rendered judgment in favor of plaintiff in the sum of $1,650, together with the costs of action.

It will be observed in this case that the appellant does not state whether or not the laws of Ohio upon which it relies were statutory. It does not state what the laws are;

—laws of sister state. but it states what, in its opinion, is the effect of those laws.

It is not sufficient in a pleading to state the effect of the laws of a sister state; but such laws must be pleaded as facts are pleaded, and must state what the laws are, and not what the effect of them may be. The amended second paragraph of answer is insufficient as pleading the laws of the state of Ohio. To plead a foreign law, either in complaint or answer, the law must be set out specifically and definitely, so that the court can construe the law as applicable to the facts pleaded in such complaint or answer. If such law is statutory, that part of the statute must be set out verbatim. Lomb v. Pioneer Sav. & L. Asso. 96 Ala. 430, 11 So. 154; Thomas v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 1 Penn. (Del.) 593, 42 Atl. 988. See also Shaw v. Wood, 8 Ind. 518; Buchanan v. Hubbard, 119 Ind. 187, 21 N. E. 538; Billingsley v. Dean, 11 Ind. 831; Malott v. Sample, 164 Ind. 645, 74 N. E. 245, and cases cited; Hempstead v. Reed, 6 Conn. 480; Walker v. Maxwell, 1 Mass. 104; Bierhaus v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 8 Ind. App. 246, 34 N. E. 581. This paragraph of answer alleges that "at all times herein mentioned the said decedent at the time of his death was in good standing with defendant organization, and had paid all fines, dues, assessments, and premiums required by said defendant under and by the terms of his application and the certificate sued on herein, and was not in arrears in any way."

Said paragraph of answer also alleges that "the decedent died on the 23d day of June, 1913; that on the 28th day of September, 1914, the defendant had knowledge and information as to all of the alleged false and untrue warranties, and thereafter, to wit, on the 1st day of March, 1915, finally disallowed plaintiff's claim, and that this action was filed June 29, 1915; that no tender either to the plaintiff or any person representing the decedent was made until March 11, 1916."

Under the law as laid down by numerous decisions in this state, a person seeking to rescind a contract of this kind for fraud must do so within a reasonable time, or with reasonable promptitude, after knowledge of the facts relied upon for a rescission, and must return or offer

Rescission—
insurance policy —necessity of prompt action.

to return the consideration, and place the other party in statu quo, within a reasonable time after he knows, or should know, of the matter giving the right to rescind, and failure to do so affirms the contract. American Cent. L. Ins. Co. v. Rosenstein, 46 Ind. App. 537, 92 N. E. 380, and cases there cited; Supreme Tribe, B. H. v. Lennert, 178 Ind. 122, 98 N. E. 115; Commercial L. Ins. Co. v. Schroyer, 176 Ind. 654, 95 N. E. 1004, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 968.

In an action on an insurance policy, an answer setting out a breach of warranty and an avoidance of the policy must show a return, or an offer to return, the premium within a reasonable time

Pleading—
answer—action on insurance policy—breach of warranty.

after the discovery of the alleged breach. United States Health & Acci. Ins. Co. v. Clark, 41 Ind. App. 345, 83 N. E. 760; Horner v. Lowe, 159 Ind. 406, 64 N. E. 218.

In such cases a reasonable time is ordinarily a question of fact, but where the facts have been ascertained, or when they are undisputed or admitted, it becomes a question of law. Pickel v. Phenix Ins. Co. 119 Ind. 291, 21 N. E. 898.

In the instant case no tender was made until more than seventeen months had elapsed after the appellant had learned of the fraudulent acts of appellee, and no tender was made at any time to appellee, or any person authorized to act for him. But after the beginning of the suit, after the case had been called for trial, the defendant, appellant, asked and procured leave of the court to make an amendment to his answer, showing the payment of the amount of the premium, with interest thereon, into court. This was not a compliance with the law requiring the defendant, if he desires to rescind a contract on account of fraud, to put the plaintiff in statu quo. After the death of assured, a tender of the premium in avoidance of the policy for breach of warranty, or for fraud, must be made to the beneficiary. American Cent. L. Ins. Co. v. Rosenstein, 46 Ind. App. 537, 92 N. E. 380.

Insurance—to whom premiums must be tendered.

A tender of money, to be sufficient, must first be offered to the party entitled to receive it, or to someone authorized to receive it for him, and, if refused, the money must then be paid into court for his use and benefit. Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Overman, 21 Ind. App. 516, 52 N. E. 771. The payment of the premium, with interest, into court, on the date and under the circumstances named in said second paragraph of answer, was not within a reasonable time, and was not a sufficient tender within the meaning of the law. No error was committed by the court in sustaining the demurrer to this paragraph of answer.

Tender—payment into court—sufficiency.

Appellant in its brief argues certain constitutional questions; but, in view of the conclusion reached in this case on the demurrer to said paragraph of answer, such questions do not arise, and need not be considered. Hewitt v. State, 171 Ind. 283, 86 N. E. 63; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hollowell, 172 Ind. 466, 471, 88 N. E. 680; White v. Sun Pub. Co. 164 Ind. 426, 430, 73 N. E. 890; Hunt v. State, 186 Ind. 644, 648, 117 N. E. 856.

No error being shown in the record, the judgment is affirmed.

NOTE.

The manner of pleading a foreign statute is the subject of the annotation following MOE v. SHAFFER, post, 1197. See, specifically, subd. II. a, of that annotation, for the view that the statute must be set out in hæc verba.

NELS J. MOE, Respt.,

v.

OLIVER E. SHAFFER, Appt.

Minnesota Supreme Court—October 14, 1921.

(— Minn. —, 184 N. W. 785.)

Pleading — foreign statute — effect.

1. It is not necessary in pleading a statute of a foreign state to set it forth in hæc verba. It is sufficient if its terms are so pleaded that the court can determine its effect.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1197.]

Headnotes by LEES, C.

Judgment — absence of process — effect.

2. A judgment is not void for want of service of process, if entered upon a warrant of attorney expressly authorizing its entry without process.

[See 15 R. C. L. 651.]

Fraud — waiver — new agreement.

3. A party to a contract procured by fraud waives the fraud, if after discovering it he enters into a new agreement for the discharge of his obligation on different terms.

[See 12 R. C. L. 414.]

Judgment — foreign — defenses.

4. The only defenses to an action upon a judgment of a court of record of a sister state are want of jurisdiction, fraud, or payment. The presumption is that the court properly fixed the amount included in the judgment for attorneys' fees.

[See 15 R. C. L. 920, 921.]

Limitation of actions — operation in other state.

5. If no action could be maintained on a cause of action in the state where it arose, because of the bar of the Statute of Limitations, none can be maintained in the courts of this state, unless plaintiff has been a citizen thereof ever since the cause of action accrued.

[See 17 R. C. L. 947.]

Pleading — exceptions to Statute of Limitations.

6. When the Statute of Limitations is pleaded as a defense, if the facts bring the case within any of the exceptions to the statute, they must be set up by reply. Defendant's absence from the state is such an exception.

— statute not in effect.

7. If in fact a statute which is pleaded is not in effect, that part of the pleading may be stricken as sham.

APPEAL by defendant from an order of the District Court for Wilkin County (Flaherty, J.) sustaining a demurrer to his defense in an action on a judgment recovered against him, and assigned to plaintiff. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Mr. Lewis E. Jones, for appellant:

If the judgment was barred by statute in Illinois it was barred here, it not appearing that plaintiff is a resident of the state of Minnesota, and it appearing from the amended answer that he is a resident of Illinois.

Gen. Stat. § 7709; Luce v. Clarke, 49 Minn. 356, 51 N. W. 1162; Drake v. Bigelow, 93 Minn. 112, 100 N. W. 664; Fletcher v. Spaulding, 9 Minn. 64, Gil. 54; Beadles v. Fry, 15 Okla. 428, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 855, 82 Pac. 1041.

The judgment was void.

Gundlach v. Park, 140 Minn. 78, 165 N. W. 969, 167 N. W. 302; Whitton v. Whitton, 64 Ill. App. 53; Farquhar v. Dehaven, 70 W. Va. 738, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 956, 75 S. E. 65, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 640; First Nat. Bank v. White, 220 Mo. 717, 132 Am. St. Rep. 612, 120 S. W. 36, 16 Ann. Cas. 889; Raymor v. Michigan Trust Co. 165 Mich. 259, 130 N. W. 594; Irose v. Balla, 181 Ind. 491, 104 N. E. 851; Hutson v. Wood, 263 Ill. 376, 105 N. E. 343, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 587; Funk v. Hossack, 115 Ill. App. 340; Simco v. Mankowitz, 184 Ill. App. 506.

Mr. George D. Smith for respondent.

Lees, C., filed the following opinion:

November 19, 1910, L. W. Brewer, as trustee in bankruptcy of the estate of J. E. Edmunds Company, recovered a judgment against the defendant in the circuit court of La Salle county, a court of record of the state of Illinois. The judgment was founded on a promissory note executed by defendant to J. E. Edmunds, containing authority to any attorney of a court of record to appear in such court, in term time or vacation, and confess judgment without process in favor of the holder of the note for the amount unpaid thereon, "with costs and ——— dollars attorneys' fees." There was a partial payment of the judgment as the result of an execution issued thereon, and thereafter, and in February, 1911, Brewer assigned the judgment to plaintiff, who brought an action upon it in the district court of Wilkin county in February, 1920.

The defendant answered, setting up the following defenses: (1) That the judgment was void for the reason that he was not served with process and did not appear in the circuit court of La Salle county;

(2) that the note was given in part payment for a stock of goods purchased from Edmunds by the defendant, and that in making the sale Edmunds had practised a fraud upon him in certain respects set out in the answer; (3) that the judgment as entered included an attorney's fee of $400, which was not authorized by the terms of the warrant of attorney; (4) that the statutes of Illinois provide that no action can be maintained on any judgment entered by confession or by virtue of a warrant of attorney or power contained in any promissory note after the expiration of seven years from the rendition of the judgment, unless the judgment has been renewed by a writ of scire facias or an original suit instituted thereon within said period of seven years; that said judgment had not been so renewed, and was of no force or effect in the state of Illinois after November 18, 1917; and that any right of action thereon became barred by the Statute of Limitations of said state on said date.

Plaintiff demurred to each of these defenses separately and collectively, on the ground that they did not state facts sufficient to constitute a defense, and failed, when taken separately or as a whole, to state any equities in defendant's favor. The demurrer was sustained, and defendant appealed.

1. The first defense was not good, for the reason that the warrant of attorney expressly authorized the entry of judgment without process.

Judgment—absence of process—effect.

2. The second defense was not good for the reason that defendant alleged that after the note came into Brewer's hands, defendant informed him of the fraud Edmunds had perpetrated upon him, whereupon Brewer agreed that, if defendant would assist him in discovering assets which Edmunds was believed to be concealing from his creditors, he (Brewer) would accept a certain sum in full payment of the note. It was not alleged that defendant had paid the amount agreed upon or assisted Brewer in uncovering Edmunds's hidden assets. This brings the case within the rule approved by this court that, after discovering the deceit, "the party deceived . . . must stand towards the other party at arm's length, must comply with the terms of the contract on his part, must not ask favors of the other party or offer to perform the contract on conditions which he has no right to exact, and must not make any new agreement or engagement respecting it. If he does so he waives the fraud." Humphrey v. Sievers, 137 Minn. 373, 163 N. W. 737; Tysdal v. Bergh, 142 Minn. 288, 172 N. W. 130.

Fraud—waiver—new agreement.

3. The third defense was not good. It is elementary that the judgment of a court of record of a sister state is entitled to full faith and credit in this state, and is not open to collateral attack. The only defenses that can be made to an action upon it in the courts of this state are want of jurisdiction, fraud, or payment. Cone v. Hooper, 18 Minn. 531, Gil. 476; Alden v. W. J. Dyer & Bro. 92 Minn. 134, 99 N. W. 784; Tillinghast v. United States Sav. & L. Co. 99 Minn. 62, 108 N. W. 472; Gundlach v. Park, 140 Minn. 78, 165 N. W. 969, 167 N. W. 302. The presumption is that the amount for which the judgment was entered was correct. Hersey v. Walsh, 38 Minn. 521, 8 Am. St. Rep. 689, 38 N. W. 613. It will be presumed that the court fixed the amount of attorneys' fees, since it is not alleged and will not be presumed that the judgment was not entered by the court in term, instead of in vacation. Gundlach v. Park, supra.

Judgment—foreign—defenses.

4. The fourth defense is good, if sufficiently pleaded. If no action on the judgment could be maintained in Illinois after November 18, 1917, none could be maintained in this state after that date. Gen. Stat. 1913, §

Limitation of actions—operation in other state.

(— Minn. —, 184 N. W. 785.)

7709; Luce v. Clark, 49 Minn. 356, 51 N. W. 1162.

There may be a statute in Illinois similar to Gen. Stat. 1913, § 7708, whereby the running of the Statute of Limitations is suspended during the absence of the debtor from the state; but, if so, it is nowhere set out in the pleadings, and, in any event, would not apply to an action on a judgment. Gaines v. Grunewald, 102 Minn. 245, 113 N. W. 450. Defendant having pleaded the Statute of Limitations as a defense, if the facts bring the case within any exceptions to the statute in force in Illinois, they must be set up by reply. Trebby v. Simmons, 38 Minn. 508, 38 N. W. 693; Itasca County v. Miller, 101 Minn. 294, 112 N. W. 276; Ferrier v. McCabe, 129 Minn. 342, 152 N. W. 734; Riley v. Mankato Loan & T. Co. 133 Minn. 289, 158 N. W. 391. If absence from the state is an exception, it must be so pleaded by the plaintiff. West v. Hennessey, 58 Minn. 133, 59 N. W. 984.

Pleading—exceptions to Statute of Limitations.

It is urged that in pleading the Illinois statute it should have been set out in full, or at least so much of it as is material to the defense. A statement to that effect is found in Becht v. Harris, 4 Minn. 504, Gil. 394. In Hoyt v. McNeil, 13 Minn. 390, Gil. 362, it was said that the "terms" of a foreign statute must be set forth, so that the court may determine whether the effect claimed for it is legitimate. This was repeated in Myers v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 69 Minn. 476, 65 Am. St. Rep. 579, 72 N. W. 694, and is in accordance with the general rule that, in pleading the statute of a foreign state, it is not necessary to set it forth in hæc verba, and that it is sufficient to state the ~~foreign statute~~ ^{effect} substance of those portions of the statute that are relied on. 36 Cyc. 1241. Becht v. Harris, supra, in so far as it intimates that the rule is otherwise, is disapproved. It is also urged that in J. L. Bieder Co. v. Rose, 138 Minn. 121, 164 N. W. 586, this court had before it the Illinois Statute of Limitations, and expressly held an action on a judgment might be brought at any time within twenty years of the date of its rendition. In that case the judgment was not one by confession, and if there is a statute such as defendant pleads here, it would have not been applicable.

Finally, it is urged that in fact there is no such statute in effect. If ~~statute not in effect~~ this be true, plaintiffs may move to strike this defense from the answer as sham. Gen. Stat. 1913, § 7762.

In so far as the demurrer goes to the defense of the Statute of Limitations, it should have been overruled, and sustained only as to the other defenses pleaded. The order sustaining it as to all the defenses pleaded must therefore be, and it is hereby, reversed.

Petition for rehearing denied.

ANNOTATION.

Manner of pleading foreign statute.

- I. Pleading statute by reference, 1198.
- II. Pleading language of statute:
 - a. View that statute must be set out in hæc verba, 1198.
 - b. View that statute need not be set out in hæc verba:
 1. In general, 1199.
 2. Necessity for definiteness and certainty, 1201.

II. b.—continued.

3. Statute of Descent and Distribution, 1202.
4. Statute relating to procedure, 1202.
5. Statute relating to bills and notes, 1203.
6. Statute relating to usury, 1203.

II. b.—continued.

7. Statute relating to contracts, 1203.

I. Pleading statute by reference.

In the few cases wherein the question has arisen, unaffected by statute, it has been held without dissent that it is not sufficient to plead a foreign statute by a mere reference to the title and date of passage thereof (Carey v. Cincinnati & C. R. Co. (1857) 5 Iowa, 357; Becht v. Harris (1860) 4 Minn. 504, Gil. 394); or by a mere mention of the volume or chapter or section number thereof (Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Barton (1914) 14 Ga. 160, 80 S. E. 530; McDonald v. Bankers Life Asso. (1899) 154 Mo. 618, 55 S. W. 999; State Nat. Bank v. Levy (1910) 141 Mo. App. 288, 125 S. W. 542).

Thus, in Carey v. Cincinnati & C. R. Co. (Iowa) supra, the court said: "Our courts do not take judicial notice of the statutes of another state. And if a party relies upon such statutes he must set them out, plead them as he does any other fact, and it will not do to refer to them by their title and date of approval, nor by stating what, in the opinion and judgment of the pleader, are their general provisions and requirements."

Similarly, in Becht v. Harris (1860) 4 Minn. 504, Gil. 394, a pleading was held to be insufficient which alleged merely that a certain company was "a foreign corporation, duly incorporated and organized under and by the laws of the state of Illinois, and pursuant to an act of the legislature of said state, entitled 'An Act to Provide for the Incorporation of Transportation Companies,' passed and approved June 23, A. D. 1852."

In State Nat. Bank v. Levy (1910) 141 Mo. App. 288, 125 S. W. 542, the court said: "The laws of a sister state must be alleged and proved as any other issue of fact, and the rule of pleading is that such laws are not sufficiently stated if they are referred to in the petition only by the number of the section or chapter."

So, in McDonald v. Bankers Life Asso. (1899) 154 Mo. 618, 55 S. W. 999, it was held that it is not sufficient to

II. b.—continued.

8. Statute of Limitations, 1204.

9. Miscellaneous statutes, 1204.

plead a foreign statute merely by reference to the chapter number.

Likewise, in Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Barton (1914) 14 Ga. App. 160, 80 S. E. 530, 4 N. C. C. A. 998, it was said: "To plead a foreign law it is not enough to refer merely to the volume in which the law is contained. The law should be set out, so that the court may, on inspection of the pleadings, determine whether or not the plaintiff has drawn a correct conclusion as to the construction and effect of the law."

In Wisconsin it is provided by statute (Rev. Stat. § 2676) as follows: "In pleading a private statute, or a right derived therefrom, it shall be sufficient to refer to such statute by its title and the day of its passage, and the court shall thereupon take judicial notice thereof. In like manner the statutes, acts, and resolves of the Congress of the United States, and of the legislature of any state or territory of the United States, published by authority of the respective governments thereof, may be pleaded." In Central Trust Co. v. Burton (1889) 74 Wis. 329, 43 N. W. 141, wherein this statute was referred to, it was held that, although the statute of another state might have been pleaded sufficiently by referring merely to its title and date of passage in accordance with the provisions of the statute quoted, it was not improper to plead the substance of the foreign statute.

II. Pleading language of statute.

a. View that statute must be set out in hæc verba.

In some jurisdictions it is held that, in pleading a foreign statute, its terms, to the extent relied on, must be set out in hæc verba. Wilson v. Clark (1858) 11 Ind. 385; Tyler v. Kent (1876) 52 Ind. 583; Milligan v. State (1882) 86 Ind. 553; GRAND LODGE, B. R. T. v. CLARK (reported herewith) ante, 1190; Bank of Commerce v. Fuqua (1891) 11 Mont. 285, 14 L.R.A. 588, 23 Am. St. Rep. 461, 23 Pac. 291; Lowry v. Moore (1897) 16 Wash. 476, 58 Am. St. Rep. 49, 48 Pac. 238; Lipsett v. Dettering (1917) 94 Wash. 629, 162 Pac. 1007. See also Mendenhall v. Gately (1862) 18 Ind. 149; Swank v. Hufnagle (1887) 111 Ind. 453, 12 N. E. 303, 13 N. E. 105.

Thus, in GRAND LODGE, B. R. T. v. CLARK (reported herewith) ante, 1190, it was held that it is not sufficient to plead merely the effect of the laws of a sister state, the court saying: "To plead a foreign law, either in complaint or answer, the law must be set out specifically and definitely, so that the court can construe the law as applicable to the facts pleaded in such complaint or answer. If such law is statutory, that part of the statute must be set out verbatim."

So, in Wilson v. Clark (1858) 11 Ind. 385, it was said: "If the law of another state be relied on that law must be fully recited in the pleading, that the court may judge of its effect, and be able to give a construction to it."

To like effect is Milligan v. State (1882) 86 Ind. 553, wherein it was held that a foreign statute, when relied on, must be pleaded according to its tenor, so as to enable the court to construe or interpret it.

In Tyler v. Kent (1876) 52 Ind. 583, it was held that a foreign statute must be set out, when relied on to support a cause of action, by filing a copy thereof with the complaint.

The rule was affirmed in Lowry v. Moore (1897) 16 Wash. 476, 58 Am. St. Rep. 49, 48 Pac. 238, wherein the court said: "The objection urged by respondent to the sufficiency of the pleading is that the statute law of the state of Kentucky is not set forth in terms in the answer, and that in this respect the pleader has merely given his own conclusion or interpretation of the statute, and of the interpretation which the courts of that state have placed upon it. We think the demurrer was properly sustained. We think that, in the absence of statutory provisions to the contrary, the settled rule is that where a party relies upon the statute of a sister state, he must plead it as he would any other fact, not by stating what in the opinion of the pleader is its effect, but the statute itself should be set forth."

Similarly, in Bank of Commerce v. Fuqua (1891) 11 Mont. 285, 14 L.R.A. 588, 28 Am. St. Rep. 461, 28 Pac. 291, the court, in granting a motion to eliminate from the answer an averment that "by the laws of the said state of Kentucky" a certain contract was illegal and void, held that the laws relied on should have been set forth in terms.

b. View that statute need not be set out in hæc verba.

1. In general.

In a majority of jurisdictions, however, it is held that, in pleading a foreign statute, it need not be set out in hæc verba, but that an averment of its substance and effect is sufficient.

Alabama.—Forsyth v. Preer (1878) 62 Ala. 443; Cubbedge v. Napier (1878) 62 Ala. 518. See also Lomb v. Pioneer Sav. & L. Co. (1891) 96 Ala. 430, 11 So. 154.

Arkansas.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Haist (1903) 71 Ark. 258, 100 Am. St. Rep. 65, 72 S. W. 893.

Illinois.—Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Shires (1884) 108 Ill. 617. See also Consolidated Tank Line Co. v. Collier (1893) 148 Ill. 259, 39 Am. St. Rep. 181, 35 N. E. 756. Compare Stockham v. Simmons (1896) 67 Ill. App. 83.

Iowa.—Bean v. Briggs (1857) 4 Iowa, 464. See also Carey v. Cincinnati & C. R. Co. (1857) 5 Iowa, 857.

Kansas.—Showalter v. Rickert (1902) 64 Kan. 82, 67 Pac. 454.

Kentucky.—Roots v. Merriwether (1871) 8 Bush, 397; Montgomery v. Consolidated Boat Store Co. (1903) 115 Ky. 156, 103 Am. St. Rep. 302, 72 S. W. 816. See also Temple v. Brittan (1889) 11 Ky. L. Rep. 467, 12 S. W. 306; Thacker v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. (1915) 162 Ky. 337, 172 S. W. 658.

Minnesota.—MOE v. SHAFFER (reported herewith) ante, 1194. Compare Becht v. Harris (1860) 4 Minn. 504, Gil. 394; Hoyt v. McNeil (1868) 13 Minn. 390, Gil. 362; Myers v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. (1869) 69 Minn. 476, 65 Am. St. Rep. 579, 72 N. W. 694.

Missouri.—McDonald v. Bankers

Life Asso. (1899) 154 Mo. 618, 55 S. W. 999; Gibson v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. (1910) 225 Mo. 473, 125 S. W. 453; State Nat. Bank v. Levy (1910) 141 Mo. App. 288, 125 S. W. 542; Bondurant v. Brotherhood of American Yeomen (1917) — Mo. App. —, 199 S. W. 424. Compare Swing v. Karges Furniture Co. (1910) 150 Mo. App. 574, 131 S. W. 153.

New Jersey.—Salt Lake City Nat. Bank v. Hendrickson (1878) 40 N. J. L. 52.

New York.—Berney v. Drexel (1884) 33 Hun, 34; Schluter v. Bowery Sav. Bank (1889) 117 N. Y. 125, 5 L.R.A. 541, 15 Am. St. Rep. 494, 22 N. E. 572; Rothschild v. Rio Grande Western R. Co. (1890) 26 Abb. N. C. 312; O'Reilly, S. & F. Co. v. Greene (1896) 18 Misc. 423, 75 N. Y. S. R. 1416, 41 N. Y. Supp. 1056; Congregational Unitarian Soc. v. Hale (1898) 29 App. Div. 396, 27 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 303, 51 N. Y. Supp. 704; Caras v. Thalmann (1910) 138 App. Div. 297, 123 N. Y. Supp. 97; Swing v. Wanamaker (1910) 139 App. Div. 627, 124 N. Y. Supp. 231; Sultan of Turkey v. Tiryakian (1915) 213 N. Y. 429, 108 N. E. 72, affirming order in (1914) 162 App. Div. 613, 147 N. Y. Supp. 978. See also Holmes v. Broughton (1833) 10 Wend. 75, 25 Am. Dec. 536; Colcord v. Banco de Tamau-lipas (1917) 181 App. Div. 295, 168 N. Y. Supp. 710.

Vermont.—Wellman v. Mead (1919) 93 Vt. 322, 107 Atl. 396.

England. — M'Leod v. Schultze (1844) 1 Dowl. & L. 614, 13 L. J. Exch. N. S. 321. See also Benham v. Morn-ington (1846) 4 Dowl. & L. 213, 3 C. B. 133, 136 Eng. Reprint, 54, 15 L. J. C. P. N. S. 221, 10 Jur. 618.

Thus, in Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Shires (Ill.) supra, it was held that it is not necessary that a foreign statute should be set out in hæc verba, where its substance and legal effect are pleaded clearly and concisely.

So, in St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Haist (Ark.) supra, the court said with reference to pleading the law of a foreign state in the complaint: "It was not necessary that it should set out the Louisiana statute in hæc verba in pleading the statute. To set out the substance and effect of the statute was sufficient."

In Montgomery v. Consolidated Boat Store Co. (1903) 115 Ky. 156, 103 Am. St. Rep. 302, 72 S. W. 816, the court in considering a pleading which alleged the jurisdiction of a court of another state, said: "It is alleged that the court was one of general equity and common-law jurisdiction. The general averment of a fact of this character is sufficient. It would be needless prolixity to require the statute of Ohio to be set out in hæc verba. It may be pleaded according to its effect. As the foreign law must be proved as any other fact, it may also be pleaded as any other fact."

In Rothschild v. Rio Grande Western R. Co. (1890) 26 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 312, it was held that, as the law of a foreign statute is a fact to be pleaded like any other fact, it is not necessary to plead evidence of such fact, embodied in the statute of the foreign state, but the fact that a given proposition is the law must be stated.

In Bean v. Briggs (Iowa) supra, it was held that it is not sufficient for a party to aver that his right to recover is warranted by the law or statute of another state, or that the plaintiff cannot recover by reason of the provisions of a foreign statute; but he must plead the particular statute relied on, and set it out, as he would any other fact in the case, that the court may be able to judge whether the proceeding is warranted, or the defense tenable, under such law. See also Carey v. Cincinnati & C. R. Co. (Iowa) supra.

In Salt Lake City Nat. Bank v. Hendrickson (N. J.) supra, the court said: "In pleading a foreign statute, it must be set forth in substance, so that the court may see that the right or liability, which depends exclusively on a statutory enactment, arises by force of such statutory provision. The averment, 'pursuant to the statute,' without setting forth the substance of the statute, is insufficient."

It has been held to be necessary for one desiring to defeat a recovery on the ground that the action is founded on common-law principles, and cannot be maintained in the state where it arose on the facts stated in the petition because of statutory prohibition, to plead the law of the other state in such a manner that it will appear from the pleadings that a recovery cannot be had. Thacker v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. (1915) 162 Ky. 337, 172 S. W. 658.

In Forsyth v. Preer (1878) 62 Ala. 443, the court said: "The general rule of pleading in equity, and at common law, is that when a party claims a right, whether as ground of relief, or as a matter of defense, under a foreign law, he must, by appropriate pleading, set out the law, so that the court can see the right claimed falls within it."

It was observed by way of dictum in Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Shires (1884) 108 Ill. 617, that when a foreign statute is the basis of an action, and not merely called in question collaterally as evidence in the case, more strictness in pleading is required.

In Minnesota it is held in MOE v. SHAFER (reported herewith) ante, 1194, that, in pleading the statute of a foreign state, it is not necessary that it should be set forth in hæc verba, but that it is sufficient to state the substance of those portions of the statute that are relied on. Formerly, in Becht v. Harris (1860) 4 Minn. 504, Gil. 394, it was held in that state that, in pleading a foreign statute, the statute itself, or so much of it as was material to the case, should be set forth in full by the party complaining or defending under it. So, in Hoyt v. McNeil (1868) 13 Minn. 390, Gil. 362, it was said: "Where a party relies upon the law of a foreign state, such law must be pleaded, and, so far as it is relied on, its terms must be set forth, that the court may determine whether the effect claimed for the law is legitimate." To like effect is Myers v. Chicago, St. M. & O. R. Co. (1897) 69 Minn. 476, 65 Am. St. Rep. 579, 72 N. W. 694.

In Missouri, also, it is apparently the rule that in pleading a foreign statute it need not be set out in hæc verba.

Thus, in State Nat. Bank v. Levy (1910) 141 Mo. App. 288, 125 S. W. 542, it was held that, although it is insufficient to plead the law of a sister state by reference only to section or chapter number, this does not mean that the statute must be copied in the pleading, but that "the substance, or tenor and effect of the law," must be pleaded.
18 A.L.R.—76.

And in McDonald v. Bankers Life Assn. (1900) 154 Mo. 618, 55 S. W. 999, it was held that to plead properly the laws of another state, their "terms, tenor, and effect" should be set out. So, in Bondurant v. Brotherhood of American Yeomen (1917) — Mo. App. —, 199 S. W. 424, it was held that a mere reference to the laws of another state as filed with the pleadings as exhibits is not sufficient. In Gibson v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. (1910) 225 Mo. 473, 125 S. W. 453, the court said: "Where a foreign statute, or the statute of another state, is relied upon as giving, conferring, or constituting a cause of action, it must be substantially stated with such distinctness that the court may judge its effect." In Swing v. Karges Furniture Co. (1910) 150 Mo. App. 574, 131 S. W. 153, the court said: "It is elementary that where a foreign statute, or the statute of another state, is relied upon as conferring or constituting a cause of action, or conferring the right to sue, it must be substantially stated with such distinctness that the court may understand and determine its effect." But the court added: "It is . . . essential, when asserting a right in the courts of this state, said to have accrued or to be derived from the laws of a foreign state, that such laws should be pleaded in hæc verba, or substantially, at least, to the end that the court may see and determine for itself what authority and what rights they purport to confer."

2. Necessity for definiteness and certainty.

Since a foreign law is regarded as a matter of fact, it is uniformly held that it should be pleaded, so far as relied on, with such clearness and certainty, and at such length, as will enable the court to judge of the meaning and effect to be given to it.

"The law of another state . . .

is nothing but a fact, and must be pleaded, as any other fact, with sufficient distinctness, that the court, upon a statement of facts, may judge of what is the effect of the law." Roots v. Merriwether (1871) 8 Bush (Ky.) 397.

In Wellman v. Mead (1919) 93 Vt. 322, 107 Atl. 396, the court said: "A complaint counting upon a statute of another state should set forth the statute and facts so specifically that the court can see that the plaintiff has a right of action against the defendant."

In Cubbedge v. Napier (1878) 62 Ala. 518, it was said with reference to pleading the usury statute of another state: "If the usury consists in the violation of the law of a state other than that in which the enforcement of the contract is sought, the law is matter of fact, which must be pleaded with the certainty that any extrinsic fact must be pleaded, which is essential to a right of action, or to constitute a defense. The pleader may be well satisfied of his construction of the foreign law, and may assert it as the law itself; that is not his province. The law must be substantially stated."

In Benham v. Mornington (1846) 4 Dowl. & L. 213, 3 C. B. 133, 136 Eng. Reprint, 54, 15 L. J. C. P. N. S. 221, 10 Jur. 618, an averment "that, by reason of the premises, the said supposed writing obligatory, by the law of the said Kingdom of France, never was, nor is, obligatory or binding on the defendant," was held bad on the ground that it averred the said law of France only by inference, and was not, therefore, sufficiently certain.

In Showalter v. Rickert (1902) 64 Kan. 82, 67 Pac. 454, it was held merely that when pleading a foreign statute it is sufficient to plead the substance thereof.

3. Statute of Descent and Distribution.

In Berney v. Drexel (1884) 33 Hun (N. Y.) 34, an allegation that, "under and by virtue of the laws of France, where the testator had his domicil, the title to all the personal property of which said testator was possessed at the time of his decease vested immediately thereafter in the plaintiffs, other than the widow," was held not to be a pleading of a legal proposition or conclusion, but a statement of fact under which the plaintiffs might prove the laws of France.

So, in Sultan of Turkey v. Tiryakian (1915) 213 N. Y. 429, 108 N. E. 72, affirming order in (1914) 162 App. Div. 613, 147 N. Y. Supp. 978, it was held that an allegation in a complaint to the effect that by the law of Turkey it was provided, with reference to the estates of decedents, that title should vest in the Sultan of Turkey, amounted to a statement of the legal effect of the law, and was therefore sufficient.

Similarly, a pleading alleging that "by the laws of said commonwealth [Massachusetts], the plaintiff is now, and always has been, competent to take and hold said legacy, and to sue for and recover the same, . . . [and] it was, and still is, the law of said commonwealth that incorporated and unincorporated religious societies may appoint trustees, not exceeding five in number, to hold and manage bequests for their benefit," has been held to be sufficient to authorize proof of the law of Massachusetts. Congregational Unitarian Soc. v. Hale (1898) 29 App. Div. 396, 27 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 303, 51 N. Y. Supp. 704.

But in Temple v. Brittan (1889) 11 Ky. L. Rep. 467, 12 S. W. 306, wherein it was alleged merely that under the statutes of descent and distribution of a foreign state the estate of an intestate passed to certain sole heirs, the allegation was held not to be equivalent to a statement of fact, but to be a mere conclusion or interpretation of the law by the pleader.

4. Statute relating to procedure.

In O'Reilly, S. & F. Co. v. Greene (1896) 18 Misc. 423, 75 N. Y. S. R. 1416, 41 N. Y. Supp. 1056, an averment that, "under and pursuant to" the laws of West Virginia, suits may be brought in the name of a corporation, under the circumstances disclosed in the case at bar, was held to be sufficient.

In M'Leod v. Schultze (1844) 1 Dowl. & L. (Eng.) 614, 13 L. J. Exch. N. S. 321, a plea was held to be sufficient, without setting forth the foreign law, which averred that a certain sum due on a policy of insurance was duly "fenced and arrested" according to the law of Scotland, at the suit of a third person for a debt due him, until sufficient caution should be found in the books and session, that the same should be forthcoming to such third person; that thereupon the sum became and was, according to the law of Scotland, in custody of the law, and subject to the order of the court of session; that such proceedings were had, and the third person obtained final judgment; so that the assignees of a bankrupt were precluded and wholly barred, by the law of Scotland, from suing for the said sum.

But in Holmes v. Broughton (1833) 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 75, 25 Am. Dec. 536, a general averment to the effect that certain proceedings were had, "according to the laws of the state of Vermont, and fully authorized thereby," was held to be insufficient.

And in Wellman v. Mead (1919) 93 Vt. 322, 107 Atl. 396, an allegation in a complaint that, "under and by virtue of the laws of the commonwealth of Massachusetts, an action has accrued to the plaintiff to have and recover his damages herein stated, which cause of action is prosecuted in accordance with the laws of the state of Vermont," was held to be insufficient.

5. Statute relating to bills and notes.

In Caras v. Thalmann (1910) 138 App. Div. 297, 123 N. Y. Supp. 97, an action to recover on a bill of exchange, drawn in two parts, payable in France, wherein it appeared that one part of the bill had been paid, it was held that an allegation in the complaint to the effect that, under certain provisions of the French Code of Commerce, a person who pays a bill of exchange at maturity and without opposition is presumed to be validly discharged, was sufficient as an allegation of the law of France that payment of one part of the bill was a valid payment and discharged the drawee.

But, in Colcord v. Banco de Tamauilipas (1918) 131 App. Div. 295, 163 N. Y. Supp. 710, the court said, with reference to the statute law of Mexico, governing the negotiation of drafts: "That law is so inartificially pleaded that it is not made applicable to the state of facts set forth. It is said that 'in and by the law of Mexico it was then and there provided' that the drawee must accept or refuse acceptance at a certain time, but whether this law was in effect when the transactions in question occurred does not appear. It is also alleged that 'it is also' the law of Mexico that, if the drawee allows a day to pass without returning the draft, he will be liable. But this allegation is also vague as to time, and it does not clearly show that the law was to the effect quoted when the transactions between the parties were had. For all these reasons, the demurrer to the second cause of action should also have been sustained."

In Forsyth v. Preer (1878) 62 Ala. 443, an allegation in the answer, to the effect that the plaintiff storekeepers, in default of having their weights and measures inspected and tested, were "prohibited from collecting any account, note, or other writing, the consideration of which is any commodity sold by their weight and measure, by the laws of the state of Georgia," was held to be insufficient.

And in Roots v. Merriwether (1871) 8 Bush (Ky.) 397, it was held that an allegation in an amended petition, to the effect that "by the law of Illinois" the defendant was indebted to the plaintiff in the amount of a certain note, was insufficient.

6. Statute relating to usury.

An averment that, by the law of a foreign state, the rate of interest was fixed at 7 per cent, and that "the effect of the law was to annul and render void all contracts for usury," has been held to be a mere statement of the conclusions of the pleader, and therefore insufficient. Cubbedge v. Napier (1878) 62 Ala. 518.

7. Statute relating to contracts.

In Lomb v. Pioneer Sav. & L. Co. (1891) 96 Ala. 430, 11 So. 154, an averment that "according to the laws of Minnesota" a certain mortgage contract was legal and valid was held to be insufficient.

Likewise, in Bean v. Briggs (1857) 4 Iowa, 464, it was held that it was not sufficient for a defendant to plead in his answer that the plaintiff could not recover on a contract of indorsement on a certificate of deposit by reason of the statute of another state, but he must plead the particular statute relied on, and set it out, as he would any other fact in the case.

8. Statute of Limitations.

In Showalter v. Rickert (1902) 64 Kan. 82, 67 Pac. 454, an allegation to the effect that a pretended cause of action was fully barred by the provisions of a foreign statute limiting the time within which to bring action for the recovery of money on contract, express or implied, not in writing, to two years after the cause of action arose, was held to be good.

9. Miscellaneous statutes.

In Consolidated Tank Line Co. v. Collier (1893) 148 Ill. 259, 39 Am. St. Rep. 181, 35 N. E. 756, an averment that certain instruments in writing were "duly acknowledged and delivered, in accordance with the laws of Iowa," was held to be a sufficient pleading of the sufficiency of the acknowledgment under the laws of Iowa.

In Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Shires (1884) 108 Ill. 617, an averment that, under the laws of a foreign state, a municipality was duly incorporated and possessed full power to regulate by ordinance the operation of trains, cars, and engines on railroads within its limits, was held to be sufficient.

In Swing v. Wanamaker (1910) 139 App. Div. 627, 124 N. Y. Supp. 231, an averment that certain contracts of insurance were void by reason of the failure of the insurance company to comply with the laws of a foreign state obligatory on insurance companies of other states seeking to transact business in that state was held to be sufficient.

But in Rothschild v. Rio Grande Western R. Co. (1890) 26 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 312, an allegation to the effect that, under the laws of another state, certain debts against several companies and corporations consolidating into a new corporation respectively attached against the new corporation and became enforceable against it to the same extent as if the debts had been incurred or contracted by it, was held to be bad on demurrer. L. F. C.

CHARLES L. GAY, Respt.,

v.

LAVINA STATE BANK, Appt.

Montana Supreme Court — December 5, 1921.

(— Mont. —, 202 Pac. 753.)

Broker — insurance — liability for failure to secure policy.

1. A broker taking money to secure insurance, who unjustifiably fails to secure the same, or to make an effort to do so, becomes liable, in case of loss, to pay as much of the same as would have been covered by the policy had it been secured.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1214.]

Appeal — theory of trial — binding effect.

2. The theory upon which a case is tried with the acquiescence of the parties is binding upon them upon appeal.

[See 2 R. C. L. 183.]

Insurance — broker — definition.

3. A bank engaged in receiving applications for insurance without employment from any special company, and placing the insurance in any company selected by the assured or itself, is an insurance broker.

[See 14 R. C. L. 868.]

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Musselshell County (Jones, J.) in favor of plaintiff, and from an order overruling a motion for new trial, in an action brought to recover damages for breach of a contract to procure a policy of insurance applied for by plaintiff. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. V. D. Dusenbery, for appellant:

Even if a contract to procure insurance had been alleged in the complaint and proven on the trial, the action could not be maintained, for the reason that the defendant was acting as agent for the Hartford Fire Insurance Company, a disclosed principal, and the principal alone would be liable.

22 Cyc. 1427-1432; 14 R. C. L. pp. 875, 876; Continental Ins. Co. v. Ruckman, 127 Ill. 364, 11 Am. St. Rep. 121, 20 N. E. 77; Steele v. German Ins. Co. 93 Mich. 81, 18 L.R.A. 85, 53 N. W. 514; Home Ins. Co. v. Strange, 70 Ind. App. 49, 123 N. E. 127; 2 C. J. 712; J. C. Smith & W. Co. v. Prussian Nat. Ins. Co. 68 N. J. L. 674, 54 Atl. 458; British American Assur. Co. v. Cooper, 6 Colo. App. 25, 40 Pac. 147; Rockford Ins. Co. v. Winfield, 57 Kan. 576, 47 Pac. 511; Mooney v. Merriam, 77 Kan. 305, 94 Pac. 263; Ramspeck v. Pattillo, 104 Ga. 772, 42 L.R.A. 197, 69 Am. St. Rep. 197, 30 S. E. 962; British Ins. Co. v. Lambert, 26 Or. 199, 37 Pac. 909; Pflester v. Missouri State L. Ins. Co. 85 Kan. 97, 116 Pac. 245; Blake v. Farmers' Mut. Lightning Protected F. Ins. Co. 194 Mich. 589, 161 N. W. 890; Criswell v. Riley, 5 Ind. App. 496, 30 N. E. 1101; Wallace v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 31 Idaho, 481, 174 Pac. 1009.

The verdict should be set aside for the reason that, even if there was an agreement to procure insurance made between the plaintiff and the defendant, the evidence fails to show any breach of the agreement.

British America Assur. Co. v. Cooper, 6 Colo. App. 25, 40 Pac. 147.

Messrs. Dillavou & Moore and W. W. Mercer, for respondent:

Defendant was liable for failure to procure the insurance.

22 Cyc. p. 1448; Tanenbaum v. Rosenthal, 44 App. Div. 431, 60 N. Y. Supp. 1092; Rezac v. Zima, 96 Kan. 752, 153 Pac. 500, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 1085; Wallace v. Weaver, 47 Mont. 437, 133 Pac. 1099.

The defense that the contract from which the claim sued for arises is illegal must be specifically pleaded.

State Sav. Bank v. Albertson, 39

Mont. 414, 102 Pac. 692; Owens v. Davenport, 39 Mont. 555, 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) 996, 104 Pac. 682.

The general rule that an agent cannot act for both parties does not apply where the interests of the two principals are not conflicting, and loyalty by the agent to one of them is not a breach of his duty to the other, as where the agent exercises no discretion in the matter, but acts merely to bring the parties together.

2 C. J. 713; German Ins. Co. v. Independent School Dist. 25 C. C. A. 492, 49 U. S. App. 271, 80 Fed. 366; Todd v. German American Ins. Co. 2 Ga. App. 789, 59 S. E. 94; Pauly v. Pauly, 107 Cal. 8, 48 Am. St. Rep. 98, 40 Pac. 29.

A party may not adopt a theory on appeal which was not relied upon in the trial court, and insist upon a new trial because of the same.

Dempster v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. 37 Mont. 335, 96 Pac. 717; Cohen v. Clark, 44 Mont. 151, 119 Pac. 775; Farwell v. Farwell, 47 Mont. 574, 133 Pac. 958, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 78; Raiche v. Morrison, 47 Mont. 127, 130 Pac. 1074; Aikens v. Frank, 21 Mont. 192, 53 Pac. 538.

In an action against an agent to recover damages for a breach of contract to insure the principal's property, the measure of damages, in case of the destruction of the property, is the value thereof, up to the amount for which it was agreed that insurance should be procured.

Morris v. Summerl, 2 Wash. C. C. 203, Fed. Cas. No. 9,837; Alabama Red Cedar Co. v. Tennessee Valley Bank, 200 Ala. 622, 76 So. 980; Criswell v. Riley, 5 Ind. App. 496, 30 N. E. 1101, 32 N. E. 814; Everett v. O'Leary, 90 Minn. 154, 95 N. W. 901; Lindsay v. Pettigrew, 5 S. D. 500, 59 N. W. 726; Rezac v. Zima, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 1040, note.

Galen, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In this case it appears that the defendant, at all of the times mentioned, was a banking corporation organized under the laws of the state of Montana, conducting a banking business at Lavina, Montana. In connection with its business, it was engaged in the writing of hail insurance for the Hartford Fire Insurance Company of Hartford, Connecticut, and other companies, for the accommodation of customers. A. C. Bayers, who was vice president of the defendant bank, was the local insurance agent of the Hartford Insurance Company at Lavina, but the insurance business was conducted by the bank, and the profits derived therefrom went to the bank, although done in the name of A. C. Bayers, agent. Applications for such insurance were received by any of the officers or agents of the bank, and this method of handling the business was known to and approved by the insurance company. The plaintiff, a farmer owning crops growing in the vicinity of Lavina, on June 1st, 1918, visited the defendant bank, and there interviewed William Bargain, one of its bookkeepers, then in charge of the bank, concerning hail insurance covering such crops, and a small overdraft due the bank. Bargain accepted for the bank plaintiff's promissory note for the sum of $20, to cover the plaintiff's overdraft, amounting to $9.13, and credited the balance of the $20 note to plaintiff's account. At plaintiff's request, Bargain filled out an application for hail insurance, and plaintiff signed the same, such application being made out upon the form provided by the Hartford Fire Insurance Company, and reciting in part as follows: That Charles L. Gay of Broadview postoffice, in the county of Yellowstone, state of Montana, makes application to the Hartford Fire Insurance Company of Hartford, Connecticut, for insurance upon growing crops, consisting of 65 acres of wheat at $10 per acre, amount $650, and 35 acres of alfalfa at not to exceed $10 per acre, amount $350, against damage by hail for the year 1918, to the amount of $1,000, to be covered by such insurance from the date of the signing of the application to September 15, 1918, at noon, standard time; it being declared in the application that the total number of acres for which insurance was applied for was 100, and that the applicant was a tenant of the land described, and that the application was made with the specific reference to the "policy stipulations and agreements" attached to the application, and the statements and representations made in the application. The plaintiff executed his promissory note for $100, covering the amount of the insurance premium, and delivered it to Bargain which note is dated at Lavina, Montana, June 1, 1918, payable November 1st after date, to the order of Lavina State Bank, Lavina, Montana. The plaintiff's crops were destroyed by hail on August 20, 1918, and this action was brought by the plaintiff on September 10, 1918, to recover the sum of $1,000 damages on account of the loss of such crops. The action is for breach of contract due to defendant's failure to procure the policy of insurance applied for by the plaintiff.

In defense it was contended, and proof was introduced at the trial to show, that the application for the insurance, and the promissory note covering the premium received, were received and accepted upon the express understanding and condition that the transaction should meet with the approval of P. A. Teichroew, cashier of the bank, and that until such time the insurance would not be put in force; that, upon the return of Mr. Teichroew to the bank a few days later, he refused to accept the note unless it was secured, and that thereupon Mr. Bargain wrote a letter and mailed it to the plaintiff at Broadview, advising that security was required for the insurance premium note before his application would be accepted. Bargain testified that on August 20, 1918, after the destruction of plaintiff's crops by hail, the plaintiff talked with him at Lavina over long-distance telephone from Broadview, and admitted receiving Bargain's letter, but said he thought it could be fixed up later. The plaintiff denied that the note was given or accepted conditionally; denied receipt of the letter from Bargain, or any knowledge that the insurance was not in full force and effect until after the hailstorm and telephonic communication had with the defendant bank. The premium note and application for the policy of hail insurance were returned to the plaintiff a day or two subsequent to the hailstorm, having been theretofore pigeon-holed in the bank. The case was tried in the district court of Musselshell county, with a jury, and resulted in a verdict and judgment in plaintiff's favor for the sum of $675. The appeal is from the judgment and order overruling defendant's motion for a new trial.

Several alleged errors are assigned as reason for reversal, but in our view but one question is necessary for consideration for complete disposition of the case, presented by motion for a directed verdict, and made defendant's first specification of error; that is, whether the defendant bank may be held in damages for its failure to procure for plaintiff a policy of insurance protecting him from loss or damage to his crops in consequence of hail. As to whether it was an executory or executed contract for insurance constituted a question of fact for the jury, and upon the controverted evidence the jury resolved the issue in favor of the plaintiff. We are bound by the jury's findings in this regard, so that we have before us the application for insurance and promissory note for premium, both executed by the plaintiff and accepted by the bank, and question arises as to the bank's liability to respond in damages for plaintiff's loss, in consequence of the defendant's failure to secure the crop insurance applied for.

The complaint alleges that the contract for breach of which the damages are sought is one by which "the defendant undertook and agreed to insure" the growing crops described; but no contention was made by the defendant in its answer or at the trial that the contract was anything more than one to procure insurance on plaintiff's crops. The trial proceeded throughout on the latter theory, evidence being admitted in support thereof without objection, and we will accept the same without further inquiry. The theory upon which with the acquiescence of the parties, is binding upon them here. Talbott v. Butte City Water Co. 29 Mont. 17, 73 Pac. 1111; Hendrickson v. Wallace, 29 Mont. 507, 75 Pac. 355; Mares v. Dillon, 30 Mont. 117, 75 Pac. 963; Cohen v. Clark, 44 Mont. 151, 119 Pac. 775; Raiche v. Morrison, 47 Mont. 127, 130 Pac. 1074; Moss v. Goodhart, 47 Mont. 257, 131 Pac. 1071; Nilson v. Kalispell, 47 Mont. 416, 132 Pac. 1133; Farwell v. Farwell, 47 Mont. 574, 133 Pac. 958, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 78; Wallace v. Weaver, 47 Mont. 437, 133 Pac. 1099; Mosher v. Sutton's New Theater Co. 48 Mont. 137, 137 Pac. 534; Roberts v. Sinnott, 55 Mont. 369, 177 Pac. 252; Babcock v. Engel, 58 Mont. 597, 194 Pac. 137; Hoskins v. Scottish Union & Nat. Ins. Co. 59 Mont. 50, 195 Pac. 837. No question was raised by the pleadings or otherwise as to whether the contract of the defendant bank was ultra vires, so that subject is passed without consideration, and no opinion is expressed thereon.

Appeal—theory of trial—binding effect.

The action is one founded on contract rather than tort, and, from the facts stated, it appears that the defendant bank was acting as an insurance broker rather than as an insurance agent. It was applied to by the plaintiff for hail insurance, and it accepted and received an application for such insurance with the Hartford Fire Insurance Company, whose agent at Lavina was A. C. Bayers, vice president of the defendant bank. It was in position to accept and receive applications for hail insurance with other companies, but, as no company was specially designated by the broker—definition.

Insurance—

plaintiff, his application was by the defendant bank made to the Hartford Fire Insurance Company. This clearly brings the defendant within the definition of an insurance broker, as follows: "An insurance broker is one who acts as a middleman between the assured and the insurer, and who solicits insurance from the public under no employment from any special company, but, having secured an order, he either places the insurance with a company selected by the assured, or, in the absence of any selection by him, then with a company selected by such broker." 14 R. C. L. 868; 9 C. J. 509.

Every broker is in a sense an agent, but every agent is not a broker. The chief feature which distinguishes a broker from other classes of agents is that he is an intermediary, or middleman, and, in accepting applications for insurance, acts in a certain sense as the agent of both parties to the transaction. Another distinction is that the idea of exclusiveness enters into an employment of agency, while in respect to a broker there is a holding out of oneself generally for employment in securing insurance. 9 C. J. 510, 511.

"An agent who takes his principal's money under an express agreement to procure insurance, and unjustifiably fails to secure the same or make an effort in that direction, thereby assumes the risk and becomes liable, in case of loss, to pay as much of the same as would have been covered by the insurance policy for which his principal had paid, provided the same had been procured as directed." Lindsay v. Pettigrew, 5 S. D. 500, 59 N. W. 726.

Broker—insurance—liability for failure to secure policy.

In the case of Rezac v. Zima, 96 Kan. 752, 153 Pac. 500, Ann. Cas.

1918B, 1035, Mr. Chief Justice Johnston, speaking for the court, stated the correct rule as follows: "Brokers are equally liable where they undertake to procure insurance and utterly neglect to obtain any insurance, or fail to carry out material provisions of their agreement, and a loss results. In such a case they are liable for as much as would have been covered by the insurance which they agreed to procure"—citing Milliken v. Woodward, 64 N. J. L. 444, 45 Atl. 796; Lindsay v. Pettigrew, 5 S. D. 500, 59 N. W. 726; Sawyer v. Mayhew, 51 Me. 398; Diamond v. Duncan, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 138 S. W. 429; Mallery v. Frye, 21 App. D. C. 105; Criswell v. Riley, 5 Ind. App. 496, 503, 30 N. E. 1101, 32 N. E. 814; Backus v. Ames, 79 Minn. 145, 81 N. W. 766; Kaw Brick Co. v. Hogsett, 73 Mo. App. 432; note in 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 631.

And, as between the insured and his own agent or broker, authorized by him to procure insurance, there is the usual obligation on the part of the latter to carry out the instructions given him and faithfully discharge the trust reposed in him, and he may become liable in damages for breach of duty. If he is instructed to procure specific insurance, and fails to do so, he is liable to his principal for the damage suffered by reason of the want of such insurance. The liability of the agent with respect to the loss is that which would have fallen upon the company had the insurance been effected as contemplated. Negligence on the part of the agent, defeating in whole or in part the insurance which he is directed to secure, will render him liable to his principal for the resulting loss. 22 Cyc. 1448, 1449.

The only case which has been called to our attention, presenting facts almost identical with the case before us, is that of Mayhew v. Glazier, 68 Colo. 350, 189 Pac. 843, wherein Mr. Justice Allen, for the court, used language, from which we quote with approval as particularly applicable to the case before us, as follows: "It may be assumed that the plaintiff understood that Mayhew was an agent for an insurance company, but that fact tends to prove, rather than to disprove, the existence of an agreement, such as that alleged in the complaint, between the plaintiff and the defendant Mayhew in his individual capacity. If the plaintiff believed that Mayhew was an insurance agent, he would naturally believe that such agent could cause a policy to be issued, and, if desiring insurance, might give to such agent an application for insurance. Such was the situation between the plaintiff and the defendant Mayhew. The plaintiff desired hail insurance, effective at the earliest possible moment. He gave the defendant his promissory note, payable to the defendant himself, as payment for the premium, with the understanding that the defendant would cause a policy to be issued without any delay. . . . The contract sued upon, alleged to have been made between the plaintiff and the defendant Mayhew, did not conflict with any duty Mayhew owed to the insurance company. Mayhew was the agent of the insurance company for the purpose of soliciting applications for hail insurance, but had no authority to issue policies. . . . The contract made between the plaintiff and the defendant Mayhew was not against the interests of the insurance company. It did not call for the issuance of a policy different from the policies usually issued. It did not deprive the company of any premium due it. Mayhew took the note of plaintiff to himself. . . . Whatever duty he owed to the company, it did not preclude him from acting as the agent for the insured in the matter of causing a policy to be issued, and in the matter of immediately forwarding plaintiff's application for insurance to the company, or to some agent authorized to receive and approve such application. This case falls within the rule, stated in 22 Cyc. 1445, that 'the same person may act for different purposes as agent of the different parties to the contract, so that for one purpose he may be the agent of the insured, although as to the procuring of the insurance he also represents the company.' As above indicated, we find that the alleged contract, upon which the plaintiff brought this action, was one made by the defendant Mayhew in his individual capacity, and not as an agent of the insurance company, and that such contract is valid."

From the record presented on this appeal, the defendant cannot escape liability, and the judgment and order are affirmed.

Brantly, Ch. J., specially concurring:

Upon the theory that the defendant in this case, a banking corporation, could lawfully conduct an insurance business, there is no objection to be made to the conclusion reached by my associates. Since, however, the defendant is a banking corporation, and, in my opinion is presumptively not authorized by its charter to enter into contracts, either of insurance or to procure insurance, the contract upon which recovery is upheld in this case is prima facie invalid. This question seems not to have been agitated in the trial court, nor has it been presented by appellant in this court. I, therefore, concur in the affirmation of the judgment and order, but in doing so desire not to be understood as assenting to any implication that may be drawn from the opinion to the contrary, in any case in which the question may hereafter be presented.

NOTE.

The liability of broker or agent for failure to procure or keep up insurance is considered in the annotation following ELAM v. SMITHDEAL REALTY & INS. CO. post, 1214.

I. R. ELAM, Appt.,
v.
SMITHDEAL REALTY & INSURANCE COMPANY.

North Carolina Supreme Court—December 7, 1921.

(— N. C. —, 109 S. E. 632.)

Insurance — liability of broker for failure to secure policy.

1. Where an insurance agent or broker undertakes to procure a policy of insurance for another, affording protection against a designated risk, the law imposes upon him the duty, in the exercise of reasonable care, to perform the duty he has assumed, and, within the amount of the proposed policy, he may be held liable for the loss properly attributable to his negligent default.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1214.]

Evidence — parol of negotiations for insurance policy — action against broker.

2. The rule that a policy of insurance, when issued, is considered as expressing the contract between the parties so as to shut off evidence of prior parol assurances in contravention of the written policy, has no application in a suit against the broker for failure to furnish the policy contracted for.

Contract — consideration — agreement to secure insurance policy.

3. The trust and confidence imposed in a broker employed to secure insurance on property afford a sufficient consideration for his undertaking to carry out the instructions given.

— promise to take policy as consideration.

4. The promise by a property owner to take a policy of insurance for the securing of which he employs a broker is a sufficient consideration for the broker's undertaking to carry out his instructions with respect to the policy.

— breach — duty to minimize loss.

5. In case of breach of contract which is definite and entire, or of tort committed, the injured person must do whatever reasonable care and business prudence require to minimize the loss.

[See 8 R. C. L. 442.]

Trial — question for jury — effect of failure to read policy.

6. Whether or not the failure of the owner of an automobile to read the policy insuring the car is responsible for loss, due to its failure to cover a risk from which loss results, is a question for the jury, where the policy was delivered to a third person for him, and kept in the latter's safe, while on several occasions the broker, in his presence, referred to the policy as covering the desired risk.

Election of remedies — contract or tort — breach of duty by agent.

7. The principal may ordinarily elect to sue for breach of contract or in tort for failure of his agent to perform a duty involved in the agency contract.

[See 9 R. C. L. 966.]

Principal and agent — breach of duty — action for negligence — effect of employer's negligence.

8. In an action against a broker for breach of contract to secure a specified form of insurance on his employer's property, negligence of the owner contributing to the loss will not defeat the action in toto.

Damages — breach of contract to secure insurance policy — nominal.

9. Nominal damages only can be recovered for breach by a broker of his undertaking to secure a specified form of insurance on his employer's property, where the employer contributed to the loss by negligent failure to ascertain the defect in the policy delivered to him.

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Forsyth County (Webb, J.) granting a nonsuit in an action brought to recover damages for breach of a contract to procure a policy of insurance protecting plaintiff's automobile against damage by collision. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Parrish & Deal, for appellant:

An insurance agent or broker who undertakes to obtain insurance of a specified kind, who subsequently informs the insured that he has obtained such insurance, upon which statement the insured relies, but who fails to obtain it, to the injury of the insured, is liable for such failure.

Ann. Cas. 1918B, 1035, and note; Rezac v. Zima, 96 Kan. 752, 153 Pac. 500; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Thorne, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 631, and note, 103 C. C. A. 436, 180 Fed. 82; Wallace v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 31 Idaho, 481, 174 Pac. 1009.

The same person may act as agent for both the insurer and insured, so long as the interests of the two principals are not incompatible.

Bond v. National F. Ins. Co. 83 W. Va. 105, 97 S. E. 692; American F. Ins. Co. v. King Lumber & Mfg. Co. 74 Fla. 130, 77 So. 168; Taylor v. Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co. 68 Pa. Super. Ct. 302.

No acquiescence or waiver by plaintiff of his rights against the defendant arose out of the delivery of the policies to him and their acceptance.

25 Cyc. 727; Bostwick v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 116 Wis. 392, 67 L.R.A. 705, 89 N. W. 538, 92 N. W. 246; McMaster v. New York L. Ins. Co. 183 U. S. 25, 46 L. ed. 64, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 10; Jones v. Gilbert, 93 Ga. 605, 20 S. E. 48; Roddey v. Talbot, 115 N. C. 287, 20 S. E. 375.

Messrs. Holton & Holton, Swink & Hutchins, and O. O. Efrid for appellee.

Hoke, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

There was evidence on the part of plaintiff tending to show that on or about March 31, 1919, the plaintiff entered into a contract with defendant company, doing business, among other things, as insurance agents and brokers, to procure a policy of $5,000 on the car of defendant, affording protection against damage by fire, or collision, or other kind of accident; that shortly thereafter the said agent came to plaintiff, who was at the time presently engaged at his business in a tobacco warehouse, and told witness he had obtained the policy desired and had left same for plaintiff at the garage with the proprietor, who had put the policy in the latter's safe; plaintiff, with a view of then paying the premium, asked for the amount, and was told by the agent, an officer, and one of the owners of the defendant company, that plaintiff had sixty days in which to pay the premium, and it appeared that the premium was paid after the accident, and after suit was instituted against defendant; that within a week from this time, or near that, plaintiff's car, in a collision, sustained damages to the amount of $1,000, and, on application or preparation through the same agent for adjustment with the insurance company which had issued the policy, it was ascertained that the policy did not extend to or cover such damages. There was evidence to the effect, further, that during the time the policy remained in the safe and before the injury, when plaintiff's car had a near accident, but sustained no pecuniary damage, the agent had assured plaintiff that in any event plaintiff was protected, as the policy he had procured covered risks of that kind, and that on another occasion, when the owner of another car was about to procure insurance against accident and collision through defendant, plaintiff being present, the agent, referring to plaintiff, said he had a policy of the kind on the car owned by him, and also that when plaintiff reported the loss, and it was found on examination that the risk was not covered, the same agent, Mr. Smithdeal, expressed his regret, saying: "Mr. Elam I misrepresented this to you, and I am just as sorry as you are. I thought you were insured."

Upon this statement of the facts chiefly pertinent to the inquiry we are of opinion that the judgment of nonsuit should be set aside, and the cause submitted to the jury. It is very generally held that, where an insurance agent or broker undertakes to procure a policy of insurance for another, affording protection against a designated risk, the law imposes upon him the duty, in the exercise of reasonable care, to perform the duty

Insurance—liability of broker for failure to secure policy.

he has assumed, and, within the amount of the proposed policy, he may be held liable for the loss properly attributable to his negligent default. Rezac v. Zima, 96 Kan. 752, 153 Pac. 500, reported also in Ann. Cas. 1918B, 1035; Thomas v. Funkhouser, 91 Ga. 478, 18 S. E. 312; Backus v. Ames, 79 Minn. 145, 81 N. W. 766; Lindsay v. Pettigrew, 5 S. D. 500, 59 N. W. 726; Criswell v. Riley, 5 Ind. App. 496, 30 N. E. 1101, 32 N. E. 814; Evan L. Reed Mfg. Co. v. Wurts, 187 Ill. App. 379; Fellowes v. Gordon, 8 B. Mon. 415; Mechem, Agency, § 1258.

In resistance to the application of the principle to the facts of the present record, we are cited to a number of authorities to the effect that a policy of insurance, when issued, is considered as expressing the contract between the parties and has the effect of shutting off prior or contemporaneous parol inducements and assurances in contravention of the written policy. The position, in proper instances, is very generally recognized, and has been approved in many cases in this jurisdiction. Clements v. Life Ins. Co. 155 N. C. 61, 62, 70 S. E. 1076; Floars v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 144 N. C. 232, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 357, 56 S. E. 915. But in the instant case the action is not one against the insurance company, in which plaintiff is seeking to hold it liable for an obligation not contained in the written policy, but plaintiff sues the agent and broker for negligent failure to perform a duty he had undertaken and assumed as agent, by which plaintiff has suffered the loss complained of, and in our opinion the authorities cited are not apposite to the question presented on the record.

Evidence—parol of negotiations for insurance policy—action against broker.

It is further insisted for defendant that no cause of action is disclosed, because there is no consideration given for defendant's promise, but the better-considered decisions on the subject are to the effect that, while the agent or broker in question was not obligated to assume the duty of procuring the policy, when he did so, the law imposed upon him the duty of performance in the exercise of ordinary care, and as a matter of contract it is said in some of the cases on the subject that the trust and confidence reposed in him as agent afforded a sufficient consideration for the undertaking and carrying out the instructions given. Criswell v. Riley, 5 Ind. App. 496, 30 N. E. 1101, 32 N. E. 814. And in Evan L. Reed Mfg. Co. v. Wurts, 187 Ill. App. 386, Presiding Justice Baume, delivering the opinion, quotes with approval from 1 Joyce on Insurance, § 687, as follows: "If a person voluntarily, without consideration, and without expectation of remuneration or reward, agrees to procure an insurance, and actually takes steps in the matter, he is responsible for misfeasance, and if he proceeds to effect a policy, and is so negligent and unskilled that no benefit is derived therefrom, he is liable, although he was not bound to undertake the performance."

Contract—consideration—agreement to secure insurance policy.

And it would seem that the promise to take the policy would suffice as a consideration. Again, it is contended that defendant may not be held liable for this loss because of his own negligent default in not ascertaining the contents of the policy, and having taken out a policy which would have afforded him the protection he desired. It is an established principle with us, subject to some qualifications not pertinent to this inquiry, that in case of breach of contract which is definite and entire, or tort committed, it is incumbent upon the injured party to do

—promise to take policy as consideration.

—breach—duty to minimize loss.

what reasonable care and business

(— N. O. —, 109 S. E. 632.)

prudence require to minimize the loss, and for damages thereafter occurring, and incident to his own breach of duty, no recovery should be allowed, the same being regarded as too remote (Yowmans v. Hendersonville, 175 N. C. 574-579, 96 S. E. 45; Hocutt v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 147 N. C. 193, 60 S. E. 980; Bowen v. King, 146 N. C. 385, 59 S. E. 1044; Pittsburg, J. E. & E. R. Co. v. Wakefield Hardware Co. 143 N. C. 54, 55 S. E. 422; 8 R. C. L. 442); and it is also held with us, in accord with principles very generally prevailing, that where a person of mature years, of sound mind, who can read or write, signs or accepts a deed or formal contract affecting his pecuniary interest, it is his duty to read it, and knowledge of the contents will be imputed to him in case he has negligently failed to do so. But this is subject to the qualification that nothing has been said or done to mislead him, or to put a man of reasonable business prudence off his guard in the matter. Clements v. Life Ins. Co. supra; Floars v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 144 N. C. 233, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 357, 56 S. E. 915—the latter citing among the authorities Bostwick v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 116 Wis. 392, 67 L.R.A. 705, 89 N. W. 538, 92 N. W. 246.

In the present case, as it now appears, there are facts in evidence tending to show that plaintiff had the policy in his possession for some little time before the collision, and from reading it he could have ascertained that it did not afford any protection in case of collision. There are facts further to the effect that the policy was not delivered to him personally, but at a time when he was busily engaged in a tobacco warehouse, and same was left for him with the proprietor of the garage where his car was kept, and that several times while the policy was so placed, and before the collision, things were said and done by the agent giving assurance that the policy gave the protection contracted for; and, on application of the principles stated, we are of opinion that the cause should be submitted to the jury on the question whether the failure to hold an adequate policy is due to plaintiff's own negligence in not reading his policy and taking out one sufficient to protect him.

Trial—question for jury—effect of failure to read policy.

It is ordinarily true that for breaches of duty involved in the contract of agency the principal may sue, either for breach of contract for faithfulness, or in tort for a breach of duty imposed by the same. 31 Cyc. 1609. Where, in a case of this kind, the action is for tort, and there is a negligent default on the part of plaintiff contributing to the injury, this would have the effect of defeating the action. But where the action is brought for breach of contract, and that is established, contributory negligence is not allowed to defeat the action in toto, but the negligence of the claimant contributing to the injury is to be properly considered on the issue as to damages. Hale, Damages, p. 68.

Election of remedies—contract or tort—breach of duty by agent.

Principal and agent—breach of duty—action for negligence—effect of employer's negligence.

In the present case plaintiff has elected to sue for breach of contract of agency causing the damages complained of, and, if this should be established, the cause will be further considered on the question of damages, and, if it is made to appear on the facts as they may be accepted by the jury that the failure to have an adequate policy affording protection is due to plaintiff's own negligent default in not ascertaining the defect in the policy held by him, and procuring another, in that event the damages would be nominal.

Damages—breach of contract to secure insurance policy—nominal.

This will be certified that the judgment of nonsuit be set aside, and the cause tried by the jury on appropriate issues.

Reversed.

ANNOTATION.

Liability of broker or agent for failure to procure or keep up insurance.

- I. General rule, 1214.
- II. Liability of agent on failure to transmit premium, 1218.
- III. Measure of damages, 1219.

I. General rule.

It may be laid down as a general rule that a broker or agent who, with a view to compensation for his services, undertakes to procure insurance on the property of another, and who fails to do so, will be held liable for any damage resulting therefrom.

United States. — Manny v. Dunlap (1869) Woolw. 372, Fed. Cas. No. 9,047; Morris v. Summerl (1808) 2 Wash. C. C. 203, Fed. Cas. No. 9,837; Fries-Breslin Co. v. Bergen (1909) 168 Fed. 360, affirmed in (1910) 99 C. C. A. 384, 176 Fed. 76, which has writ of certiorari denied in (1910) 215 U. S. 609, 54 L. ed. 347, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 410.

Colorado. — Mayhew v. Glazier (1920) 68 Colo. 350, 189 Pac. 843.

Georgia. — Thomas v. Funkhouser (1893) 91 Ga. 478, 18 S. E. 312.

Idaho. — Wallace v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. (1918) 31 Idaho, 481, 174 Pac. 1009.

Illinois. — Evan L. Reed Mfg. Co. v. Wurts (1914) 187 Ill. App. 378. See also Rochis v. Milascewicz (1918) 211 Ill. App. 262.

Kansas. — Rezac v. Zima (1915) 96 Kan. 752, 153 Pac. 500, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 1035.

Massachusetts. — See Cass v. Lord (1920) 236 Mass. 430, 128 N. E. 716.

Minnesota. — Everett v. O'Leary (1903) 90 Minn. 154, 95 N. W. 901; Russell v. O'Connor (1912) 120 Minn. 66, 139 N. W. 148.

Missouri. — Kaw Brick Co. v. Hogsett (1898) 73 Mo. App. 432.

Montana. — See GAY v. LAVINA STATE BANK (reported herewith) ante, 1204.

New Hampshire. — Ela v. French (1841) 11 N. H. 356.

North Carolina. — See ELAM v. SMITHDEAL REALTY & INS. CO. (reported herewith) ante, 1210.

Pennsylvania. — See French v. Reed (1813) 6 Binn. 308.

South Dakota. — Lindsay v. Pettigrew (1894) 5 S. D. 500, 59 N. W. 726.

Texas. — See Diamond v. Duncan (1915) 107 Tex. 256, 172 S. W. 1100, affirming (1911) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 138 S. W. 429, rehearing denied in (1915) 107 Tex. 260, 177 S. W. 955.

Wisconsin. — Gegare v. Fox River Land & Loan Co. (1913) 152 Wis. 548, 140 N. W. 305.

Canada. — Rudd Paper Box Co. v. Rice (1912) 20 Ont. Week. Rep. 979, 3 Ont. Week. N. 534, 3 D. L. R. 253.

"An agent who takes his principal's money under an express agreement to procure insurance, and unjustifiably fails to secure the same or make an effort in that direction, thereby assumes the risk and becomes liable, in case of loss, to pay as much of the same as would have been covered by the insurance policy for which his principal had paid, provided the same had been procured as directed." Lindsay v. Pettigrew (S. D.) supra.

Mayhew v. Glazier (Colo.) supra, was an action for breach of contract brought by the plaintiff in an endeavor to recover damages for the loss of a portion of his crop of beans as a result of a hailstorm. It was alleged in the complaint that the defendant had agreed to cause a policy of hail insurance to be issued by a certain company on 80 acres of beans owned by the plaintiff, and that he had accepted the plaintiff's promissory note in payment of the premium; that he had, however, neglected to forward the application, and that the beans were uninsured at the time of the hailstorm by which they were partially destroyed. It was held that a cause of action was stated. It was objected by the defendant that no agent can be bound by a contract which he makes for a disclosed principal, but it was said by the court that in the case of the present agreement the defendant was not acting as the agent of the insurance company; that the plaintiff relied on the defendant personally to effect the insurance. It was further objected that an agent cannot make a valid contract where, in the same transaction, he acts as agent for both the insurer and the insured. But it was held that this rule was inapplicable in the case at bar, since the alleged contract did not conflict in any way with any duty owed by the defendant to the insurance company. The court held that there was no error in denying the defendant's motion for nonsuit and his later request for a directed verdict.

If an agent is in the habit of effecting insurance for his correspondent, and is directed to procure such insurance, but neglects to do so, he will be answerable for the losses as insurer, and is entitled to a premium as such. Morris v. Summerl (1808) 2 Wash. C. C. 203, Fed. Cas. No. 9,837.

So, an agent will be liable if he neglects to renew a policy which has expired if he is the agent of the insured to keep the premises insured. Thomas v. Funkhouser (Ga.) supra. And see Diamond v. Duncan (Tex.) supra.

"If an agent neglects to procure insurance, or does not follow instructions when obligated so to do, or if the policy obtained is void or materially defective through the agent's fault, or if the principal suffers damage by reason of any mistake or act of omission or commission of the agent which constitutes a breach of duty to his principal, he is liable to his principal for any loss he may have sustained thereby." Evan L. Reed Mfg. Co. v. Wurts (Ill.) supra. See to the same effect, Rudd Paper Box Co. v. Rice (Ont.) supra.

The responsibility of an agent to his principal for a failure to procure insurance goes no further than to require that the agent shall carry out the instructions given him and faithfully discharge the trust reposed in him. If he is instructed to procure specific insurance, he must do so, and, if there is a general undertaking to keep the property of the principal insured, the agent is liable if he neglects to renew the insurance on the property. Fries-Breslin Co. v. Bergen (Fed.) supra.

Where insurance agents undertook to place a person's insurance and to keep it up to the sum of $7,000, it was held in Kaw Brick Co. v. Hogsett (1898) 73 Mo. App. 432, that the employment was a continuing one, the court saying: "It was a single engagement, not two contracts or agreements—the one to place and the other to maintain,—as it seems to be treated by defendant's learned counsel. And when defendants entered upon the performance thereof, as they did in placing the insurance and subsequently taking out two other policies in lieu of two canceled, then they must be held for every act of negligence or misfeasance, attributable to their conduct, which brought damage to the plaintiff." The court further said: "It can hardly be denied that the testimony in this case tends to prove that defendants agreed with plaintiff not only to place said $7,000 insurance on plaintiff's property, but as well to keep the same insured to that amount in good solvent companies. It was an employment for a definite service for an indefinite period of time. And if there was a contractual duty imposed on defendants to place and keep said insurance on plaintiff's property, then it is clear that this duty was negligently omitted, and that plaintiff by reason thereof suffered loss. But for the defense it is contended that if there was such a promise it was unsupported by any valuable consideration, and cannot, therefore, serve as the basis of an action for damages. Conceding that defendant's agreement to place and keep $7,000 insurance on plaintiff's property was, at the time it was made, without consideration moving from the plaintiff, and yet plaintiff may recover if defendants, notwithstanding the absence of a consideration, entered upon and in part performed their agreement. Mechem, in his work on Agency, § 478, thus expresses the rule with reference to these gratuitous promises: 'If in such a case the agent refuses to enter upon and perform the service at all, if his default consists in the mere not doing of a thing which he had promised to perform, and it be not a case where the law imposes upon him the duty to perform it, the fact that the per-the promise of performance was entirely without consideration—will furnish a complete defense to a claim for damages on account of such default. This is upon the familiar ground that the nonperformance of a gratuitous executory contract constitutes no cause of action. But where, on the other hand, the agent has undertaken or entered upon the performance of the service, although it be gratuitous, it then becomes his duty to conform to the instructions given. If he were not willing to do so, he should have declined to serve; but having assumed the performance of the service, the trust and confidence reposed furnish a sufficient consideration for the undertaking to obey instructions, and a failure to do so will subject him to liability for the loss or damage occasioned thereby."

In ELAM v. SMITHDEAL REALTY & INS. Co. (reported herewith) ante, 1210, it was shown that the plaintiff had commissioned the defendant to procure for him certain insurance on his motor car, protecting him from damage thereto by fire or collision. Insurance was obtained by the defendant on the car, but, following a collision in which damages were sustained by the automobile, it was discovered that there was no protection furnished against accidents of such nature, although the representative of the defendant had given the plaintiff assurances to the contrary. The court, upholding the principle of the general rule stated above, holds that the judgment of nonsuit should be set aside, and the cause submitted to the jury on appropriate issues. Objection was made that there was no consideration given for the defendant's promise, but the court considers that the broker, having assumed the office of procuring the policy, had imposed on him by law the duty of performance in the exercise of ordinary care, and it is pointed out that, in some cases on the subject, the trust and confidence reposed in one as agent constitute a sufficient consideration for the undertaking and carrying out of the instruction. In Wallace v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. (1918) 31 Idaho, 481, 174 Pac. 1009, it was sought to recover damages for a loss by fire to the plaintiff's store. It appeared that the plaintiff had agreed to allow the codefendant, Strickfadden, the insurance company's agent, to insure the plaintiff's store in the defendant company, and had given him instructions to that effect, relying on him to procure the policy. The defendant, Strickfadden, failed to perform his agreement, and, eight days after the time the insurance was to commence, the store was, to a great extent, destroyed by fire. Speaking of the defendant, Strickfadden, the court said: "His conduct in procuring respondent not to renew his expiring policy, coupled with his failure, because of his negligence, to keep that promise, whereby respondent lost his property without the protection a policy of insurance would have afforded him, was a tort." And it was held that he was personally liable for his acts and omissions resulting in the plaintiff's damage.

In Russell v. O'Connor (1912) 120 Minn. 66, 139 N. W. 148, it appeared that the defendant, an insurance agent, received instructions from the owner of property to procure insurance on a certain building, of the details of which he had knowledge by virtue of prior insurance transactions between the parties, and that he undertook to insure the property by saying: "I will attend to that right away." It was held that he undertook to use reasonable diligence to get the property insured and take all steps property by insurance, then to notify the plaintiff of his inability so to do. And whether the defendant fulfilled his obligations as to the exercise of reasonable diligence to get the property insured, and as to notifying the plaintiff of his inability so to do, were held to be questions of fact for the jury. See also Gardner v. Hermann (1911) 116 Minn. 161, 133 N. W. 558.

Where one undertakes to effect insurance in accordance with instructions, he impliedly undertakes to give notice to the owner in the event of his failure to procure such insurance. Callander v. Oelrichs (1838) 5 Bing. N. C. 58, 132 Eng. Reprint, 1026. And see Gardner v. Hermann (Minn.) supra. The duty of the agent to give his principal notice of his inability to procure insurance does not arise until after the lapse of a reasonable time in which to make due efforts to place the insurance. Backus v. Ames (1900) 79 Minn. 145, 81 N. W. 766.

Orgel v. Goldsmith (1920) 192 App. Div. 49, 182 N. Y. Supp. 147, was an action to recover damages for an alleged breach of duty on the part of the defendants, in failing to procure a policy of insurance for the plaintiff, or to notify him of their inability to do so. It seems a policy had been issued at the instance of the defendants, but had been canceled without their knowledge for the nonpayment of the premium, the plaintiff failing to respond to the insurance company's demand therefor. The defendants later received the premium in cash, and, as it appears, made futile attempts to secure insurance for the plaintiff elsewhere, keeping him informed of that fact, and finally advising the plaintiff to seek insurance through other brokers. Following a loss by fire, the plaintiff recovered a judgment in the courts below, which was reversed on appeal as being against the weight of the evidence.

Where an agent exercises due diligence and good faith in his effort to procure insurance as he is directed, he will not be liable if the property is destroyed before he has time to the question whether a delay in procuring insurance is unreasonable is for the jury. Rainer v. Schulte (1907) 133 Wis. 130, 113 N. W. 396.

In Rochis v. Milascewicz (1918) 211 Ill. App. 262, it appeared that the plaintiff had obtained a judgment against the defendant, an insurance broker, in an action for a breach of contract to procure insurance. It was held that the payment of the premium was not necessary to the validity of a contract by an insurance broker to procure insurance, so as to defeat an action for the breach of such contract, especially where the payment was waived; nor could it be considered negligence barring recovery that the plaintiff waited four weeks after he had been assured by the defendant that the insurance had been sent for, but had not arrived, before seeking insurance elsewhere.

An agent will, of course, be liable to the owner of property, where he delivers to him a paper purporting to be a policy issued by an insurance company which has no existence in fact. Vann v. Downing (1891) 28 W. N. C. (Pa.) 259.

An agent will not be liable for his failure to procure insurance which would have been void if he had procured it in accordance with the directions of his principal. Alsop v. Coit (1815) 12 Mass. 40.

Before an agent can be held liable for a failure to procure insurance, there must be a valid contract to insure, and a breach thereof. A mere offer on the part of an agent to insure the owner's property will not mature into a complete and effectual contract until it is accepted by the person to whom it is made, and notice of acceptance, either actual or constructive, is given to the agent. Prescott v. Jones (1898) 69 N. H. 305, 41 Atl. 352. In that case it appeared that the defendants, as insurance agents, had insured the plaintiff's property in a certain insurance company until February 1, 1897; that on January 23, 1897, they notified the plaintiff that they would renew the pany and delivering them to the insured. In order to relieve himself from liability, he must, if charged by his contract with that duty, pay over the premiums to the company, and on failure to do so he will be held liable to the insured for the loss occasioned thereby. Antiseptic Bedding Co. v. Gurofski (1914) 33 Ont. L. Rep. 319, 8 Ont. Week. N. 92, 21 D. L. R. 483, modified in 7 Ont. Week. N. 95.

In Criswell v. Riley (1892) 5 Ind. App. 496, 30 N. E. 1101, 32 N. E. 814, it appeared that the plaintiff applied to his broker for insurance, which the latter undertook and agreed to procure, and, pursuant to the undertaking and agreement, he delivered to the plaintiff a certain duly executed policy, on the receipt of which the plaintiff paid to the agent the full amount of the premium. The agent failed to transmit the premium to the insurance company, or to any person authorized to receive the money for the company, such a payment being a condition precedent to the company's liability. Thereafter the property covered by the supposed insurance policy was destroyed by fire, and the plaintiff, learning for the first time that the premium had not been paid over to the company, brought suit against the agent for the loss sustained. This court, in affirming a recovery, said: "If the appellant was the agent of appellee in procuring for him the insurance, in the delivery of the policy, and collecting the premium, and through his negligence failed to pay the premium received from the appellee, by reason of which the policy was forfeited or void, then the appellant was liable for the damages sustained by the fire, by the appellee, for the amount of the loss not exceeding the amount of the insurance, and the insurance company was exempt from liability. The evidence tends to establish . . . that the appellant was the agent of the appellee in the procurement of said insurance, the payment of the premium to the insurance company after having received therefrom, that the appellant was in no sense the agent of the insurance company; that it was through his fault and negligence in not paying over the premium to said company that the policy of insurance he undertook and agreed to procure for the appellee could not be enforced against said insurance company; and that, under the evidence in the case, the appellant became liable to the appellee for the damages found by the court." See also Marrian v. Robbins (1905) 102 App. Div. 214, 92 N. Y. Supp. 654.

But under a similar state of facts it was held in Haight v. Kremer (1872) 9 Phila. (Pa.) 50, that the agent was not liable to the insured, who compromised with the insurer for less than the amount insured for, for the difference between the amount paid and the face of the policy. The court rested its decision on the ground that the payment of a certain sum by the company, and its acceptance by the plaintiff, operated as a waiver of the objection that the premium had not been paid, and a ratification of the policy as a valid contract of insurance.

III. Measure of damages.

The measure of the liability of a broker for his failure to procure insurance is the amount that would have been due under the insurance policy, provided it had been obtained.

United States.—Morris v. Summerl (1808) 2 Wash. C. C. 203, Fed. Cas. No. 9,887.

Alabama.—Alabama Red Cedar Co. v. Tennessee Valley Bank (1917) 200 Ala. 622, 76 So. 980.

Colorado. — Mayhew v. Glazier (1920) 68 Colo. 350, 189 Pac. 843.

District of Columbia.—See Emery v. Lord (1907) 29 App. D. C. 589.

Indiana.—Chriswell v. Riley (1892) 5 Ind. App. 496, 30 N. E. 1101, 32 N. E. 814.

Kansas.—Rezac v. Zima (1915) 96 Kan. 752, 158 Pac. 500, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 1035.

Minnesota. — Everett v. O'Leary (1903) 90 Minn. 154, 95 N. W. 901. |

CLATSOP COUNTY EX REL. AUGUST HILDEBRAND, Doing Business under the Firm Name and Style of Hildebrand & Company, Respt.,

v.

F. C. FELDSCHAU

and

UNITED STATES FIDELITY & GUARANTY COMPANY, Appt.

Oregon Supreme Court (Dept. No. 2) — July 30, 1921.

(— Or. —, 199 Pac. 953.)

Bonds — contractors — broader than statutory requirement — effect.

1. The mere fact that a bond required by a county from a contractor for road improvement imposes a greater liability than that required by statute does not render the provisions in excess of such statutory requirement void.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1227.]

Contract — consideration — award of contract for public work.

2. The award of a contract for public work is sufficient consideration to support a promise by the contractor and his surety to pay debts incurred in connection with the performance of the work.

[See 22 R. C. L. 630.]

Parties — right to sue on contractor's bond.

3. Persons furnishing supplies to a contractor for public work may sue on the bond taken by the public authorities and conditioned to pay for such supplies, although they are not parties to the contract and the consideration does not move directly from them.

[See 22 R. C. L. 632.]

Bond — liability for supplies for laborers' camp.

4. The surety on the bond of a contractor for public work which requires payment of all just debts, dues, and demands incurred in the performance of the work which is in excess of the statutory requirements for such bonds, is liable for equipment and supplies furnished for a laborers' camp established by the contractor.

APPEAL by defendant guaranty company from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Clatsop County (Eakin, J.) in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover on a public improvement bond for material alleged to have been furnished in the performance of work for the plaintiff county.

Affirmed.

Statement by Bean, J.:

This is an action brought on a public improvement bond, for materials furnished in the performance of road work for Clatsop county. The cause was tried by the court without the intervention of a jury. Findings of fact were made, and a judgment rendered in favor of plaintiff. The defendant United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company prosecuted an appeal directed against the judgment on two of the several causes of action included in the complaint. The claimants whose judgments are contested are August Hildebrand and Judd Brothers.

The defendant F. C. Feldschau, on February 13, 1917, entered into a written contract with Clatsop county to improve a portion of the Lewis and Clark county road. This contract contained, among other things, provisions for a bond, which was exacted as part of the contract from the contractor by Clatsop county. The bond was executed by F. C. Feldschau, as principal, and the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company, as surety, in the penal sum of $10,311. The bond, in ance of the contract by the principal, contained the stipulation that the principal "shall pay all laborers, mechanics, subcontractors, and materialmen, and all persons who shall supply such laborers, mechanics, or subcontractors with materials, supplies, or provisions for carrying on such work, and all just debts, dues, and demands incurred in the performance of such work, and shall in all respects faithfully perform said contract according to law, then this obligation shall be void; otherwise, to remain in full force and effect."

Messrs. Dey, Hampson, & Nelson, for appellant:

The defendant surety company is not liable under the bond to pay for materials supplied in the performance of the work.

Baker City Mercantile Co. v. Idaho Cement Pipe Co. 67 Or. 372, 136 Pac. 23; Carson v. Shelton, 128 Ky. 248, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 509, 107 S. W. 793; Columbia County v. Consolidated Constr. Co. 83 Or. 251, 163 Pac. 438; Dudley v. Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co. 65 Mich. 655, 32 N. W. 884; Luttrell v. Knoxville, L. F. & J. R. Co. 119 Tenn. 492, 123 Am. St. Rep. 737, 105 S. W. 565; Multnomah County v. United States Fidelity & G. Co. 87 Or. 198, L.R.A.1918C, 685, 170 Pac. 525; National Surety Co. v. United States, L.R.A.1917A, 336, 143 C. C. A. 99, 228 Fed. 577; Perrault v. Shaw, 69 N. H. 180, 76 Am. St. Rep. 160, 38 Atl. 724; Pennsylvania Co. v. Mehaffey, 75 Ohio St. 432, 116 Am. St. Rep. 746, 80 N. E. 177, 9 Ann. Cas. 305; Stewart v. Spalding, 71 Or. 310, 141 Pac. 1127; United States use of Sica v. Kimpland, 93 Fed. 403; United States use of Thomas Laughlin Co. v. Morgan, 111 Fed. 474.

Mr. C. J. Young also for appellant.

Mr. Edward C. Judd, for respondent:

A board of county commissioners authorized by statute to contract for the performance of a public improvement has the authority to require the contractor to exact a bond containing broader provisions than that required by the statutes, and if such bond is required and furnished, then the third parties for whose benefit it is provided cordance with the terms thereof.

Puget Sound State Bank v. Gallucci, 82 Wash. 445, 144 Pac. 698, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 767; Knapp v. Swaney, 56 Mich. 345, 56 Am. Rep. 397, 23 N. W. 162; Title Guaranty & S. Co. v. State, 61 Ind. App. 268, 109 N. E. 237, 111 N. E. 19; Elliott, Roads & Streets, 3d ed. 646; Smith v. Bowman, 32 Utah, 33, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 889, 88 Pac. 687; Denver v. Hindry, 40 Colo. 42, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1028, 90 Pac. 1028.

The items in the claims were necessary items to be and were used in the construction work provided for in the contract.

Baker City Mercantile Co. v. Idaho Cement Pipe Co. 67 Or. 372, 136 Pac. 23.

Bean, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Section 2991, Or. Laws, requires a contractor on public work, entering into a formal contract with a county, to execute the usual penal bond with good and sufficient sureties, with the additional obligations "that such contractor or contractors shall promptly make payments to all persons supplying him or them labor or materials for any prosecution of the work provided for in such contracts," and provides that persons furnishing such labor and materials shall have a right of action against the contractor and his sureties. It will be noticed that, in addition to the requirements of the statute prescribing the conditions of the bond, the instrument in question contains the provision for the payment of "all just debts, dues, and demands incurred in the performance of such work." Pursuant to the contract, Feldschau, about March 15, 1917, entered into the performance of the work, and conducted the same until the latter part of September, 1917. The road, which by the terms of the contract was to be improved, was not situated near any town or village, and in order that he could carry on the work it was necessary to maintain suitable living quarters and accommodations for a large number of laborers who were employed on the work. In ortain a camp, where the necessities of life for the employees could be obtained and the men could be housed.

The question involved is stated in the brief of counsel for appellant as follows: "The bond has a dual aspect,—i. e., for the faithful performance of the work and the payment for labor and material; but there is involved here only the statutory provision that the contractor 'shall promptly make payments to all persons supplying him or them labor or materials for any prosecution of the work provided for in such contracts.' The bond is broad in its terms, but is, of course, to be construed in the light of the statute, pursuant to which it was exacted. . . . The surety company, which is appellant here, does not question the correctness of any of the charges, or that these mercantile houses made the sales claimed. It rests its case solely upon the fact that the articles for which claim is asserted are not in any proper sense comprehended under the term 'materials' used in the statute."

In other words, the contention of the appellant is that the part of the bond which is in addition to the one compelled by the statute is of no force, and that the county was not authorized to require such an additional stipulation in the bond. We are not aware that this question, under our present statute, has been passed upon by this court.

The materials and supplies which were furnished by Hildebrand & Company consisted of camp equipment and utensils, such as were used in a camp in construction work of this kind, which were only meant to be used and to last during the period of improvement. The material and supplies furnished by Judd Brothers consisted of men's wearing apparel, bedding, overalls, underwear, and socks, which were purchased by Feldschau and furnished to his employees. The trial court found that the number of items furnished by the relator to Feldschau consisted of knives, forks, cooking utensils, and dishes, amounting to $85.75, which were not used up in the prosecution of the work, should be deducted from the claim. The trial court, among other things, found:

"That during the prosecution of said work, and between the 1st day of March, A. D. 1917, and the 1st day of June, A. D. 1917, the relator, August Hildebrand, at the request of F. C. Feldschau, sold and delivered to such defendant a large quantity of supplies and camp equipment, which were reasonably worth the sum of $428.92, and for which the said defendant, F. C. Feldschau, agreed to pay to the relator, August Hildebrand, the sum of $428.92. . . .

"Regarding relator's further and second cause of action against defendants, the court finds that during the prosecution of said work, and between the 12th day of March, A. D. 1917, and the 4th day of July, A. D. 1917, that Edward C. Judd and George F. Judd, copartners doing business under the firm name and style of Judd Brothers, bargained, sold, and delivered to defendant F. C. Feldschau goods, wares, and merchandise, consisting of men's wearing apparel, overalls, gloves, mittens, blankets, comforters, and other things necessary for workmen, at the agreed and stipulated price of $179.45, and that said goods, wares, and merchandise so sold and delivered by the said Judd Brothers to the said F. C. Feldschau were used by the said F. C. Feldschau in carrying on the work of said contract, and were exchanged by the said F. C. Feldschau with his laborers for wages."

As we understand the record, it is not questioned but that the amounts in controversy were just debts and demands incurred in the performance of the work. Many of the supplies would not be considered as "labor or materials," within the additional provision referred to contained in the bond is invalid, plaintiff cannot recover for the same in this action.

It is unquestioned that Feldschau voluntarily entered into a contract with Clatsop county. The county was authorized to make such contract. The surety company in the ordinary course of business, and it may be fairly assumed for compensation, voluntarily obligated itself as sponsor for Feldschau in the faithful performance of the contract, and the performance of all of the conditions incorporated in the bond. The parties were competent to enter into the undertaking. The bond was not repugnant to the letter or policy of

Bonds—contractors—broader than statutory requirement—effect.

the law, but was strictly in accordance with the policy of the law in this state to provide for the payment of labor and supplies and expenses in the construction of at common law, if it is entered into voluntarily by competent parties for a valid consideration, and is not repugnant to the letter or policy of the law; and such a bond, other than an official bond, is enforceable according to its conditions, although they are more onerous than would have been required if a statutory bond had been given for the same purpose. This rule has been applied to bonds given to the United States."

In observing the precedents in other states we find that the case of Puget Sound State Bank v. Gallucci, 82 Wash. 445, 144 Pac. 698, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 767, was an action upon contracts and bonds similar to those in the present case. The bank loaned money to the contractor for the purpose of paying for labor performed and materials used in the improvement. By the contracts and bonds in that case the contractor and his surety undertook to pay all "just debts, dues, and demands in-

It was there held that the surety on the bond was liable for the money so loaned by the bank, pursuant to an arrangement therefor, to enable the contractor to pay for labor and supplies.

The case of Title Guaranty & S. Co. v. State, 61 Ind. App. 268, 109 N. E. 237, was an action on a bond given to secure the performance of a contract for the construction of a free gravel road. The statute of that state provided for a bond conditioned, among other things, for the benefit of third persons, that the contractor should pay for any labor or material therefor that shall have been furnished either to him or to any subcontractor, agent, or superintendent under him. The bond given, as shown by the opinion, was conditioned, among other things, that the contractors "shall promptly pay all debts incurred by them in the prosecution of said work, including labor, materials furnished, and for the boarding of laborers thereon." Mr. Justice Caldwell, speaking for the court, said, as shown on page 282 of 61 Ind. App.: "It is thus apparent that the bond here is conditioned more broadly than required by said section, in that it contains the provision respecting the payment of all debts incurred and all claims for boarding laborers. There is, however, no statute that prohibits a board of county commissioners from taking or requiring a bond thus broadly conditioned." This opinion was adhered to upon rehearing. See 61 Ind. App. 291, 111 N. E. 19.

In Williams v. Markland, 15 Ind. App. 669, 44 N. E. 562, a bond taken by a township trustee to secure labor and material on a contract for building a schoolhouse was held to be a valid obligation, although not provided for by the statute, and one suing to recover for material and labor was held entitled to maintain an action thereon. The court said: "That one has a right to maintain an action upon a contract made with by appellee's learned counsel."

In the case of Union Sheet Metal Works v. Dodge, 129 Cal. 390, 62 Pac. 41, a contractor on a schoolhouse gave a bond to the district that he would pay all his subcontractors, laborers, and materialmen. A materialman brought suit on this bond. It was held that, although there was no statutory provision for such bond, it inured to the benefit of plaintiff, who could sue upon it; and the defendant was estopped from claiming that it was not the kind of bond required by law.

In St. Louis use of Glencoe Lime & Cement Co. v. Von Phul, 133 Mo. 561, 54 Am. St. Rep. 695, 34 S. W. 848, it was held that a city could require from a contractor a bond to protect materialmen and laborers, although this bond was not provided for by charter. This bond authorized a suit by a materialman in the name of the city, for his use. It was held that, under the power granted to repair streets, the implied power existed to exact such a bond.

In Devers v. Howard, 144 Mo. 671, 46 S. W. 625, a city required a contractor on a well to give a bond to protect labor and material. It was held that a materialman could maintain an action on this bond, although the charter or statute did not provide for such bond.

In Sample v. Hale, 34 Neb. 220, 51 N. W. 837, a state board was held authorized to require a contractor on a public building to contract to protect labor and material. A materialman was held entitled to sue on a bond for the faithful performance of the contract. The cases of Doll v. Crume, 41 Neb. 655, 59 N. W. 806, Lyman v. Lincoln, 38 Neb. 794, 57 N. W. 531, Philadelphia use of Webster v. Harry C. Nichols Co. 214 Pa. 265, 63 Atl. 886, American Surety Co. v. Raeder, 15 Ohio C. C. 47, 8 Ohio C. D. 684, Philadelphia v. Stewart, 195 Pa. 309, 45 Atl. 1056, and State ex rel. Palmer v. Webster, the same principle.

In Knapp v. Swaney, 56 Mich. 349, 56 Am. Rep. 397, 23 N. W. 162, the plain language of Mr. Chief Justice Cooley, in discussing this principle, is so convincing that we quote it at the risk of being lengthy. In that case it appears that the board of county commissioners contracted for the erection of a courthouse. One of the provisions of the contract was to the effect that before any partial payment should be made there should be no "legal or lawful claims against the contractor, in any manner, from any source whatever, for work or materials furnished on said work and buildings." The question was: "Are the contractors under the contract, or the relators, as their assignees, entitled to payment while there are outstanding claims for materials or labor?"

The argument on this point, shortly stated, was that the board of supervisors as a corporation, or a quasi corporation, possesses only certain powers expressly mentioned and defined by law, and that among these is no power to interpose between employers or purchasers and the persons with whom they deal, for the purpose of compelling the performance of contract obligations which such employers or purchasers have assumed. Chief Justice Cooley said: "A corporation, when constructing a public building or other public work, is chargeable with moral duty, as an individual would be, to see that it is so constructed that people may not be injured in coming near to or making use of it in a proper manner. In some cases they may not be legally responsible for failure to perform this duty; but where the moral obligation exists, it cannot be said that any provision for its performance, not improper in itself, is ultra vires. A county may go to great pains and great expense to make its courthouse unquestionably safe, that individual citizens to stipulate, in the contract for the building, that the contractors, when calling for payment, shall show that they are performing their obligations to those who supply the labor and materials, and that the county is not obtaining the building at the expense of a few of its people. We cannot think such is the case. We are of opinion that there was nothing ultra vires in this condition, and that the relators are bound by it."

Coming back home, we find the same principle was maintained in an able opinion by Mr. Justice Wolverton in the case of Hamilton v. Gambell, 31 Or. 328, 48 Pac. 433. It was held that the Portland City Charter, § 118, requiring a bond with certain conditions, is not a limitation on the manner in which contracts may be drawn, but is a proviso that no contract shall be made without that kind of bond; that the regulation of the ordinance was a reasonable one, intended to comply with the moral duty, resting alike on public corporations and private persons, to see that those who perform services for them, whether directly or indirectly, are paid. "The great weight of authority," reads the note in 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) p. 1028, "sustains the power of a municipality to make such contracts, even though they are not expressly authorized by the legislature." The precedents cited on behalf of appellant, all of which we have examined, mostly refer to cases involving liens. Such cases are of little assistance in considering the question involving contracts and bonds like those in the instant case.

Our statute enjoins upon the state of Oregon, or any municipality, county, or school district, in entering into a contract for the construction of any public work, to require the usual penal bond with sureties, with the additional obligations that the contractor shall promptly make payments to all persons supplying tractor shall fail to pay for such work and materials, and the officers of the state of Oregon, or any such municipality, county, or school district within the state, shall fail or neglect to require the execution of such bond, then the state of Oregon and the officers authorizing such contract, or the municipality, county, or school district, and the officers authorizing such contract, as the case may be, shall be jointly liable for such labor and materials. These provisions of our statute do not limit the authority of officials of a county in making a contract for public work. They do not prevent county officials from providing in such contract, and in a bond securing the performance thereof, for the payment of all persons who shall supply "such laborers, mechanics, or subcontractors with materials, supplies, or provisions for carrying on such work, and all just debts, dues, and demands incurred in the performance of such work." Such provisee that its citizens and others who furnish laborers and subcontractors with materials and supplies, and extend credit to a contractor to assist in the performance of the public work, are protected. Such provisions tend to promote efficiency in the construction of the roads of a county. They are in the interest of justice and equity, and are not ultra vires. They do not in any way contravene any statute or public policy of this state.

The plain provisions in the bond in suit are binding and enforceable against Feldschau, ^{Bond—liability for supplies for laborers' camp.} the contractor, and his surety, the appellant.

It follows that the judgment of the Circuit Court should be affirmed. It is so ordered.

Burnett, Ch. J., and Johns and Brown, JJ., concur.

Petition for rehearing denied September 20, 1921.

ANNOTATION.

Validity of condition in bond of contractor for public work which is beyond requirements of statute or ordinance with respect to claims of third persons.

- I. Scope of note, 1227.
- II. General rule, 1227.
- III. Application of rule, 1228.

I. Scope of note.

This note discusses the effect of making a bond by the contractor for a public work, which is required by statute to provide for payment of the claims of third persons, broader in its terms than the statute requires. It excludes cases wherein the conditions in excess of the statutory requirements are for the protection of the municipality. Likewise it excludes cases which involve the question whether a condition in a public contract or bond for the protection of subcontractors, laborers, or materialmen is valid although there is no statutory authority for the inclusion of any provision on that subject.

II. General rule.

Where a statute or ordinance requires that the contractor for a public improvement shall give a bond conditioned for the payment of labor and materials, the bond may be conditioned more broadly than the statute requires, and if a bond so conditioned is voluntarily given in consideration of the contract, its extrastatutory provisions may be enforced as a valid common-law obligation.

United States.—See Stephenson v. Monmouth Min. & Mfg. Co. (1897) 28 C. C. A. 292, 54 U. S. App. 499, 84 Fed. 114.

Indiana.—Title Guaranty & S. Co.

N. E. 19, admiralty on rehearing (1910) 61 Ind. App. 268, 109 N. E. 237.

Missouri. — Hilton v. Universal Constr. Co. (1920) 202 Mo. App. 672, 216 S. W. 1034. See also School Dist. v. Aetna Acci. & Liability Co. (1921) — Mo. App. —, 234 S. W. 1017.

Oregon. — See the reported case (CLATSOP COUNTY EX REL. HILDEBRAND v. FELTSCHAU, ante, 1221).

Pennsylvania. — Bowditch v. Gourley (1904) 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 342; Philadelphia use of Webster v. Harry C. Nichols Co. (1906) 214 Pa. 265, 68 Atl. 886.

Tennessee. — See Bristol v. Bostwick (1917) 139 Tenn. 304, 202 S. W. 61.

Washington. — Puget Sound State Bank v. Gallucci (1914) 82 Wash. 445, 144 Pac. 698, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 767.

"Nor can the surety be relieved from liability because the condition of the bond is more comprehensive than is required by the ordinance. It was given voluntarily for a lawful purpose, and may be enforced according to its terms, even though it in form exceeds the requirements of the ordinance." Bowditch v. Gourley (Pa.) supra.

III. Application of rule.

In Title Guaranty & S. Co. v. State (1915) 61 Ind. App. 268, 109 N. E. 237, the proceeding was brought and prosecuted under the provisions of an act commonly known as the Three-mile Gravel Road Law. A section of that act provided, among other things, that, with his proposal, each bidder should "submit his bond . . . to the approval of the board, conditioned for the faithful performance of the work . . . which bond shall be for the benefit of any person or corporation who shall suffer loss or damage by reason of any failure or neglect of such bidder to enter into a proper contract, . . . or to pay for any labor or material therefor that shall have been furnished either to him or to any subcontractor, agent, or superintendent under him." The bond sued on was conditioned, among other things, labor, materials furnished, and for the boarding of laborers thereon." It was held that the condition in excess of the statutory requirement was valid and enforceable, the court saying: "It is thus apparent that the bond here is conditioned more broadly than required by said section, in that it contains the provision respecting the payment of all debts incurred and all claims for boarding laborers. There is, however, no statute that prohibits a board of county commissioners from taking or requiring a bond thus broadly conditioned. Section 4 of the Act of 1899 (Acts 1899, p. 170; Burns's Anno. Stat. 1901, § 5592) makes it the duty of boards of commissioners, in receiving bids for certain public works, to take a bond conditioned in the exact language of the provision above quoted from the bond involved here. Independent of the statute last mentioned, the situation here presents the question of whether the board exceeded its power in causing to be inserted in the bond the provision for the payment of debts incurred by the contractors in the prosecution of the work, regardless of the nature or origin of said debts, or in accepting a bond voluntarily executed and so conditioned, and whether such provision is enforceable. The question has frequently come before the courts as to whether boards of county commissioners and municipal authorities have the power, in the absence of an express statutory grant, to insert in such a bond an enforceable provision for the payment of claims for labor performed and materials furnished in the construction of the public work involved. With practical uniformity, it has been held that, while such public bodies may exercise only granted powers, yet that express authority to cause the work to be performed carries with it the incidental power to do all proper acts reasonably necessary to that end; and that, by virtue of such incidental power, such bodies may cause such a provision to be inserted in the bond in the absence BRAND v. FELTSCHAU, ante, 1221), wherein it is held that a condition in a highway contractor's bond requiring the payment of "all just debts, dues, and demands incurred in the performance of such work," is enforceable as a common-law obligation, although the Oregon statute requires merely that with respect to the claims of third persons in a public contractor's bond he "shall promptly make payments to all persons supplying him or them labor or materials for any prosecution of the work provided for in such contracts."

The case of Puget Sound State Bank v. Gallucci (1914) 82 Wash. 445, 144 Pac. 698, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 767, is sufficiently set out in the reported case.

In Bowditch v. Gourley (1904) 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 342, the condition of the bond in suit was as follows: "If the above bounden Samuel Gourley, Jr., shall and will promptly pay or cause to be paid to any and all persons, any and all sum or sums of money which may be due for labor and materials furnished and supplied or performed in and about the said work, and shall and will comply with all the provisions of the ordinance of the select and common councils of the city of Philadelphia entitled, 'An Ordinance for the Protection of Subcontractors as Well as for Persons Furnishing Materials and Labor for the Construction of Buildings for the City of Philadelphia and for Any Other City Work,' approved the 30th day of March, A. D. 1896, then this obligation to be null and void; otherwise to be and remain in full force and virtue." The ordinance required that any person entering into a contract for the doing of the city's work should execute a penal bond with sureties, "with the obligation that the contractor shall and will promptly make payment to all persons . . . whether he is a subcontractor or otherwise in the prosecution of the work."

The court held that the fact that the bond was broader than the ordinance did not invalidate it, the claim enanced.

In Philadelphia use of Webster v. Harry C. Nichols Co. (1906) 214 Pa. 265, 63 Atl. 886, the bond in suit was given under the ordinance referred to in the case last cited. The bond was conditioned to pay "any and all persons any and all sums of money which may be due for labor and material supplied or performed in and about the said work." The court said: "The bond having been voluntarily given, it may be enforced according to its terms, although it exceeds the requirements of the ordinance. The exact question here raised as to the construction of the ordinance was decided in Bowditch v. Gourley (Pa.) supra, and we concur in the conclusion announced by that court."

In Hilton v. Universal Constr. Co. (1920) 202 Mo. App. 672, 216 S. W. 1034, it appeared that under the contract and bond the defendant company was obligated to pay the proper persons all "amounts due for material and labor used and employed in the performance thereof." The statute required that in public work the authorities should require a bond of the contractor conditioned "for the payment for all material used in such work, and for all labor performed in such work, whether by subcontractor or otherwise." The court, holding the obligors liable for materials which did not enter into the work, said: "Under the broad terms of this contract and bond, the defendant, Universal Construction Company, obligated itself to pay the proper parties for all materials used and employed in the performance of the work. It is plain from the evidence that this coal and all of the lumber was used by J. W. Farley & Company in the performance of the work contemplated by the contract. In the event the contract and bond were not broader than the statute, it would have been necessary for the evidence to have disclosed that the material was used in the work of constructing the sewer. We accordingly hold that, under the provision contained in the bond and contract heretofore quoted, it was not incumbent upon the interveners to show that the coal and lumber furnished by them actually entered into the construction of the sewer. It was sufficient, in order to entitle them to recover, that the evidence disclosed that the lumber and coal were used and employed in the performance of the work contemplated by the contract. In their zeal to carry out the obligation placed upon them by the statute, the city officials inserted provisions in the contract and bond which were broader than was required by the statute. The question may well be raised whether the city had power under the law to enter into such a contract, and place stipulations therein, in regard to the obligation of the contractor to pay materialmen on the work, which are broader than the language specified in the statute, § 1247. Whatever may be the law in other jurisdictions, it seems to be well settled in this state that the city has full power and authority to enter into the contract and bond in question. . . . The contract and bond in suit . . . are not ultra vires the corporation, and the city, having the general power to build sewers, has the implied power of imposing the obligation upon the contractor to pay those who furnished labor and materials used and employed in the performance of the contract, regardless of the express power given to the city by § 1247 of the statute. In view of the fact that the evidence disclosed that the coal and all lumber furnished by these interveners were used and employed by the subcontractor in the performance of the work, they are entitled to recover."

In Bristol v. Bostwick (1917) 139 Tenn. 304, 202 S. W. 61, it was held that the fact the bond was in a penalty larger than that required by the statute did not indicate that the parties were unmindful of the statute.

A. S. M.

REMINGTON ARMS UNION METALLIC CARTRIDGE COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

FEENEY TOOL COMPANY.

Connecticut Supreme Court of Errors — December 23, 1921.

(97 Conn. 129, 115 Atl. 629.)

Duress — threatened attachment — payment.

1. Payment of an illegal claim to avoid an attachment cannot be recovered on the ground that it was made under duress.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1233.]

Mistake — when action lies.

2. To recover money paid under mistake, the payment must have been made under a mistaken belief that the money was due the payee, when in truth it was neither legally nor morally due.

[See 2 R. C. L. 784; 21 R. C. L. 164 et seq.]

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Fairfield County (Kellogg, J.) sustaining a demurrer to the complaint in an action brought to recover money alleged to have been paid by mistake and under compulsion. No error.

Statement by Beach, J.:

The complaint alleges, in substance, that between November 23, 1916, and April 24, 1919, the plaintiff and defendant had mutual dealings and accounts, as the result of which the plaintiff became indebted to the defendant in the sum of $41,815.82, and no more; that during this period the plaintiff overpaid the defendant to the extent of $4,735.04, the overpayment being made involuntarily and under compulsion. The allegation as to compulsion is that an unsettled controversy existed between the parties as to the rate at which certain work done by the defendant was to be paid for, the defendant claiming that the sum of $4,735.04 remained due from the plaintiff; that the defendant instituted suit against the plaintiff for that amount, and directed the officer having the writ to attach the goods and estate of the plaintiff to the amount of $8,000, and that the plaintiff, to avert the threatened attachment, paid to the officer for the account of the defendant the demanded sum of $4,735.04. It is further alleged that only $1,071.89 of the demanded sum was due, and that the balance, $3,663.15, was paid to the defendant by the plaintiff under a mistake of its rights and under compulsion and coercion, and to prevent the immediate seizure of its property and the shutting down of its entire plant, and that no part of the overpayment of $3,663.15 had been repaid, though duly demanded.

To this complaint the defendant demurred on the ground that it appeared from the complaint that the payment was voluntary, that it did not appear to have been paid under compulsion, or because of mutual mistake, or because of any fraud or deception practised upon the plaintiff, and that it did appear to have been paid in settlement of a good cause of action, which was thereby adjusted and settled and accord and satisfaction made. The superior court sustained the demurrer on all grounds, and on the refusal of the plaintiff to plead over, judgment was rendered for the defendant.

Messrs. Cummings & Lockwood and Raymond E. Hackett, for appellant:

When money is paid by one under a mistake of his rights and duty, and which he was under no legal or moral obligation to pay, and which the recipient has no right in good conscience to retain, it may be recovered back, whether the mistake be one of fact or one of law.

Northrup v. Graves, 19 Conn. 548, 50 Am. Dec. 264; Mansfield v. Lynch, 59 Conn. 320, 12 L.R.A. 285, 22 Atl. 313; Monroe Nat. Bank v. Catlin, 82 Conn. 227, 73 Atl. 3; Morris v. New Haven, 78 Conn. 673, 63 Atl. 123.

Equity will not allow one to enrich himself unjustly at the expense of another, through or by reason of an innocent mistake of law or fact entertained by the loser, or by both.

Bronson v. Liebold, 87 Conn. 293, 87 Atl. 979; Park Bros. v. Blodgett & C. Co. 64 Conn. 28, 29 Atl. 133.

When one has obtained such an advantage over another by reason of that other's mistaken view of his legal rights that it would, under the circumstances, be unconscionable for him to retain it, equity will not allow him to do so.

Bronson v. Leibold, 87 Conn. 299, 87 Atl. 979; Monroe Nat. Bank v. Catlin, 82 Conn. 231, 73 Atl. 3.

Messrs. Cullinan, Cullinan, & Keating, for appellee:

The voluntary payment made by plaintiff cannot be recovered on the ground that it was made under duress.

Kohler v. Wells, F. & Co. 26 Cal. 612; Morris v. New Haven, 78 Conn. 675, 63 Atl. 123; Monroe Nat. Bank v. Catlin, 82 Conn. 231, 73 Atl. 3; Cobb v. Charter, 32 Conn. 364, 87 Am. Dec. 178; Brisbane v. Dacres, 5 Taunt. 149, 128 Eng. Reprint, 643, 14 Revised Rep. 718; Northrop v. Graves, 19 Conn. 561, 50 Am. Dec. 264.

Beach, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff's brief assumes erroneously that the complaint includes a cause of action for the recovery of money paid under a mistake. It is a necessary element of such a cause of action that the payment was made under a mistaken belief that the money was due to the payee, when in truth it was neither legally nor morally due, as when an executor pays a legacy in full, believing that the estate is solvent, when it is not, or that the legacy is due to the payee under the terms of the will, when it is not. Mansfield v. Lynch, 59 Conn. 320, 12 L.R.A. 285, 22 Atl. 313; Northrop v. Graves, 19 Conn. 548, 50 Am. Dec. 264; Mills v. Britton, 64 Conn. 4, 24 L.R.A. 536, 29 kind is alleged. On the contrary, the complaint, which was filed nearly two years after the payment of the money, attempts to state a case of duress of goods, alleging that the entire claim of the defendant was disputed at the time when it was paid in full, that only $1,071.89 was actually due, and that the balance of $3,363.15 was not due and was paid to prevent the immediate attachment of the plaintiff's property. The absence of any allegation that the defendant's original demand was dishonest, and the admission that at some time thereafter, not specified in the complaint, the plaintiff ascertained that a part of the demand was due, acquits the defendant of any possible charge of bad faith in instituting the action and in taking out the writ of attachment.

Mistake—when action lies.

The complaint attempted to suggest that extreme pressure was put upon the plaintiff, by alleging that the payment was made to prevent the shutting down of its "entire plant and factory;" but this averment is not well pleaded, because there is no direct allegation that the officer threatened to do so, and without such threat an entire shut-down of the plaintiff's notoriously extensive plant could not reasonably have been feared.

All that can rightfully be claimed from the complaint is that the plaintiff paid a disputed claim, now admitted by the demurrer to have been excessive in amount, in order to avoid the inconvenience of an attachment which might have been speedily dissolved on the substitution of a statutory bond. No authority is cited in support of the proposition that a payment so made can be recovered on the ground that it was paid under duress. The passage relied on from 30 the cases show, to an abuse, or to an inequitable and oppressive use, of legal process; such as a writ of attachment procured by one who knows that he has no cause of action, a demand in excess of that authorized by the process, a threatened levy of execution on the property of a person other than the judgment debtor, a demand on an execution after supersedeas, and the like. Many cases on the subject of involuntary payment are collected in an exhaustive note in 45 Am. Dec. 153, and in summing up the authorities on the precise point at issue it is said: "If, as will hereafter be more particularly shown, the payment is made under the stress of lawful process lawfully used, the party can obtain no relief except by reversal of the proceedings under which the process was issued. Lawful compulsion is no duress."

The cases cited bear out the text. See also Hoke v. Atlanta, 107 Ga. 416, 33 S. E. 412; Strange v. Franklin, 126 Ga. 715, 55 S. E. 943.

The authorities on the recovery of unlawful taxes paid to escape the penalties imposed by statute rest, in part, on the severity of the "onerous penalties" imposed for nonpayment. Underwood Typewriter Co. v. Chamberlain, 92 Conn. 199, 204, 205, 102 Atl. 600; Seeley v. Westport, 47 Conn. 294, 299, 36 Am. Rep. 70. And if the statute purporting to authorize the tax is invalid, the whole legal process of collection is void ab initio.

But as between private suitors who stand on an equal footing, the due process of the law invoked in good faith and fairly used cannot amount to duress.

There is no error.

In this opinion the other Judges concur.

Right upon ground of duress to recover back money paid upon an excessive or unfounded claim to avoid an attachment.

The rule appears to be that the mere fact that an overpayment is made in order to avoid an attachment, threatened or levied, of the alleged debtor's property, is of itself insufficient to constitute duress, so as to entitle the party making the payment to recover it on this ground. Kohler v. Wells, F. & Co. (1864) 26 Cal. 606; REMINGTON ARMS UNION M. CARTRIDGE Co. v. FEENEY TOOL Co. (reported herewith) ante, 1230; Dickerman v. Lord (1866) 21 Iowa, 338, 89 Am. Dec. 579; Paulson v. Barger (1906) 132 Iowa, 547, 109 N. W. 1081; Adams v. Reeves (1873) 68 N. C. 134, 12 Am. Rep. 627; Flack v. National Bank (1892) 8 Utah, 193, 17 L.R.A. 588, 30 Pac. 746.

A payment made to release property from an attachment was held in Kohler v. Wells, F. & Co. (Cal.) supra, not to be a payment made under duress, where the party attaching the goods had a cause of action against their owner.

It was held in the reported case (REMINGTON ARMS UNION M. CARTRIDGE Co. v. FEENEY TOOL Co.) that an overpayment of a disputed claim, made in order merely to avoid the inconvenience of a threatened attachment, which might have been speedily dissolved on the substitution of a statutory bond, could not be recovered on the ground that it was paid under duress.

And it was held in Flack v. National Bank (Utah) supra, that a threat by a bank to institute attachment proceedings to collect a note not yet due unless security was given, in consequence of which the maker of the note authorized its satisfaction out of his deposit account, was not in such duress as would entitle the maker to damages in case of the bank's refusal to apply the same money in satisfaction of his outstanding check.

The court in Paulson v. Barger (1906) 132 Iowa, 547, 109 N. W. 1081, supra, said it had long been the rule in that state that a mere threat to begin a civil suit to recover on contracts, and to attach property in aid of such suit, did not constitute such duress as to make a payment on account thereof an involuntary one; that in the case before it the demand was made on a contract evidenced by a note, and even if a threat to attach were in fact made, as alleged, or if an attachment were made following such threat, the plaintiff would have had ample opportunity to assert and maintain his legal rights in that action, and he could not be permitted to select his own time for a legal determination of such rights by then making payment, and thereafter bringing suit to recover the same, on the ground that the payment was involuntary.

And even though the alleged debtor is sued in a state other than the one in which he resides, and his property there is attached, this in itself, if the attachment suit is brought in good faith, will not justify the debtor, with knowledge of all the facts, in paying under protest the amount claimed and seeking to recover it back in the courts of his own state, on the ground that in point of fact the debt had been previously paid or was unjust, and that the payment was under duress. Dickerman v. Lord (1860) 21 Iowa, 338, 89 Am. Dec. 579, supra. The court said: "If I am sued in my own state, without attachment, and know the claim is unfounded, and yet pay the money, I cannot recover it back although I may, at the time of payment, have said I paid it under protest. And if I am sued by attachment, the result must be the same, if the attachment is the only circumstance relied upon to make the payment, a compulsory one. And why? Because my adversary, in either case, has made use of no unjust or illegal means to enforce his claim or pretended claim against me. It is my duty to meet him in limine, and litigate and settle the question of my indebtedness. It is for this purpose that courts are instituted. I cannot pay the amount, and by simply saying, 'I do so under protest,' afterward reopen the question. When one pays money on an alleged claim against him, he is forever concluded from saying he did not owe it, if he paid under no mistake of fact, and if the party receiving it made use of no illegal means to coerce the payment. Now, these principles of the law are not varied by the simple circumstance that one is sued in a state foreign to his residence. The defendants, by the law of Illinois, in which state they resided, and in which plaintiff contracted the account, had a right, if they could get jurisdiction, to sue the plaintiff in that state, and, he being a nonresident, the laws of that state gave them a right to an attachment against his property found within the jurisdiction. In thus suing, therefore, they made use of no remedy which the law did not allow; and it will not do to hold that a payment, secured by none but the means provided by the law itself, is a compulsory or coerced one, there being no element of fraud or other ingredient of oppression in the case."

And in Adams v. Reeves (1873) 68 N. C. 134, 12 Am. Rep. 627, supra, the court said that the mere fact that the original action was begun by an attachment of property, or that property was attached in the course of the action, or that it was brought in another state, did not of itself constitute or imply duress; that it must assume that the plaintiff (who was seeking to compel repayment of money alleged to have been paid under compulsion to the defendants), although a resident of North Carolina, would have received in the courts of Virginia, where the other action was begun, the same justice as he would have received in his own state.

It was held in Turner v. Barber (1901) 66 N. J. L. 496, 49 Atl. 676, that a payment by the plaintiff was made voluntarily, and without fraud or force, and therefore could not be recovered, even though the claim was unfounded, where the alleged duress was the seizure and detention of a scow belonging to the plaintiff, by a deputy United States marshal, under a monition of libel issued in a suit in admiralty brought by the defendant against the scow for wharfage, the plaintiff making the payment, under protest, without contesting the claim, in order to effect a release of the vessel.

And in the early case of Knibbs v. Hall (1794) 1 Esp. (Eng.) 84, where the defendant proposed to prove a set-off by evidence that he had overpaid the plaintiff for rent, in order to avoid a threatened distress if the excessive amount claimed were not paid, it was held that the payment was not under compulsion, as the defendant might, by replevin, have defended himself against the distress; that, therefore, since the payment was voluntary, he should not be allowed to dispute its legality, and the evidence offered should be rejected.

And it is held in Baltimore v. Lefferman (1846) 4 Gill (Md.) 425, 45 Am. Dec. 145, that a payment made under menace of an impending distress warrant is not a payment under duress, in the absence of bad faith, although the court intimated that there might be duress if the payment was made for the purpose of releasing the property after execution of the warrant.

See also Colwell v. Peden (1834) 3 Watts (Pa.) 327, holding that a tenant cannot maintain assumpsit for money paid to relieve his goods from distress for rent, if the claim was not made fraudulently, even though no rent was due; but that he must resort to some other remedy, as trespass or replevin.

Attention is called also to Webber v. Aldrich (1822) 2 N. H. 461, in which it was held that assumpsit would not lie to recover money paid by the plaintiff to secure the release of his property from the defendant, an Army officer, who had taken it under a warrant of distress for neglect of military duty, the payment being voluntary, even though the seizure of the property was illegal. The court indicated that the plaintiff's remedy was an action of trespass for the illegal seizure.

But the doctrine that a payment by be regarded as paid under duress, so as to entitle the debtor on this ground to recover it, was held in Lyman v. Lauderbaugh (1888) 75 Iowa, 481, 39 N. W. 812, not to apply so as to prevent recovery of a payment by the debtor made to secure the release from garnishment of the debtor's money in a bank, under an express oral promise by the creditor to repay the same if the debtor could show that he was not so indebted. The court said that the release of the money garnished, the dismissal of the action, and the payment to the plaintiff in that action of the money claimed, were a sufficient consideration for the agreement to repay the money if it was shown not to be due.

And there are several cases in which, under special circumstances, it was held that the payment was under duress and could be recovered, the parties not being on equal terms, or the attachment not being in good faith.

Thus, if one knowing that he has no just claim against an alleged debtor fraudulently brings an action and attaches the debtor's goods for the purpose of extorting money from him, the payment of money by the latter in order to release his goods from such fraudulent and wrongful detention is not voluntary, but by compulsion, and the money so paid may be recovered back, without proof of such a termination of the former suit as would be necessary to maintain an action for malicious prosecution. Chandler v. Sanger (1874) 114 Mass. 364, 19 Am. Rep. 367. In this case the attachment was levied on teams and wagons of an ice dealer as they were about to start out in the morning to deliver ice to customers, the attorney for the attaching creditor representing that three days would be required to dissolve the attachment by the giving of a bond, and the plaintiff making the payment in order to carry on his business.

And in Adams v. Reeves (1873) 68 N. C. 184, 12 Am. Rep. 627, the court laid down the rule that if one knowing that he has no claim upon another sues out legal process against him and being able at the time, by reasonable diligence, to know or to prove that such representations are false, pays the demand, he may recover it back in a subsequent action.

So, it was held that money was not voluntarily paid, but was extorted by intimidation and fraud, and might be recovered, where the plaintiff made the payment on the false claim by the defendants that he was liable to them for the debts of a former owner of the plaintiff's store, after being induced by them to come to their place of business and being taken to a room on the fifth floor, which was not the office, in the presence of the defendants' attorney and the former owner and his attorney, payment being demanded then and there, and being made by the plaintiff under the belief that, if he did not pay the unfounded claim, they would attach his store. Weber v. Kirkendall (1894) 39 Neb. 193, 57 N. W. 1026. The court said the case looked very much like a conspiracy on the part of the defendants and the debtor to compel the plaintiff to pay the debt; that the money which the defendants extorted might not have been obtained by duress of property, technically speaking, but was obtained involuntarily, by a species of intimidation, fraud, and compulsion, and that no court of equity would permit its retention; that if it had been a debt which the plaintiff owed to the defendants, and he had paid it under the fear that if he did not his goods would have been attached, the case would be entirely different, but that in this case it was not the plaintiff's debt, and it was not voluntarily paid. The court further said: "To do anything voluntarily means to do it with one's free will, and without fear of compulsion of mind or body. The court will not shut its eyes to the everyday transactions of life. Here was a young man in business. A demand is made upon him that he pay some $800 that another owes. He protests that he does not owe it. He asks that he be given time to consider the matter and consult his friends. He is told by redress; and that it was very clear, therefore, that the plea of duress was good, and the circumstances should all have been submitted to the jury.

And where the husband's creditor, who had no claim against the wife, attached a carload of goods belonging to her, among which were furniture and wearing apparel, and she, being unable to furnish the statutory bond necessary to secure the release of the attachment, and being at a hotel in a strange city, to which she had just removed from a distant part of the state, and to which the car had been shipped, paid the claim, in order to secure possession of the goods, it was held in Finch v. Cox Co. (1916) 19 Ga. App. 256, 91 S. E. 281, that the payment was not voluntary and could be recovered. The court said: "A payment can be recovered back where it is made under an urgent and immediate necessity therefor, or where it is made to release property from detention. Civ. Code 1910, § 4317." And this Code provision, it was said, should be construed together with another statute providing: "Duress consists in any illegal imprisonment, or legal imprisonment used for an illegal purpose, or threats of bodily or other harm, or other means amounting to or tending to coerce the will of the other, and actually inducing him to do an act contrary to his free will."

And in Fenwick Shipping Co. v. Clarke Bros. (1909) 133 Ga. 43, 65 S. E. 140, where the evidence showed a service of summons upon and threatened attachment of the baggage of a traveler, who was a member of the firm owing the alleged claim, and was in Europe on his way to fulfil important business engagements, when other property was there available to meet the claim, and the jury might infer that the alleged creditor was seeking to collect an unfounded and unjust claim, knowing it to be such, it was held that the payment was not voluntary, but might be recovered back as having been paid under duress, within the meaning of the statutes in that state.

stated a cause of action as for money had and received, on the ground of an involuntary payment, where it was alleged that the defendants, maliciously contriving against the plaintiff and falsely pretending that he was indebted to them in a certain sum for rent, with intent to oppress and injure him, filed an unlawful attachment suit for said sum before a justice of the peace in another state in which he was employed, falsely swearing that the plaintiff was about fraudulently to conceal, assign, or otherwise dispose of his property to hinder or delay creditors, and caused the plaintiff's employer to be summoned as garnishee, although the wages garnished were by statute exempt; that the plaintiff paid the sum demanded because of his inability to defend the suit without great sacrifice of time and money, and because of the fact that he had a family dependent upon him, and feared that his position would be jeopardized.

That the payment of money by a person to free his goods from an attachment sued out for the purpose of extortion, by one who knows that he has no valid cause of action, constitutes a payment under duress, is recognized (arguendo) in Fuller v. Roberts (1895) 35 Fla. 110, 17 So. 359.

And there is an obiter statement in Hackley v. Headley (1881) 45 Mich. 569, 8 N. W. 511, that one may recover back money which he pays to release his goods from an attachment which is sued out with knowledge on the part of the plaintiff that he has no cause of action.

In Clark v. Pearce (1891) 80 Tex. 146, 15 S. W. 787, in an action for damages for wrongfully and maliciously suing out a writ of sequestration of the plaintiff's property, the court, in holding that the plaintiff could recover as a part of the damages the amount of money paid to secure the release of the property from the levy, said in reply to the contention that where money had been voluntarily paid it could not be recovered; that it was well settled that when the form of law, and money had been paid to secure their release, the payment was not voluntary, and might be recovered.

Although beyond the scope of the annotation, attention is called to Joannin v. Ogilvie (1892) 49 Minn. 564, 16 L.R.A. 376, 32 Am. St. Rep. 581, 52 N. W. 217, in which the court held that the money was paid under duress and might be recovered, where a party filed a mechanic's lien against property on an unfounded claim, which the owner paid under protest, in order to clear the title of record so that he might consummate a loan upon the property which he had negotiated in order to raise money to pay a prior overdue mortgage and other pressing debts, he having no other available means of raising the money. The court distinguished cases to the effect that money paid to a creditor under duress or property has been seized on legal process in judicial proceedings in order to enforce an illegal demand; at least, in the absence of fraud on the part of the demandant in resorting to legal process to extort payment of a claim which he knows is unjust. The ground upon which the latter decisions rest, it was said, is that the party has an opportunity to plead and test the legality of the claim in the proceedings in which his property is seized.

In Quinnett v. Washington (1846) 10 Mo. 53, it was held that money paid by one to obtain a restoration of his goods, which had been wrongfully taken on a distress warrant on the mistaken ground that he was a subtenant of the debtor, could be recovered.
R. E. H.

WILLIAM H. WILLIAMS, Appt.,

v.

FRANCIS D. GALLATIN, Commissioner of Parks of the City of New York, et al., Respts.

New York Court of Appeals — June 11, 1920.

(229 N. Y. 248, 128 N. E. 121.)

Park — lease for increasing knowledge of health devices.

1. Commissioners charged with the duty of maintaining a public park have no authority to lease space in it for an exhibit designed to advance the knowledge of the people in methods of lessening the number of casualties and avoiding the causes of physical suffering and premature death.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1246.]

The complaint states a cause of action under provisions of the General Municipal Law and of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Bush v. Coler, 60 App. Div. 56, 69 N. Y. Supp. 770, 170 N. Y. 587, 68 N. E. 1115; Altschul v. Ludwig, 216 N. Y. 459, 111 N. E. 216; Warrin v. Baldwin, 105 N. Y. 534, 12 N. E. 49; Queens County Water Co. v. Monroe, 88 App. Div. 105, 82 N. Y. Supp. 610.

Central Park, including the leased building, was acquired under acts of the legislature, impressed with a trust to be used as a public square, or park, for purposes exclusively of pleasure, exercise, amusement, or ornament.

Brooklyn Park v. Armstrong, 45 N. Y. 234, 6 Am. Rep. 70; Methodist Episcopal Church v. Hoboken, 33 N. J. L. 13, 97 Am. Dec. 696; Perrin v. New York C. R. Co. 36 N. Y. 120; People ex rel. Seaver v. Green, 52 How. Pr. 440; Shoemaker v. United States, 147 U. S. 282, 37 L. ed. 170, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 361; Riverside v. MacLain, 210 Ill. 308, 66 L.R.A. 288, 102 Am. St. Rep. 164, 71 N. E. 408; Bennett v. Saibert, 10 Ind. App. 369, 35 N. E. 85, 37 N. E. 1071; Ehmen v. Gothenburg, 50 Neb. 715, 70 N. W. 237; Steel v. Portland, 23 Or. 176, 31 Pac. 479; Laird v. Pittsburgh, 205 Pa. 1, 61 L.R.A. 332, 54 Atl. 324; Com. v. Hazen, 20 Pa. 487, 207 Pa. 52, 56 Atl. 263; State ex rel. Wood v. Schweickardt, 109 Mo. 496, 19 S. W. 47; Archer v. Salinas City, 93 Cal. 43, 16 L.R.A. 145, 28 Pac. 839.

The lease of the building is illegal, null, and void.

3 Dill. Mun. Corp. 5th ed. § 1096; 3 McQuillin, Mun. Corp. §§ 1141, 1155; 2 Abbott, Mun. Corp. 1906, § 815; Rowzee v. Pierce, 75 Miss. 846, 40 L.R.A. 402, 65 Am. St. Rep. 625, 23 So. 307; Riverside v. MacLain, 210 Ill. 308, 66 L.R.A. 288, 102 Am. St. Rep. 164, 71 N. E. 408; Fessler v. Union, 67 N. J. Eq. 14, 56 Atl. 272, 68 N. J. Eq. 657, 60 Atl. 1134; Church v. Portland, 18 Or. 73, 6 L.R.A. 259, 22 Pac. 528; Mulvey v. Wangenheim, 23 Cal. App. 268, 137 Pac. 1106; Hopkinsville v. Jarrett, 156 Ky. 777, 50 L.R.A. (N.S.) 465, 162 S. W. 85; McEntyre v. El Paso County, 15 Colo. App. 78, 61 Pac. 237; Board of Education v. Kansas City, 62 Kan. 374, 63 Pac. 600; Wessinger v. Mische, 71 Or. 239, 142 Pac. 612; El Paso Union

O'Brien, and John Lehman, for respondent commissioner et al.

Mr. William J. Moran, for respondent Safety Institute of America:

The complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Brown, 213 U. S. 25, 53 L. ed. 682, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 404; Bogardus v. New York L. Ins. Co. 101 N. Y. 337, 4 N. E. 522; Greeff v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. 160 N. Y. 19, 46 L.R.A. 288, 73 Am. St. Rep. 659, 54 N. E. 712; Blum v. Whitney, 185 N. Y. 242, 77 N. E. 1159; United States Asphalt Ref. Co. v. Comptoir Nat. D'Escompte De Paris, 166 App. Div. 67, 151 N. Y. Supp. 604, 221 N. Y. 540, 116 N. E. 1080.

Defendants' use of the arsenal under the agreement is proper, and hence the giving of the privilege therefor was within the power and discretion of the defendant commissioner.

Gushee v. New York, 42 App. Div. 87, 58 N. Y. Supp. 967; Gredinger v. Higgins, 139 App. Div. 606, 124 N. Y. Supp. 22; Tompkins v. Pallas, 47 Misc. 309, 95 N. Y. Supp. 875; Kurtz v. Clausen, 38 Misc. 105, 77 N. Y. Supp. 97; Sherburne v. Portsmouth, 72 N. H. 537, 58 Atl. 38; Strock v. East Orange, 80 N. J. L. 619, 77 Atl. 1051; Com. v. Abrahams, 156 Mass. 57, 30 N. E. 79; International Garden Club v. Hennessy, 104 Misc. 141, 172 N. Y. Supp. 8.

Pound, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff, a taxpayer, seeks to enjoin the defendant New York city park commissioner from executing a lease of the Arsenal Building in Central Park to the other defendant, Safety Institute of America, for a term of ten years, upon the ground that the use of the premises by the tenant for the purposes expressed in the lease is contrary to the Greater New York Charter in that it is foreign to park purposes. The complaint alleges that Central Park is a public park, owned by the city of New York; that the Arsenal Building is located in Central Park, and is a part thereof, and is intended for use solely as public park property; that the defendant Francis D.

Gallatin, as commissioner of parks, is the chief executive in charge of Central Park and of the Arsenal Building under the provisions of § 612 of the Greater New York Charter (Laws 1901, chap. 466); that under § 627 of the Greater New York Charter it is unlawful for the defendants to grant, use, or occupy for the purposes of a public fair or exhibition any portion of Central Park; that the defendants entered into a written lease, a copy of which is attached to the complaint, and defendants plan to proceed with the performance and execution of its terms and with the use and alteration of the said Arsenal Building; that the use of Central Park or the Arsenal Building for any of the purposes referred to will impede and materially hinder the beneficial use of Central Park by the public and the people of the city of New York as a place of resort, amusement, recreation, and exercise; that it was illegal for the defendants to enter into the lease. The lease recites it is made "in order to promote and increase the public enjoyment, use, and convenience of the public park known as Central park." The lease further provides: "That the said building, after it shall have been altered and repaired as herein provided for, shall be kept open and accessible to the public hereafter free of all charge throughout the year, five days in each week, one of which shall be Sunday afternoon, and also for two evenings in each week, within such hours and subject to such rules and regulations as may be determined by the trustees of said institute; and also that on the two days in each week during which said building may remain closed to the general public, it shall be open and accessible to students, schools, and societies organized for the purpose of promoting means and methods of safety and sanitation within such hours and subject to such rules and regulations as may be determined by the trustees of said institute."

The American Museum of Safety,

now the Safety Institute of America, was incorporated by chapter 152 of the Laws of 1911, which, by § 2 thereof, defines its objects as: "Sec. 2. The objects of the corporation hereby created are to study and promote means and methods of safety and sanitation and the application thereof to any and all public or private occupations whatsoever, and of advancing knowledge of kindred subjects; and to that end to establish and maintain a museum, library and laboratories, and their branches wherein all matters, methods and means for improving the general condition of the people as to their safety and health may be studied, tested and promoted, with a view to lessening the number of casualties and avoiding the causes of physical suffering and of premature death; and to disseminate the results of such study, researches and test by lectures, exhibitions and other publications."

Chapter 466, Laws of 1914 (amending Greater New York Charter), § 244a, authorizes the board of estimate and apportionment of the city of New York to appropriate annually "such sum as it may deem proper, not exceeding $50,000, for the keeping, preservation, and exhibition of safety devices and means and methods of safety and sanitation in the building or any part thereof in the city of New York now or hereafter occupied by the American Museum of Safety." It is assumed, rather than stipulated, that the purpose of the lease is to provide a place for such exhibition, but the lease is general in its terms. The tenant occupies the building rent free, except as it agrees to expend a substantial sum on alterations of the Arsenal for its purposes, for all its noncommercial purposes. The lease may, by its terms, be canceled "when said property shall be required by the party of the first part for other park purposes."

Defendant is one of a number of private corporations which are deemed to exercise quasi public functions, and to be entitled to aid from the public treasury. To this end it has obtained space in Central Park and legislative authority for an annual appropriation by the city. Without reflection upon its worthiness or consideration of its constitutional right to public aid, we approach the question of the legislative authority of the park commissioner to lease to it the old Arsenal now standing in Central Park, even to enable it to exhibit its safety and sanitary appliances. The park commissioner may control and manage the parks for park purposes. Are the purposes of the defendant Safety Institute of America, in any proper sense, park purposes? They are primarily utilitarian and educational in character. Its proposed exhibition is instructive. It is for a long period of years, and is not a mere temporary show of things of passing interest. Incidentally it may amuse those who frequent the park for health and recreation, as any show of mechanical devices might, but so far as it fails to promote "means and methods of safety and sanitation," and to advance knowledge of such subjects, it fails to accomplish its corporate purpose.

A park is a pleasure ground set apart for recreation of the public, to promote its health and enjoyment.

Definition—park.

Perrin v. New York
C. R. Co. 36 N. Y.
120, 124. It need not, and should not, be a mere field or open space, but no objects, however worthy, such as courthouses and schoolhouses, which have no connection with park purposes, should be permitted to encroach upon it without legislative authority plainly conferred, even when the dedication to park purposes is made by the public itself and the strict construction of a private grant is not insisted upon. Brooklyn Park v. Armstrong, 45 N. Y. 234, 6 Am. Rep. 70; Higginson v. The Treasurer (Higginson v. Slattery) 212 Mass. 583, 42 L.R.A. (N.S.) 215, 99 N. E. 523; Riverside v. MacLain, 210 Ill. 308, 66 L.R.A. 288, 102 Am.

St. Rep. 164, 71 N. E. 408; Hopkinsville v. Jarrett, 156 Ky. 777, 50 L.R.A. (N.S.) 465, 162 S. W. 85. Differences naturally arise as to the meaning of the phrase "park purposes." Under local statutes it has been held that a public library may be erected in a park without diverting it from such purposes (Spies v. Los Angeles, 150 Cal. 64, 87 Pac. 1026, 11 Ann. Cas. 465; Riggs v. Board of Education, 27 Mich. 262), and the city of Hartford was permitted to turn over a part of the land it had dedicated as a public park to the state for the purpose of a state capitol (Hartford v. Maslen, 76 Conn. 599, 57 Atl. 740). Monuments and buildings of architectural pretension which attract the eye and divert the mind of the visitor, floral and horticultural displays, zoölogical gardens, playing grounds, and even restaurants and rest houses, and many other common incidents of a pleasure ground, contribute to the use and enjoyment of the park. The end of all such embellishments and conveniences is substantially the same public good. They facilitate free public means of pleasure, recreation, and amusement, and thus provide for the welfare of the community. The environment must be suitable and sightly or the pleasure is abated. Art may aid or supplement nature in completing the attractions offered. The legislative will is that Central Park should be kept open as a public park ought to be, and not be turned over by the commissioner of parks to other uses. It must be kept free from intrusion of every kind which would interfere in any degree with its complete use for this end.

To promote the safety of mankind and to advance the knowledge of the people in methods of lessening the number of casualties and avoiding the causes of physical suffering and premature death is the purpose of the Safety Institute of America; to provide means of innocent recreation and refreshment for the weary mind and body is the purpose of the system of public parks. The relation of the two purposes is at best remote. No reproach is cast upon the humanitarian aims of the Safety Institute when we say that it must find another place in which to bring them to the attention of the public.

The judgment should be reversed, with costs in all courts, and the motion for judgment on the pleadings denied, with $10 costs.

Hiscock, Ch. J., and Chase, Collin, Cardozo, Crane, and Andrews, JJ., concur.

NOTE.

The uses to which park property may be devoted is the subject of the annotation following WRIGHT v. WALCOTT, post, 1246. See specifically, as to leasing of park property, subs. III e, 2, and IV. f.

GEORGE G. WRIGHT et al.

v.

ROBERT WALCOTT et al.

Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court — May 25, 1921.

(238 Mass. 432, 131 N. E. 291.)

Eminent domain — power to devote public property to private use.

1. The legislature may authorize land acquired by a municipal corporation in fee for a public park to be leased for general commercial purposes when it is no longer needed for the purposes for which it was acquired.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1246.]

Statute — dependent on acceptance by municipal corporation.

2. The legislature may make the operation of a statute affecting a particular municipality dependent upon acceptance of it by the municipality.

Public property — lease — disposition of income.

3. Income from public land leased for private purposes must be devoted solely to public uses.

RESERVATION by the Supreme Judicial Court for Middlesex County (Jenney, J.) for determination by the full court of a suit to enjoin defendants, members of the industrial commission, from leasing or attempting to lease certain park lands for private business purposes. Bill dismissed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. Francis J. Carney for plaintiffs.

Mr. Peter J. Nelligan, for defendants:

The act of the legislature in enacting the acts here in question must be construed as a determination that, by reason of changed conditions, land deemed necessary at the time of taking has become no longer needed.

Re Wellington, 16 Pick. 87, 26 Am. Dec. 631.

When a fee simple is taken, there is no reversion, but, when the particular use ceases, the property may, by authority of the state, be disposed of for either public or private uses.

Lewis, Em. Dom. 3d ed. § 861; Lyman v. Gedney, 114 Ill. 388, 55 Am. Rep. 871, 29 N. E. 282; Nelson v. Fleming, 56 Ind. 310; Frank v. Evansville & I. R. Co. 111 Ind. 132, 12 N. E. 105; Heyward v. New York, 8 Barb. 486; Rexford v. Knight, 11 N. Y. 308; Lake County Water & Light Co. v. Walsh, 160 Ind. 32, 98 Am. St. Rep. 264, 65 N. E. 530; Tift v. Buffalo, 82 N. Y. 204; Atty. Gen. v. Revere Copper Co. 152 Mass. 444, 9 L.R.A. 510, 25 N. E.

N. 1. 408, 68 N. E. 884, Huron Waterworks Co. v. Huron, 7 S. D. 9, 30 L.R.A. 348, 58 Am. St. Rep. 817, 62 N. W. 975; Ogden City v. Bear Lake & River Waterworks & Irrig. Co. 16 Utah, 440, 11 L.R.A. 305, 52 Pac. 697; Roper v. McWhorter, 77 Va. 214; Ft. Wayne v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 132 Ind. 558, 18 L.R.A. 367, 32 Am. St. Rep. 277, 32 N. E. 215.

The legislature may authorize the sale of lands acquired for a park where the title is vested in a municipality in fee.

Brooklyn Park v. Armstrong, 45 N. Y. 234, 6 Am. Rep. 70; Brooklyn v. Copeland, 106 N. Y. 496, 13 N. E. 451.

Rugg, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a bill in equity by ten taxpayers under Rev. Laws, chap. 25, § 100, now Gen. Laws, chap. 40, § 53, to restrain conduct of the industrial commission of Cambridge alleged to commit that city to obligations unauthorized by law. The pertinent facts are that the city of Cambridge was authorized by Stat. 1892, chap. 341, and Stat. 1893, chap. 337, to acquire land for public parks. Under that power and pursuant to a general plan for the development of a parkway and riverside reservation along the Cambridge bank of the Charles river, the city took by eminent domain and purchase about 113.6 acres (exclusive of the land here in question) extending on the river front approximately 4 miles. That general plan has been carried out (except as to the land here in question) and stretches from the Cambridge bridge, on or near the site of an earlier structure called the West Boston bridge, to the Cambridge hospital in the westerly part of the city, at an expense of about $2,000,000. The land in question, called "The Front," contains 349,828 square feet of land bounding easterly on the Charles river 1,759 feet, northerly on Lechmere canal, westerly on a street, and southerly on land of private owners. It was taken by eminent domain in 1894, and the city, which became vested with the title in fee. A sea wall has been built and the land has been filled to grade, each costing slightly in excess of $50,000, the total expense including original cost being nearly $150,000. The land has not been further worked for park purposes. It would cost now from $10,000 to $30,000 to adapt it for park uses, depending upon the extent of development. Since "The Front" was acquired the Cambridge bridge has been built at great expense, connecting Boston and Cambridge, having been opened for use in 1909. It is a substantial structure of fine architectural design. From this bridge on the Boston side of the Charles river, upstream for a considerable distance, there is an attractive river bank park under the jurisdiction of the metropolitan park commission. "The Front" and the present parkway system of Cambridge are separated by three lots of land, occupied by buildings, and utilized as a purely business and commercial district, and communication between the two is by an underpass under Cambridge bridge and through a business street. Since 1894 "The Front" has not been in fact devoted to uses of a public park, except that opposite it in the river, in each year recently, from about June 30 to the first Monday in September, a floating bathhouse has been maintained, access to which is by crossing "The Front," and which has been used annually by at least 10,000 people. The neighborhood in its vicinity has been largely given over to business and commercial activities. By Stat. 1913, chap. 393, as amended by Special Stat. 1917, chap. 223, and Special Stat. 1919, chap. 79, the city of Cambridge has been authorized by vote of its city council "to alter use" of "The Front," to "maintain public dock or wharf thereon," and to "lease said land or any part of it for wharves, terminals, and all other commercial purposes for periods not exceeding ninety-nine years." The city council has passed the requisite votes. The defendants as the authorized agents of the city have had tentative proposals concerning leases of the land in question. The plaintiffs contend that the legislative acts just cited authorizing the alteration in the use of the land and its lease for private business and commercial uses are unconstitutional.

It is to be observed that no one having a special or private stake in the matter is objecting. No one complains on the ground of having paid a betterment assessment for the laying out of this land as a park. The proceeding is wholly under the statute by those having a public interest as taxpayers.

There are certain fundamental principles too well settled to be open to question. Moneys raised by taxation and all public funds can be expended only for public purposes. Private property cannot be taken by eminent domain or by contract of purchase except for a public use. It cannot be so taken or purchased from one person or set of persons with the design of handing it over directly or indirectly to another person or set of persons for their private advantage. The taking of private property except for ends which are of a public nature, even though accompanied by full compensation to the owner, is contrary to fundamental principles of American jurisprudence and violative of the essential character of a free government. Legislation designed or framed to accomplish the ultimate object of placing property in the hands of one or more private persons, after it has been taken by the superior power of the government from another private person avowedly for a public use, is unconstitutional. Salisbury Land & Improv. Co. v. Com. 215 Mass. 371, 46 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1196, 102 N. E. 619, and cases there reviewed and collected; Riverbank Improv. Co. v. Chadwick, 228 Mass. 242, L.R.A. 1918B, 55, 117 N. E. 244; Re Opinion of Justices, 237 Mass. 598, 131 N. E. 25, and cases there collected; Lynch v.

Forbes, 161 Mass. 302, 309, 42 Am. St. Rep. 402, 37 N. E. 437; Wheelock v. Lowell, 196 Mass. 220, 225, 124 Am. St. Rep. 543, 81 N. E. 977, 12 Ann. Cas. 1109; Madisonville Traction Co. v. St. Bernard Min. Co. 196 U. S. 239, 251, 49 L. ed. 462, 467, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 251; Hairston v. Danville & W. R. Co. 208 U. S. 598, 606, 52 L. ed. 637, 640, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 331, 13 Ann. Cas. 1008.

The taking of land for a public park is for a public use. To that end title may be taken in fee. Land acquired by a city or town by eminent domain or through expenditure of public funds, held strictly for public uses as a park and not subject to the terms of any gift, devise, grant, bequest, or other trust or condition, is under the control of the general court. It may be transferred to some other agency of government or devoted to some other public use by legislative mandate. The power of the general court in this regard is supreme over that of the city or town. When title in fee is acquired in the land by the municipality for such a public use, there is no right of reversion to the original owner. He has been divested of every vestige of title when he parted with the fee. Higginson v. Treasurer (Higginson v. Slattery) 212 Mass. 583, 42 L.R.A. (N.S.) 215, 99 N. E. 523; Stewart v. Kansas City, 239 U. S. 14, 16, 60 L. ed. 120, 121, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 15.

The question never has arisen for express judicial determination in this commonwealth, whether land once taken in fee for a public use can be sold and devoted to private uses when, through the lapse of time or by reason of changed conditions and under legislative authority, it has been decided that such land is no longer needed for public uses.

Since 1901 there has been a general law authorizing the abandonment of lands, easements, and other rights taken by cities and towns otherwise than by purchase, upon compliance with certain conditions set forth in the statute. Gen. Laws, cial statutes authorizing cities to sell certain lands acquired or held for park purposes. None of these acts has been attacked in this court.

The question has arisen in other jurisdictions, where it has been held that, when there is legislative determination or approval to that end, such conveyance may be made when by reason of altered conditions the land is no longer needed for the public use. Brooklyn Park v. Armstrong, 45 N. Y. 234, 6 Am. Rep. 70; Reichling v. Covington Lumber Co. 57 Wash. 225, 135 Am. St. Rep. 976, 106 Pac. 777; Craig v. Allegheny, 53 Pa. 477, 481; Malone v. Toledo, 34 Ohio St. 541; Re New York, 190 N. Y. 350, 358, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 335, 83 N. E. 299, 13 Ann. Cas. 598; McGuire v. Atlantic City, 63 N. J. L. 91, 42 Atl. 781; Konrad v. Rogers, 70 Wis. 492, 36 N. W. 261; Lyman v. Gedney, 114 Ill. 388, 403, 55 Am. Rep. 871, 29 N. E. 282. See Driscoll v. New Haven, 75 Conn. 92, 52 Atl. 618. It was held in Chase v. Sutton Mfg. Co. 4 Cush. 152, that a mill privilege and flowage rights acquired for the public use of establishing and maintaining a canal, when no longer necessary for the promotion of that enterprise because of its failure, might be sold under legislative authority for private uses. See Winnisimmet Co. v. Grueby, 209 Mass. 1, 95 N. E. 293. It has been held by this court that land acquired by railroads for their public aims may be sold when no longer required. Williams v. Johnson, 208 Mass. 544, 95 N. E. 90. Cities may devote for hire to private uses land or buildings not, for the time being, needed for public purposes. French v. Quincy, 3 Allen, 9; Worden v. New Bedford, 181 Mass. 23, 41 Am. Rep. 185; Davis v. Rockport, 213 Mass. 279, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1139, 100 N. E. 612. It is a familiar incident in public affairs that the easement taken for public travel in laying out a highway may be abandoned by legislative authority, and thereby chap. 82, §§ 1, 21, 30. Coakley v. Boston & M. R. Co. 159 Mass. 32, 38 N. E. 930. In Boston v. Talbot, 206 Mass. 82, 91 N. E. 1014, with reference to takings, authorized by Stat. 1902, chap. 534, for the Boston subways and tunnels, it was said at page 90: "The legislature well might determine that a taking in fee might be necessary in certain cases, in reference to a reasonably economical management of the business, in the public interest, even though the use of the fee would not be needed permanently, and might authorize a subsequent sale or leasing of any rights in the property that were no longer devoted to the public use."

Stating the proposition broadly, the taking in fee of private lands for a public use, the achievement of the aim contemplated, the complete accomplishment of the public purpose designed, and the subsequent sale of the land so taken for private improvement, is a recognized and valid exercise of the power of the general court under our Constitution. Dingley v. Boston, 100 Mass. 544; Talbot v. Hudson, 16 Gray, 417; Bancroft v. Cambridge, 126 Mass. 488; Moore v. Sanford, 151 Mass. 285, 7 L.R.A. 151, 24 N. E. 323; Sweet v. Rechel, 159 U. S. 380, 40 L. ed. 188, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 43. Most of these cases related to exercise of the police power combined with and supplemented by eminent domain, but they all recognized the existence of power to sell for private improvement land taken by eminent domain for public use when continued ownership by the public agency is no longer necessary.

On principle there is no reason why land taken and used for a municipal building of any sort or other public function may not, when the need is at an end, under legislative authority, be sold, or otherwise, with due regard to the public interests, be devoted to private purposes.

The facts in the case at bar war-

Eminent domain —power to devote public property to private use.

2. Capitol; city or town hall, 1253.
3. Courthouse, 1254.
4. Jail, 1254.
5. Library, 1255.
6. Museum, 1256.
7. Schoolhouse, 1256.
8. Incident to ordinary park purposes, 1257.
9. Miscellaneous buildings, 1258.
- d. Erection of monuments, 1259.
- e. Conveyance or lease of property:
 1. Sale, 1259.
 2. Lease, 1262.

I. Scope.

This annotation discusses the question as to what particular uses park land, however acquired, may be devoted, covering the question of the power of the legislature, state or municipal government, or its officers to control the uses to which park property may be put; but does not deal with the question of who may object to the changed use.

The term "park" in the title of the annotation is taken to include all open plots of ground, commonly spoken of as parks, squares, commons, etc., except playgrounds; and the term "uses" is confined to permanent or semipermanent uses as distinguished from merely temporary or intermittent uses, such as for delivering addresses, holding meetings, etc., cases involving which are excluded.

II. In general.

The municipal authorities have power to devote park property to uses which are proper park purposes or consistent with the purposes of its dedication; but it is generally held that they cannot divert park property from park purposes or the purposes of its dedication.

The uses to which park property may be devoted depend, to some extent, upon the manner of its acquisition, i. e., whether dedicated by the owner thereof, or purchased or condemned by the municipality.

Thus, the uses to which land dedicated by its private owner as a park may be devoted depend upon the pur-

- g. Inclosure of land, 1264.
- h. Setting out of trees, 1265.
- i. Municipal water supply and sewage, 1265.
- j. Miscellaneous uses, 1266.

IV. Power of legislature or state officers:

- a. In general, 1266.
- b. Railroad uses, 1266.
- c. Use for buildings, 1267.
- d. Use for monuments, 1268.
- e. Sale, 1268.
- f. Lease, 1270.
- g. Inclosure, 1271.

V. Power of eminent domain, 1271.

poses of the dedication, as determined by the intention of the dedicator, and such land cannot be used for any purpose which is inconsistent with such intention. McIntyre v. El Paso County (1900) 15 Colo. App. 78, 61 Pac. 237; Riverside v. MacLain (1904) 210 Ill. 308, 66 L.R.A. 288, 102 Am. St. Rep. 164, 71 N. E. 408; Hopkinsville v. Jarrett (1914) 156 Ky. 777, 50 L.R.A. (N.S.) 465, 162 S. W. 85; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Cincinnati (1907) 76 Ohio St. 481, 81 N. E. 983; Harris County v. Taylor (1883) 58 Tex. 690; Clement v. Paris (1913) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 154 S. W. 624; McBride v. Rockwall County (1917) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 195 S. W. 926.

The dedication of lands as "public grounds" is an unrestricted dedication to public use, and in such case the use is indefinite and may be any public use. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Joliet (1875) 79 Ill. 25.

A different construction is placed upon dedications made by individuals from those made by the public. The former are construed strictly according to the terms of the grant, while in the latter cases a less strict construction is adopted. Harter v. San Jose (1904) 141 Cal. 659, 75 Pac. 344; Spires v. Los Angeles (1906) 150 Cal. 64, 87 Pac. 1026, 11 Ann. Cas. 465; Riverside v. MacLain (1904) 210 Ill. 308, 66 L.R.A. 288, 102 Am. St. Rep. 164, 71 N. E. 408; Hopkinsville v. Jarrett (1914) 156 Ky. 777, 50 L.R.A. (N.S.) 465, 162 S. W. 85.

When the purposes for which public squares may be used are defined by Supp. 807, that there was no statute under which the park commissioners of Buffalo could lay a public highway across a public parkway; that they had no proprietary right or interest in the park lands, nor the right or power to dispose of any such interest; nor the right to consent that any of such lands should be used otherwise than for park purposes as distinguished from public highways.

And a city has no authority to dedicate part of the land conveyed to it for a public market for the purpose of a highway, and therefore no dedication can be presumed from any length of user. Hamilton v. Morrison (1868) 18 U. C. C. P. 228.

It was held in Look v. El Paso Union Pass. Depot Co. (1921) — Tex. Com. App. —, 228 S. W. 917, that while to lay sidewalks through and around parks is not necessarily a diversion of that part of the park so used to other than park purposes, where the purpose on the part of a city, in laying a sidewalk along the outside of a park, is to secure an adjustment of its lawsuit with a private individual in reference to the title of land adjoining the park, and the laying of such sidewalk results in an appropriation of a part of the park property for the benefit of a private party, the laying of the walk, under such circumstances, is a diversion of the property from park purposes.

And land dedicated for use as a "public square" may not be occupied by a bridge company as an approach to the bridge, and such use of the land constitutes an abandonment of it as a public square. Porter v. International Bridge Co. (1910) 200 N. Y. 234, 93 N. E. 716, 21 Ann. Cas. 684.

But a borough given by statute power to regulate public squares may lay out a pleasure drive around the borders of a square dedicated by the commonwealth for such appropriate public uses as would, under usage and custom, be deemed to have been fairly in contemplation, at the time of the reservation of the square, as public uses, such as courthouses, markets, (1895) 171 Pa. 542, 33 Atl. 112.

And it is intimated in Riverside v. MacLain (1904) 210 Ill. 308, 66 L.R.A. 288, 102 Am. St. Rep. 164, 71 N. E. 408, where a village was enjoined from constructing a public highway across a park, that the use of a strip across the park for the purposes of a pleasure driveway would not be a misuse of the park lands.

And the construction of a speedway in a public parkway is a use for a strictly park purpose, and is within the power of a municipal board of park commissioners, who are given by statute exclusive control of the parks of the city, and vested with an absolute discretion to improve and maintain such parks as in their judgment shall seem proper. Holtz v. Diehl (1899) 26 Misc. 224, 56 N. Y. Supp. 841.

And where a county purchases land and causes a town to be platted as the county seat, in which a public square is designated for the county buildings, the public may acquire a right to maintain a highway across the square by dedication by the county commissioners, or by user for twenty years, since the use of a portion thereof as a highway is not inconsistent with its use as such a square. Greene County v. Huff (1883) 91 Ind. 333.

b. Use for railroad purposes.

See also cases under subds. IV. b, and V. infra.

The construction of railroads in squares, parks, and commons has been generally held an inconsistent use of the property. United States v. Illinois C. R. Co. (1869) 2 Biss. 174, Fed. Cas. No. 15,437; Douglass v. Montgomery (1897) 118 Ala. 599, 43 L.R.A. 376, 24 So. 745; Jacksonville v. Jacksonville R. Co. (1873) 67 Ill. 540; Porter v. International Bridge Co. (1910) 200 N. Y. 234, 93 N. E. 716, 21 Ann. Cas. 684; Re New York & B. B. R. Co. (1880) 20 Hun (N. Y.) 201; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Cincinnati (1907) 76 Ohio St. 481, 81 N. E. 983; Morrow v. Highland Grove Traction Co. (1908) 219 Pa. 619, 123 Am. St. Rep. 677, 69 Atl. 41.

Thus, it has been held that where individual for park purposes, and he has sold abutting lots with reference thereto, and the municipality has accepted the land for a park, the use of such land for railroad purposes is a manifest perversion of the trust under which the city holds the land for the use of the public. Jacksonville v. Jacksonville R. Co. (1873) 67 Ill. 540.

And it was not denied in Re Boston & A. R. Co. (1873) 53 N. Y. 574, but that the use for the purposes of a railroad of property dedicated as a park was an inconsistent use. The question there decided was whether the legislature had conferred the power upon the railroad to enter upon and take possession of the property.

And it has been held that where lands are dedicated by a private individual for a public common or landing, the erection of an elevated railroad structure thereon is a diversion from the use for which the lands are dedicated, and that an ordinance granting a railroad company the right to do so is void. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Cincinnati (1907) 76 Ohio St. 481, 81 N. E. 983.

A grant to a railroad company of a right to construct its road over a city park, and the abandonment and discontinuance of the park by the city, which attempts to confirm the title of the railroad company which had purchased the reversion, are a violation of the trust under which the city held the land for the public, where the land was conveyed to the city for a common or park only, with a provision for its reversion if used for other purposes. Douglass v. Montgomery (1898) 118 Ala. 599, 43 L.R.A. 376, 24 So. 745.

And it has been held that the use of land, designated on a map of a proposed extension of a village, by those subdividing the property, as a public square, for the erection and maintenance of a railway station and tracks, is not consistent with the purposes for which the property was dedicated, and the granting of permission by the municipality for the permanent occupation of such public square by such structures amounts in law to an abandonment of the land to the original dedicators. Porter v. International Bridge Co. (1910) 200 N. Y. 234, 93 N. E. 716, 21 Ann. Cas. 684.

Where lands have been condemned by a municipality for park purposes pursuant to a special statute, the municipality cannot permit the lands to be used for railroad purposes inconsistent with their use as a park, without express legislative authority. Re New York & B. B. R. Co. (1880) 20 Hun (N. Y.) 201. In this case, the use of a seaside concourse or park by a railroad company for the purposes of a depot, engine house, etc., was held utterly inconsistent with the use of such land as a public park.

And where the proper government agent, on making a plat of land of the United States, designates a portion thereof as "public ground, forever to remain vacant of buildings," the municipality in which it is situated cannot grant such land to a railroad company for the erection of a passenger depot and for other railroad purposes. United States v. Illinois C. R. Co. (1869) 2 Biss. 174, Fed. Cas. No. 15,437.

And it was held in Morrow v. Highland Grove Traction Co. (1908) 219 Pa. 619, 123 Am. St. Rep. 677, 69 Atl. 41, that the purchasers of lots according to a plan on which an open square was shown could enjoin the use of such square by a street railway company for a car barn, sand sheds, and tracks.

But where the act under which a city was laid out directed the state to reserve 100 acres for a common pasture, and the state conveyed the property to the city for such public uses as the city council might ordain, the use of a part of the land for the road-bed of a railroad is a public use within the meaning of the conveyance. Allegheny v. Ohio & P. R. Co. (1855) 26 Pa. 355. And it was held by a divided court in this case that the city council had authority to grant such land to a railroad company for such use. The railroad company, however, was enjoined from erecting depots or ed, and it was also enjoined so to transact its business as to prevent intrusions upon the remainder of the square by passengers or by persons coming to or departing from the cars with their freight or baggage.

And before land purchased by a city for a park has been actually dedicated to the public use, the city may convey it to a railroad company for a yard and depot grounds, if no limitation or restriction as to alienation was inserted in the deed to it. Ft. Wayne v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (1892) 132 Ind. 558, 18 L.R.A. 367, 32 Am. St. Rep. 277, 32 N. E. 215.

And a grant by a municipality of the legal title to a part of a common reserved by the state, and used by the municipality as a park, for the construction of a railroad passenger depot and a driveway therefor, has been held to be authorized by a statute which granted the lands to the municipality for such public uses as the select and common council might, from time to time, direct and ordain. Larkin v. Allegheny (1908) 89 C. C. A. 369, 162 Fed. 611.

A city may permit a railroad track to be laid across a strip of land upon the bank of the river, donated for a common. Goode v. St. Louis (1892) 113 Mo. 257, 20 S. W. 1048. The court said: "It is true that in the course of time the city authorities have permitted, perhaps encouraged, by their licenses, & substitution of the rapid transit of railroad trains across the common in lieu and stead of the slow-moving wagons of former times; but this is but a change in the method of the public use, and not in the use itself; and such method is entirely germane to the purposes of the original dedication, and within the legitimate regulation and control of the municipal authorities." It is intimated, however, in this case, that a city would have no power to permit the construction of a railroad across a public park, since, although holding that a railroad could be permitted to cross a common, the court reached such conclusion upon the ground that a common differed from a park, overruling the contention of counsel that the word "common" should be treated as synonymous with "park," holding that the word "common" had a much more comprehensive meaning, and meant simply an uninclosed piece of land set apart for public use, while a park was a piece of ground within a city or town, inclosed and kept for ornament and recreation.

And it has been held that a municipality had the right to lease for railroad purposes lands designated by the county commissioners, who laid out the town, as "public grounds," and which were used as a common and for an approach to a municipal bridge, so long as the use to which the lands were put did not obstruct the approach to the bridge. Platt v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. (1887) — Iowa, —, 31 N. W. 888. In this case, an action by an abutting owner for damages, and to have abated, as a nuisance, an obstruction, consisting of a railroad engine house, turntable, and tracks, to passage across the common directly from his property to the bridge, the court upheld a city ordinance leasing such land to a railroad company by a lease reserving a right of way over the common to the bridge, stating that the question in the case which controlled the rights of the parties was whether the plaintiff had a legal right to demand that a direct line of travel should remain unobstructed between his property and the bridge, and that the vital question in the case was whether the city had the power to provide for one approach to the bridge; and the court answered the first question in the negative, and the second question in the affirmative, and held that as the city had provided in the lease for one approach to the bridge, the plaintiff could not recover. This case simply amounted to a decision that the city had the right to obstruct travel over the common in any specified place, provided it left one way open over the common to the bridge.

And it has been held that a court of equity will interfere, at the instance of a street railroad company, to prevent a municipality which has granted, by ordinance, the right to lay tracks across a public square, which tracks have been constructed at a considerable cost, from fencing the square so as to include a portion of the tracks and interrupt traffic, as the damages cannot be compensated in an action at law, and a court of equity will interfere to protect rights acquired under a franchise. Springfield R. Co. v. Springfield (1885) 85 Mo. 674. The power of the city to authorize such use of the park, or the question whether such use was a proper park use, was not discussed or passed upon in this case.

Where property was set apart and designated on a town plat by the proprietor as "public ground," and upon the request of the county authorities a railroad was built across a portion thereof at a great expense, and was operated without objection for twenty years, it was held that the use of a part of the land for a railroad was not inconsistent with the uses for which the lands were dedicated. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Joliet (1875) 79 Ill. 25, 22 Am. Rep. 158.

And where the construction of a railroad does not interfere with the enjoyment of the property, or affords the public better opportunity to use the land dedicated, it has been held a lawful use of the property.

Thus, the construction of a railroad in a park, which in no wise affects or obstructs the free and comfortable use and enjoyment of the park in the customary manner, does not constitute a nuisance abatable at the suit of the people. People ex rel. Britton v. Park & O. R. Co. (1888) 76 Cal. 156, 18 Pac. 141.

And there is no diversion from the purposes of its dedication in running a subway under land deeded for common use as a training field and cow-pasture, where there will be no interference with the surface except a slight enlargement of the approaches to a station. Codman v. Crocker (1909) 203 Mass. 146, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 980, 89 N. E. 177.

And where the dedication of a park excepts a lane running through the property from the uses and purposes of a public park, and stipulates that it shall always remain open as a public highway, the way is subject to use for street railways in the same manner as other highways. Bancroft v. Bancroft (1905) — Del. —, 61 Atl. 689.

c. Construction of buildings.

See also subd. IV. c, infra.

For use for railroad buildings, see subd. III. b, supra.

1. In general.

Where park lands are acquired by dedication, the question whether buildings may be erected thereupon, or the nature of the buildings that may be erected, depends upon the purposes of the dedication. It is generally held, where land is dedicated for the ordinary use of a park or common, that the erection of buildings thereupon not distinctively for park purposes is inconsistent with such use. Chicago v. Ward (1897) 169 Ill. 392, 38 L.R.A. 849, 61 Am. St. Rep. 185, 48 N. E. 927; Ward v. Field Museum (1909) 241 Ill. 496, 89 N. E. 731; Fisher v. Beard (1875) 40 Iowa, 625; Fessler v. Union (1904) 67 N. J. Eq. 14, 56 Atl. 272, affirmed upon opinion below in (1905) 68 N. J. Eq. 657, 60 Atl. 1134; Watertown v. Cowen (1834) 4 Paige (N. Y.) 510, 27 Am. Dec. 80; Brown v. Manning (1834) 6 Ohio, 298, 27 Am. Dec. 255; San Antonio v. Lewis (1855) 15 Tex. 388.

Thus, a town has no right to erect buildings on land dedicated to the public for use as an open pleasure ground, and the erection of such buildings is a breach of the trust for which the land is held. Fessler v. Union (1904) 67 N. J. Eq. 14, 56 Atl. 272, affirmed upon opinion below in (1905) 68 N. J. Eq. 657, 60 Atl. 1134.

And the erection of buildings by the grantees of the city, on commons dedicated to the public use, is unlawful. San Antonio v. Lewis (1855) 15 Tex. 388.

And inclosures and buildings caused to be erected by the original proprietors long after the dedication, on land dedicated as a public square, will be abated as nuisances. Brown v. Manning (1834) 6 Ohio, 298, 27 Am. Dec. 255.

A city has no power to erect or permit to be erected any buildings upon land dedicated as a public park with the restriction that no buildings shall be erected thereon. Chicago v. Ward (1897) 169 Ill. 392, 38 L.R.A. 849, 61 Am. St. Rep. 185, 48 N. E. 927; Ward v. Field Museum (1909) 241 Ill. 496, 89 N. E. 731 (museum).

The owners of lots facing a square dedicated by a county, and marked "public lots" on its plat of the county seat, may enjoin purchasers of a part of such square from erecting buildings thereon. Rutherford v. Taylor (1866) 38 Mo. 315.

And a purchaser of abutting lots from a grantor who represents that a space marked as a public square on a plat shall forever be used for that purpose may enjoin the erection of buildings thereon by a grantee of the dedicator. Fisher v. Beard (1875) 40 Iowa, 625.

And it was held in Watertown v. Cowen (1834) 4 Paige (N. Y.) 510, 27 Am. Dec. 80, that the erection of buildings on land dedicated for a public park might be enjoined.

A restriction against the erection of buildings upon land dedicated as a park is not removed by the change of the use of the buildings abutting thereon from residence to business purposes. Chicago v. Ward (Ill.) supra.

And the submergence of lands, dedicated as a public park with the express condition that no buildings shall be erected thereon, as the result of heavy storms, and the subsequent reclamation by the city of such land, do not destroy the restrictions. Ibid.

The consent of the cestuis que trust to the erection of one building on land dedicated for an open public pleasure ground does not amount to a consent to the erection of other buildings on such land. Fessler v. Union (1904) 67 N. J. Eq. 14, 56 Atl. 272, affirmed without opinion in (1905) 68 N. J. Eq. 657, 60 Atl. 1134.

And consent of owners abutting upon a park dedicated under restrictions against the erection of buildings, to the erection of one or more buildings upon such park, will not estop them from bringing suit to enjoin the erection of other buildings. Chicago v. Ward (Ill.) supra.

Where a square is dedicated for use as a site for a particular kind of building, the municipality has no authority to erect thereon buildings for other purposes. Harris County v. Taylor (1883) 58 Tex. 690; Llano v. Llano County (1893) 5 Tex. Civ. App. 132, 23 S. W. 1008; Clement v. Paris (1913) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 154 S. W. 624. In the last case, the court said that the city, as such, could not erect any building upon the square.

But where a square is dedicated to the public use, or to public purposes, generally, buildings may be erected thereon by the municipality. Reid v. Board of Education (1880) 73 Mo. 295.

And the occupation of the central square of a county seat in Pennsylvania by a public building is consistent with the purposes for which it was dedicated. Mahon v. Luzerne County (1900) 197 Pa. 1, 46 Atl. 894.

And where the act incorporating a town gives it the power to erect buildings on its lands, and land is sold to it for the purpose of having the courthouse and jail on the lot, with a covenant for quiet enjoyment so long as judicial proceedings are held there, the town may erect buildings on part of the land and lease them to individuals. Bolling v. Petersburg (1837) 8 Leigh (Va.) 224.

2. Capitol; city or town hall.

The use of a part of a park as a state capitol is not inconsistent with its use as a park. Hartford v. Maslen (1904) 76 Conn. 599, 57 Atl. 740.

The general dedication of land for public squares implies that they are to be enjoyed by the public at large, and they cannot be used by a city for the site of a city hall with a jail in the basement. Church v. Portland (1889) 18 Or. 73, 6 L.R.A. 259, 22 Pac. 528. The court said: "The blocks were indicated on the map as public squares, which implied, of course, that they were to be enjoyed as such by the public at large, and not be appropriated and used by the city in the management and conduct of its affairs. The use of them in the way proposed would necessarily exclude the public from the use of them except for the privilege can be enjoyed wherever the buildings may be located. The act of building the city hall in question would virtually be a purpresture. The city would be making that several to itself which ought to be common to many."

And the mere fact that a block of ground was dedicated by the original proprietors of a town for a "public square" does not confer upon the village trustees authority to appropriate it, in whole or in part, as a site for a town hall, against the wishes of any citizen interested. Princeville v. Auten (1875) 77 Ill. 325.

And land composing part of a park to be used "as public walks or pleasure grounds" cannot be used for the site of a town hall. Atty. Gen. v. Sunderland Corp. (1875) L. R. 2 Ch. Div. (Eng.) 634, 45 L. J. Ch. N. S. 839, 34 L. T. N. S. 921, 24 Week. Rep. 991.

But leave to build a city hall upon a city common was held in Foster v. Worcester (1895) 164 Mass. 419, 41 N. E. 654, to be impliedly granted by a statute authorizing the city to acquire the title to a meetinghouse standing on the common, "for the purposes of a public park or for the purposes of a city hall."

And where land adjoining a river is dedicated as "public ground" for use for the erection of temporary boat yards, which use has ceased in fact, the town may use a small portion of such land as a site for a building for general municipal purposes, and lay out the remainder as a park, and improve and ornament it as such. Com. ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Connellsville (1902) 201 Pa. 154, 50 Atl. 825.

3. Courthouse.

The erection of a courthouse upon a public park or square is inconsistent with the dedication of such park or square for the public use. McIntyre v. El Paso County (1900) 15 Colo. App. 78, 61 Pac. 237; McBride v. Rockwall County (1917) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 195 S. W. 926.

But the erection and use of a courthouse on land designated as "public ground" on a plat of a town has been which the property was dedicated. Lebanon v. Warren County (1839) 9 Ohio, 80, 34 Am. Dec. 422.

And the erection of a courthouse in a square dedicated for "public concerns" is consistent with the purposes of its dedication. Baird v. Rice (1869) 63 Pa. 489.

And in Pennsylvania a county has a right based upon usage, which has acquired the consistence of law, to reasonable accommodation for its courthouse and public offices in the great square of the county town; but the extent of the right is limited to the single purpose sanctioned by that usage. Com. v. Bowman (1846) 3 Pa. St. 202.

So, where a courthouse erected on part of the great square of the county town is vacated by the county officials formerly occupying it, for new quarters in another part of the square, the county commissioners have no right to let the old building for a printing office or for a county treasurer's office. Com. v. Bowman (Pa.) supra. The court said: "The commissioners have no more right to hold this part of the square than they would have to hold the whole of it, by distributing the public buildings to the four quarters of it. When they removed the courthouse and offices to another part of it, their duty required them to remove the materials of the old buildings, or abandon them to the municipal authorities; and by omitting to do so, they became obnoxious to the offense of which they stand indicted."

But it was held in Mahon v. Luzerne County (1900) 197 Pa. 1, 46 Atl. 894, that the county commissioners, when authorized by the proper proceedings of the grand jury and the court as required by statute, have the power to erect upon the central square of the county seat a new and enlarged courthouse upon the site of the old courthouse.

4. Jail.

It was held in Flaten v. Moorhead (1892) 51 Minn. 518, 19 L.R.A. 195, 53 N. W. 807, where the clause, "said tract of land hereby conveyed to be forever held and used as a public park," followed the description in a deed, naming a nominal consideration, to a municipality, that the municipality did not acquire an absolute title in fee, and an order refusing an injunction to restrain the erection of a city prison on the land was reversed.

And a county which has accepted a square from the donor for the purpose of erecting a courthouse thereon cannot use the property as a site for a jail. Harris County v. Taylor (1883) 58 Tex. 690.

And a county has no authority to erect a county jail and a cesspool in connection therewith upon land dedicated by it to the public for use as a public square and a site for the county courthouse. Llano v. Llano County (1893) 5 Tex. Civ. App. 132, 23 S. W. 1008. In this case the court said: "The dedication of the public square to use and enjoyment of the public, with the rights reserved in the county to erect thereon a courthouse, would imply that the county had reserved all the rights it intended to retain in the thing granted; and a use by it for other purposes that are not in keeping with the original purpose for which the dedication was made, and in furtherance of some act tending to increase the facilities of the public generally in the use of the square in a way that said public squares are generally used by the public, would clearly be a diversion of the use and an invasion of the rights of the public. The easement in the public to the use of the square cannot thus be invaded by the owner. Except as to those privileges reserved, he has only such rights to use as any other member of the public, and a use not consistent with that of the public cannot be made by the owner. . . . A dedication of property to public uses by the government or a county is measured by the same law that governs a dedication for such purposes by an individual, and when the dedication is made by the county, it has no more right to devote the property to uses foreign to the dedication than an individual would have."

But the erection of a jail on land designated as "public ground" plat of a town, has been not inconsistent with it. Warren County v. Warren County (Ohio, 80, 34 Am. Dec. 42).

And it was held in Duval County v. Island County (1916) 278 N. E. 342, that the words "public square" written on a map of ground was a clear indication that the square was dedicated to a public square and to be used by the public for some public purpose, but the words did not indicate an definite use of the square for its use as a site for a courthouse. The use sought to be restrained, a proper use, was, however, not decided.

5. Library.

A square in a city dedicated to a public place forever for the use of the community in general, if used as a park, may properly be used for the erection of a public library. It appearing that such use is consistent with the public enjoyment of the park. Spires v. Los Angeles (1906) 150 Cal. 64, 87 Pac. Ann. Cas. 465. In this case the court said: "Now, we are at a loss to conceive why, if the erection of conservatories, and art galleries, and the like, are permitted and sustained as in aid of the enjoyment of the public in the property dedicated to the use of the public, the erection of a public library in a park should be proscribed. The latter is as much in the enjoyment of the public as the former, and, as far as the right of the public to it is concerned, stands on entirely the same footing. If a municipality were undertaken to establish on this property a fire-engine station, hospital, or the like, endeavoring to devote the property (assuming it was dedicated to a public park) to the erection of public buildings, or offices or for use in the transaction of public business, a different question would be presented, and there would be little hesitancy in holding that it could not do so. But the erection of said dedicated property a museum, or art gallery, or conservatory, or library, designed for the recreation, pleasure, and enjoyment of the community in general, is an entirely different proposition, and is a distinction generally recognized by the authorities. Public buildings such as we have last mentioned are for the benefit of the same public that enjoys the advantages of the park; there is nothing exclusive about it, and they are in fact erected and maintained as additional and ancillary means to promote the recreation and pleasure of those to whom the enjoyment of the park is devoted."

Such library building can, however, be used for library purposes only, and cannot be devoted to the establishment of municipal offices therein, or used for municipal administration purposes other than as a meeting place for the board of library directors, and injunction will lie at the suit of a resident abutting owner on the park, to prevent such improper use of the building. Ibid.

The use of a park set apart by the territorial legislature for such uses as the city council might provide, for a public library, is clearly within the purpose of the dedication. Riggs v. Board of Education (1873) 27 Mich. 262.

And land composing part of a park, to be used "as public walks or pleasure grounds," may be used for the site of a library. Atty. Gen. v. Sunderland (1875) L.R. 2 Ch. Div. (Eng.) 634, 45 L. J. Ch. N. S. 839, 34 L. T. N. S. 921, 24 Week. Rep. 991.

But the erection of a public library building upon a portion of a tract of land devised to a city upon condition that it shall be used forever solely as a public park is inconsistent with the purpose for which the park was dedicated, and amounts to a diversion. Hopkinsville v. Jarrett (1914) 156 Ky. 777, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 465, 162 S. W. 85.

And in Jones v. Jackson (1913) 104 Miss. 449, 61 So. 456, where a statute directed the sale of certain land donated to the state for a seat of government, except such blank squares as the commissioners and governor should select as necessary to be reserved as "commons" for the health, ornament, and convenience of a city, and certain land was set apart on a map as a "promenade," it was held that the city could not erect a public library on such land. The court said: "Taking into consideration the time when the state dedicated this square, and the uses to which it was dedicated, we think it was the intention that the square was to be kept open for the use of all the people, and that this was the construction placed upon the act by the commissioners appointed to carry out the purpose of the dedicator is manifested by the designation of the square as a 'promenade.'"

6. Museum.

The erection of a museum upon land composing part of a park, to be used "as public walks or pleasure grounds," is allowable. Atty. Gen. v. Sunderland (1875) L. R. 2 Ch. Div. (Eng.) 634, 45 L. J. Ch. N. S. 839, 34 L. T. N. S. 921, 24 Week. Rep. 991.

But the use of a park as a site for a museum is inconsistent with the purposes of its dedication, where the terms of its dedication prohibit buildings of any kind. Ward v. Field Museum (1909) 241 Ill. 496, 89 N. E. 731.

7. Schoolhouse.

See also Higginson v. Treasurer (Mass.) under subd. IV. c, infra.

The city authorities have no power to erect a schoolhouse upon land dedicated for a public use as an ornamental park, since such use would be inconsistent with the purposes of its dedication. Rowzee v. Pierce (1898) 75 Miss. 846, 40 L.R.A. 402, 65 Am. St. Rep. 625, 23 So. 307.

And it was held in McCullough v. Board of Education (1876) 51 Cal. 418, that the purposes for which public squares may be used are those defined by positive law, and that the erection of schoolhouses thereon was not one of the purposes provided for; and that therefore the board of supervisors of the county of San Francisco had no power to authorize the board of education of the city and county of San Francisco to use a part of a public square for a high school.

Ad
ed te tl
li
O Bu s la re p ou n k g c d l l s e c t n er
c nd in ns oli ci ca ec uc is ca Ci

no he ic
o re ou ei en fir lic
h
.
3, d am
l
3 te
ke

been regarded as practically necessary."

But a city has no power to erect a garage for the automobiles and motor trucks of the park board and employees, upon lands purchased by the city and dedicated by it to the public as a park. Wessinger v. Mische (1914) 71 Or. 239, 142 Pac. 612. Upon a petition for a rehearing it was held that a provision of the city charter authorizing the city to lease, sell, or dispose of parks for the benefit of the city, did not authorize the erection of such garage. In distinguishing this case from State ex rel. Johnson v. Brown (Minn.) supra, the court said: "In that case the authority so to appropriate a part of the park was deduced from a liberal construction of a clause of the charter of that city and the exercise of implied power derived therefrom, which enactment empowers the board of park commissioners to maintain parks and to 'hold, improve, govern, and administer the same for such purposes.' In reaching that conclusion, Mr. Justice Jaggard, speaking for the majority of the court, observes: 'It is clearly within the implied powers of the park board to erect on its property pavilions, boathouses, workhouses, stables, greenhouses, storehouses, an administrative building, and the like. It is within the discretion of the board whether it should combine with the administrative building a superintendent's residence.' In a dissenting opinion, Mr. Justice Brown, however, presents what we deem to be the better reason, wherein he denies such power may exist by implication. There may be lawfully erected in a public park, devoted to recreation and amusement, buildings, such as the power houses and the like from which the public, as a matter of precaution for their safety, must necessarily be excluded, but these structures are only designed as a means to an end, whereby rest is induced and happiness promoted by enjoyment of the remainder of the premises. It is not to be supposed that a visitor to a public park would be permitted to enter a cage of ferocious animals or a den of poisonous snakes, yet the exhibition of beast and reptiles furnishes lessons in the study of the nature of animals, and for that reason places of confinement to prevent their escape and to preclude their contact with the public may be built in a park. Because the private use of a building in a public park may prove advantageous to persons engaged in caring for the premises affords no reasonable excuse for the maintenance or erection thereon of such structures, since the public would be excluded therefrom without necessity therefor."

The erection of a building upon a public square for storing the county's fuel, and for water-closets to be used in connection with the county courthouse, is inconsistent with the dedication of the land as a public square "to and for the public use," and the acquiescence in the use of the square as a site for the courthouse, which was unauthorized, does not authorize the erection by the county of such other building, upon the ground that it is necessary to the use of the courthouse. McBride v. Rockwell County (1917) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 195 S. W. 926.

And where the purpose of the dedication of a public square is for the erection of a court house thereon, the erection of a public comfort station is inconsistent with such purpose. Clement v. Paris (1913) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 154 S. W. 624.

And it was held in Samuels v. Nashville (1855) 35 Tenn. 298, that the county court, by virtue of its incidental control of the courthouse, had no power to create a nuisance by the erection of horse racks in the public square upon which the courthouse was built in accordance with the act of the legislature laying out such square.

D. Miscellaneous buildings.

A town has authority to erect a market house upon a public square marked "market," where there is nothing to indicate that it was intended to be open public ground, since such use is not inconsistent with the purposes of its dedication. Sequin v. Ireland (1882) 58 Tex. 183.

And a city having power to acquire land for corporate uses, and to lay out parks, and vacate the same, may use, as a site for a lighting plant substation, land acquired in fee, for park purposes, by eminent domain proceedings, where the full purchase price of the land is paid by the city from its general funds. Seattle Land & Improv. Co. v. Seattle (1905) 37 Wash. 274, 79 Pac. 780. The court stated that the land could not be diverted to such use, if it had been dedicated to the city for a park, or if it had been paid for with money raised by assessment upon the neighboring property specially benefited.

But it was held in Foster v. Buffalo (1882) 64 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 127, affirmed by the general term on the opinion below, that a city has no power to erect a building for the police department upon land dedicated as a terrace, which is used in part as a public street and in part as a public park.

Nor has a city power to erect a pumping station for supplying it with water, upon land bought by the city evidenced by a deed providing that the land shall be improved, dedicated, and forever used by the city as and for a common park, or boulevard, and for no other purpose, since the use of such lands for a pumping station is inconsistent with the uses described by the deed. Howe v. Lowell (1898) 171 Mass. 575, 51 N. E. 536. The court said: "It may be, when large tracts of land are granted for a public park, that a pumping station for irrigating the land granted, or for supplying it with water sometimes, would be reasonably necessary for the maintenance of the park. But this pumping station was not erected and is not used for that purpose. So far as appears, none of the water is used on the lands granted, but it is a pumping station for supplying the inhabitants of the city of Lowell with the water."

And ejectment may be maintained by a municipality to recover possession of a lot of land dedicated as a public square, where the grantee of the dedicatory has erected a church thereon. Methodist Episcopal Church v. Hoboken (1868) 33 N. J. L. 13, 97 Am. Dec. 696.

Land adjoining a church, which was conveyed to the society for a village green, cannot be used as a building site for a barn, by a purchaser of the property holding under a sheriff's deed, on sale upon execution against the religious corporation. Cady v. Conger (1859) 19 N. Y. 256.

And a stable and shed erected on land dedicated as a public square are public nuisances, and the owner is not entitled to recover in an action of trespass against the duly appointed officers of the borough who removed the buildings peaceably. Rung v. Shoneberger (1833) 2 Watts (Pa.) 23, 26 Am. Dec. 95.

d. Erection of monuments.

See generally subd. IV. d, infra.

The erection in a park of a life-size monument of one of the donors of the land for the park is not a diversion of the park property from the purposes of its dedication. Brahan v. Meridian (1916) 111 Miss. 30, 71 So. 170.

And the erection of a soldiers' and sailors' monument in a park is not a breach of the trust in which the park is held, which requires the land to be always kept open for a public place forever, the court saying that the placing of monuments and statues in parks is a generally recognized and legitimate use of such parks, whether such monuments are purely ornamental, or include the idea of a memorial. Parsons v. Van Wyck (1900) 56 App. Div. 329, 67 N. Y. Supp. 1054.

And the erection of a soldiers' monument, being a devotion of the land to a public use, does not violate the dedication of the land for a public square, or common, where the dedicators do not specify the uses to which the land may be put, since under such dedication the land may be put to any public use. Hoyt v. Gleason (1892) 65 Fed. 685.

e. Conveyance or lease of property.

For transfer of park land to railroad companies, see generally subd. III. b, supra.

1. Sale.

See generally, subd. IV. e, infra.

A municipality, generally, has no power to convey or sell land dedicated as a public park, square, or common.

United States.—Hoadley v. San Francisco (Clarke v. San Francisco) (1887) 124 U. S. 639, 31 L. ed. 553, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 659.

Colorado.—McIntyre v. El Paso County (1900) 15 Colo. App. 78, 61 Pac. 237.

Missouri.—Price v. Thompson (1871) 48 Mo. 361; Cummings v. St. Louis (1886) 90 Mo. 259, 2 S. W. 130.

New Jersey.—Ocean City Land Co. v. Ocean City (1906) 73 N. J. L. 493, 63 Atl. 1112, affirmed on opinion below in (1908) 75 N. J. L. 942, 70 Atl. 1101.

New York.—Re Boston & A. R. Co. (1873) 53 N. Y. 574; Still v. Lansingburgh (1852) 16 Barb. 107.

Oklahoma.—Sharp v. Guthrie (1914) — Okla. —, 145 Pac. 764.

Pennsylvania.—Com. v. Rush (1850) 14 Pa. 186.

Texas.—San Antonio v. Lewis (1855) 15 Tex. 388.

Canada.—Re Peck (1881) 46 U. C. Q. B. 211.

And a city cannot sell, without legislative authority, land condemned by it for a public park, although it holds the absolute fee in such land. Brooklyn Park v. Armstrong (1871) 45 N. Y. 234, 6 Am. Rep. 70.

A provision of a city charter authorizing it to lease or sell the city commons and all property belonging to the city, subject only to the conditions on which the property is held, does not authorize the city to dispose of the commons, where, in the deed conveying the commons to the city, it is stated that the property is to be held for the use and benefit of the city. Compton v. Waco Bridge Co. (1883) 62 Tex. 715.

And a statute giving municipal authorities the power to vacate parks does not authorize such authorities to convey land dedicated to the city as a public park, to the county for the erection by it of a county courthouse, which is a use inconsistent with the purposes of the dedication; the court saying: "The complaint in this case is not of any attempted vacation of this square or park, but of an attempted appropriation of a portion of it for a use inconsistent with the purpose of the dedication, and of an entire alienation and abdication by the city—the trustee of the people—of its right to control the possession and regulate the use of the square." McIntyre v. El Paso County (1900) 15 Colo. App. 78, 61 Pac. 237.

And an ordinance passed under a legislative act giving a city power, with consent of the dedicator, to vacate or extinguish the public rights in land devoted wholly or partially to public uses, and restore the land to the holder of the legal fee, which provides for the vacation of lands dedicated by a camp-meeting association for a camp ground, is invalid as a violation of the rights of owners of lots in the camp-meeting tract; since they have a right to have the land devoted to the purpose indicated by the dedicator when they bought their lots. Ocean City Land Co. v. Ocean City (1906) 73 N. J. L. 493, 63 Atl. 1112, affirmed without opinion, in (1908) 75 N. J. L. 942, 70 Atl. 1101.

And where a city is granted by the legislature power to extend a park into an adjoining river, the extension to be used for a public walk and for erecting works of defense thereon, but without any power to dispose of the space for any other use, the city cannot afterwards sell or otherwise dispose of any part of the land so filled in, for any private purpose. People v. Vanderbilt (1862) 38 Barb. (N. Y.) 282.

It has been held that an act declaring that, when a parcel of land held for a public use shall not be longer needed for that use, the city may sell it, has no application to land dedicated by a proprietor for a particular use. Cummings v. St. Louis (1886) 90 Mo. 259, 2 S. W. 130.

And a part of land conveyed to a town for use as a market place cannot be granted away for the site of a courthouse, although the town decides that there is more land than it requires for the purpose for which the dedication was made. Atty. Gen. v. Goderich (1856) 5 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 402.

And where land is dedicated to a village for use as a public square, permission to be granted by the village to the stockholders of a church to erect a church upon the square, a subsequent deed of the land upon which a church has been erected, by the trustees of the village to the trustees of the church, is a violation of the trust upon which the land is held by the village. Still v. Lansingburgh (1852) 16 Barb. (N. Y.) 107.

And a city has no right to sell property, dedicated as a common, for private purposes, although the proceeds are applied to the public purpose of supplying the city with water; and the erection of a private dwelling house on such land will be enjoined. Com. v. Rush (1850) 14 Pa. 186.

The purpose of a city to subdivide a tract of ground dedicated by a proprietor for a "public square," sell the lots, and invest the proceeds in other property to be used for a park, is a diversion from the uses and purposes intended by the original proprietor, and a legislative act authorizing the city so to dispose of the property is invalid. Warren v. Lyons City (1867) 22 Iowa, 351.

A county cannot sell, to be used for private business, land donated to it for a public square, since such use would be inconsistent with the purposes of its dedication. Lamar County v. Clements (1878) 49 Tex. 347.

And a county has no power to sell any part of a parcel of land dedicated by it as a square, and marked "public lots" on its plat of the county seat. Rutherford v. Taylor (1866) 38 Mo. 315.

And a public square cannot be sold to private parties for the erection of private buildings thereon, by the county court, where it has been for more than eighty years used as a public square, and especially when, in consideration of the conveyance of a lot for a jail, the county court has agreed that no public buildings shall be erected thereon. Sturmer v. County Court (1896) 42 W. Va. 724, 36 L.R.A. 300, 26 S. E. 532.

And land dedicated for a public square for a courthouse cannot, after the county removes the courthouse to another lot, be sold for private business purposes. Lamar County v. Clements (1878) 49 Tex. 347. To the same effect is Lebanon v. Warren County (1839) 9 Ohio, 80, 34 Am. Dec. 422.

And a trust created by the conveyance of land for a courthouse square is not executed by a sale of a portion of the tract and the application of the proceeds to the erection of a courthouse. Elder v. Franklin County (1889) 42 Kan. 652, 22 Pac. 1152; Franklin County v. Lathrop (1872) 9 Kan. 458.

And where a square has been dedicated to public use, a subsequent grant by the successors of the original proprietor, of a part of the square to a religious corporation for the purpose of a burying ground, is void. Com. v. Alburger (1836) 1 Whart. (Pa.) 469.

And the proprietors of land dedicated as a market square have no right to sell part of the land for building lots, and such sale will be restrained. Guelph v. Canada Co. (1854) 4 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 632.

But a city has the power to convey for private use property purchased by it for a public park, at any time before it is dedicated as a public park, where the deed to it contains no limitation or restriction as to the alienation of the land. Ft. Wayne v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (1892) 132 Ind. 558, 18 L.R.A. 367, 32 Am. St. Rep. 277, 32 N. E. 215.

And a city which has dedicated land as a park has the power to tender a part of it to the state for use as a state capitol, and such use is not inconsistent with its use as a park. Hartford v. Maslen (1904) 76 Conn. 599, 57 Atl. 740.

And where statutes authorizing sales of property dedicated for squares, parks, or commons existed at the time of dedication, it has been held that a sale of such property was lawful.

Thus, where a party dedicated land for a public park, and for no other purpose, with condition that in case the land were used for any other than park purposes it should revert, having knowledge of a statute empowering the common council, on petition of a majority of the voters, to sell any public squares or parks, and use the money for purchasing other land for other public parks or squares, a sale duly made is valid. East Chicago Co. v. East Chicago (1909) 171 Ind. 654, 87 N. E. 17.

2. Lease.

See generally subd. IV. f, infra.

A city cannot, by lease, grant to an association the use and control of part of a park for a race track, so as practically to deprive the public continuously of its enjoyment. Nebraska City v. Nebraska City Speed & Fair Asso. (1922). — Neb. —, 186 N. W. 374.

Where land was dedicated as a public square and for a site for a courthouse and jail, the town cannot, after the removal of these public buildings, lease the property and give the lessee an exclusive right thereto. Pomeroy v. Mills (1831) 3 Vt. 279, 23 Am. Dec. 207.

And a town has no right to execute building leases of part of land dedicated for a public market square. Atty. Gen. v. Brantford (1858) 6 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 592.

And where land is dedicated as a public square, to be appropriated for the use of public buildings, buildings erected thereon cannot be leased to private parties, nor for private purposes, by the county court as trustees for the inhabitants of the county, though such court is vested with the naked legal title thereto. Campbell County Ct. v. Newport (1851) 12 B. Mon. (Ky.) 538.

The lease of a building in a park to the Safety Institute of America for a safety museum was enjoined upon the ground that such use of the building was not for a park purpose. WILLIAMS v. GALLATIN (reported herewith) ante, 1238.

But where land is deeded to a town for the use of the town, for the purpose of having a courthouse and a jail built thereon, and provided that, in case judicial proceedings shall be discontinued to be held on such land, it shall revert to the grantor, the town has power to lay off part of the land into building lots and lease them to individuals. Bolling v. Petersburg (1837) 8 Leigh (Va.) 224.

And the inhabitants of a town may authorize the leasing for the erection of summer cottages of "common land" within its limits, which has not been granted into private ownership and which is not needed for public purposes. Davis v. Rockport (1913) 213 Mass. 279, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1189, 100 N. E. 612. In this case the court said: "A municipality has the power to let for profit real estate held for public purposes, and not needed for the present for such a purpose. It is not compelled to let the property lie idle. While it may not expend money to go into business, it may lease the property on reasonable terms and receive the rents. If some minor expense is needed to make the property rentable, such, for instance, as for a new key, a new blind, or new steps in the case of a building, or for suitable ways in the case of vacant land, either by leveling the land or making plank walks, such expense, within reasonable limits, may be legally incurred. We see nothing ultra vires in the acts of the defendant. It either could allow the property to remain unused, or it could let the same or any part thereof for profit."

A city has power to lease to the board of education for the erection of a public library a park set apart by the territorial legislature for such uses as the city council might provide. Riggs v. Board of Education (1873) 27 Mich. 262.

And where the act empowering a city to purchase land gives it the right to grant, sell, convey, transfer, let, etc., such land, the city has power thereunder to lease a part of land acquired by it for park purposes, for the purpose of training and running race horses, reserving access at times to the public for riding and driving on the track. Bryant v. Logan (1904) 56 W. Va. 141, 49 S. E. 21, 3 Ann. Cas. 1011.

Under a statute declaring a certain tract of land to be a public park, and giving the city power to lease the same provided such lease shall not authorize or permit any use or disposition of such lease, by the people of the city as a public park, the city may lease a portion thereof for hotel purposes, under a lease providing that the free use of the waters or grounds of the park by the public shall not in any manner be restricted or interfered with. Harter v. San José (1904) 141 Cal. 659, 75 Pac. 344. In this case the court said: "We are not prepared to say that the public authorities in this case did not have the authority to make the contemplated lease under their general power to control and manage the park. It was some 7 miles from the center of the city. It consisted of 400 acres, only 2½ of which are to be leased. The leased premises were to be kept and maintained in first-class condition, and subject to the rules and regulations of the city authorities. Persons affected with certain diseases are not to be allowed as guests therein. The hotel is to be named the 'San José Mineral Springs,' or such other name as the mayor and common council consent to. It is evident that the city authorities desire to add to the comfort and attractions of the park without expense to the city, and at the same time derive an income from the lease. It is not shown that the contemplated lease will in any way detract from the use of the park by the public. . . . We do not think the contemplated lease in excess of the powers of the city authorities. The park contains mineral springs. The proposed hotel is for the use of the public, where those who desire may get food and rest. It is to be under the supervision of the city. It, if properly conducted, will add to the attractions of the park. It will be no expense, but a profit, to the city."

And it was held in Atty.-Gen. v. Toronto (1864) 10 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 436, that a city had the power, under a statute giving it the power "to alter divert, and stop up roads, streets, squares, etc., or other public communication," to lease a park lot vested by patent in trustees for the benefit of the inhabitants of the city.

Borough authorities have no power to assent to the erection by the United States, as permanent fixtures, of barracks during the Civil War, on property dedicated "to be kept as an open common forever." Meig's Appeal (1869) 62 Pa. 28, 1 Am. Rep. 372.

And a park board has no power, under a statute authorizing it to pass ordinances in respect to the "erections and encumbrances" in the city parks, to permit an owner of property abutting on a park driveway to erect side walls of a building so that the entire front of the house projects for more than 3 feet into the park driveway. Ackerman v. True (1900) 31 Misc. 597, 66 N. Y. Supp. 140, reversed on other grounds in (1900) 56 App. Div. 54, 66 N. Y. Supp. 6.

A city has no power to permit individuals to make and maintain a baseball park in a public park, if it unreasonably interferes with the right of the public to use the park. Sherburne v. Portsmouth (1904) 72 N. H. 539, 58 Atl. 38.

And it was held in Kurtz v. Clausen (1902) 38 Misc. 105, 77 N. Y. Supp. 97, that there was no authority vested in the park commissioners or the city to grant to an individual the privilege of placing and maintaining chairs in the public parks, and that equity would grant relief where, as an incident of such privilege, the ordinary park benches were removed from the shady spots to make way for the chairs, and any person who was either unwilling or too poor to pay for a chair would either have to swelter on a free bench in the sun, or seek shade in some other place than in the public parks.

Under a city charter provision requiring the park commissioners to maintain the beauty and utility of all parks, and to execute all measures for the improvement thereof for ornamental purposes and for the beneficial uses of the people of the city, a park commissioner cannot grant the privilege of using a park fence for advertising purposes. Tompkins v. Pallas

(1905) 47 Misc. 309, 95 N. Y. Supp. 875.

But a city may grant an incorporated horticultural club the privilege of occupying an undeveloped park for a specified period, for the purpose of establishing horticultural gardens which at the end of the specified period are to be turned over to the city. International Garden Club v. Hennessy (1918) 104 Misc. 141, 172 N. Y. Supp. 8.

And the park board, having control over the city parks, may grant a privilege for a public stage route, stations, and waiting rooms in a park, where the right to run stages is confined to their operation for the sole purpose of carrying visitors into or out of the park, or from one portion thereof to another. American Steel House Co. v. Willcox (1902) 38 Misc. 571, 77 N. Y. Supp. 1010.

And a city has power to grant a license or concession to hold, in a public park, race meets, for short periods of time, for the entertainment of the public. Nebraska City v. Nebraska City Speed & Fair Asso. (1922) — Neb. —, 186 N. W. 374.

A charter provision empowering the city to regulate its parks authorizes the city to rent the privilege of selling refreshments, including intoxicating liquors, in a public park. State ex rel. Wood v. Schweickardt (1891) 109 Mo. 496, 19 S. W. 47.

And similar statutory authority empowers the city to grant to individuals, for pay, exclusive rights within a public park to operate refreshment and lunch stands, and to rent boats and bathing suits and towels and dressing rooms. Bailey v. Topeka (1916) 97 Kan. 327, L.R.A.1916D, 491, 154 Pac. 1014. And it was also held in this case that the action of the city in granting such exclusive rights did not constitute a use of the park for other than public purposes, and was not in conflict with the provisions of the deed of gift by which the city acquired the property, to the effect that it should be used for the benefit of the public, and should be inalienable by deed, gift, lease, or other method; and the court said: "The action of the city of which complaint is made consists of the granting to individuals, for pay, of exclusive rights within the park to operate refreshments and lunch stands, and to rent boats, and provide suits, towels, and rooms for bathers, at fixed prices. A free dressing pavilion is provided for bathers using their own suits and towels. Apparently there is nothing to prevent anyone from using his own boat on the pond, should he so desire. We see nothing in the conduct referred to that is inconsistent with the public character of the park, or that conflicts with the terms of the gift. The exclusive character of the privilege conferred is not the basis of any legitimate objection. For as no one has a right to engage in the activities referred to except by permission of the city, no one is wronged by the monopoly created. The concessions granted do not amount to the leasing of any part of the park."

And a city has power to permit a pavilion to be erected on land dedicated for use as a public park, which pavilion is to serve the double purpose of a waiting room for street cars and refreshment and shelter room for the public using the park. Dodge v. North End Improv. Asso. (1915) 189 Mich. 16, 155 N. W. 438, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 485.

g. Inclosure of land.

See generally, subd. IV. g, infra.

The board of trustees of a village have a right to inclose with a fence, land dedicated as a square, where it is not shown that the dedicator's intention was that certain streets should extend across the square. Guttery v. Glenn (1903) 201 Ill. 275, 66 N. E. 305.

And a village may inclose for the purposes of improvement and ornament a park or square, where the only restriction imposed upon its dedication is that it should not be obstructed by buildings upon the banks of the adjacent stream. Langley v. Gallipolis (1853) 2 Ohio St. 107.

And it was held in State v. Charleston Neck Cross Roads (1836) 21 S. C. L. (3 Hill) 149, that the commissioners of roads had authority to erect a been dedicated to the public use as an open square.

A city may permit another to inclose with a suitable fence land dedicated as a public park. Burnet v. Bagg (1867) 67 Barb. (N. Y.) 154.

Where land is granted to a town as the town common, to be used as a training field, to lie undivided, and to remain for such use forever, the inclosure of such land by a fence, the leveling of the surface, the planting of trees, the laying out of walks, etc., is not inconsistent with the condition in the grant. Re Wellington (1834) 33 Mass. 87, 26 Am. Dec. 631.

But a plat of ground marked "plaza" cannot be fenced in by the city as a park, where the dedicatory's intention, evidenced by the necessity of its use for the proper enjoyment of adjacent property, was that it should remain open. Sachs v. Towanda (1898) 79 Ill. App. 439. The court, however, said in this case that "where the owner of a square or plat of ground situated in a city or village dedicates it to the use of the public and calls it a 'plaza,' but does not in any manner designate how it shall be enjoyed, . . . the city or village authorities may assume control of it and maintain it either as an open market place and common, an inclosed park for the pleasure and recreation of the public, or partly inclosed and partly uninclosed."

And a municipality has no power to close up part of land dedicated as a public square "to remain always free from any erection or obstruction." Re Peck (1881) 46 U. C. Q. B. 211.

h. Setting out of trees.

A municipality may set out shade trees upon land dedicated as a public park or square. Guttery v. Glenn (1903) 201 Ill. 275, 66 N. E. 305; Burnet v. Bagg (1867) 67 Barb. (N. Y.) 154.

And where land is granted to a town as the town common, to be used as a training field, the planting of trees thereon is not inconsistent with the condition in the grant. Re Wellington

18 A.L.R.—80.

But where a public square in a city is dedicated for use as a site for the county courthouse, jail, clerk's office, and other necessary county buildings and hitching posts and standing room for the horses and wagons of the justices, farmers, and other persons coming to the courthouse from a distance, the city has no power to remove the hitching posts and pavements and to plant the ground in grass and trees. Frederick County v. Winchester (1888) 84 Va. 467, 4 S. E. 844.

i. Municipal water supply and sewage.

The city has power to use land sold to it, evidenced by a deed providing that such land shall be improved, dedicated, and forever used by the city as and for a common, park, or boulevard, and for no other purpose, for the construction and maintenance of a system of water pipes, below the surface of the ground, for the purpose of supplying water to the city, and such use of the land does not constitute a breach of such condition in the deed. Howe v. Lowell (1898) 171 Mass. 576, 51 N. E. 536.

Nor do temporary acts in driving pipe for experimental purposes connected with the water supply of the city constitute a breach of such condition. Ibid.

Where land is purchased in fee by a city by warranty deed containing no reservation, restriction, or limitation upon the title or use, an ordinance declaring the property to be a public park, and the subsequent use of it as such, and the expenditure of public money for its adornment, do not amount to an irrevocable dedication of it for park purposes, so that a part of it may not be thereafter devoted by the city to a reservoir for the storage of water for the city's inhabitants. Ferry v. Seattle (1921) — Wash. —, 200 Pac. 336.

And where land purchased by a city for park purposes was deeded to it in fee simple without reservation, the construction of a main trunk sewer through the park was not such a diversion of the uses of the park as entitled an owner of abutting property to damages; it being, as to him, damnum absque injuria. Caldwell v. Seattle (1913) 75 Wash. 565, 135 Pac. 470, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 176.

j. Miscellaneous uses.

The devotion of a reasonable portion of a public park to tennis courts, croquet grounds, and children's playgrounds, with suitable appliances for these forms of public amusement and recreation, comes strictly within the proper and legitimate uses for which public parks are created. Caulfield v. Berwick (1915) 27 Cal. App. 493, 150 Pac. 646.

And the proper municipal authorities may build wharves upon a narrow strip adjoining a navigable river, which is marked "common" on the plat of the land proprietors, and charge wharfage for the use of such wharves. Newport v. Taylor (1855) 16 B. Mon. (Ky.) 699; Goode v. St. Louis (1892) 113 Mo. 257, 20 S. W. 1048.

And the use of a portion of a park as part of the state capitol grounds is not inconsistent with its use by the public as a public park, where the proper enjoyment by the public of such part of the park will not, in any manner, be curtailed by such use by the state. Hartford v. Maslen (1903) 76 Conn. 599, 57 Atl. 740.

And the use of a part of a public park for agricultural purposes is not inconsistent with the uses for which it was dedicated. Huff v. Macon (1903) 117 Ga. 428, 43 S. E. 708.

And a building in a public park may be used temporarily as a pesthouse. Hessin v. Manhattan (1909) 81 Kan. 153, 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 228, 105 Pac. 44. In this case, the court said: "The claim that the use of the park for this purpose operated to divert it to an illegal use does not seem to be well taken. The park is public property, given by a dedication which does not limit its use. It might be used for any public purpose. A pesthouse is a public purpose for which it might be properly used temporarily in an emergency such as existed here."

IV. Power of legislature or state officers.

a. In general.

The legislature has no power to authorize the use of a public park, square, or common for a purpose inconsistent with the purposes for which it was dedicated.

Colorado.—McIntyre v. El Paso County (1900) 15 Colo. App. 78, 61 Pac. 237.

Illinois.—Ward v. Field Museum (1909) 241 Ill. 496, 89 N. E. 731.

Iowa.—Warren v. Lyons City (1867) 22 Iowa, 351.

Kentucky.—Hopkinsville v. Jarrett (1914) 156 Ky. 777, 50 L.R.A. (N.S.) 465, 162 S. W. 85.

Missouri.—Cummings v. St. Louis (1886) 90 Mo. 259, 2 S. W. 130.

New Jersey.—Fessler v. Union (1904) 67 N. J. Eq. 14, 56 Atl. 272, affirmed upon opinion below in (1905) 68 N. J. Eq. 657, 60 Atl. 1134.

Ohio.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Cincinnati (1907) 76 Ohio St. 481, 81 N. E. 983.

Where the proprietors of a town site, in the recorded plat thereof, designate a block of land simply as "square," this designation is sufficient to indicate an intention to dedicate the block to a public use, but is insufficient to designate any particular public use. The legislature so far represents the public that it may, by a proper act, designate and determine to what particular public use such block shall be devoted, if no private rights have intervened. Daughters v. Riley County (1910) 81 Kan. 548, 27 L.R.A. (N.S.) 938, 106 Pac. 297.

b. Railroad uses.

See also cases under subd. III. b, supra.

The legislature has no power to authorize a railroad company to construct its tracks upon land dedicated to the city as a public park. Jacksonville v. Jacksonville R. Co. (1873) 67 Ill. 540.

And it was held in United States v. Illinois C. R. Co. (1869) 2 Biss. 174, Fed. Cas. No. 15,437, that the state could not grant to a railroad company for railroad purposes land therein dedicated by the Federal government as "public ground, forever to remain vacant of buildings."

And the legislature has no power to grant a city the right to convey to a railroad company for railroad purposes land dedicated as a public park, with the restriction that no buildings shall be erected thereon. Chicago v. Ward (1897) 169 Ill. 392, 38 L.R.A. 839, 61 Am. St. Rep. 185, 48 N. E. 927. It was held in this case that the vested rights of owners abutting upon the park, fixed by the acts of dedication, the acceptance of the city, and the acquiescence of the public and abutting owners, could not be changed by the legislature granting the city the right to convey such land for railroad purposes, as such action would be an unconstitutional impairment of such rights.

But the legislature has power to authorize the construction of a railroad over land dedicated as "public ground," since its use for a railroad is not inconsistent with the purposes of its dedication. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Joliet (1875) 79 Ill. 25.

And it was held in Codman v. Crocker (1909) 203 Mass. 146, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 980, 89 N. E. 177, a suit by taxpayers against the city, the state transit commission, and the contractor, to enjoin the construction of a tunnel under a common, that the legislature had power to authorize the construction of a tunnel under a common dedicated for the common use of the people as a training field and cow pasture, upon the ground that such use was not a diversion from the purposes of its dedication.

A passenger railway in a park where there are no streets, but only country roads, is not a street passenger railway within the meaning of a state Constitution that no street passenger railway shall be constructed within the limits of any city without the consent of its local authorities, and therefore a statute organizing such park and putting it under the control of a board of park commissioners which authorizes such commissioners to license, without the consent of the city, the construction of a passenger railway within such park, does not violate such constitutional provision. Philadelphia v. McManes (1896) 175 Pa. 28, 34 Atl. 331.

Where the line of a railroad has been laid out in pursuance of legislative authority, a subsequent appropriation for a public park of lands containing a part of the proposed line of railroad, in the absence of an express direction to the contrary, will be deemed to be subject to the right of the railroad company to construct its railroad upon the right of way as originally laid out. Suburban Rapid Transit Co. v. New York (1891) 128 N. Y. 510, 28 N. E. 525.

And a New York statute (Railroad Act, § 108, Laws 1890, chap. 565, as amended by Laws 1892, chap. 676) providing that "no street surface railroad shall be constructed . . . in public parks, except in tunnels to be approved by the local authorities having control of such parks," has been held not applicable to a parkway, laid out under statutory authority, which includes lands over which a railroad company has a vested franchise at the time the parkway is laid out. Coney Island, Ft. H. & B. R. Co. v. Kennedy (1897) 15 App. Div. 588, 44 N. Y. Supp. 825.

c. Use for buildings.

See also, generally, subd. III. c, supra.

The legislature has power to authorize commissioners appointed by statute to erect a courthouse and municipal buildings upon a public square dedicated for buildings for "public concerns," since the legislature is simply appropriating the square to the purposes to which it was dedicated. Baird v. Rice (1869) 63 Pa. 489.

And the commonwealth, as against citizens and taxpayers of a county, may authorize the erection of a new and enlarged courthouse upon the site of the old courthouse, situated on land dedicated by the plans of a town as a public square. Mahon v. Luzerne County (1900) 197 Pa. 1, 46 Atl. 894. In this case the court said: "The title to spaces left open by the original plans of towns, or by subsequent general dedication for similar purposes, is in the commonwealth for the benefit of the whole public; and the uniform course of decision has been that central squares, in the laying out of towns, were meant as much, perhaps primarily more, for public buildings than to secure space, and therefore the commonwealth may authorize their occupation in that manner without altering their original use."

The legislature may authorize the construction of a public school in a public park the fee of which was acquired under its authority by a municipal corporation under power of eminent domain, without compensating the municipality for such use. Higginson v. Treasurer (Higginson v. Slattery) (1912) 212 Mass. 583, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215, 99 N. E. 523.

But where the terms of dedication of land for a park prohibit buildings of any kind, the legislature cannot authorize a museum or other buildings to be erected in such park. Ward v. Field Museum (1909) 241 Ill. 496, 89 N. E. 731. The court said: "There was testimony that certain structures are absolutely necessary for the comfort of the public and the proper use of the park, but most of them, such as shelters in case of storms, band stands, lavatories, toilets, and the like, can be provided without the erection of what would properly be characterized as a building. There is no necessity for locating power houses, stables, or things of that kind above the surface of the ground, but whatever the result may be, neither the legislature, nor any municipal corporation under the authority of the legislature, can violate the restriction imposed in the dedication of the property."

d. Use for monuments.

See generally, subd. III. d, supra.

The erection of a soldiers' memorial on a part of land which was formerly a city park, but which had been dedicated by the city to the state for a capitol site, is a proper exercise by the state of the right to control and manage the land as a part of the capitol grounds. Hartford v. Maslen (1903) 76 Conn. 599, 57 Atl. 740.

And the suggestion that a certain square was not the proper place for a monument cannot be considered by the court where the legislature has decreed that the monument shall be located in such square with the consent of the city, and the city has consented. Locke v. Buffalo (1904) 97 App. Div. 483, 90 N. Y. Supp. 550.

e. Sale.

See generally, subd. III. e, 1, supra.

The legislature has no power to authorize a municipality to sell land dedicated as a public park, square, or common. Warren v. Lyons City (1867) 22 Iowa, 351; Hopkinsville v. Jarrett (1914) 156 Ky. 777, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 465, 162 S. W. 85; Cummings v. St. Louis (1886) 90 Mo. 259, 2 S. W. 130; Le Clercq v. Gallipolis (1835) 7 Ohio, 217, 28 Am. Dec. 641.

And it was held in San Antonio v. Lewis (1855) 15 Tex. 388, that the governor of the province had no authority to authorize a city in the province to sell part of land dedicated to the public for a plaza or square.

The legislature has no power to authorize a county to sell lands dedicated as a courthouse square, and apply the proceeds to the erection of a courthouse. Franklin County v. Lathrop (1872) 9 Kan. 453. In this case the court said: "It is claimed that this sale would only be in furtherance of the trust, as by the terms of the law the proceeds are to be applied solely to the erection of a courthouse. A difference in the manner of executing the trust is all that is sought. 'In trust, and for the uses therein named, expressed, or intended, and for no other use or purpose,' is the language of the statute. Under this a specific execution of the trust is essential. It is not a conveyance of land to aid in the erection of a courthouse. It is a conveyance of land to be used as a site for a courthouse. Such use would cease when occupied by an individual as site for residence or store. The use contemplated is not temporary, but permanent."

The Cherokee Nation cannot, any more than any other dedicator, sell to private parties, for private use, land

But the legislature may authorize the discontinuance of parks and the sale by the city of park lands, where the fee to such lands was condemned by the city under legislative authority. Brooklyn Park v. Armstrong (1871) 45 N. Y. 234, 6 Am. Rep. 70; Brooklyn v. Copeland (1837) 106 N. Y. 496, 13 N. E. 451.

And where reclaimed land was conveyed in fee by the state to a city for use as a park, the legislature has the power to authorize the city to discontinue the park, and sell or exchange the land, and real estate owners in the vicinity cannot enjoin the city from so doing. Clark v. Providence (1888) 16 R. I. 337, 1 L.R.A. 725, 15 Atl. 763; Mowry v. Providence (1889) 16 R. I. 422, 16 Atl. 511.

And it has been held that, where the space between a street and a river is designated by the state as a public place, the state has the power to authorize it to be sold by the city. New Orleans v. Hopkins (1839) 13 La. 326; New Orleans v. Leverich (1839) 13 La. 332; New Orleans v. Hopkins (1839) 13 La. 333. In the first case the court said: "The change in this space, whenever the public interests should require it, is necessarily a condition resulting from the original destination; and the rights and advantages of situation of the front proprietors were necessarily dependent on and subordinate to this condition. This they knew, or were bound to know, when they acquired the property to which this supposed right or privilege of situation is attached. The right of the sovereign power to change the destination of this space of ground is as complete as the right of the defendant to enjoy his privileges in relation to it, until such change takes place. . . . The destination of this space as a public place was made by the sovereign power when Louisiana was under the dominion of the French monarchy; it was changed by the sovereign authority of the state of Louisiana. The right to make this front proprietors is necessarily subordinate." It was also held in this case that an act of the legislature sanctioning a sale by the city of lands dedicated by the state as a public place, and providing that the net proceeds of the sale form a part of the sinking fund of the city, was equivalent to an original authorization by the state for the sale of the land by the city.

A municipal corporation may alienate public places with the consent and by the authorization of the sovereign power first obtained, whenever the public interests may require it. McNeil v. Hicks (1882) 34 La. Ann. 1090.

And an act authorizing a city to sell lands acquired by it by condemnation proceedings, for use as parks, whenever the park commissioners should decide that it was no longer necessary for such use, does not conflict with the constitutional provision respecting the taking of private property for private use. Re Rochester (1893) 137 N. Y. 243, 33 N. E. 320. The court said: "It is claimed that this provision is in conflict with the provisions of the Constitution respecting the taking of private property for public use, as it in fact authorizes the city to take it for a purpose not public. We think the objection is without merit or substance. Of course, the city could not take private property for the purpose of selling it or dealing in it; but having once acquired it for a park, and it becoming, in the course of time, unnecessary or useless for that purpose, by the growth of the city, or other changes in the situation, a sale in the manner prescribed by the statute would be within the legitimate functions of the city as a municipal corporation, and power to that end, conferred by the legislature at any time, or in the act authorizing the taking, cannot invalidate the delegated right to exercise the power of eminent domain."

And in upholding the validity of a sale by a city, under statutory authority, of land dedicated as a public park, the court, in East Chicago Co. v. East whether this statute, authorizing sales of public squares and the investment of the proceeds in other like property, violates any constitutional right of appellees . . . as the owners of property abutting upon the opposite side of a street attiguous to such square or park. The legislature has the power to authorize the discontinuance of parks and the sale of park lands, the fee of which is in the city, and, when in so doing no private property is taken, such legislative authority to surrender or extinguish public rights cannot be questioned. . . . It is inevitable that a tract of ground once intended for and devoted to a particular public use may, from the growth of the city and the changing of conditions, become ill suited to such use. Public convenience, interests, and necessities may make a change of site imperative, and the people most concerned may be practically unanimous in demanding it, and to hold that the legislature may not validly authorize an abandonment or sale of public grounds in any case would be to strip the state of one of the inherent and essential attributes of sovereignty. The owner of private property in the vicinity of such public square, whose means of ingress and egress are not destroyed or affected, has no vested right in the continued use of such property for public purposes. The loss, if any, sustained by such adjacent property owners by the abandonment or relocation of the public square, is not direct, but merely consequential, and is not within the protection of the constitutional provision which forbids the taking of private property without compensation. Counsel for appellees have not pointed out any specific constitutional guaranty which has been violated by the sale and exchange of the park lot in controversy, and we are unable to perceive wherein the constitutional rights of appellees have been violated, but hold the statute authorizing the sale in question valid as against any claims or objections advanced."

It was held in Crippen v. Ohio had power to lay out into lots the portion of land marked as commons on the town plat of the town in which the university is located, and to dispose thereof for the benefit of the university. It appears in this case that Congress had set apart a tract of land for the purpose of endowing a university, and later the territorial legislature of Ohio authorized the laying off in this tract of a town to contain a square for the colleges, lots suitable for house lots, and gardens for a president, professors, tutors, etc., bordering on or encircled by spacious commons, and that later, in confirming the establishment of such towns, the legislature provided that the trustees of the university should have power to alter the plan of such town by extending the house lots into the common.

And where land was patented by the Crown to a city, with a clause providing that the land should be maintained for the purpose of a park for the use of its inhabitants, it was held that the grantors parted with all of their interest, and that the provisional legislature might authorize the city to sell or otherwise dispose of the land. Kennedy v. Toronto (1886) 12 Ont. Rep. 211.

f. Lease.

See generally, subd. III. e, 2, supra.

The legislature has no power to authorize a municipality to lease land dedicated as a public park, square, or common. Warren v. Lyons City (1867) 22 Iowa, 351; Hopkinsville v. Jarrett (1914) 156 Ky. 777, 50 L.R.A. (N.S.) 465, 162 S. W. 85; Cummings v. St. Louis (1886) 90 Mo. 259, 2 S. W. 130; LeClerc v. Gallipolis (1835) 7 Ohio, 217, 28 Am. Dec. 641.

And where land is dedicated by a proprietor for a public square, and held in trust for such purpose, the legislature has no power, as against the inhabitants of the town where the land is situated, to authorize a lease by the town of the property for other purposes. LeClerc v. Gallipolis (Ohio) supra.

And where by an act of the legislature a reservoir is set apart as a public park and pleasure resort for the people of the state generally, the state board of public works cannot grant a lease of its banks for building purposes that will interfere with the free and uninterrupted use thereof by the people. Columbus, N. & Z. Electric R. Co. v. Nelson (1910) 14 Ohio C. C. N. S. 129, 32 Ohio C. C. 431.

But the legislature may authorize land acquired by a municipal corporation in fee for a public park, to be leased for general commercial purposes when it is no longer needed for the purposes for which it was acquired. WRIGHT v. WALCOTT (reported herewith) ante, 1242.

And where land is declared to be a public park, in the act incorporating a city, the legislature may authorize the city to lease a part of such park, provided such lease shall not prevent the free use, by the people as a public park, of the land leased. Harter v. San Jose (1904) 141 Cal. 659, 75 Pac. 344.

And it was held in Kennedy v. Toronto (1886) 12 Ont. Rep. 211, that the provisional legislature might authorize a city to lease land patented by the Crown to the city, with a clause providing that the land should be maintained for the purpose of a park for the use of the inhabitants.

g. Inclosure.

See generally, subd. III. g, supra.

The legislature has power to authorize commissioners whose appointment was provided for by the statute, to inclose lands dedicated as a town common to be used as a training field, to lie undivided and remain for such use forever, and to level off the surface, to plant trees, and to lay out walks. Re Wellington (1834) 16 Pick. (Mass.) 87, 26 Am. Dec. 631.

V. Power of eminent domain.

Park property may be devoted to a use which is inconsistent with the purposes of its dedication, by the exercise of the power of eminent domain, the only restriction in such case being that such use must be a public use.

Thus, park property may be condemned for railroad purposes. Colby v. Toledo (1901) 22 Ohio C. C. 732, 12 Ohio C. D. 347.

And the legislature may authorize the condemnation of lands dedicated as a park, for the purpose of the construction of a subway under the park. Prince v. Crocker (1896) 166 Mass. 347, 32 L.R.A. 610, 44 N. E. 446.

But the power of a railroad company to condemn for railroad purposes land dedicated as a public park must be expressly conferred by statute, that is, in direct terms or by necessary implication; and the implication does not arise if the powers expressly conferred upon the railroad company can by reasonable intentment be exercised without the appropriation of land dedicated as a public park. Re Boston & A. R. Co. (1873) 53 N. Y. 574. It was held in this case that the legislature had not given the railroad company power to take park land.

And a railroad company not expressly authorized to take any part of public parks cannot condemn a part of a park for its road, where it can efficiently exercise the power of locating and building its road between its termini without invading the park. Re Milwaukee Southern R. Co. (1905) 124 Wis. 490, 102 N. W. 401.

And it was held in Buffalo, L. & R. R. Co. v. Hoyer (1915) 214 N. Y. 236, 108 N. E. 455, that a piece of ground marked "Public common" on a plat of land in a village was a public park within the meaning of a provision of the New York Railroad Law that no street surface railroads shall be constructed or extended upon grounds in public parks; and that therefore a street surface railroad company organized under such law could not condemn a right of way across such "public common."

The power to condemn park lands for public uses inconsistent with the purposes of their dedication is recognized in a number of cases.

Thus, the power to condemn park lands for a street is recognized in Re Ashland Street (1917) 165 N. Y. Supp. 977, where the question was as to whether the city was entitled to damages for the taking of lands which were being used for park purposes.

And it was held in United States v. Illinois C. R. Co. (1869) 2 Biss. 174, Fed. Cas. No. 15,437, that neither the state nor the municipality could divert to railroad purposes, except by the exercise of the right of eminent domain, land dedicated by the Federal government as public ground.

And it was held in Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Cincinnati (1907) 76 Ohio St. 481, 81 N. E. 983, that it was not in the power of the legislature, unless in the exercise of the power of eminent domain, to authorize property dedicated for a public common or landing to be used for the purpose of an elevated railroad structure. In regard to the right of the legislature to authorize the condemnation of land dedicated as a public park, the court in this case said: "It may not be improper to call attention to the fact that the right of the legislature to authorize property dedicated to a specific public use to be taken for a different public use in the exercise of the power of eminent domain is not here in question. The right to take it under that power is perhaps just as perfect after it has been dedicated to a public use as it was before such dedication."

And in reference to the construction of a subway under a common, the court, in Codman v. Crocker (1909) 203 Mass. 146, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 980, 89 N. E. 177, said: "As against the donors and the interest which they undertook to serve, it is plain that, except in the exercise of the right of eminent domain, the common could not be appropriated to a public use entirely inconsistent with the general character of the use originally intended. Whether it could be taken in the exercise of this right it is unnecessary in this case to decide, as the statute does not purport to take property in the common under the right of eminent domain."

It was held in Foster v. Buffalo (1882) 64 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 127, that an act of the legislature authorizing the city to erect upon land dedicated as a terrace a building for the police department did not give the city power to erect such building without condemning the fee or easement in such land held by the abutting owners.

And in Re Certain Land (1902) 119 Fed. 453, the court, without holding whether in this particular case the United States could condemn for a postoffice land dedicated as a public park, said that the legislature of the state could authorize the taking of a public park for another public use, and that if, as in this case, there is no express legislative provision, the relative importance of the two uses is to be determined by the court, and if the later use is deemed by the court, under all the circumstances, to be more important than the earlier, the land may be taken for the later use, but if the earlier use is deemed the more important, the later use is forbidden and the earlier continues; that the court doubted if it could be laid down without qualification that the public use of a postoffice was in all cases superior to the public use of a park, but that it was so in the case at bar appeared probable from what appeared incidentally at the argument; but that the issue had not been raised, and could not be determined without a further hearing.

G. V. L.

DAVID P. GRAHAM, Plff. in Err.,

v.

STATE OF OHIO.

Ohio Supreme Court — April 2, 1918.

(98 Ohio St. 77, 120 N. E. 232.)

Homicide — duty to retreat when assailed.

1. If one employed to guard property does not provoke an assault by one making an attack on the property, but is suddenly and violently assaulted with a deadly weapon, and placed in danger of loss of life or great bodily harm, he is not required to retreat before killing his assailant.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1279.]

Appeal — instruction — right to kill to escape danger.

2. An instruction in a prosecution for murder by one employed to guard property, in shooting a member of a crowd making an attack on the property with deadly weapons, that if accused believed in good faith that he was in imminent danger of death or great bodily harm, and that his only means of escape consisted in taking the life of his assailant, then the jury might find justifiable homicide although in fact he may have been mistaken as to the imminence of the danger, is not reversible error, although it fails to state that the means of escape referred to related to escape from the impending danger, and not to retreat, where no request was made to make the instruction more specific.

[See 14 R. C. L. 795.]

Homicide — self-defense — right to charge on law of.

3. Although one accused of murder denies the killing, it is proper to charge the jury on self-defense if there is evidence tending to raise that issue.

[See 13 R. C. L. 812.]

Appeal — misconduct of counsel — how available.

4. Misconduct of counsel not excepted to cannot be made available on appeal by affidavit in support of a motion for new trial.

ERROR to the Court of Appeals for Seneca County to review a judgment convicting defendant of manslaughter. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Frank T. Dore and Ralph Sugrue, for plaintiff in error:

There was no evidence to justify a charge that defendant could be found guilty as an aider and abetter.

Hagan v. State, 10 Ohio St. 460; Woolweaver v. State, 50 Ohio St. 277, 40 Am. St. Rep. 667, 34 N. E. 352; Donald v. State, 21 Ohio C. C. 125, 11 Ohio C. D. 483.

It was error for the court to give the charge relating to "self-defense."

Goings v. State, 24 Ohio C. C. N. S. 145; Jordan v. State, 13 Ohio C. C. 471; Marts v. State, 26 Ohio St. 162; Erwin v. State, 29 Ohio St. 186, 23 Am. Rep. 733, 2 Am. Crim. Rep. 251; Toliver v. Com. 104 Ky. 760, 47 S. W. 1082; People v. Manning, 146 Cal. 100, 79 Pac. 856; Com. v. Mitchka, 209 Pa. 274, 58 Atl. 474; Healy v. People, 163 Ill. 372, 45 N. E. 230.

Messrs. Joseph McGee, Attorney General, Russell M. Knepper, John C. Royer, and Calvin D. Spittler for the State.

Per Curiam:

The plaintiff in error, David P. Graham, was indicted and tried for murder in the second degree and found guilty of manslaughter. Briefly stated, the facts attending the alleged homicide are as follows: Graham and other guards had been employed by a manufacturing company for the protection of their plant and premises. While thus engaged, a crowd composed of boys and men gathered in the vicinity of the plant, and, according to the evidence produced by the defense, marched about its environs in a threatening attitude. The evidence is very conflicting as to the circumstances attending the killing. The evidence of the state tended to prove the assault was unprovoked, while that of the defense purported to show that the alleged mob was making a criminal assault upon the guards and on the premises of the company, when the decedent, Albert Latona, Jr., was killed. The state's case was predicated upon the fact that Latona was killed by a weapon discharged by Graham himself, or by one of the other guards whom Graham was then aiding and abetting in a criminal act, and furthermore, that a conspiracy to make an unlawful criminal assault existed between Graham and his associates.

The errors mainly relied upon in this court are that the court erred in its instructions upon the trial, and that the state's counsel was guilty of misconduct. In the course of its general charge, the court, after stating to the jury that if they found that the defendant and his associates were employed in guarding the buildings and property of the company, and that the crowd of men and boys was making the attack upon them with deadly weapons, instructed the jury that the defendant had a right to defend himself from such attacks and to employ sufficient force to repel them; and, immediately following, the court used this language: "If you find by a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant, in the careful and proper use of his faculties, believed in good faith that he was in imminent danger of death or great bodily harm, and that his only means of escape consisted in taking the life of his assailants, and that, under the circumstances, he had reasonable grounds for such belief, then you would be warranted in finding that the killing was justifiable on the grounds of self-defense, although in fact the defendant may have been mistaken as to the existence or imminence of danger."

This charge is now assailed upon the claim that under the circumstances detailed the court has, in effect, charged that it was the duty of the defendant to retreat. In the main it embodied the substance of the law declared in Marts v. State, 26 Ohio St. 162. It is to be regretted that the court did not elucidate this portion of the charge by the statement that the means of escape referred to related to the escape from the impending danger, as clearly evidenced in the syllabus of the cited case. However, we do not think the charge as given is so prejudicial as to require a reversal, especially in view of the latter portion of the charge quoted, and in the absence of a request by the defendant to make such charge more specific. Under the facts detailed, if the defendant did not provoke the assault, but while in the lawful pursuit of his business was suddenly and violently assaulted with a deadly weapon, and placed in danger of loss of life or great bodily harm, under the current of modern authority he was ^{Homicide—duty to retreat when assailed.} not required to retreat. 13 R. C. L. 826; Erwin v. State, 29 Ohio St. 186, 23 Am. Rep. 733; 2 Am. Crim. Rep. 251; Beard v. United States, 158 U. S. 550, 39 L. ed. 1086, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 962, 9 Am. Crim. Rep. 324; State v. Gardner, 96 Minn. 318, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 60, 104 N. W. 971; Eversole v. Com. 95 Ky. 623, 26 S. W. 816; Hammond v. People, 199 Ill. 173, 64 N. E. 980.

Appeal—Instruction—right to kill to escape danger.

The claim is further made that the court erred in charging the jury that the defendant might be convicted if they found that a criminal assault was made by the defendant or "some person whom the defendant was then and there aiding, abetting, and assisting." This charge is said to be misleading, because of undisputed evidence that Graham was assisting his associate guards in a lawful enterprise, and that from the language employed the jury might infer that his aiding, abetting, and assisting therein would make him criminally liable. The language of the court was unfortunate, in that it did not state that the aiding, abetting, and assisting related to the criminal act. However, in view of other portions of the general charge, especially the state's request No. 5, we do not think the jury could have been misled, for the reason that therein it is clear that the assisting, aiding, and abetting related only to the criminal act, and not to the lawful purpose of assisting his associates in guarding the plant.

The court charged the eighth proposition of the syllabus of the case of Goins v. State, 46 Ohio St. 458, 21 N. E. 476, 8 Am. Crim. Rep. 19, detailing under what circumstances a defendant could be found guilty if he did some overt act producing the homicide. In the case at bar the evidence adduced by the state tended to prove that the defendant, and one or more of the guards, were at the time acting in concert in driving back the alleged mob. If this evidence were true, the jury might have found, under the facts detailed, that an overt act was committed by the defendant in actively aiding his associate or associates there present in making a criminal assault which resulted in the death of Latona. The legal principle involved in the charge is correct, and the only question that arises upon the record is whether such charge should have been given, in view of the testimony disclosed. While the testimony relating to the overt act on the part of Graham is not very strong, we are unable to say in this case that the charge was prejudicial.

In its general charge to the jury the court gave the defendant the benefit of the law relating to self-defense. It is now claimed that in this the court erred, for the reason that the defendant denied the act of firing the shot that killed Latona. It is therefore claimed that the injection of the question of self-defense impliedly admitted that the defendant may have fired the shot that killed the decedent, and was therefore prejudicial error. While it is true that defendant denied the killing, several of the state's witnesses gave testimony tending to show that he fired the shots that killed the decedent. It also appears, both from the cross-examination of the state's witnesses and from the defendant's witnesses, that whatever was done by Graham and his associates on that occasion was done in the lawful defense of their persons. Under that phase of the case, it became the duty of the court to charge the right of self-defense. When the defendant entered his plea of not guilty, he could avail himself of all the defenses which the evidence disclosed. It would be perfectly proper for him to say:

(a) I did not fire the shot.

(b) Whatever I did, I did in my own self-defense. The mere fact that defendant does not admit the killing does not preclude him from this right. Indeed, the defendant may not take the stand at all or offer any evidence in defense. The evidence of self-defense may come wholly from the state; but whether the evidence comes from the defense, or from the state, supporting his lawful right of self-defense, it is the duty of the court to charge that feature of the law. The rule is stated as follows in 13 R. C. L. page 813: "If the defendant denies the killing, and there is no evidence adduced by either party which tends to show that the killing might have been in self-defense, although other evidence shows quite conclusively that the defendant committed the crime, it is not the duty of the court to instruct as to self-defense; but if the evidence tends to raise the issue of self-defense, although the defendant denies the killing, it seems that an instruction based on the theory of self-defense is proper and should be given."

Homicide—
self-defense—right to charge on law of.

That the instruction relating to self-defense was properly given is supported by the overwhelming weight of authority. State v. Jackett, 81 Kan. 168, 105 Pac. 689, 19 Ann. Cas. 118, Frazier v. Com. — Ky. —, 114 S. W. 268, and State v. Sloan, 149 Iowa, 469, 128 N. W. 842.

Misconduct of counsel for the state on the trial is also urged as reversible error. The record discloses that these remarks were exceedingly censurable, and of such character that their effect could hardly be avoided by any exception that might have been taken at the time. But the bill of exceptions does not disclose that the misconduct was excepted to on the trial, but was brought into the case only by affidavit attached to the motion for a new trial. This affidavit was made a part of the bill of excep-

Appeal—misconduct of counsel—how available.

tions. The procedure took the same character as in the case of State v. Young, 77 Ohio St. 529, 83 N. E. 898, which holds that erroneous misconduct of this character cannot be made available by affidavit in support of a motion for a new trial.

Judgment affirmed.

Newman, Jones, Matthias, and Johnson, JJ., concur. Wanamaker, J., concurs in the judgment.

NOTE.

The duty to retreat before killing one's assailant in self-defense when not on one's property is the subject of the annotation following BROWN v. UNITED STATES, post, 1279.

ROBERT B. BROWN, Plff. in Certiorari, v. UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

United States Supreme Court—May 16, 1921.

(256 U. S. 335, 65 L. ed. 961, 41 Sup. Ct. Rep. 501.)

Homicide — self-defense — duty to retreat.

A person attacked by another with a knife does not, as a matter of law, exceed the bounds of lawful self-defense if he stands his ground and kills his assailant, where he has sufficient reason to believe that he is in imminent danger of death or grievous bodily harm from his assailant.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1279.]

(Mr. Justice Pitney and Mr. Justice Clarke dissent.)

CERTIORARI to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Fifth Circuit, to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the District Court for the Southern District of Texas, convicting defendant of murder in the second degree. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. James R. Dougherty, Gordon Boone, W. E. Pope, and H. S. Bonham, for plaintiff in certiorari:

An instruction that plaintiff in error, though in a place where he had a right to be, and though the deceased was making a felonious assault upon him with intent to kill him or do him some serious bodily injury, was obliged to retreat, though without fault on his part, to the ditch or wall, before he could exercise his right of self-defense, and slay the deceased, was erroneous.

Russell, Crimes, p. 508; 3 Co. Inst. p. 55; Fost. C. L. chap. 3, p. 273; 1 East, P. C. 1803, p. 271; 1 Hawk. P. C. 7th ed. p. 172; Bishop, New Crim. Law 1892, §§ 849-851, 951; Beard v. United States, 158 U. S. 550, 39 L. ed. 1086, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 962, 9 Am. Crim. Rep. 324; Erwin v. State, 29 Ohio St. 186, 23 Am. Rep. 733, 2 Am. Crim. Rep. 251; Runyan v. State, 57 Ind. 80, 26 Am. Rep. 52, 2 Am. Crim. Rep. 318; United States v. Wiltberger, 3 Wash. C. C. 515, Fed. Cas. No. 16,738; United States v. Outerbridge, 5 Sawy. 620, Fed. Cas. No. 15,978; 2 Whart. Crim. Law, § 1019; Rowe v. United States, 164 U. S. 546, 41 L. ed. 547, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 172; Carpenter v. State, 62 Ark. 286, 36 S. W. 905; Pond v. People, 8 Mich. 150; Bostic v. State, 94 Ala. 45, 10 So. 602; Weaver v. State, 19 Tex. App. 547, 58 Am. Rep. 389; Gray v. Combs, 7 J. J. Marsh. 478, 23 Am. Dec. 431; 4 Bl. Com. 180; 1 Hale, P. C. 480; Clark, Crim. Law, 137; 1 Whart. Crim. Law, 10th ed. § 495; State v. Cain, 20 W. Va. 679; State v. Clark, 51 W. Va. 457, 41 S. E. 207.

One who is attacked by another in his place of business, in such a manner as would cause a person to believe that he was in immediate danger of death or serious bodily harm, is not obligated to retreat, but will be justified in taking the life of his assailant.

Andrews v. State, 159 Ala. 14, 48 So. 858; Cary v. State, 76 Ala. 78; State v. Goodager, 56 Or. 198, 106 Pac. 638, 108 Pac. 185; Haynes v. State, 17 Ga. 465; Snell v. Derricott, 161 Ala. 259, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 996, 49 So. 895, 18 Ann. Cas. 636.

The right to defend one's home, even to the point of slaying one who forcibly intruded therein, or who assaulted the owner therein, does not seem to have depended at the common law entirely on the fact that the slayer was assaulted feloniously; that is, with an intent to kill him.

1 Hale, P. C. 458; Aldrich v. Wright, 53 N. H. 398, 16 Am. Rep. 341; Bishop, New Crim. Law, § 858.

Mr. E. C. Brandenburg also for plaintiff in certiorari.

Messrs. Robert P. Stewart, Assistant Attorney General, and W. C. Heron, for defendant in certiorari:

The common law, in every case where public interests, e. g., aid of justice, were not involved, required the assaulted person to avoid homicide, if he could do so without endangering the life of himself or another.

3 Bracton (1250) Twiss ed. chap. 5, f. 104b, f. 134, 144; 2 Pollock & M. History of Eng. Law, pp. 476; 3 Stephen, History of Crim. Law, pp. 36-41; Beale, Retreat from a Murderous Assault, 16 Harvard L. Rev. 567; Britton (1290) chap. 6, p. 34; Bracton's Note Book, Nos. 1084, 1215; Howel's Case, Kenny, Cases on Criminal Law, 139; Y. B. 30-31, Edw. I. 510, 512 (1302); Fitzherbert, Abr. title Corone, Nos. 284, 287, 305 (1330) translated 16 Harvard L. Rev. 569; Reg. v. Bull, 9 Car. & P. 22; Reg. v. Knock, 14 Cox, C. C. 1; Reg. v. Rose, 15 Cox, C. C. 540; Reg. v. Symondson, 60 J. P. 645; United States v. Wiltberger, 3 Wash. C. C. 515, Fed. Cas. No. 16,738; United States v. Outerbridge, 5 Sawy. 620, Fed. Cas. No. 15,978; United States v. Mingo, 2 Curt. C. C. 1, Fed. Cas. No. 15,781; United States v. King, 34 Fed. 302; United States v. Lewis, 111 Fed. 630; Allen v. United States, 164 U. S. 492, 497, 41 L. ed. 528, 529, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 154; Anderson v. United States, 170 U. S. 481, 42 L. ed. 1116, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 689.

Mr. Justice Holmes delivered the opinion of the court:

The petitioner was convicted of murder in the second degree, committed upon one Hermis at a place in Texas within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, and the judgment was affirmed by the circuit court of appeals. 168 C. C. A. 258, 257 Fed. 46. A writ of certiorari was granted by this court. 250 U. S. 637, 63 L. ed. 1183, 39 Sup. Ct. Rep. 494. Two questions are raised. The first is whether the indictment is sufficient, inasmuch as it does not allege that the place of the homicide was acquired by the United States "for the erection of a fort, magazine, arsenal, dockyard, or other needful building," although it does allege that it was acquired from the state of Texas by the United States for the exclusive use of the United States for its public purposes, and was under the exclusive jurisdiction of the same. Penal Code of March 4, 1909, chap. 321, § 272, subd. 3, 35 Stat. at L. 1088, Comp. Stat. § 10,445, 7 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 890; Constitution, art. 1, § 8. In view of our opinion upon the second point, we think it unnecessary to do more than to refer to the discussion in the court below upon this.

The other question concerns the instructions at the trial. There had been trouble between Hermis and the defendant for a long time. There was evidence that Hermis had twice assaulted the defendant with a knife, and had made threats, communicated to the defendant, that the next time one of them would go off in a black box. On the day in question the defendant was at the place above mentioned, superintending excavation work for a postoffice. In view of Hermis's threats he had taken a pistol with him, and had laid it in his coat upon a dump. Hermis was driven up by a witness, in a cart to be loaded, and the defendant said that certain earth was not to be removed, whereupon Hermis came toward him, the defendant says, with a knife. The defendant retreated some 20 or 25 feet to where his coat was, and got his pistol. Hermis was striking at him, and the defendant fired four shots and killed him. The judge instructed the jury, among other things, that "it is necessary to remember, in considering the question of self-defense, that the party assaulted is always under the obligation to retreat so long as retreat is open to him, provided that he can do so without subjecting himself to the danger of death or great bodily harm." The instruction was reinforced by the further intimation that unless "retreat would have appeared to a man of reasonable prudence, in the position of the defendant, as involving danger of death or serious bodily harm," the defendant was not entitled to stand his ground. An instruction to the effect that, if the defendant had reasonable grounds of apprehension that he was in danger of losing his life or of suffering serious bodily harm from Hermis, he was not bound to retreat, was refused. So the question is brought out with sufficient clearness whether the formula laid down by the court, and often repeated by the ancient law, is adequate to the protection of the defendant's rights.

It is useless to go into the developments of the law from the time when a man who had killed another, no matter how innocently, had to get his pardon, whether of grace or of course. Concrete cases or illustrations stated in the early law in conditions very different from the present, like the reference to retreat in 3 Co. Inst. 55, and elsewhere, have had a tendency to ossify into specific rules, without much regard for reason. Other examples may be found in the law as to trespass ab initio (Com. v. Rubin, 165 Mass. 453, 43 N. E. 200), and as to fresh complaint after rape (Com. v. Cleary, 172 Mass. 175, 51 N. E. 746). Rationally, the failure to retreat is a circumstance to be considered with all the others in order to determine whether the defendant went farther than he was justified in doing; not a categorical proof of guilt. The law has grown, and even if historical mistakes have contributed to its growth, it has tended in the direction of rules consistent with human nature. Many respectable writers agree that, if a man reasonably believes that he is in immediate danger of death or grievous bodily harm from his assailant, he may stand his ground, and that, if he kills him, he has not exceeded the bounds of lawful self-defense. That has been the decision of this court. Beard v. United States, 158 U. S. 550, 559, 39 L. ed. 1086, 1090, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 962, 9 Am. Crim. Rep. 324. Detached reflection cannot be demanded in the presence of an uplifted knife. Therefore, in this court, at least, it is not a condition of immunity that one in that situation should pause to consider whether a reasonable man might not think it possible to fly with safety, or to disable his assailant rather than to kill him. Rowe v. United States, 164 U. S. 546, 558, 41 L. ed. 547, 551, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 172. The law of Texas very strongly adopts these views, as is shown by many cases, of which it is enough to cite two: Cooper v. State, 49 Tex. Crim. Rep. 28, 96 S. W. 1068; Baltrip v. State, 30 Tex. App. 545, 549, 17 S. W. 1106.

Homicide—
self-defense—
duty to retreat.

It is true that in the case of Beard, he was upon his own land (not in his house—), and in that of Rowe, he was in the room of a hotel; but those facts, although mentioned by the court, would not have bettered the defense by the old common law, and were not appreciably more favorable than that the defendant here was at a place where he was called to be, in the discharge of his duty. There was evidence that the last shot was fired after Hermis was down. The jury might not believe the defendant's testimony that it was an accidental discharge, but the suggestion of the government that this court may disregard the considerable body of evidence that the shooting was in self-defense is based upon a misunderstanding of what was meant by some language in Battle v. United States, 209 U. S. 36, 38, 52 L. ed. 670, 672, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 422. Moreover, if the last shot was intentional, and may seem to have been unnecessary when considered in cold blood, the defendant would not necessarily lose his immunity if it followed close upon the others, while the heat of the conflict was on, and if the defendant believed that he was fighting for his life.

The government presents a different case. It denies that Hermis had a knife, and even that Brown was acting in self-defense. Notwithstanding the repeated threats of Hermis, and intimations that one of the two would die at the next encounter, which seem hardly to be denied, of course it was possible for the jury to find that Brown had not sufficient reason to think that his life was in danger at that time, that he exceeded the limits of reasonable self-defense, or even that he was the attacking party. But upon the hypothesis, to which the evidence gave much color, that Hermis began the attack, the instruction that we have stated was wrong.

Judgment reversed.

Mr. Justice Pitney and Mr. Justice Clarke dissent.

ANNOTATION.

Homicide: duty to retreat when not on one's own premises.

- I. Introductory, 1279.
- II. Duty to retreat generally, 1280.
- III. Assault creating imminent danger:
 - a. Generally, 1283.
 - b. Restricted view, 1287.
- IV. Peril increased by retreat, 1288.

I. Introductory.

The early common law with respect to the duty of a person assailed to retreat is to be found chiefly in the dicta of the text-writers, based on a few cases decided at a time when self-defense did not afford a legal justification, but only ground for a pardon. The law, as thus stated, was, in brief, that a man must "retreat to the wall" before killing in self-defense, except in the defense of his habitation. Of the American development of the doctrine it is well said in BROWN v. UNITED STATES (reported herewith) ante, 1276: "Concrete cases or illustrations stated in the early cases in conditions very different from the present, like the reference to retreat in 3 Co. Inst. 55, and elsewhere, have had a tendency to ossify into specific rules, without much regard for reason." Omitting from consideration the defense of the habitation and the performance of official duty, which are not within the scope of the present discussion, the American cases present several divergent views. In a few jurisdictions it is maintained broadly that a person assailed is not justified in taking the life of his assailant if he can escape from danger by retreat. In other jurisdictions it is held that, if a person is assaulted in a place where he has a right to be, he may stand his ground, meet force with force, and, if need be, kill his assailant. Another line of cases adheres to an intermediate view that, if the assault is felonious, producing imminent peril of death or great bodily harm, there is no duty to retreat therefrom. These views, while essentially variant, have some tendency to overlap, since the cases insisting most strictly on the duty to retreat admit an exception in cases where the nature of the assault and the conduct of the assailant are such that danger would be increased rather than averted thereby, a doctrine differing only in degree from the intermediate view heretofore stated, which is apparently based on the belief that retreat from State (1919) 203 Ala. 162, 82 So. 192; Caldwell v. State (1919) 203 Ala. 412, 84 So. 272; Pearson v. State (1912) 5 Ala. App. 68, 59 So. 526; Brake v. State (1913) 8 Ala. App. 98, 63 So. 11; Keef v. State (1915) 10 Ala. App. 13, 64 So. 513; Carroll v. State (1915) 12 Ala. App. 69, 68 So. 530; Cole v. State (1917) 16 Ala. App. 55, 75 So. 261; Love v. State (1919) 17 Ala. App. 149, 82 So. 639; Buckner v. State (1919) 17 Ala. App. 57, 81 So. 687; Vaughn v. State (1920) 17 Ala. App. 383, 84 So. 879; King v. State (1920) 17 Ala. App. 536, 87 So. 701. See also Pierson v. State (1847) 12 Ala. 149; Judge v. State (1877) 58 Ala. 406, 29 Am. Rep. 757; DeArman v. State (1884) 77 Ala. 10; Waller v. State (1889) 89 Ala. 79, 8 So. 153; Arp v. State (1892) 97 Ala. 5, 19 L.R.A. 357, 38 Am. St. Rep. 137, 12 So. 301, 9 Am. Crim. Rep. 517; Holmes v. State (1893) 100 Ala. 80, 14 So. 864; Mitchell v. State (1901) 133 Ala. 65, 32 So. 132; Raines v. State (1906) 147 Ala. 691, 40 So. 932; Twitty v. State (1910) 168 Ala. 59, 53 So. 308; Jackson v. State (1912) 177 Ala. 12, 59 So. 171; Russell v. State (1918) 202 Ala. 21, 79 So. 359; Gibson v. State (1916) 15 Ala. App. 12, 72 So. 569; Hutchinson v. State (1916) 15 Ala. App. 96, 72 So. 572; Minor v. State (1917) 15 Ala. App. 556, 74 So. 98; Terry v. State (1917) 15 Ala. App. 665, 74 So. 756; Collins v. State (1919) 17 Ala. App. 186, 84 So. 417, certiorari denied in (1919) 203 Ala. 697, 84 So. 924.

- V. Effect of previous threats by assailant, 1289.
- VI. Prevention of collateral offense, 1290.
- VII. View that person assailed need not retreat, 1291.

Delaware.—State v. Talley (1886) 9 Houst. 417, 33 Atl. 181; State v. Walker (1887) 9 Houst. 464, 33 Atl. 227; State v. Peo (1889) 9 Houst. 488, 33 Atl. 257; State v. Harmon (1902) 4 Penn. 580, 60 Atl. 866; State v. Powell (1904) 5 Penn. 24, 61 Atl. 966; State v. Brown (1905) 5 Penn. 339, 61 Atl. 1077; State v. Honey (1906) 6 Penn. 148, 65 Atl. 764; State v. Cephus (1906) 6 Penn. 160, 67 Atl. 150; State v. Miele (1909) 1 Boyce, 33, 74 Atl. 8; State v. Primrose (1910) 2 Boyce, 164, 77 Atl. 717; State v. Russo (1910) 1 Boyce, 538, 77 Atl. 743; State v. Reese (1911) 2 Boyce, 434, 79 Atl. 217; State v. Short (1911) 2 Boyce, 491, 82 Atl. 239; State v. Brooks (1912) 3 Boyce, 18 A.L.R.—81.

203, 84 Atl. 225; State v. Brelawski (1912) 3 Boyce, 416, 84 Atl. 950; State v. McKinney (1914) 5 Boyce, 128, 90 Atl. 1067. See also State v. Moore (1910) 1 Boyce, 142, 74 Atl. 1112; State v. Pepe (1910) 1 Boyce, 232, 76 Atl. 367.

Florida.—Danford v. State (1907) 53 Fla. 4, 43 So. 593; Owens v. State (1912) 64 Fla. 383, 60 So. 340. See also Lane v. State (1902) 44 Fla. 105, 32 So. 896.

Georgia.—See Heard v. State (1883) 70 Ga. 597.

Iowa.—State v. Thompson (1859) 9 Iowa, 188, 74 Am. Dec. 342; State v. Mahan (1886) 68 Iowa, 304, 20 N. W. 449, 27 N. W. 249; State v. Donnelly (1886) 69 Iowa, 705, 58 Am. Rep. 234, 27 N. W. 369; State v. Jones (1893) 89 Iowa, 182, 56 N. W. 427; State v. Warner (1896) 100 Iowa, 260, 69 N. W. 546; State v. Dyer (1910) 147 Iowa, 217, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 459, 124 N. W. 629; State v. Jackson (1912) 156 Iowa, 588, 137 N. W. 1034; State v. Baker (1912) 157 Iowa, 126, 135 N. W. 1097, 138 N. W. 841; State v. Morton (1914) 166 Iowa, 468, 147 N. W. 925; State v. Gough (1919) 187 Iowa, 363, 174 N. W. 279.

Kentucky.—Connor v. Com. (1904) 118 Ky. 497, 81 S. W. 259; Henson v. Com. (1910) 139 Ky. 173, 129 S. W. 566; Staples v. Com. (1917) 178 Ky. 429, 198 S. W. 1169; Radford v. Com. (1887) 9 Ky. L. Rep. 378, 5 S. W. 343; Arnold v. Com. (1900) 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1566, 55 S. W. 894; Austin v. Com. (1897) 19 Ky. L. Rep. 474, 40 S. W. 905; Stuart v. Com. (1907) 31 Ky. L. Rep. 1843, 105 S. W. 170. See also Sugg v. Com. (1884) 6 Ky. L. Rep. 50 (abstract); Tompkins v. Com. (1903) 117 Ky. 138, 77 S. W. 712. Compare McClurg v. Com. (1896) 17 Ky. L. Rep. 1339, 36 S. W. 14.

New Jersey.—State v. Wells (1790) 1 N. J. L. 424, 1 Am. Dec. 211; State v. Di Maria (1916) 88 N. J. L. 416, 97 Atl. 248, affirmed in (1917) 90 N. J. L. 341, 100 Atl. 1071. See also Brown v. State (1899) 62 N. J. L. 666, 42 Atl. 811, affirmed on other grounds in (1899) 175 U. S. 172, 44 L. ed. 119, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 77.

New York.—Shorter v. People

People v
People
358, 84
tino (18
See also
N. Y. 5
(1906)
Supp. 81
N. Y. Cr
furri (1
N. Y. S
189; Pe
S. R. 71
(1899) 1
557, 54
(1825) 1
(1845) 1
Carlton
257.

North
(1876) 7
(1884) 8
(1899)
State v.
50 S. E.
138 N. 1
Gaddy (

South
(1893) 1
State v.
42 Am. S
v. Summ
St. Rep.
Burdette
664. See
73 S. C.

Verme
63 Vt. 12

In Sta
(Del.) 4
"The la
That wh another ger his bodily h fury of by takin
But, befo
all he ca
his assa.
life exce where n are avai

In Sta
(Del.) 4

The duty of a person assaulted to retreat is not affected by the fact that it would involve the temporary abandonment of a horse which was in the possession of the assaulted person. Finch v. State (1886) 81 Ala. 41, 1 So. 565. To the same effect, see Springfield v. State (1891) 96 Ala. 81, 38 Am. St. Rep. 85, 11 So. 250.

A passenger on a street car is not exempt from this duty to retreat before taking the life of a conductor who ejects him from the car, as a street car is not a place of refuge, as one's own residence would be. Caldwell v. State (Ala.) supra. See also Brake v. State (1913) 8 Ala. App. 98, 63 So. 11.

III. Assault creating imminent danger.

a. Generally.

Where, from the nature of the attack, the assailed person believes, on reasonable grounds, that he is in imminent danger of losing his life or of receiving great bodily harm from his assailant, he is not bound to retreat, but may stand his ground, and, if necessary for his own protection, may take the life of his adversary.

United States.—United States v. Herbert (1856) 2 Hayw. & H. 210; Fed. Cas. No. 15,354a; United States v. King (1888) 34 Fed. 302; Rowe v. United States (1896) 164 U. S. 546, 41 L. ed. 547, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 172; North Carolina v. Gosnell (1896) 74 Fed. 734; and see BROWN v. UNITED STATES (reported herewith) ante, 1276.

Arkansas.—McPherson v. State (1874) 29 Ark. 225; Fitzpatrick v. State (1881) 37 Ark. 238; Duncan v. State (1887) 49 Ark. 543, 6 S. W. 164; Carpenter v. State (1896) 62 Ark. 286, 36 S. W. 900; LaRue v. State (1897) 64 Ark. 144, 41 S. W. 53; Magness v. State (1899) 67 Ark. 594, 50 S. W. 554; Striplin v. State (1911) 100 Ark. 132, 139 S. W. 1128.

Colorado.—Enyart v. People (1919) 67 Colo. 434, 180 Pac. 722.

District of Columbia.—Marshall v. United States (1916) 45 App. D. C. 375.

Kentucky.—Holloway v. Com. (1875) 11 Bush, 344; Bohannon v. Com. (1871) 8 Bush, 481, 8 Am. Rep.

474; Nunn v. Com. (1896) 17 Ky. L. Rep. 1211, 33 S. W. 941; Wilson v. Com. (1901) 23 Ky. L. Rep. 743, 63 S. W. 738; Rowsey v. Com. (1903) 116 Ky. 617, 76 S. W. 409; Tompkins v. Com. (1903) 117 Ky. 138, 77 S. W. 712. See also Marcum v. Com. (1897) 9 Ky. L. Rep. 253, 4 S. W. 786; Arnold v. Com. (1900) 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1566, 55 S. W. 894.

Louisiana.—See State v. West (1893) 45 La. Ann. 14, 12 So. 7.

Michigan.—Pond v. People (1860) 8 Mich. 150.

Montana.—State v. Rolla (1898) 21 Mont. 582, 55 Pac. 523; State v. Merk (1917) 53 Mont. 454, 164 Pac. 655. See also Territory v. Burgess (1888) 8 Mont. 57, 1 L.R.A. 808, 19 Pac. 558.

Nebraska.—See Willis v. State (1894) 43 Neb. 102, 61 N. W. 254.

Nevada.—State v. Kennedy (1872) 7 Nev. 374; State v. Grimmer (1910) 33 Nev. 531, 112 Pac. 273. See also State v. Harrington (1877) 12 Nev. 125.

New York.—Shorter v. People (1849) 2 N. Y. 193, 51 Am. Dec. 286; People v. Cole (1857) 4 Park. Crim. Rep. 35; People v. Jeina (1908) 125 App. Div. 697, 110 N. Y. Supp. 83, 22 N. Y. Crim. Rep. 320.

North Carolina.—State v. Mazon (1884) 90 N. C. 676; State v. Blevins (1905) 138 N. C. 668, 50 S. E. 763; State v. Lucas (1913) 164 N. C. 471, 79 S. E. 674; State v. Gaddy (1914) 166 N. C. 341, 81 S. E. 608; State v. Ray (1914) 166 N. C. 420, 81 S. E. 1087. See also State v. Kennedy (1884) 91 N. C. 572.

Ohio.—Erwin v. State (1876) 29 Ohio St. 186, 23 Am. Rep. 733, 2 Am. Crim. Rep. 251; State v. Snelbaker (1882) 8 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 466, 8 Ohio L. J. 90; Carr v. State (1900) 21 Ohio C. C. 43, 11 Ohio C. C. D. 353; GRAHAM v. STATE (reported herewith) ante, 1272. See also Venable v. State (1885) 1 Ohio C. C. 301, 1 Ohio C. D. 165.

Oregon.—State v. Gibson (1903) 43 Or. 184, 73 Pac. 333; State v. Rader (1919) 94 Or. 432, 186 Pac. 79.

Rhode Island.—See State v. Sherman (1889) 16 R. I. 631, 18 Atl. 1040.

South Dakota.—State v. Jaukkuri (1918) 41 S. D. 4, 168 N. W. 1047.

Virginia.—See McCoy v. Com. (1919) 125 Va. 771, 99 S. E. 644.

West Virginia.—State v. Cain (1882) 20 W. Va. 679; State v. Evans (1890) 33 W. Va. 417, 10 S. E. 792; State v. Zeigler (1895) 40 W. Va. 593, 21 S. E. 763, 10 Am. Crim. Rep. 463; State v. Clark (1902) 51 W. Va. 457, 41 S. E. 204.

Wisconsin.—See Perkins v. State (1891) 78 Wis. 551, 47 N. W. 827; Miller v. State (1909) 139 Wis. 57, 119 N. W. 850.

It was said in Marshall v. United States (1916) 45 App. D. C. 373, that the right of a defendant, when in imminent danger, to take life, did not depend on whether there was an opportunity to escape, and one under such circumstances was not compelled to step aside or flee.

In Enyart v. People (1919) 67 Colo. 434, 180 Pac. 722, the court said: "This jury was told, in substance, that, although they might believe that defendant was attending to his own business in his own bank, though he were in no way the aggressor, though he were subjected to a deadly and unprovoked assault by one armed with a loaded pistol and bent upon taking his life, he was obliged to flee, unless it appeared to him, and would have appeared to a reasonable person so situated, that it was more dangerous to run than fight. This is exactly the pernicious application of the common-law doctrine of 'retreat to the wall,' which has been abrogated by the authorities above cited. We cannot sanction a conviction in which this erroneous principle may have played a conspicuous part."

In McPherson v. State (1874) 29 Ark. 225, the court said: "A necessity for taking the life of the other is the controlling circumstance which justifies or excuses the act, and, before resorting to such extremity, the party must employ all means within his power, consistent with his safety, to avoid the danger and avert such necessity. We would not, however, be understood as saying that he must have used all possible means, for, in some cases, the assault may be of so fierce and violent a character that there would be as much, or more, danger in attempting to escape as there would be to stand and repel it; but he must seek such as his safety would reasonably dictate."

So, in State v. Cain (1882) 20 W. Va. 679, wherein it appeared that the defendant shot and killed the deceased while they were proceeding homeward in the nighttime, the court stated the rule as follows: "When one, without fault himself, is attacked by another in such a manner, or under such circumstances, as to furnish reasonable ground for apprehending a design to take away his life, or do him some great bodily harm, and there is reasonable ground for believing the danger imminent that such design will be accomplished, and the person assaulted has reasonable grounds to believe, and does believe, such danger is imminent, he may act upon such appearances, and may, without retreating, kill the assailant, if he has reasonable grounds to believe, and does believe, that such killing is necessary to avoid the apprehended danger; and the killing under such circumstances is excusable, although it may afterwards turn out that the appearances were false, and there was, in fact, neither design to do him serious injury, nor danger that it would be done. But of all this the jury must judge from all the evidence and circumstances of the case."

In State v. Zeigler (1895) 40 W. Va. 593, 21 S. E. 763, 10 Am. Crim. Rep. 463, it appeared that an altercation took place between the defendant and deceased over a right of way across the defendant's land. The deceased struck the defendant with his fist, and inflicted a blow on the defendant's head with his gun after an unsuccessful attempt to shoot him, when the defendant fired a shot which resulted in the death of the deceased. It was held that under the circumstances the defendant was not required to retreat, and was justified in taking the life of the deceased.

It will be observed that in BROWN v. UNITED STATES (reported herewith) under circumstances which give him reasonable ground to believe that he is in imminent danger of death or grievous bodily harm, is not as a matter of law bound to retreat, but may stand his ground, and, if he kills his assailant, he does not exceed the bounds of lawful self-defense.

Where it appeared that an altercation occurred between the accused and his assailant in the saloon of another, while they were under the influence of liquor, and the accused, while in the act of seeking protection behind the bar, was approached by his assailant, who fired several shots from a pistol which he held in his hand, it was held that under the circumstances the accused was not in duty bound to retreat, but was justified in meeting force with force, and slaying his assailant. State v. Merk (1917) 58 Mont. 454, 164 Pac. 655. See to the same effect, State v. Grimmett (1910) 33 Nev. 531, 112 Pac. 273, wherein the court said: "The law is well established that where a person, without voluntarily seeking, provoking, inviting, or willingly engaging in a difficulty of his own free will, is attacked by an assailant, and it is necessary for him to take the life of his assailant to protect his own, then he need not flee for safety, but has the right to stand his ground and slay his adversary."

In People v. Cole (1857) 4 Park. Crim. Rep. (N. Y.) 35, the court said: "To justify the prisoner in killing Aaron Cole in self-defense, it is necessary that the prisoner himself should have been attacked; that he should have reasonable ground to suppose that the object of the attack was to kill him, or to do him great bodily harm; that he should have been unable to withdraw himself from this imminent danger, and therefore should have been compelled to kill Aaron Cole to protect himself from the attack."

In People v. Jeina (1908) 125 App. Div. 697, 110 N. Y. Supp. 83, 22 N. Y. Crim. Rep. 320, it appeared that the victim of a homicide, after an altercation with a third person, was about to upon he turned and was advancing on the defendant, when the latter fired a shot which caused deceased's death. It was held that, while it was the duty of the defendant to avoid the necessity of shooting, if possible, yet he was not obliged to turn his back on such imminent danger.

So, in State v. Jaukkuri (1918) 41 S. D. 4, 168 N. W. 1047, it appeared that the defendant and his victim became involved in a physical encounter. The defendant withdrew from the struggle, and some time thereafter he saw his assailant approaching him, on a run, with some rocks in his hand. When within a short distance of the defendant the assailant threw one of the rocks, and after the defendant had dodged the rock, he drew his pistol and fired. It was held that under the circumstances the defendant could not have retreated in safety, and that the homicide was justifiable.

And in a case wherein it appeared that the victim of the homicide had beaten the accused in a brutal manner, and on being compelled to desist threatened to shoot him on sight, and, on meeting him shortly thereafter, rushed at the accused with hostile demonstrations, it was held that, if the accused believed that his assailant intended to carry out his threat, he would be justified in killing him without retreating. State v. Kennedy (1872) 7 Nev. 374.

In GRAHAM v. STATE (reported herewith) ante, 1272, wherein it appeared that the accused was attacked by a crowd of men while in the pursuit of his duty as the guard of a manufacturing company, the court said: "Under the facts detailed, if the defendant did not provoke the assault, but, while in the lawful pursuit of his business, was suddenly and violently assaulted with a deadly weapon and placed in danger of loss of life or great bodily harm, under the current of modern authority, he was not required to retreat."

In Erwin v. State (1876) 29 Ohio St. 186, 23 Am. Rep. 733, 2 Am. Crim. Rep. 251, it was held that where a person in the lawful pursuit of his business, and without fault, is violently assaulted by one who manifestly intends and endeavors to kill him, the person so assaulted, without retreating, although it is in his power to do so without increasing his danger, may kill his assailant, if necessary to save his own life or prevent grievous bodily harm. See also Venable v. State (1885) 1 Ohio C. C. 30, 1 Ohio C. D. 165.

In North Carolina, a distinction is made between an assault with felonious intent and an assault without a felonious intent. In the former case a person attacked is under no obligation to retreat, but may stand his ground, and, if need be, may kill his assailant, while in the latter case he must retreat if there is any way of escape open to him. State v. Blevins (1905) 138 N. C. 668, 50 S. E. 763. To the same effect, see State v. Hough (1905) 138 N. C. 663, 50 S. E. 709.

The rule that one murderously assaulted is not required to retreat before taking the life of the assailant was laid down by the court, in granting a new trial to the defendant, in State v. Lucas (1913) 164 N. C. 471, 79 S. E. 674, wherein it appeared that the assailant approached the defendant with an apparent felonious intent, having a knife in his hand, and saying that he was going to kill the defendant. The defendant withdrew a few steps, and, on being struck at by his assailant, shot him with a pistol which he held in his hand. The court said: "It is held for law in this state that, when an unprovoked and murderous assault is made on a citizen, he is not required to retreat, but may stand his ground, and take the life of the assailant, if it is necessary to do so to save himself from death or great bodily harm." To the same effect, see State v. Ray (1914) 166 N. C. 420, 81 S. E. 1087; State v. Blevins (N. C.) supra. In the latter case it was said: "It has been established in this state by several well-considered decisions that where a man is without fault, and a murderous assault is made upon him,—an assault with intent to kill,—he is not required to retreat, but may stand his ground, and if he kill his assailant, and it is necessary to do so in order to save his own life or protect his person from great bodily harm, it is excusable homicide, and will be so held."

In United States v. King (1888) 34 Fed. 302, it appeared that the defendant was proceeding to the defense of a person who was being assaulted, when the assailant, a powerful, aggressive man, turned and advanced rapidly toward the defendant with a knife in his hand, and threatened his life. The defendant stood his ground and shot the assailant. It was held that, in order to support the plea of justifiable homicide, it must appear that the accused retreated as far as he could with safety, and, before he was justified in taking the life of the assailant, he must have had an honest belief, based on reasonable grounds, that he was in imminent danger of death or grievous bodily harm.

In Rowe v. United States (1896) 164 U. S. 546, 41 L. ed. 547, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 172, it appeared that the victim of the homicide used language which was offensive to the accused, and the accused kicked him lightly, and stepped back against a counter. The victim immediately attacked the accused, cutting him with a knife, and the accused shot and killed him. It was held that if the accused, after he kicked his assailant, withdrew in good faith, and his conduct should have been reasonably so interpreted by the assailant, then the accused was not obliged to retreat, but was entitled to the benefit of a principle which was announced in an earlier case, wherein it was said: "The defendant was where he had a right to be when the deceased advanced upon him in a threatening manner, and with a deadly weapon; and if the accused did not provoke the assault, and had at the time reasonable grounds to believe, and in good faith believed, that the deceased intended to take his life or to do him great bodily harm, he was not obliged to retreat, or to consider whether he could safely retreat, but was entitled to stand his ground and meet any attack made upon him with a deadly weapon, in such a way and with such force as, under all the circumstances, he at the moment honestly believed, and had reasonable grounds to believe, was necessary to save his own life, or to protect himself from great bodily injury."

b. Restricted view.

The rule that one is not bound to retreat if he believes, on reasonable grounds, that his life is in imminent danger, is somewhat restricted in some jurisdictions, and it is held that, although a person believes on reasonable grounds that his life is in imminent danger, he must retreat as far as he reasonably can before taking the life of his assailant. But, if the danger is so imminent that there is no probable means of escape, he is justified in standing his ground, and, if necessary, slaying his assailant.

Alabama.—Henderson v. State (1884) 77 Ala. 77; Blackburn v. State (1888) 86 Ala. 595, 6 So. 96; Keith v. State (1892) 97 Ala. 32, 11 So. 914; Dorsey v. State (1894) 107 Ala. 157, 18 So. 199; Compton v. State (1895) 110 Ala. 24, 20 So. 119; Bluett v. State (1907) 151 Ala. 41, 44 So. 84. See also Hutcheson v. State (1910) 170 Ala. 29, 54 So. 119; Hill v. State (1915) 194 Ala. 11, 2 A.L.R. 509, 69 So. 941; Watson v. State (1916) — Ala. App. —, 72 So. 469. Compare Beasley v. State (1913) 181 Ala. 28, 61 So. 259.

Delaware.—State v. Talley (1886) 9 Houst. 417, 33 Atl. 181; State v. Walker (1887) 9 Houst. 464, 33 Atl. 227; State v. Warren (1893) 1 Marv. 487, 41 Atl. 190; State v. Emory (1904) 5 Penn. 126, 58 Atl. 1036; State v. Powell (1904) 5 Penn. 24; State v. Brown (1905) 5 Penn. 389, 61 Atl. 1077; State v. Cephus (1906) 6 Penn. 160, 67 Atl. 150; State v. Honey (1906) 6 Penn. 148, 65 Atl. 764; State v. Miele (1909) 1 Boyce, 33, 74 Atl. 8; State v. Russo (1910) 1 Boyce, 538, 77 Atl. 743; State v. Primrose (1910) 2 Boyce, 164, 77 Atl. 717; State v. Reese (1911) 2 Boyce, 434, 79 Atl. 217; State v. Short (1911) 2 Boyce, 491, 82 Atl. 239; State v. Brooks (1912) 3 Boyce, 203, 84 Atl. 225; State v. Brelawski (1912) 3 Boyce, 416, 84 Atl. 950; State v. Mc- Kinney (1914) 5 Boyce, 128, 90 Atl. 1067. See also State v. Moore (1910) 1 Boyce, 142, 74 Atl. 1112; State v. Pepe (1910) 1 Boyce, 232, 76 Atl. 367.

Iowa.—State v. Benham (1867) 23 Iowa, 154, 92 Am. Dec. 417; State v. Jones (1893) 89 Iowa, 182, 56 N. W. 427. Compare Tweedy v. State (1858) 5 Iowa, 433.

Pennsylvania.—Com. v. Ellenger (1867) 1 Brewst. 352; Com. v. Ware (1890) 137 Pa. 465, 20 Atl. 806; Com. v. Breysessee (1894) 160 Pa. 451, 40 Am. St. Rep. 729, 28 Atl. 824; Com. v. Herold (1896) 5 Pa. Dist. R. 623; Com. v. Mitchka (1904) 209 Pa. 274, 58 Atl. 474; Com. v. McKwayne (1908) 221 Pa. 449, 70 Atl. 809. See also Com. v. Drum (1868) 58 Pa. 9; Abernethy v. Com. (1882) 101 Pa. 322.

In State v. Short (1911) 2 Boyce (Del.) 491, 82 Atl. 239, the court said: "Where one is assaulted upon a sudden affray, and in the judgment of the jury honestly believed, on reasonable and sufficient grounds, that he was in imminent danger of being killed, or of receiving great bodily harm, he would have, in self-defense, the right to use a deadly weapon against his assailant. But, in exercising such right in a manner likely to cause death or great bodily harm to his assailant, he must be closely pressed by him, and must have retreated as far as he conveniently and safely could, in good faith, with the honest intent to avoid the violence and peril of the assault. If these be so sudden, fierce, or urgent as not to allow him to retreat, or to have other probable means of escape, then he may rightfully use a deadly weapon in his defense."

So, in State v. Emory (1904) 5 Penn. (Del.) 126, 58 Atl. 1036, it was said: "Neither fear, nor apprehension of death or of great bodily harm, will totally excuse one from killing another, but, to have effect in law, the danger must be imminent and impending at the instant, and must be real, not imaginary. He must have declined the combat, and retreated from his assailant as far as he could do so consistently with his own safety."

And in Keith v. State (1892) 97 Ala. 32, 11 So. 914, the court said: "The law is very careful of human life, and although a person without fault may be in great peril, involving imminent danger to life or limb, the duty to retreat and avoid the danger rests upon him, if he can do so with reasonable safety to himself; but where the peril is great, and the danger to life or limb imminent, and the person is without fault, the law does not require him to increase his danger by putting himself at a disadvantage."

In Com. v. Breyessee (1894) 160 Pa. 451, 40 Am. St. Rep. 729, 28 Atl. 824, the court said: "Life may be lawfully taken in self-defense; but it must appear that he who takes it was in imminent danger of death or great bodily harm, and that no other way of escape from the danger was open to him. It is the duty of one who is assailed, to flee, if flight is possible; and it is only when he is persuaded that he must suffer death or grievous bodily harm at the hands of his assailant, or take the life of his assailant that he may save his own, that he can justify his act as done in self-defense."

The later decisions in Iowa support this view. In State v. Jones (1893) 89 Iowa, 182, 56 N. W. 427, wherein it appeared that an altercation occurred between the defendant and his victim, at a time when they were both armed with pistols, which resulted in the death of the latter, the court said: "It may be conceded that, in the earlier adjudications of this court, there is language employed which may be said to lay down the doctrine that one who is assailed with a deadly weapon is not required to flee from his adversary, but may strike and kill in his own defense. See Tweedy v. State (1857) 5 Iowa, 433. But in the later utterances of this court,—and it may now be said to be the general rule elsewhere,—the killing of an assailant is excusable on the ground of self-defense, only when it is, or reasonably appears to be, the only means of saving one's own life, or preventing some great bodily injury. If the danger which appears to be imminent can be avoided in any other way, as by retiring from the conflict, the taking of the life of the assailant is not excusable."

In State v. Borwick (1922) — Iowa, —, 187 N. W. 460, the giving of an instruction in harmony with the restricted view was held error, not, apparently, because of dissent from the correctness of that view, but because of its inapplicability to the facts of the case, which showed that defendant had no opportunity to retreat.

IV. Peril increased by retreat.

There seems to be no dispute that, if one is assaulted, and the circumstances are such that he believes on reasonable grounds that his peril will be increased by retreating, beyond that to which he will be subjected if he stands and defends himself, he is justified in standing his ground and repelling force with force, even to the taking of the life of his assailant, if necessary.

Alabama.—Shell v. State (1889) 88 Ala. 14, 7 So. 40; Hammil v. State (1890) 90 Ala. 577, 8 So. 380; Perry v. State (1891) 94 Ala. 26, 10 So. 650; Roden v. State (1892) 97 Ala. 54, 12 So. 419; Wilkins v. State (1893) 98 Ala. 1, 13 So. 312; Dorsey v. State (1894) 107 Ala. 157, 18 So. 199; Washington v. State (1900) 125 Ala. 40, 28 So. 78; Pugh v. State (1902) 132 Ala. 1, 31 So. 727; Harbor v. State (1903) 140 Ala. 103, 37 So. 330; Patterson v. State (1906) 146 Ala. 39, 41 So. 157; Bluet v. State (1907) 151 Ala. 41, 44 So. 84; Roberts v. State (1911) 171 Ala. 12, 54 So. 993; McCutcheon v. State (1912) 5 Ala. App. 96, 59 So. 714. See also Hill v. State (1915) 194 Ala. 11, 2 A.L.R. 509, 69 So. 941; Watson v. State (1916) 15 Ala. App. 39, 72 So. 569.

Arkansas.—Duncan v. State (1887) 49 Ark. 543, 6 S. W. 164.

Colorado.—Boykin v. People (1896) 22 Colo. 496, 45 Pac. 419. See also Ritchey v. People (1896) 23 Colo. 314, 47 Pac. 272, 384.

Iowa.—State v. Thompson (1859) 9 Iowa, 188, 74 Am. Dec. 342; State v. Donnelly (1886) 69 Iowa, 705, 58 Am. Rep. 234, 27 N. W. 369; State v. Borwick (1922) — Iowa, —, 187 N. W. 460.

Kentucky. — Philips v. Com. (1864) 2 Duv. 328, 87 Am. Dec. 499.

Louisiana. — State v. Robertson (1898) 50 La. Ann. 92, 69 Am. St. Rep. 393, 23 So. 9.

Michigan. — People v. Macard (1888) 73 Mich. 15, 40 N. W. 784.

Minnesota. — State v. Gardner (1905) 96 Minn. 318, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 49, 104 N. W. 971.

North Carolina.—State v. Gentry (1899) 125 N. C. 733, 34 S. E. 706.

South Carolina.—State v. Jones (1912) 90 S. C. 290, 73 S. E. 177.

Thus, in a case wherein it appeared that the victim was approaching the defendant with his gun raised, and with the avowed purpose of shooting him, the defendant was not bound to retreat before using his weapon, if he in good faith believed that by retreating he would increase his exposure to the threatened danger. People v. Macard (Mich.) supra.

In Hammil v. State (1890) 90 Ala. 577, 8 So. 380, the court said: "When one who is without fault in bringing on a difficulty finds himself so menaced by present, impending danger to his life or limb, as that he strikes, and thereby slays his assailant, it is not absolutely necessary to his plea of self-defense that he should have attempted to escape by flight. If it be made to appear that he was so obstructed by obstacles that he could not escape, or that, in attempting to do so, he would probably have increased the peril with which he was menaced, this would relieve him of all duty to attempt it. Flight need not be attempted by one innocently drawn into such peril, if by so doing he increases the danger threatened."

A person assaulted by another who has previously threatened to kill him is not bound to run and escape the assault, where the danger is left still impending, and may, perhaps, be increased by the act of running. Philips v. Com. (Ky.) supra.

So, where it appeared that the defendant, while in combat, cut his assailant with a knife, thereby causing his death, it was held that a charge which instructed the jury that the defendant could not be acquitted on the ground of self-defense, if he could have retreated and avoided the necessity of striking the fatal blow, was faulty, as it omitted the qualification as to the increase of peril by attempting to retreat. Shell v. State (Ala.) supra.

Likewise, where it appeared that the victim of the homicide threatened the defendant's life as he was advancing on him, and that the defendant threw a rock which resulted in the death of his assailant, it was held that a charge which, in substance, asserted that if the defendant believed, and the circumstances were such as to justify a reasonable person in believing, that he was in danger of great bodily harm or death, and that he could not have retreated without adding to his peril, he had a right to stand his ground and throw the rock which caused the death, was improperly refused. McCutcheon v. State (1912) 5 Ala. App. 96, 59 So. 714.

It is a question for the jury to determine on all the evidence whether the defendant could have retreated without increasing his peril. Gafford v. State (1898) 122 Ala. 54, 25 So. 10.

V. Effect of previous threats by assailant.

It has been held in at least one jurisdiction that, where a person has repeatedly threatened to kill another, the latter has a right to bear arms for protection, and if he casually meets his antagonist, and believes him to be armed and ready to execute his threats, he need not retreat, but may act in his defense. Com. v. Barnes (1891) 13 Ky. L. Rep. 163, 16 S. W. 457.

So, in a case wherein it appeared that the defendant went to a store to purchase supplies, and found there a person who had threatened his life; whereupon a conflict ensued which resulted in the death of the latter, it was held that the defendant was not under any legal duty to avoid the difficulty, and it was improper, in a prosecution of the defendant for killing the threatener, to permit the prosecution to ask why he did not leave the store and go home when he found his assailant there. Carnes v. Com. (1905) 27 Ky. L. Rep. 1205, 87 S. W. 1123.

In Phillips v. Com. (1865) 2 Duv. (Ky.) 328, 87 Am. Dec. 499, it appeared that the victim of the homicide made an attempt to shoot the accused, and, on being prevented from doing so, threatened to kill him whenever he saw him, and at times was seen watching for him with the avowed purpose of killing him. On the occasion of the killing, the victim unexpectedly met the accused, and, putting his hand in his pocket indicating an intention to draw his pistol, informed the accused that he intended to execute his threat, when the accused shot and killed him. It was held that the accused was not bound to retreat, since the principles applicable to a mutual encounter with deadly weapons did not apply to a case where the first escape from a threatened assassination probably would not secure the ultimate safety of the accused.

In Bohannon v. Com. (1871) 8 Bush (Ky.) 481, 8 Am. Rep. 474, with respect to a similar state of facts, the court said: "The threats of even a desperate and lawless man do not and ought not to authorize the person threatened to take his life; nor does any demonstration of hostility, short of a manifest attempt to commit a felony, justify a measure so extreme. But when one's life has been repeatedly threatened by such an enemy, when an actual attempt has been made to assassinate him, and when, after all this, members of his family have been informed by his assailant that he is to be killed on sight, we hold that he may lawfully arm himself to resist the threatened attack. He may leave his home for the transaction of his legitimate business, or for any lawful and proper purpose; and if on such an occasion he casually meets his enemy, having reason to believe him to be armed and ready to execute his murderous intentions, and he does believe, and from the threats, the previous assault, the character of the man, and the circumstances attending the meeting, he has the right to believe, that the presence of his adversary puts his life in imminent peril, and that he can secure his personal safety in no other way than to kill him, he is not obliged to wait until he is actually assailed. He may not hunt his enemy and shoot him down like a wild beast; nor has he the right to bring about an unnecessary meeting in order to have a pretext to slay him." See also Holloway v. Com. (1875) 11 Bush (Ky.) 344; Young v. Com. (1869) 6 Bush (Ky.) 312.

VI. Prevention of collateral offense.

Where, in the attempt to commit a collateral felony, such as robbery, a person is assaulted and his life put in danger, he is not bound to retreat, but may stand his ground, and kill if necessary to prevent the felony. Storey v. State (1882) 71 Ala. 329; Ragland v. State (1900) 111 Ga. 211, 36 S. E. 682; State v. Robertson (1898) 50 La. Ann. 92, 69 Am. St. Rep. 393, 23 So. 9; State v. Bonofiglio (1901) 67 N. J. L. 239, 91 Am. St. Rep. 423, 52 Atl. 712, 54 Atl. 99; Stoneham v. Com. (1889) 86 Va. 523, 10 S. E. 238. See also State v. Burdette (1919) — S. C. —, 101 S. E. 664.

Thus, it was said in Ragland v. State (1900) 111 Ga. 211, 36 S. E. 682, that the rule that a person killing in his own defense is excusable only when the danger is so urgent and pressing that the killing is necessary to save his own life has no application to homicide to prevent the commission of a felony on the person of the slayer. And one may lawfully kill another, without retreating, where the latter is attempting, by surprise or violence, to commit a felony on his person.

In State v. Bonofiglio (1901) 67 N. J. L. 239, 91 Am. St. Rep. 423, 52 Atl. 712, 54 Atl. 99, it was said that where an attempt to rob is made, and is actually in process of execution, the person on whom the attempt is being made need not retreat to avoid killing his assailant, even though such means might be resorted to with safety to himself.

Where a person threatens to take by force from the person of another, a weaker man, a watch which he claims to be his, and makes an attack on him for that purpose, the latter is not obliged to retreat, but may repel force by force in the defense of his person or property, and is justified in killing the assailant when the latter approaches him and raises his hand to seize or strike him. Stoneham v. Com. (1889) 86 Va. 523, 10 S. E. 238.

In State v. Burdette (S. C.) supra, it appeared that the defendant followed his sister and the victim of the homicide to a place on the latter's premises where they had resorted for an immoral and unlawful purpose. While there a quarrel arose, and the victim made a motion as if to reach for his gun, when the defendant shot him. It was held that the fact that the protest of the defendant was calculated to bring on a difficulty did not deprive him of the right of self-defense, in case he was in danger of losing his life or suffering serious bodily harm, and he was not bound to retreat, as it was his duty to use all reasonable means to prevent them from accomplishing their purpose, providing he did not commit a breach of the peace.

VII. View that person assailed need not retreat.

The doctrine of the common law that the right of self-defense did not arise until the assailed person had "retreated to the wall" has been supplanted, in some of the jurisdictions, by the doctrine that if the person assailed is without fault, and in a place where he has a right to be, and put in reasonably apparent danger of losing his life or receiving great bodily harm, he need not retreat, but may stand his ground, repel force by force, and if, in the reasonable exercise of his right of self-defense, he kills his assailant, he is justified.

California.—People v. Gonzales (1887) 71 Cal. 569, 12 Pac. 783; People v. Hecker (1895) 109 Cal. 451, 30 L.R.A. 403, 42 Pac. 307; People v. Maughs (1906) 149 Cal. 253, 86 Pac. 187.

Illinois.—Hammond v. People (1902) 199 Ill. 173, 64 N. E. 980.

Indiana.—Runyan v. State (1877) 57 Ind. 80, 26 Am. Rep. 52, 2 Am. Crim. Rep. 318; Fields v. State (1892) 134 Ind. 46, 32 N. E. 780; Page v. State (1894) 141 Ind. 236, 41 N. E. 745. See also Creek v. State (1865) 24 Ind. 151.

Kansas.—State v. Reed (1894) 53 Kan. 767, 42 Am. St. Rep. 322, 37 Pac. 174. See also State v. Petteys (1902) 65 Kan. 625, 70 Pac. 588.

Mississippi.—Long v. State (1876) 52 Miss. 23; McCall v. State (1901) — Miss. —, 29 So. 1003. See also Bang v. State (1882) 60 Miss. 571; Ellerbe v. State (1901) 79 Miss. 10, 30 So. 57.

Missouri.—State v. Hudspeth (1899) 150 Mo. 12, 51 S. W. 483; State v. Bartlett (1902) 170 Mo. 658, 59 L.R.A. 756, 71 S. W. 148. Compare State v. Dettmer (1894) 124 Mo. 426, 27 S. W. 1117.

Oklahoma.—Kirk v. Territory (1900) 10 Okla. 46, 60 Pac. 797; Mahaffey v. Territory (1901) 11 Okla. 213, 66 Pac. 342; Price v. State (1908) 1 Okla. Crim. Rep. 384, 98 Pac. 447; Turner v. State (1910) 4 Okla. Crim. Rep. 164, 111 Pac. 988; Fowler v. State (1912) 8 Okla. Crim. Rep. 130, 126 Pac. 831; Foster v. State (1912) 8 Okla. Crim. Rep. 139, 126 Pac. 835. See also Floyd v. State (1911) 5 Okla. Crim. Rep. 65, 113 Pac. 212.

Texas.—West v. State (1877) 2 Tex. App. 460; Parker v. State (1886) 22 Tex. App. 105, 3 S. W. 100; High v. State (1888) 26 Tex. App. 545, 8 Am. St. Rep. 488, 10 S. W. 238; Gonzales v. State (1889) 28 Tex. App. 130, 12 S. W. 733; Ball v. State (1890) 29 Tex. App. 107, 14 S. W. 1012; Nalley v. State (1891) 30 Tex. App. 456, 17 S. W. 1084; Williams v. State (1891) 30 Tex. App. 429, 17 S. W. 1071; Lee v. State (1898) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 24 S. W. 509; Alexander v. State (1902) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 70 S. W. 748; Voight v. State (1908) 53 Tex. Crim. Rep. 268, 109 S. W. 205; Moss v. State (1910) 59 Tex. Crim. Rep. 68, 126 S. W. 1150; Renn v. State (1912) 64 Tex. Crim. Rep. 639, 143 S. W. 167. See also Williams v. State (1886) 22 Tex. App. 497, 4 S. W. 64; Smith v. State (1894) 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 513, 27 S. W. 187; Hunt v. State (1894) 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 255, 26 S. W. 206; Clay v. State (1902) 44 Tex. Crim. Rep. 129, 69 S. W. 413; Cooper v. State (1905) 49 Tex. Crim. Rep. 28, 89 S. W. 1068.

Washington.—State v. Carter (1896) 15 Wash. 121, 45 Pac. 745,

State v. Churchill (1909) 52 Wash. 210, 100 Pac. 309; State v. Bowinkelman (1911) 66 Wash. 396, 119 Pac. 824. See also State v. McCann (1896) 16 Wash. 249, 47 Pac. 443, 49 Pac. 216.

Thus, in Runyan v. State (1877) 57 Ind. 80, 26 Am. Rep. 52, 2 Am. Crim. Rep. 318, it appeared that the defendant, who was disabled in one arm, procured a pistol to protect himself against a threatened assault, and while standing on a public street, surrounded by an excited crowd, shot and killed his assailant who had rushed up to him and struck him two or three blows. It was held that a charge that, "before a man can take life in self-defense, he must have been closely pressed by his assailant, and must have retreated as far as he safely or conveniently could, in good faith, with the honest intent to avoid the violence of the assault," was erroneous. The court said: "Whatever may have been, or now is, the true rule in such a case, we think the instruction from which we have quoted, whether considered in its separate parts, or taken altogether, laid too much stress on the duty of a party, when assailed, to retreat before attempting to repel force by force, and thus prescribed too rigid a rule as applicable to the case at bar."

In State v. Bartlett (1902) 170 Mo. 658, 59 L.R.A. 756, 71 S. W. 148, it appeared that the defendant, an old man, partially crippled, had been threatened at various times by a certain individual, and on one occasion, while walking along the street, was attacked by that individual, who began lashing him with a whip. The defendant ran to his office, but was unable to open the door thereto, and, being pursued by his assailant, who was continually striking him, shot and killed him. It was held that the defendant was not bound to retreat to his office before exercising his right of self-defense, the court saying: "It is true, human life is sacred, but so is human liberty; one is as dear in the eye of the law as the other, and neither is to give way and surrender its legal status in order that the other may exclusively exist, supposing for a moment such an anomaly to be possible. In other words, the wrongful and violent act of one man shall not abolish or even temporarily suspend the lawful and constitutional right of his neighbor. And this idea of the non-necessity of retreating from any locality where one has the right to be is growing in favor, as all doctrines based upon sound reason inevitably will, and has found voice and expression elsewhere."

So, in State v. Hudspeth (1899) 150 Mo. 12, 51 S. W. 483, it appeared that, on the morning of the homicide, the victim got his gun and swore that he would kill the defendant. Later in the day, while the defendant was standing in the highway in front of a store, the victim went into the store, came out with two scale weights, began cursing the defendant, and was in the act of throwing one of the weights at him, when the defendant shot him. It was held that, under the circumstances, the defendant, being without fault, had the right to act on appearances, and was not required to flee from the public highway in which he was assailed, and it was error for the court to instruct the jury that, "if it reasonably appeared to defendant that he could have escaped the apprehended danger otherwise than by shooting deceased, then it was his duty to have done so, and he cannot be justified on the ground of self-defense."

In Fowler v. State (1912) 8 Okla. Crim. Rep. 130, 126 Pac. 831, it appeared that a quarrel arose between the accused and another, over a game of cards, and the latter, threatening to kill the accused, put his hand in his pocket as if to draw a weapon, when the accused shot him. It was held that it was improper to instruct the jury that, if the accused could have avoided the danger and the necessity of killing by retreating, it was his duty to do so, for the reason that, when a person is unlawfully assailed at a place where he has a right to be, he may stand his ground and defend himself.

So, in Foster v. State (1912) 8 Okla. Crim. Rep. 139, 126 Pac. 835, it appeared that the victim of the homicide, while in the act of kidnapping a child of the accused, shot at the accused, whereupon the accused shot and killed him. The court said: "The portion of the instruction which required the jury to find that the appellant should have retreated before he could act in self-defense is not the law, and should not have been given. This instruction has been repeatedly condemned. . . . As was said by this court in the case of Fowler v. State (Okla.) supra: 'Under the old common law, no man could defend himself until he had retreated, and until his back was to the wall; but this is not the law in free America. Here the wall is to every man's back. It is the wall of his rights; and when he is at a place where he has a right to be, and he is unlawfully assailed, he may stand and defend himself; and cases sometimes arise in which he has the right, when unlawfully assailed, to advance and defend himself until he finds himself out of danger.'"

In Voight v. State (1908) 53 Tex. Crim. Rep. 268, 109 S. W. 205, it appeared that an altercation was begun by the person killed with a brother of the defendant, and when the defendant rode up to the scene, he was ordered to alight from the horse he was riding, by the victim, who approached him with one hand behind his back, saying he was going to settle their difficulty then and there. Thereupon the defendant fired the shot which resulted in the death of the assailant. The court said: "This shows the deceased the aggressor. There was nothing left for the appellant and his brother to do, either or both, under the circumstances, except to meet the trouble forced upon them, or ride away, or retreat. This they did not have to do under our law. It is not necessary for a party upon whom a difficulty is sought to be forced, that he run away or retreat. While it might be a better policy, yet the law is not so written. If retreat is applicable under such circumstances, it must be by the party who brings or seeks to bring on the difficulty or provoke it; and, while insulting language usually is not considered a provocation, yet that, taken in connection with other circumstances attending the case, may put the aggressive party in such an attitude of producing the occasion and bringing about the difficulty which terminates fatally. At least, he sets in motion the matters that bring on the difficulty, and is to that extent in the wrong, and, if the law of retreat is applicable at this point, it must be to the man who originates the trouble, and not to the party who is defending against it. Under the common law a party must retreat to the wall before killing his adversary or defending himself; but such is not the law of this state. With us, the party in the wrong must do the retreating. Our law is more favorable to the man who is in the right, and places a less burden upon him, in homicide cases, than upon the man who is in the wrong and produces the occasion."

In sustaining a conviction of manslaughter in Renn v. State (1912) 64 Tex. Crim. Rep. 639, 143 S. W. 167, the court approved of the following charge given by the trial judge: "One who is unlawfully attacked is not bound to retreat, in order to avoid the necessity of killing his assailant, but has the right to stand his ground, and even to advance on his adversary, and continue to act in self-defense until the danger or apparent danger is past, and to repel the unlawful attack of his assailant with whatever force may reasonably appear to him at the time to be necessary; but when it appears to defendant that such danger, or apparent danger, if any, ceases, then such right ceases."

In a case wherein it appeared that the accused shot his assailant as the latter was rushing toward him with a knife in his hand, threatening to kill him, it was held that it was error for the court to fail to charge that a person unlawfully attacked was not bound to retreat in order to avoid the necessity of killing his assailant. Nalley v. State (1891) 30 Tex. App. 456, 17 S. W. 1084.

So, in Ball v. State (1890) 29 Tex. App. 107, 14 S. W. 1012, it appeared that the person killed had made previous threats against the accused, and on meeting him on the street threatened him, and, rushing at him, grabbed him by the throat and threw his right hand in his hip pocket as though to draw a weapon, when the accused shot him. It was held that, in an instruction on the law of self-defense, the jury should have been charged that the accused was not bound to retreat in order to avoid the necessity of killing his assailant.

It was said in Kirk v. Territory (1900) 10 Okla. 46, 60 Pac. 797, that where the victim of the homicide sought out the prisoner with a deadly weapon for the purpose of taking his life, or where the prisoner was attacked in a place where he had a right to be, if he did not provoke the assault, or bring on the difficulty, he was not bound to retreat, but could stand his ground, and, if necessary, take the life of his adversary in order to save himself from great bodily harm.

So, the fact that a person expects to be attacked does not deprive him of the right to go to a place where he has a right to go; and going to such place does not deprive him of the right of self-defense, where he is attacked and compelled, in self-defense, to kill his assailant. People v. Gonzales (1887) 71 Cal. 569, 12 Pac. 783.

A fortiori, in these jurisdictions, there is no duty to retreat where the assault is felonious and produces imminent danger of death or great bodily harm. People v. Batchelder (1864) 27 Cal. 70, 85 Am. Dec. 231; People v. Ye Park (1882) 62 Cal. 204; People v. Hecker (1895) 109 Cal. 451, 30 L.R.A. 403, 42 Pac. 307; People v. Cyty (1909) 11 Cal. App. 702, 106 Pac. 257; Page v. Smith (1894) 141 Ind. 236, 40 N. E. 745; State v. Partlow (1886) 90 Mo. 608, 59 Am. Rep. 31, 4 S. W. 14; Baltrip v. State (1891) 30 Tex. App. 545, 17 S. W. 1106; State v. Phillips (1910) 59 Wash. 252, 109 Pac. 1047; State v. Meyer (1917) 96 Wash. 257, 164 Pac. 926. See also Colondro v. State (1919) 188 Ind. 533, 125 N. E. 27.

In People v. Batchelder (Cal.) supra, it appeared that several persons, while attempting to land on an island which was a part of the public domain, were resisted by those on shore, with the result that one of the party shot and killed one of those on shore. It was held that, if the defendant and his party were attacked by those on shore with deadly weapons and murderous intent, so that their lives were placed in danger, they were not bound to retreat, but could stand their ground and, if need be, kill their assailants.

So, in State v. Meyer (1917) 96 Wash. 257, 164 Pac. 926, it appeared that the father of the victim was making a felonious assault on the defendant's housekeeper, when the defendant made an effort to protect her by shooting the assailant in the legs. At that time the son rushed toward the defendant with a pistol in his hand, threatening to take his life, when the defendant shot and killed him. The court said: "If Edward Kramer, Sr., was making a felonious assault on Lillian Abbott, and the defendant was acting in her defense, the deceased did not have the right to advance upon him with a pistol pointed at him. But the defendant had the right, under those conditions to act in his own defense, and in doing so he was not required to retreat, but had the right to stand his ground and repel force with force, even to the taking of life, if, in the light of the attending circumstances, this was apparently necessary to save his own life, or to protect himself from great bodily harm at the hands of the deceased."

Likewise, in a case wherein it appeared that the defendant and his victim had each made threats against the life of the other, and some time thereafter, when they met in a public highway, each grabbed for his gun and shot almost simultaneously, it was held that the duty to retreat before taking life in self-defense had no application, as neither had time to retreat. State v. Phillips (1910) 59 Wash. 252, 109 Pac. 1047.

Where one who is assaulted has reasonable grounds to believe that another is about to commit a felony or great bodily injury on him, and that the danger is imminent, he may act on his fears, and, if necessary, slay his assailant; and where the attack is sudden and imminent he need not retreat, but may be justified in slaying the aggressor, though it afterwards appears that he could have more easily gained his safety by retreating. People v. Cyty (1909) 11 Cal. App. 702, 160 Pac. 257. See to the same effect People v. Hecker (1895) 109 Cal. 451, 30 L.R.A. 403, 42 Pac. 307; People v. Ye Park (1882) 62 Cal. 204.

So, in People v. Maughs (1906) 149 Cal. 253, 86 Pac. 187, wherein it appeared that the defendant shot and killed his adversary in self-defense, at a time when he was attacked by the person killed who had a knife in his hand and threatened to cut his throat, it was held that it was reversible error to instruct the jury that one who is attacked should employ all reasonable means within his power, consistent with his safety, to avoid the necessity for the killing before he is justified in killing a human being in self-defense, as the defendant was entitled to a correct instruction as to his right to stand his ground against such an attack.

L. W. B.

ARTHUR B. LACOUR et al., Liquidators, Appts.,

v.

NATIONAL SURETY COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

Louisiana Supreme Court — May 31, 1920.

(147 La. 586, 85 So. 600.)

Notary public — Liability of surety for embezzlement.

1. The surety on the bond of a notary public is liable for his embezzlement of funds placed in his hands to loan on mortgage, where he forges and duly attests securities which he returns to the lender as evidencing the loan.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1302.]

— regular employment of — effect.

2. The regular employment of a notary public by a building and loan association to attest the securities taken for its loan does not deprive him of his official character, or make him its personal employee, so as to relieve the surety on his bond as notary from liability for his acts.

Limitation of actions — one-year statute — action on bond.

3. An action on the bond of a notary public to recover funds embezzled by him is not within the one-year Statute of Limitations.

(Monroe, Ch. J., dissents.)

APPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Civil District Court for the Parish of Orleans (Théard, J.) dismissing a suit brought to hold defendant liable as surety on the bond of a notary public. Judgment annulled and case remanded.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. U. Marinoni, Jr., and F. Rivers Richardson for appellants.

Messrs. Grant & Grant, for appellee:

The defendant surety is in no wise liable for any misappropriation of funds intrusted to Flynn for disbursement to borrowers.

Monroe v. Brocard, 20 La. Ann.

78; Lescouzeve v. Ducatel, 18 La. Ann. 470; Schmitt v. Drouet, 42 La. Ann. 1064, 21 Am. St. Rep. 408, 8 So. 396; Nolan v. Labatut, 117 La. 431, 41 So. 718.

The prescription of one year avails the surety for all offenses and quasi offenses committed by the notary.

Taylor v. Graham, 15 La. Ann. 418; Caillouet v. Franklin, 32 La. Ann. 220.

O'Niell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiffs, liquidators of the Prudential Savings & Homestead Society, appeal from a judgment dismissing their suit for $10,000 indemnity on a bond of a notary public on which the defendant company was surety. The suit was dismissed on an exception of no cause of action; the defendant's contention being that the losses alleged to have been sustained by the homestead society, if such losses were incurred, did not result from any official misconduct of the notary public, but resulted from acts of forgery and embezzlement on his part.

The allegations of the petition, so far as they are pertinent to the question whether plaintiffs have alleged a cause of action, are as follows, viz.:

(2) On the 1st day of April, 1909, the said National Surety Company of New York, then as now doing business in this state under the laws thereof in reference to surety companies made and provided, became the surety for pay of one Thomas D. Flynn, then a notary public of this city, in which bond the said surety company bound itself in solido with the said Thomas D. Flynn to the extent of $10,000 that the said Thomas D. Flynn should faithfully and impartially perform and discharge all the duties incumbent upon him as a notary public of the parish of Orleans, and in accordance with the laws of the state of Louisiana, which provide that such bond shall secure all persons who may employ such notary public in his said profession, all as will more fully and at large appear by reference to a duly certified copy of the said notarial bond of the said Thomas D. Flynn, signed as surety by the National Surety Company of New York, hereto annexed and made part hereof and marked exhibit A.

"(3) That the said Prudential

Savings & Homestead Society, of which the petitioners are the liquidators (and which society was formerly called the Commonwealth Building & Loan Association, its name having been so changed by amendment to its charter passed before W. Morgan Gurley, notary public, on October 31, 1913, duly recorded in M. O. B. 1119, folio 214), regularly employed the said Thomas D. Flynn as its notary public, he being regularly elected as such, and in his said capacity was authorized and empowered to pass all acts in which the said society should make loans to its stockholders upon the security of the property tendered it by them to secure loans made them, and as such notary public it was his duty to receive the checks for the funds intended to be loaned such borrowers, and to disburse the funds when the loans should be completed, and to turn over to the said society the mortgage notes securing the said loans when completed.

"(4) Petitioner shows that the said Thomas D. Flynn was unfaithful to this trust as such notary public, and became a defaulter, and absconded from this city during the month of March, 1912, and he is at present out of the state of Louisiana and his whereabouts are unknown to petitioners.

"(5) Petitioners show that, while acting as notary public for the said Prudential Savings & Homestead Society, then called the Commonwealth Building & Loan Association, the said Flynn delivered over to the said society, in his capacity as notary public, the following described notes, purporting to be genuine vendor's lien and privilege mortgage notes, viz.: [Here follow a list and description of five promissory notes, each purporting to be secured by mortgage and vendor's lien, and each paraphed by Flynn, as notary public, to identify it with an act of sale supposed to have been passed by him; the total amount of the promissory notes being $15,700. Then follows a description of two checks, aggregating in amount $5,400, alleged to have been collected by Flynn on forged indorsements of the name of the payee. The promissory notes and checks are said to be annexed to the petition and made part thereof.]

"(6) Petitioners further show that the transactions mentioned in article 5 are only some of the transactions in which the said Flynn, acting in said capacity of notary public, victimized the said society by reason of his fraudulent acts as notary public, and they reserve the right, should it be held that the said surety on his notarial bond is not liable for any of the losses hereinabove detailed, to supply other losses than those so named.

"(7) Petitioners further show that all of the said notes detailed in article 5 were either forged, or, if not forged, no acts of sale and mortgage whatever were passed and recorded, as certified by the said Flynn to have been so passed, and with which acts said notes purported to be identified, under the official paraph of the said Flynn, as notary public, and because of the said notes not being genuine notes, or because no acts of sale and mortgage whatever having been passed to secure the said notes, the said society wholly lost the amounts hereinabove set forth; it in each instance having parted with the full face value of said note by payment of its funds therefore.

"(8) Petitioners further show that the said Thomas D. Flynn deceived the said society by informing it that the proposed borrowers had signed the said notes representing their respective loans, and that all proper signatures had been obtained to the several acts of transfer and resale, and the said society, not being aware of any of the fraudulent acts of the said Flynn, and in the usual and customary mode of handling said homestead transactions, relying entirely upon his integrity as a notary public, backed by his official bond, accepted the said notes, under his official paraph, in settlement of the purported loans made said parties, the checks for which loans had been previously turned over to the said Flynn for disbursement in accordance with the custom of passing such homestead acts in this city, all of said checks, however, being made payable to the said respective borrowers."

The two checks, amounting to $5,400, on which plaintiffs allege that the homestead society lost that amount, by Flynn's forging the indorsement, cashing the checks, and embezzling the proceeds, may be disregarded, because the suit is for only $10,000, on a bond for that sum, and the mortgage notes, on which plaintiffs allege that the homestead society was defrauded by the notary's false and fraudulent paraphs, amount to more than the sum sued for.

For the purpose of this decision, of course, the allegations of fact made in the petition must be accepted as true. We will therefore refer to the facts stated in the petition as if they had been proven.

The only question to be decided is whether the contract by which Flynn defrauded the homestead society was in his official capacity as notary public, or merely in his individual capacity, in which any other individual might have committed the same frauds. The argument on behalf of the surety company is that the checks on which Flynn forged indorsements, the proceeds of which he embezzled, were received by him as the agent of the homestead society, not as notary public, but as an individual employee of the society. Hence it is argued that, when the homestead society trusted Flynn with the checks, which were made payable to the prospective borrowers from the society, the latter assumed the risk that Flynn might forge indorsements on the checks and cash them and embezzle the proceeds, without resorting to any deceit or malpractice in his official capacity as notary public. The argument, stated briefly, is that the surety company is released from liability for the official malpractice of the notary public, because the homestead society had voluntarily placed itself in such position, with respect to the notary public, that the latter might have defrauded the society without resorting to any official malpractice. The fallacy of the argument lies in the presumption that the notary public would have defrauded the homestead society if he had not been invested with the official capacity to cover up the fraud by using false certificates on promissory notes supposed to be secured by mortgage. In short, the flaw in the argument lies in the presumption that notaries public are not to be trusted as individuals; that one who trusts a notary public as an individual does so at his risk; and that money intrusted to a notary public in his individual capacity is presumed to be gone beyond recovery, from the moment when the notary public received it as an individual or personal agent. On the contrary, money intrusted to a notary public, whether in cash or in the form of a bank check or other negotiable instrument, to be paid out by the notary in his official capacity and upon his performance of an official act as notary public, remains the property of the person who deposited it with the notary public, and the deposit so made is presumed to be safe. If the depositor be afterwards defrauded of his money by official malpractice of the

Notary public—
liability of surety for embezzlement.

notary public, as by issuing to the depositor a false no-tarial act, it cannot be said that the depositor's loss occurred as soon as he made the deposit, or before the notary committed the fraudulent official act.

The fact that the notary public in this case was regularly employed as —regular employment of—effect.

notary public by the homestead society did not deprive him of his official character as notary for the homestead society, or make him merely an individual or personal employee of the society. To hold otherwise would release the surety on a notary's bonds in almost all cases, because the victims of dishonest notaries public are generally persons who have employed a notary public to perform some official act. Under § 2503 of the Revised Statutes, the bond required of a notary public was "conditioned for the faithful performance of all duties required by law toward all persons who may employ him in his profession of notary." The law, as amended by Act No. 42 of 1890, p. 34, by Act No. 138 of 1896, p. 217, and by Act No. 187 of 1902, p. 367, now makes the bond of a notary public for the parish of Orleans "conditioned as the law directs, for the faithful performance and discharge of his duties as a notary public." Prior to these amendments, there was a doubt as to whether the obligation of a notary's bond should not be confined to those by whom a notary was employed as such. See Nolan v. Labatut, 117 La. 444, 41 So. 713. But there has never been any doubt that the obligation of the surety on a notary's bond extended to all persons who might employ the notary public officially.

The exact question presented in this appeal has been decided by this court in at least three cases contrary to the contention of the surety company.

In the case of Rochereau v. Jones, 29 La. Ann. 82, it was said: "The sureties on the official bond of a notary public are liable for any loss or damage caused by his affixing his notarial paraph to any mortgage note which he knew to be forged. And anyone injured by his act has a right of action on the bond against his sureties."

In the case cited the notary public, William McC. Jones, in his individual capacity, sold to the plaintiffs two promissory notes which he, the notary, had forged, and which bore his official paraph, indicating that they were secured by an act of mortgage passed before him. The suit was to recover from the sureties the loss which plaintiffs had sustained by buying the forged and worthless notes. One of the defenses urged by the sureties was that the plaintiffs had bought the notes from Jones personally and in his individual capacity, and had not employed Jones to perform any official act as notary public. The court answered the argument by referring to Act March 12, 1857, No. 109, declaring the condition of a notary's bond to be "that he shall faithfully perform his duties in that capacity." As to whether the fraud practised by the notary was committed personally or in his official capacity the court said:

"In matters of sales on terms, when notes are furnished by the vendor, what is the duty imposed on the notary? He shall attest each of the notes by putting his name on them, mentioning the date of the act from which the mortgage and privilege are derived, under the penalty of damages. R. C. C. 3384. That attestation, the notary's name, his signature, those distinct and deceitful badges of simulated authenticity, are on the face of the discounted notes. The forgery is not that of an individual, but of the notary; his signature on those notes disguised and concealed the criminal fabrication, justified the conviction of their reality, left no room for suspicion and doubt, and was, as to the form and legal existence of those instruments, the principal, nay the only, cause which induced an acceptance of their transfer. Was not that forgery a violation of his official duty? If not, what would amount to or constitute such a violation?

"Had he not attached his signature to the attestation and his official capacity to his signature, however guilty he would have been, his sureties on his bond would not have been responsible. Had he discounted or sold notes forged by another notary, or by anyone else but himself, he alone would have been liable. But can his sureties be released when the evidence establishes beyond contradiction that it was as a notary he forged the notes, as a notary that he forged the signature of the parties to the act, and that it was his signature as a notary that gave to those notes that form, that character, without which they could not have been converted into money? The attorneys representing appellants rely on decisions of this court reported in the Sixth and Sixteenth Annuals. Those decisions we adhere to. If interested parties deposit funds with a notary and he fails to account for those funds, his sureties are not liable; and why? Because, as his office is not one of deposit, he was trusted and received the deposit, not as an officer, but as an individual."

The decision in Rochereau v. Jones, supra, was cited with approval in the case of Teutonia Nat. Bank v. Wagner, 33 La. Ann. 737, in support of the doctrine there announced, which is very appropriate to the case before us, viz.: "The sureties of an officer are liable not only for the acts done by him by virtue of his office, but also for those done under color or by means of the office which he holds."

In the case of Stork v. American Surety Co. 109 La. 713, 33 So. 742, Mrs. Stork, a widow, had paid three mortgage notes which had been issued by her husband, and delivered the notes to a notary public to be canceled. The notary issued a receipt for the notes, saying they were received for cancelation, and signing the receipt officially. The notes were paraphed for identification with an act of mortgage that had been passed before another notary public. The notary who received the notes for cancelation did not have them canceled, but sold them to a third party, Spiro, and appropriated the proceeds to his own use. Thereafter Spiro instituted foreclosure proceedings, and the property was seized and sold to satisfy the judgment obtained by him. Plaintiff thereupon brought suit against the surety company on the bond of the notary public who had embezzled her mortgage notes. The surety company urged defenses similar to those urged in the case before us.

This court, by a unanimous opinion and decree, rejected the defenses, saying, with regard to the notary:

"Defendant's principal on the bond was called upon as notary public by plaintiff to perform the duty of canceling the bond. He received her notes and bound himself as notary to see to their cancelation in the office of the recorder of mortgages.

"This would not bind the security on the bond, if, as contended by defendant, the duty was not one of those which a notary could be called upon to perform. . . .

"As a notary in the case at hand, he held evidence of payment of the mortgage. As a notary, he had it in his power to require cancelation. Having failed to discharge the duties he had assumed in that capacity, the condition of his bond was broken. Had he issued a certificate of payment with the note attached, or had he presented the note in person, as he should have done, the mortgage could, and doubtless would, have been canceled by the recorder of mortgages.

"The fact that the notary accepted the notes handed to him to have the mortgage canceled without the authentic deed, but assumed to perform the duty without it—a duty which he could perform with the notes in hand—cannot be construed, in our view, as a cause sufficient to release the security from all liability. . . . This plaintiff may have had too much confidence in this notary, but it does not appear that she was specially negligent. . . .

"Here the unfaithful agent took plaintiff's money, and the absconding notary her notes,—one and the same person. The money taken by him as agent is not claimed, for the very good reason that it was not and could not have been received by the notary as a notary, but by the agent."

It appears from the record in the case last cited that the plaintiff had, besides trusting the notary public with mortgage notes to be canceled, deposited money with him to be invested in mortgage notes. As to the money deposited with the notary for investment by him, the court said that the surety on his bond was not answerable for his having embezzled the funds; but, as to the notes intrusted with the notary for cancelation, the ruling was that he received the notes in his official capacity, and that his surety was answerable for his failure to have them canceled by the recorder of mortgages.

In the case of Harz v. Gowland, 126 La. 674, 52 So. 986, the plaintiff had bought from the notary public, Gowland, who acted in his individual and personal capacity, ten promissory notes which had been forged by Gowland, the notary, and had been paraphed by him as if to identify them with an act of sale and mortgage and vendor's lien. No such act of sale or mortgage had been passed. Suit was brought against the notary and his surety in solido for the loss which the plaintiff sustained by the notary's fraudulent dealings. It was held, in a unanimous opinion and decree, that the surety was liable. The court said:

"The question arises whether his surety is liable on its bond. We are of opinion that it is. He, the notary, was acting in his official capacity, and in that capacity called upon the plaintiff and informed him, substantially, of the notes and of their validity, stated where the property mortgaged was situated.

"As relates to the paraph ne varietur, there was nothing done or said to place the investor upon inquiry. The paraph is the official signature, and evidence of the reality and genuineness of the note on which it is written."

The court then cited with approval Nolan v. Labatut, 117 La. 431, 41 So. 713. And, citing and quoting from the Rochereau Case, 29 La. Ann. 82, the court said: "It must be borne in mind that in this decision the question rested on the fact that the paraph was a deception and a fraud, because the notary knew that the purported identification was not an identification because of the fraud. The same in substance is the case before us for decision."

The defendant's counsel cite and rely upon the decision in Lescouzeve v. Ducatel, 18 La. Ann. 470; Monrose v. Brocard, 20 La. Ann. 78; Schmitt v. Drouet, 42 La. Ann. 1064, 21 Am. St. Rep. 408, 8 So. 396, and Nolan v. Labatut, supra.

The doctrine of the case of Lescouzeve v. Ducatel must be considered as having been overruled in Stork v. American Surety Co., because the two cases are identically alike. In Lescouzeve v. Ducatel the ruling was that the law had not made it the official duty of a notary public to receive money to have a mortgage canceled, and that therefore the surety on the notary's bond was not liable for his neglect or failure to have a mortgage canceled, for the cancelation of which he had received the amount of the mortgage debt from the mortgagor, with instructions to cancel the mortgage.

The case of Monrose v. Brocard and the case of Schmitt v. Drouet were referred to in the opinion rendered in Stork v. American Surety Co. supra, and were declared to be not in conflict with the doctrine there announced. If they were in conflict with the latter decision, therefore, they must be considered as having been thereby overruled.

The decision in Nolan v. Labatut, on rehearing, supra, was by a divided court. Two members of the bench as then constituted dissented. The opinion of the majority was that the surety was not liable for the notary's acts of fraud in issuing notes forged by him and paraphed by him as if identifying them with acts of mortgage, because the notes were received by the plaintiff in discharge, or in partial discharge, of the notary's indebtedness as agent, for money which he had previously collected for plaintiff's account. The surety was held liable, however, by unanimous opinion and decree, for a loss of $600 which plaintiff had sustained by purchasing for cash from the notary a note for that sum which the notary had forged and falsely paraphed.

In the opinion in Nolan v. Labatut the court cited and distinguished from the case then in hand the decision in Stork v. American Surety Co. supra, and said that the difference between the two cases was in the facts, and not in the court's views upon the questions of law. The doctrine of the case of Stork v. American Surety Co., therefore, was not overruled. Not being required here to either affirm or disavow all that was said in Nolan v. Labatut, it is sufficient to say that the facts in the case before us are more nearly like the facts in Stork v. American Surety Co. than like the facts in Nolan v. Labatut; for in the case before us the checks which the notary forged and cashed, and embezzled the proceeds of, were not deposited with him to be invested by him as the agent of the plaintiff.

It is argued by counsel for the surety company that the homestead society could not have been defrauded or deceived by the notary public, Flynn, in the manner alleged in the petition, because, in making loans, the homestead society invariably took title from the borrower and immediately resold the property to him. The argument, in other words, is that any officer of the homestead society who received from the notary public promissory notes which the latter pretended were secured by mortgage and vendor's lien must have known whether the acts of sale had really been passed. We are not so sure that the notary public could not have practised a deception or fraud, as well by pretending to have passed an act of sale and resale, as by pretending to have passed an act of mortgage. The argument of the surety company's attorney in that respect is one which may be pertinent when the case shall have been tried upon its merits; but the argument is not applicable to the exception of no cause of action.

Defendant's counsel also filed in the district court pleas of prescription of one year and of three years, and, from the fact that the judge's decree was "that said exceptions be maintained," the inference is that the pleas of prescription, as well as the exception of no cause of action, were maintained.

We see no merit whatever in the plea of prescription of three years, which applies to an open account; and counsel for the surety company do not insist upon the plea. As to the prescription of one year, it is sufficient to say that this court has at least four times decided that the plea does not apply to a case like this.

In Brigham v. Bussey, 26 La. Ann. 676, it was held that an action against the recorder of mortgages and the surety on his bond for damages resulting from his failure of official duty was an action ex contractu, not subject to the prescription of one year. The same ruling was made in Fox v. Thibault, 33 La. Ann. 32. In Weintz v. Kramer, 44 La. Ann. 35, 10 So. 416, it was said:

"The prescription of one year is not applicable to an action brought upon the bond of a notary public for failure to perform the duties incumbent on him."

Limitation of actions—one-year statute—action on bond.

The two decisions last cited were quoted with approval in Gordon v. Stanley, 108 La. 187, 32 So. 531.

Our conclusion is that the pleas of prescription should have been overruled.

The judgment appealed from is annulled, the exception of no cause of action and the pleas of prescription of one year and of three years are overruled, and it is ordered that the case be remanded to the Civil District Court for further proceedings not inconsistent with the foregoing opinion. The defendant, appellee, is to pay the costs of this appeal. All other costs are to depend upon the final judgment.

Monroe, Ch. J., dissents.

Petition for rehearing denied June 30, 1920.

ANNOTATION.

Liability of notary public or his bond.

- I. In general, 1302.
- II. Wilful misconduct:
 - a. In general, 1303.
 - b. Certifying acknowledgment known to be fraudulent, 1304.
- III. False certificate of acknowledgment, 1306.
- V. Effect of contributory negligence, 1309.

I. In general.

The question under annotation presupposes that the notary has been guilty of misconduct, and the annotation deals merely with the liability, upon that assumption, of the notary himself or the sureties on his bond. It is of course necessary in dealing with that subject to show the nature of the misconduct upon which the liability is predicated, e. g., whether it was failure to pay over money, or a false or fraudulent certificate of acknowledgment,—but the present annotation is not concerned with the rules governing the duty of the notary or with the particular facts or circumstances which disclose a breach of duty on his part, it being assumed, as already stated, that the notary had been guilty of misconduct, official or unofficial.

One of the questions thus excluded from the present annotation is dealt with in the annotation on proof of identity, upon which officer certifying to an acknowledgment is justified in acting, in 10 A.L.R. 871.

The liability of the surety of a notary for the latter's act depends upon whether the act complained of was in the line of his duty as notary, or, at least, was done under color of his office; and the apparent conflict in the decisions is, in general, traceable to differences in the powers and duties of the notary in different jurisdictions. Thus in Louisiana the powers of a notary are more extensive than in most, if not all, other jurisdictions, and so the bond would in that jurisdiction be liable for acts of the notary which in other jurisdictions would be out of the line of the principal's duties or functions as notary, and so not within the scope of the bond.

II. Willful misconduct.

a. In general.

Sureties of a notary will be liable for any loss to the one liable on paid notes received for cancelation, where the notary, instead of having them canceled, sells the notes and appropriates the proceeds. Stork v. American Surety Co. (1903) 109 La. 713, 33 So. 742. The wrong of the notary for which the plaintiff seeks to hold security bound was, the court said, unquestionably a wrong committed in discharge of the duties of his office, since the notary fixed his official signature to the receipt and undertook to obtain the cancelation with which a notary may, we think, be intrusted.

Although the act of a notary public having the jurisdiction of justice of peace, in demanding and collecting a sum of money from a garnishee before judgment rendered condemning the indebtedness in the hands of the garnishee to the payment of the demand under which it was attached, was not an official duty, and so, in the absence of statute, the notary's failure to pay over the money would impose no liability on his sureties, yet the sureties are liable under a statute which provides that the official bond of officers is made "obligatory on the principal and sureties thereon . . . for the use and benefit of every person who is injured, as well by any wrongful act committed under color of his office, as by his failure to perform, or the improper or neglectful performance of, those duties imposed, by law." Mason v. Crabtree (1882) 71 Ala. 479. The court said: "A justice of the peace or notary public, having the jurisdiction of a justice, is a bonded officer, and as such has authority to collect money on claims placed in his hands for collection. . . . Under the averments of the complaint, if the notary had rendered judgment against the railroad company, condemning its indebtedness to the payment of a judgment against Mason, he would have had authority to receive the money and to give the railroad company a lawful discharge therefrom. He pretended he had rendered such judgment, and thereby pretended he had authority to receive the money. This, if true, was a wrongful act, committed under color of his office, and rendered him and his sureties liable for the restitution of the money."

On the other hand, where a notary does a thing which the law does not authorize him to do, although he does so eo nomine in his capacity of a notary public, the surety is not responsible. Schmitt v. Drouet (1890) 42 La. Ann. 1064, 21 Am. St. Rep. 408, 8 So. 896. And so the sureties of a notary are not liable for a notary's attestation that a prolongation of debts has been allowed by an act before him, when in fact no such act had been made, there being no law authorizing a notary, or making it a duty incumbent upon him, to write officially on any note, or alter any certificate, that a prolongation of payment of a debt had been allowed by an act before him. The court stated that it may be that, had the plaintiff employed the notary to draw up the acts of prolongation and had them signed by the proper parties, and had he prepared them, forging the signatures of the appearers thereto, thereby lulling the creditors into security and preventing them from taking steps to enforce recovery in some way, the surety might be in danger; but the reason would have been that the notary employed to draw up the act had failed to perform a duty incumbent upon him, and required of him by his employer, and had prevented the creditor from having recourse to law to secure his rights; but this is not the case presented, which is simply one in which a surety is sought to be held because his principal, the notary, has done.

acts which the law did not authorize or compel him to perform, and which were therefore not incumbent upon him.

Again, in the early Louisiana case of Lescouzeve v. Ducatel (1866) 18 La. Ann. 470, an action against a notary and his sureties for the recovery of money deposited with the notary, and not delivered by him, it was held that there could be no recovery against the sureties, as the law had not made it an official duty of a notary to receive money. And in Monrose v. Brocard (1868) 20 La. Ann. 78, where the facts were analogous to those in the Ducatel Case, the sureties were relieved for the same reason.

It will be observed that the reported case (LACOUR v. NATIONAL SURETY Co. ante, 1295) states that Lescouzeve v. Ducatel (La.) supra, was overruled by Stork v. American Surety Co. (1903) 109 La. 713, 33 So. 742, and that Monrose v. Brocard and Schmitt v. Druet (La.) supra, were referred to in the opinion in the Stork Case as not in conflict with the doctrines there announced; and the court in the LACOUR CASE adds that if they were in conflict with the Stork Case they must be considered as having been thereby overruled.

In Nolan v. Labatut (1906) 117 La. 431, 41 So. 713, which is sufficiently set forth and distinguished in the reported case (LACOUR v. NATIONAL SURETY Co. ante, 1295) it was held that sureties of a notary cannot be held liable for the wrongful diversion of funds received by the notary for investment. The court distinguished Stork v. American Surety Co. (La.) supra, stating that in the Stork Case there was a diversion of mortgage notes received for cancellation, and that it was within the official duties of a notary to receive mortgage notes for cancellation, while it was no part of the official duty of a notary to receive money for investment.

Upon the ground that sureties are never held beyond the strict terms of their agreement, it was held in Norton v. Title Guaranty & S. Co. (1917) 176 Cal. 212, 168 Pac. 16, that the bond of a notary public who does notarial work for one, and in addition thereto acts as his agent and legal adviser, is collateral security for the notary's official conduct only, and not for his general course of action as agent and legal adviser.

So, too, in Heidt v. Minor (1891) 89 Cal. 115, 26 Pac. 627, where a notary public, who also acted as a real estate agent and broker, affixed a false certificate of acknowledgment of execution to a mortgage forged by himself, and received from the mortgagee, for delivery to the mortgagor, the sum of money purporting to be secured by such mortgage, which sum he appropriated to his own use, and absconded, the sureties on his official bond, conditioned that he should well and faithfully perform all the duties of his office as required by law, were held not liable for the money which he thus fraudulently obtained outside the line of his official duty, they being only liable for the loss sustained by the lender through the official misconduct of the notary in certifying falsely to the acknowledgment. The court stated that it is no part of the duty of a notary public to receive money from or for anybody; that, while it was misconduct, it was not official misconduct, fraudulently to obtain it, and it is only against his official misconduct that the sureties consented to indemnify persons injured thereby.

b. Certifying acknowledgment known to be fraudulent.

Sureties of a notary are liable to one damaged by the notary's certifying a fraudulent acknowledgment to a deed of trust forged by himself. State ex rel. Matter v. Ogden (1915) 187 Mo. App. 39, 172 S. W. 1172.

And so they are liable for damages caused by his attesting mortgage notes which he himself has forged. Rochereau v. Jones (1877) 29 La. Ann. 82.

And they are liable whether the false certificate is valid or invalid, if made in apparent conformity to legally constituted authority, but in excess or perversion thereof, and injury results therefrom, because in such a case the act is done by color of the office. State ex rel. Matter v. Ogden (Mo.) supra.

So, too, a notary public who, in the absence of any pretended grantor, makes a false certificate of acknowledgment of a deed, the ostensible grantors in which are fictitious persons, is liable on his official bond to one injured thereby. State v. Plass (1894) 58 Mo. App. 148.

Where a notary public forged a note and mortgage, and falsely certified to an acknowledgment of the mortgage by the mortgagors named therein and claiming to be their agent, delivered the papers, and received the money loaned thereon, which was lost to the lender, the misconduct of the notary public, in his official capacity in making the false and fraudulent certificate, was the proximate cause of the mortgagee's loss, and the sureties on the notary's official bond, conditioned that he should duly and faithfully discharge the duties pertaining to his office, are liable for such loss. People use of Doran v. Butler (1889) 74 Mich. 643, 42 N. W. 273.

A notary is liable for knowingly certifying falsely to the acknowledgment of a forged instrument without the appearance before him of the party purporting to have signed it or anyone impersonating him. Lesser v. Wunder (1879) 9 N. Y. Week. Dig. 56.

And the surety upon the official bond of a notary public is liable to the person defrauded where the notary public forged the names of persons to mortgages, and then certified under the notarial seal that "the parties so signing," etc., were the identical persons whose names were attached to the instrument and who negotiated the mortgages. (Com. use of Irwin v. Barrett (1879) 6 W. N. C. (Pa.) 385.)

Also the sureties of a notary are liable to anyone injured by the notary's paraphing a forged note. Nolan v. Labatut (1906) 117 La. 431, 41 So. 713; Harz v. Gowland (1910) 126 La. 674, 52 So. 986.

But sureties of a notary are not liable for the misappropriation by a notary public who acted also as the agent for a money lender, of money placed in his hands to loan, and who sent to the lender thereof notes and deeds of trust forged by him with names of fictitious persons and bearing his certificate of acknowledgment, as the damages which the lender sustained were not due to any official misconduct of the notary, but were the result of his own gross negligence and of the criminal conduct of his agent in his individual capacity. State v. Boughton (1894) 58 Mo. App. 155.

And where a notary acting also as a real estate agent sold real property for a client upon a contract, and thereafter, falsely representing that his client would discount the balance of the price for immediate payment, received such balance from the purchaser without authority, and subsequently delivered to him a deed forged by himself and bearing his notarial certificate of acknowledgment by the grantor, the grantee cannot recover against the surety on the official bond of the notary for the loss sustained, as neither the notary's certificate nor any official misconduct on his part was the proximate cause thereof. People use of Young v. Nederlander (1913) 177 Mich. 434, 143 N. W. 753, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 1026.

And in Ware v. Brown (1869) 2 Bond, 267, Fed. Cas. No. 17,170, in holding that the purchaser of a leasehold interest in land from one to whom it was conveyed by an instrument bearing a forged signature and a false certificate of acknowledgment has no right of action against the notary public who knowingly and corruptly made the false certificate, the court said: "If this action was prosecuted by . . . the person directly defrauded by the acts alleged against the defendant in his official character as a notary public, there would be no question that it would be sustained, and that he could recover to the extent of any loss or injury he may have suffered. But it is a very different question whether this plaintiff has a right of action. . . . There was no privity between the plaintiff and the parties implicated in the fraudulent acts alleged. He then had no interest in the property, and there could have been no intention to defraud or injure him. . . . It was the obvious duty of the plaintiff to have inquired into the validity of [his vendor's] title, and I see no reason why the doctrine of caveat emptor does not apply."

III. False certificate of acknowledgment.

The scope of the present annotation excludes any consideration of the duty and care of the notary in respect to the taking and certifying of acknowledgments, and is concerned merely with his liability or that of his bond, assuming that he has been guilty of a breach of duty in that regard. The "proof of identity upon which an officer certifying an acknowledgment is justified in acting" is treated in the annotation in 10 A.L.R. 871.

"A notary who affixes his official signature and seal to a certificate of acknowledgment without examining it to ascertain whether the facts recited are true is guilty of negligence; and he is liable on his official bond for damages arising therefrom. . . . But a mere mistaken conclusion as to the identity of the grantor imposes no legal liability on the defendant officer. If, however, he takes the acknowledgment of one who is not personally known to him, relying simply on the introduction of a third person instead of exacting the oath of identification prescribed by the statute, he and his sureties may be held answerable if it turns out that the acknowledging party was an impostor." 1 R. C. L. p. 310.

The functions of a notary public are not to be lightly assumed. A certificate of acknowledgment is an act which must, in the nature of things, be relied on with confidence by men of business. Those buying or taking security by way of liens on real estate ought not to be required to look with suspicion on such a certificate, or compelled to take proof of its recital as to the notary's personal acquaintance with the acknowledger. Figurs v. Fly (1916) 187 Tenn. 358, 193 S. W. 117.

If the notary has no acquaintance with the person who appears as the affiant, it is his business, before certifying officially to the identity of such person, to require such proof of his identity as would satisfy a reasonably careful and prudent man in the situation of the officer. Any less care than this would be in defect of a faithful performance of the duties of the office, and would subject the notary to liability on his bond for the resultant damages. State ex rel. Gardner v. Webb (1914) 177 Mo. App. 60, 164 S. W. 184.

A notary and his sureties are liable to a legatee for the loss of a legacy due to the annulment of a will because the notary who executed it failed to state that the attesting witnesses were residents of the parish where the same was executed. Weintz v. Kramer (1892) 44 La. Ann. 35, 10 So. 416. It was contended that the notary's liability was governed by the section of the Revised Statute which provides that the notary's bond shall be "conditioned for the faithful performance of all duties required by law toward all persons who may employ him in his profession as notary," and therefore, as plaintiff did not employ this notary, and the petition does not so allege, it sets forth no breach of the bond and no cause of action thereon. The court said that, with reference to notaries in the parish of New Orleans, at least the section of the Revised Statute governed which exacts a bond conditioned "for the faithful performance of his duties." The court added that if the contentions of defendant were well founded there would be no liability under the notary's bond for any fault or misconduct, however gross, in that most important of all notarial functions, the confection of testaments since no one could be injured by the nullity of the testament except the legatees, and as they are not the persons who employed the notary, they would have no recourse.

So, too, a notary's sureties are liable to a mortgagee or party injured for the consequent damages if the notary, in certifying to the acknowledgment of a mortgage, negligently omits to state either that the party acknowledging was known to him, or was identified by the testimony of a witness examined for that purpose, in consequence of which the record of the mortgage was held not to impart notice to subsequent encumbrancers, and the debt was lost, where the official bond conditions that he shall "well and truly perform and discharge the duties of a notary public according to law," and by statute it is provided that each notary has power to take and certify the acknowledgment or proof of conveyances, and that "for any misconduct or neglect of duty in any of the cases in which any notary public, appointed under the authority of this state, is authorized to act," etc., "he shall be liable on his official bond to the parties injured thereby for all damages sustained." Fogarty v. Finlay (1858) 10 Cal. 239, 70 Am. Dec. 714.

But in Henderson v. Smith (1885) 26 W. Va. 829, 53 Am. Rep. 139, an action by one who had loaned money on a trust deed which was void by reason of the fatally defective certificate of acknowledgment, against the notary who made the certificate and negligently omitted essential words, the court said: "This defect is apparent upon the face of the certificate; and it might therefore be regarded, as insisted by the defendant in error, that the loss sustained by the plaintiff was not the direct result of the negligence of the defendant, but that the proximate cause of the loss was the negligence and want of care on the part of the plaintiff or his attorney in having the deed so defectively acknowledged placed upon the record, and paying or loaning the money upon it."

A notary and his sureties will be liable for the loss sustained by a false acknowledgment to a deed. Kleinpeper v. Castro (1909) 11 Cal. App. 83, 103 Pac. 1090; Homan v. Wayer (1908) 9 Cal. App. 123, 98 Pac. 80; Joost v. Craig (1901) 131 Cal. 504, 82 Am. St. Rep. 374, 63 Pac. 840; Bellport v. Harkins (1919) 104 Kan. 543, 180 Pac. 220; State use of Kleinsorge v. Meyer (1876) 2 Mo. App. 413; Harrington v. Vogle (1919) 103 Neb. 677, 173 N. W. 699; Peterson v. Mahon (1914) 27 N. D. 92, 145 N. W. 596; Figuers v. Fly (1916) 187 Tenn. 358, 193 S. W. 117; Brittain v. Monsur (1917) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 195 S. W. 911.

But a notary is not liable for certifying to the identity of a person though such person be not the person whom he is represented and believed to be, where he is identified by another person known to the notary, and whom he has no reason to suspect of wrongdoing. Howcott v. Talen (1913) 133 La. 845, 49 L.R.A. (N.S.) 45, 63 So. 376. The court stated that so long as he exercises the precautions of an ordinarily prudent business man in certifying to the identity of the persons who came before him, it may be doubted whether he has any other function to discharge.

And in Brown v. Rieves (1919) 42 Cal. App. 482, 184 Pac. 32, where one had forged both the signatures of the owners of property to a deed to himself under an assumed name and also the acknowledgment of the notary thereto, and thereafter, under such assumed name, deeded the property to another, acknowledging the signature before a notary, it was held that the notary and his sureties were not liable for the taking of the acknowledgment under an assumed name, since the party actually appeared before the notary, and was introduced to the notary under such assumed name by one with whom the notary had been acquainted for a long time. The court said that it conclusively appeared that the very individual who signed and acknowledged the deed, and who was referred to therein, regardless of the name under which he had transacted business with others, did actually appear before the notary, and, this being true, the notarial certificate of acknowledgment spoke the truth, and was not false. The court added that had the party come to the notary alone with the deed already signed, accompanied by no one whom the notary knew, and had asked him to acknowledge the same, another question would be before them. The court distinguished Joost v. Craig (1901) 131 Cal. 504, 82 Am. St. Rep. 374, 63 Pac. 840, as a case where the certificate was in fact false.

And in Bellport v. Harkins (1919) 104 Kan. 543, 180 Pac. 220, it was held that there will be no liability for an unintended falsity of a notarial certificate, if the notary has reasonable grounds for believing that the man who seeks his notarial services is the one whom he represents himself to be.

In Virginia the taking of an acknowledgment is considered a judicial act, and so a notary public is not liable for taking and certifying within his jurisdiction and in good faith a void acknowledgment to a deed. See Snead v. Atkinson (1917) 121 Va. 182, 92 S. E. 835.

A notary will be liable for any loss which is the result of his false certificate of acknowledgment to a mortgage. Hatton v. Holmes (1893) 97 Cal. 208, 31 Pac. 1131; Wilson v. Gribben (1911) 152 Iowa, 379, 132 N. W. 849; Blaes v. Com. (1906) 29 Ky. L. Rep. 908, 96 S. W. 802; People ex rel. Curtiss v. Colby (1878) 39 Mich. 456; Barnard v. Schuler (1907) 100 Minn. 289, 110 N. W. 966; State ex rel. Heitkamp v. Ryland (1901) 163 Mo. 280, 63 S. W. 819; Kangley v. Rogers (1915) 85 Wash. 250, 147 Pac. 898.

And although the certificate of acknowledgment to the mortgage was not made until after the assignment, the notary who subsequently made it, before the recording of the mortgage, is liable to the assignee for the falsity of the certificate, whereby the record was not sufficient notice to a subsequent purchaser, and the lien of the mortgage was lost. Wilson v. Gribben (1911) 152 Iowa, 379, 132 N. W. 849, supra. And it was further held in this case that the failure of the assignee of a mortgage to have the assignment to him duly recorded was not the cause of loss sustained by him by reason of the falsity of the certificate of acknowledgment to the mortgage, where the record of the mortgage was insufficient notice to a subsequent purchaser, and the lien on the mortgage was lost, and so did not bar his right of action against the notary and his sureties.

In Scotten v. Fegan (1883) 62 Iowa, 236, 17 N. W. 491, action against sureties for damages resulting from false certificate of acknowledgment to a mortgage, it was held that demurrer to the complaint was properly sustained, since it was not alleged that the notary did knowingly misstate any material fact, the statute providing that "any officers who knowingly misstate a material fact in" a certificate of acknowledgment "shall be liable for all damages."

A notary and his bond are liable for any loss sustained as the result of a false certificate of acknowledgment to a deed of trust. Anderson v. Aronsohn (1919) 181 Cal. 294, 10 A.L.R. 866, 184 Pac. 12; State ex rel. Covenant Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Balmer (1898) 77 Mo. App. 463; State v. Grundon (1901) 90 Mo. App. 266; State ex rel. Savings Trust Co. v. Hallen (1912) 165 Mo. App. 422, 146 S. W. 1171, later appeal in (1917) — Mo. App. —, 196 S. W. 1067; State ex rel. Haitz v. American Surety Co. (1920) 203 Mo. App. 71, 217 S. W. 317.

And a notary will be liable for damages resulting from false certificates of affidavits. State ex rel. Gardner v. Webb (1914) 177 Mo. App. 60, 164 S. W. 184.

In the following cases it was held that there was no liability on the part of the notary or his bond, as the false certificate was not the proximate cause of the loss. American Surety Co. v. First Nat. Bank (1919) 203 Ala. 179, 82 So. 429; Smith v. Maginnis (1905) 75 Ark. 472, 89 S. W. 91; Coffin v. Bruton (1906) 78 Ark. 162, 95 S. W. 462; Riverside Portland Cement Co. v. Maryland Casualty Co. (1920) — Cal. App. —, 189 Pac. 808; Oakland Bank of Savings v. Murfey (1886) 68 Cal. 455, 9 Pac. 843; McAllister v. Clement (1888) 75 Cal. 182, 16 Pac. 775; Hatton v. Holmes (1893) 97 Cal. 208, 31 Pac. 1131; Mahoney v. Dixon (1904) 31 Mont. 107, 77 Pac. 519; Ellis v. Hale (1920) 58 Mont. 181, 194 Pac. 155; State Nat. Bank v. Mee (1913) 39 Okla. 775, 136 Pac. 758.

In an action for damages against a notary public charged with negligently taking and certifying a false acknowledgment of a deed of trust executed by a forger and impostor, where the plaintiff had given evidence tending to prove that the real owner of the land described, who is named in the instrument as the grantor, did not execute or acknowledge the deed, the burden of the evidence is on the defendant to prove that the person who appeared before him and acknowledged the instrument answered the description of the grantor named, as set forth in the deed. State ex rel. Mackey v. Thompson (1899) 81 Mo. App. 549.

And in Clapp v. Miller (1916) 56 Okla. 29, 156 Pac. 210, 11 N. C. C. A. 581, it was held that where the evidence shows that an acknowledgment was false the notary has the burden to show that he exercised that degree of care and diligence that the law requires of him.

But in Com. v. Haines (1881) 97 Pa. 228, 39 Am. Rep. 805, it was held that in an action to hold a notary public and his bondsman liable for making a false certificate, the plaintiff has the burden to prove a clear and intentional dereliction of duty. The basis of the decision in the Haines Case is that a notary public, in certifying to an acknowledgment or an affidavit, acts in a judicial capacity, and his liability is to be determined upon principles applicable to judicial officers.

In Ehlers v. United States Fidelity & G. Co. (1915) 87 Wash. 662, 152 Pac. 518, in affirming a judgment against a surety company which was surety on a notary's bond, it was held that it was a question for the jury as to whether a notary exercised reasonable care in taking the acknowledgment of an impostor who is merely introduced to him by a man who bears a good reputation in the community, in view of the statute requiring that a notary, in the taking of an acknowledgment, must know the identity of the person appearing before him as the party described in and who executes the instrument.

IV. Effect of contributory negligence.

One is not guilty of contributory negligence in relying on a notary's certificate as being true, and that the persons therein mentioned appeared before him, and acknowledged the instrument. State ex rel. Matter v. Ogden (1915) 187 Mo. App. 39, 172 S. W. 1172.

But where a notary public made a false certificate of acknowledgment to a mortgage signed by an impostor, but the mortgagee himself met the latter, and, in an action on the official bond of the notary, testifies in effect that he relied upon his own judgment in everything connected with the loan except the question as to title shown by the abstract, the court cannot properly direct a verdict for the plaintiff. People use of Cook v. Cole (1905) 139 Mich. 312, 102 N. W. 856.

So, too, a notary and his bondsmen are not liable for damages for alleged negligence in certifying the acknowledgment to a mortgage, although the person signing and acknowledging the mortgage was falsely impersonating the owner of the land mortgaged, where such person was introduced to the notary by the agent of the mortgagee, by the name contained in the mortgage as the name of the owner and the mortgagor of the land, and signed thereon by the person making the acknowledgment. Overacre v. Blake (1889) 82 Cal. 77, 22 Pac. 979. The court stated that the party executing the mortgage having been introduced to the notary by the plaintiff through her agent duly acting for her in that behalf, she being the party to whom the mortgage was being given, and most likely of all persons to know with whom she was dealing, and the notary then seeing the person so introduced execute the mortgage by signing it with the name so given him by the agent of plaintiff, and said agent witnessing the signature, it cannot lie in the mouth of the plaintiff to say that the notary was guilty of negligence in certifying that such person was known to him to be the person who executed the same. The court added that not only the doctrine of contributory negligence, but the doctrine of estoppel, also applied to close the mouth of plaintiff from asserting any claim against the sureties of the notary in such a case.

And it was held in State v. Plass (1894) 58 Mo. App. 148, where a notary public had made a false certificate of acknowledgment of a deed in which the ostensible grantor was a fictitious person, and no one of the name stated had any interest in the property described, which the deed purported to convey, that the negligence of one parting with money on the faith of the deed, in failing to have the title examined, deprives him of the right to recover any substantial damages on the official bond of the notary, though the latter, for his failure to comply with the law in certifying to the acknowledgment in case he did not personally know the identity of the party making it before him, is liable on his bond for at least nominal damages, where it is provided by statute that a notary's bond may be sued upon by any person injured without limiting the right of action to one who has sustained pecuniary injury,—the notary by making the false certificate having violated an official obligation to the person relying thereon which was enjoined upon him by law, and having given such person a cause of action against him and his sureties, although no pecuniary damage can be shown to have resulted from his wrong. And to the same effect are State ex rel. Scruggs v. Packard (1918) 199 Mo. App. 53, 201 S. W. 953;

State ex rel. Dominick v. Farmer (1918) — Mo. App. —, 201 S. W. 955.

In State ex rel. Scruggs v. Packard (Mo.) supra, the court has distinguished State ex rel. Heitkamp v. Ryland (1901) 163 Mo. 280, 63 S. W. 819; State v. Grundon (1901) 90 Mo. App. 266; and State ex rel. Covenant Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Balmer (1898) 77 Mo. App. 463, as cases where the property was in fact owned by the one whom the notary negligently and untruthfully certified had acknowledged the instrument, so that but for the untruthful certificate there would have been no loss, and therefore the notary's act undoubtedly was the proximate cause of the loss, and so the surety was held liable, while in the instant case the property was not in fact owned by the one falsely stated in the certificate to have acknowledged the instrument. And the court further distinguished State ex rel. Savings Trust Co. v. Hallen (1912) 165 Mo. App. 422, 146 S. W. 1171, later appeal in (1917) — Mo. App. —, 196 S. W. 1067, as a case where the wife who, through the notary's negligence, falsely appeared in the certificate to have acknowledged the deed, in fact owned the property, and it was conceded to be worth the amount of the recovery over and above the genuine encumbrance. J. H. B.

FERDINAND NEY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

JOSEPH H. HAUN.

Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals—November 17, 1921.

(— Va. —, 109 S. E. 438.)

Carrier — transfer man as common carrier — limited territory.

1. A transfer man licensed to do business in a particular city where he is a common carrier is not such carrier with respect to a load of goods which he specially contracts to transport between two other cities.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1316.]

— what constitutes common carrier.

2. To constitute one a common carrier in a particular instance the carriage must be over a route or within a territory over or within which there has been a general undertaking by the person,—a holding of himself out as undertaking,—to carry goods for the public generally, as a business, over that route or within that territory.

[See 4 R. C. L. 546; 1 R. C. L. Supp. 1159, 1160.]

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Rockingham County (Haas, J.) to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for injury to plaintiff's furniture while in defendant's possession for transportation. Affirmed.

Statement by Sims, J.:

This is an action of trespass on the case in assumpsit instituted by Ney, the plaintiff in error, as plaintiff in the court below against Haun, the defendant in error, as defendant in the court below, to recover alleged damages to a certain victrola and other articles of furniture which the defendant undertook for hire to carry for the plaintiff from the city of Harrisonburg, Virginia, to the city of Washington, District of Columbia, by means of an automobile truck, the furniture being badly broken to pieces en route by the overturning of the truck.

There was a trial by jury, and a verdict and judgment for the defendant.

The evidence is conflicting on the subject of whether the accident was caused by the negligence of the defendant, and there was testimony to the effect that the accident was not caused by any negligence of the defendant; so that upon that issue the verdict could not be disturbed by the court.

The plaintiff, however, contended before the trial court, and urges before us, that the defendant was a common carrier with respect to the undertaking of carriage in question, and was therefore liable as an insurer, under the doctrine, applicable at common law, fixing the liability of a common carrier in such case. And upon that subject the plaintiff asked the court to instruct the jury, as follows: "The court instructs the jury that, if they believe the said defendant, Haun, contracted with the said plaintiff, Ney, to transport his furniture from Harrisonburg, Virginia, to the city of Washington, and that the said property was injured or destroyed while in the possession of the said Haun, through no fault on the part of said Ney, then the jury must find for the plaintiff such damages as from all the evidence in the case they may believe him entitled to."

The court refused to give such instruction. That action of the court is by the plaintiff assigned as error.

The evidence in the case bearing on the question of whether the defendant was a common carrier with respect to the undertaking of carriage involved is uncontroverted, and is as follows:

The defendant testified: "That he was a licensed transfer man under the laws of Virginia with his place of business at Bridgewater, Rockingham county; that he had no license to do business in the city of Harrisonburg; that on a former occasion he had hauled a load of potatoes to Washington for a brother of the plaintiff, and that was the only time he ever hauled to Washington until he took the plaintiff's furniture."

In regard to the undertaking of carriage involved in the instant case, the defendant testified: "That he was called (by the plaintiff by telephone) from Bridgewater to Harrisonburg for the purpose of contracting for the hauling of the load of furniture from Harrisonburg to the city of Washington, and that he (defendant) agreed to haul the same for the sum of $45."

Mr. Charles A. Hammer, for plaintiff in error:

Defendant was a common carrier.

6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 251, 253; Robertson v. Kennedy, 2 Dana, 430, 26 Am. Dec. 466; Heyman v. Stryker, 116 N. Y. Supp. 638; Merritt v. Old Colony & N. R. Co. 11 Allen, 80; Jackson Architectural Iron Works v. Hurlbut, 158 N. Y. 34, 70 Am. St. Rep. 432, 52 N. E. 665; Benson v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. 35 Utah, 241, 136 Am. St. Rep. 1052, 99 Pac. 1072, 19 Ann. Cas. 803; Caye v. Pool, 108 Ky. 124, 49 L.R.A. 251, 94 Am. St. Rep. 348, 55 S. W. 887; Johnson Exp. Co. v. Chicago, 136 Ill. App. 368; Hastings Exp. Co. v. Chicago, 135 Ill. App. 268;

Farley v. Lavary, 107 Ky. 523, 47 L.R.A. 383, 54 S. W. 840; Gates v. Bekins, 44 Wash. 422, 87 Pac. 505; Snelling v. Yetter, 25 App. Div. 590, 49 N. Y. Supp. 917; Atlanta Baggage & Cab Co. v. Mizo, 4 Ga. App. 407, 61 S. E. 844; Herring v. Utley, 53 N. C. (8 Jones, L.) 270; Terminal Taxicab Co. v. Kutz, 241 U. S. 252, 60 L. ed. 984, P.U.R.1916D, 972, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 583, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 765; Beckman v. Shouse, 5 Rawle, 179, 28 Am. Dec. 653; Gordon v. Hutchinson, 1 Watts & S. 285, 37 Am. Dec. 464; 10 C. J. Carriers, p. 49, § 25; Fish v. Chapman, 2 Ga. 349, 46 Am. Dec. 393; Story, Bailm. § 495; United States v. Simpson, 257 Fed. 860; Sullivan v. Williams, 107 Misc. 511, 176 N. Y. Supp. 710; Gurley v. Armstead, 148 Mass. 267, 2 L.R.A. 80, 12 Am. St. Rep. 555, 19 N. E. 389; Johnson Exp. Co. v. Chicago, 136 Ill. App. 368; Carlton v. Boudar, 118 Va. 521, 4 A.L.R. 1480, 88 S. E. 174.

Mr. H. W. Wyant, for defendant in error:

Defendant in this transportation operated as and was a private carrier, and not a common carrier, and therefore, in the absence of negligence, is not liable for his failure safely to carry and deliver plaintiff's property to him in Washington.

Michie, Carr. § 1, pp. 1, 2; Johnson v. Pensacola & P. R. Co. 16 Fla. 623, 26 Am. Rep. 731; Vinkestone v. Ebdon, 1 Salk. 249, 91 Eng. Reprint, 219; Brind v. Dale, 8 Carr. & P. 207; Fish v. Chapman, 2 Ga. 353, 46 Am. Dec. 393; New York C. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 17 Wall. 357, 21 L. ed. 627, 10 Am. Neg. Cas. 624; 1 Hutchinson, Carr. §§ 35, 47; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Wallace, 30 L.R.A. 161, 14 C. C. A. 257, 24 U. S. App. 589, 66 Fed. 506; Atlantic City v. Dehn, 69 N. J. L. 233, 54 Atl. 220; Piedmont Mfg. Co. v. Columbia & G. R. Co. 19 S. C. 353; Bassett v. Aberdeen Coal & Min. Co. 120 Ky. 728, 88 S. W. 318, 18 Am. Neg. Rep. 422; Varble v. Bigley, 14 Bush, 698, 29 Am. Rep. 435; Samms v. Stewart, 20 Ohio, 69, 55 Am. Dec. 445; Carlton v. Boudar, 118 Va. 521, 4 A.L.R. 1480, 88 S. E. 174.

Sims, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The sole question presented for our decision in the instant case is the following:

Was the defendant, Haun, although a common carrier of goods in Bridgewater, such carrier from Harrisonburg to Washington, at the time of the undertaking of carriage involved in this action?

This question must be answered in the negative.

It appears from the uncontroverted evidence in the case that the carriage of goods by the defendant from Harrisonburg to Washington was not the habitual business of the defendant, but a casual undertaking merely. He did not pursue the business of carrying goods over that route as a public employment. He had never held himself out as undertaking to carry goods for the public generally between those places.

Carrier—transfer man as common carrier—limited territory.

By the great weight of authority one of the essential requisites to constitute a person a common carrier of goods in a particular instance is that the carriage in question must be over a route or within a territory over or within which there has been a general undertaking by the person—a holding of himself out as undertaking—to carry goods for the public generally—as a business, over that route or within that territory.

—what constitutes common carrier.

Hutchinson, Carr. 3d ed. §§ 47, 49, 60; 1 Michie, Carr. §§ 1 and 2; 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 251-253; 10 C. J. p. 41; and authorities cited by these textbooks, too numerous to be cited here. The dominant and controlling factor, which is the test of the nature of the employment and which fixes the carriage as that of a common carrier, is the public profession, the public undertaking; and that undertaking fixes also both the character of the articles undertaken to be carried and the extent of the territory covered by the business. It is true that the undertaking need not be express. It may be implied from conduct. But, if the undertaking is to be implied from conduct, it must be evidenced, as said in Fish v. Chapman, 2 Ga. 349, at page 354,

46 Am. Dec. 393, "by a series of acts, by his known habitual continuance in this line of business."

As said in Hutchinson on Carriers, supra, § 60: "Must Undertake to Carry by Customary . . . Route.—Common carriers . . . undertake to carry . . . only . . . over the route to which their business is confined. Thus common carriers . . . cannot be required to carry . . . by a route to which his business does not extend. And even if a carrier should, in a particular instance, undertake by a special contract to carry goods by unusual and exceptional . . . routes, his liability would be based upon his contract, and not by the ordinary rules governing common carriers."

(This is, of course, not applicable in cases where the common-law rule has been changed by statute; but there is no such statute bearing upon the case before us.)

As said, however, by the same authority last cited in another place (§ 49): "What circumstances will be sufficient to invest the employment of the carrier in particular cases with the character of a public one, and what profession or course of dealing on his part will be considered as enough to constitute him a common carrier, instead of a private carrier for hire, is, however, sometimes a question of no little difficulty, and has given rise to a considerable diversity of opinion and controversy. The criterion by which it is to be determined whether he belongs to the one class or the other is generally considered to be whether he has held himself out or has advertised himself in his dealings or course of business with the public as being ready and willing, for hire, to carry particular classes of goods for all those who may desire the transportation of such goods between the places between which he professes in this manner his readiness and willingness to carry. If he has done so, he is, of course, to be regarded as a common carrier; but, if not, he will be treated only as a private carrier for hire." (Italics supplied.)

As shown by this authority, such is the rule in England and in a large majority of the American courts. To the same effect, see Carleton v. Boudar, 118 Va. 521, 525-527, 4 A.L.R. 1480, 88 S. E. 174.

The textbook last cited thereupon proceeds, in §§ 50-53, and notes, with a review of the minority holding of certain cases in Pennsylvania, Tennessee, and New Hampshire, which is referred to as the Pennsylvania rule, and which denies the necessity for any public profession or undertaking in order to impose upon the carrier the character and consequent liability of a common carrier, and which holds that one who has never assumed the character of a public carrier, whose contract to carry may be confined to one particular instance, or pro hac vice, as it is termed, may assume thereby all the responsibilities of a common carrier, if he has occasionally accepted the goods of others for transportation for hire. These holdings are not considered sound by the learned author of the textbook last cited, and we concur in that view. In the leading case of Fish v. Chapman, supra, 2 Ga. at page 355, there is also a disapproval of the Pennsylvania rule, where it is said that there can be little doubt that that holding "is opposed to the principles of the common law and its rule wholly inexpedient,"—citing numerous authorities.

The case of Farley v. Lavary, 107 Ky. 523, 47 L.R.A. 383, 54 S. W. 840, among the authorities relied on for the plaintiff, does not rest upon the Pennsylvania rule. It is, however, peculiar in its facts. In that case the inception of the carriage was within the city, the corporate limits of which were the territorial limits of the usual business of the carrier; almost the whole route of the carriage was within such limits; but the contract of carriage and the carriage involved in that action in fact extended somewhat beyond the was whether the carrier was acting as a common carrier and liable as such while carrying the goods outside of the city limits. The court, on the single authority of Ireland v. Mobile & O. R. Co. 105 Ky. 400, 49 S. W. 188, 453, applied the doctrine there laid down as applicable to railroad companies, and held that the contract was made by the carrier in his capacity of a common carrier, and was in effect a contract to carry for the whole distance in the capacity of a common carrier. We feel that we are not called upon to approve or to disapprove of the holding in that case, as its facts are entirely dissimilar to those of the case before us.

In conclusion we will say that, while we have no disposition whatever to relax the established rules express or implied, constitutes a common carrier, or to relieve common carriers from any of the duties or responsibilities imposed upon them by law, we have no disposition to extend those rules so as to embrace within them those who, according to the majority view of the courts on the subject, are not common carriers.

The case will be affirmed.

NOTE.

The question whether persons or corporations engaged in local transportation of goods are common carriers is the subject of the annotation following W. N. STEVENSON & Co. v. HARTMAN, post, 1316.

Weir, 129 App. Div. 307, 114 N. Y. Supp. 426, 199 N. Y. 540, 92 N. E. 1084; Robinson v. Cornish, 34 N. Y. S. R. 695, 13 N. Y. Supp. 577; New York C. & H. R. R. Co. v. Sheeley, 57 N. Y. S. R. 766, 27 N. Y. Supp. 193; Allen v. Sackrider, 37 N. Y. 341; Anderson v. Fidelity & C. Co. 228 N. Y. 475, 9 A.L.R. 1544, 127 N. E. 584; Hutchinson, Carr. 2d ed. § 85; Fish v. Clark, 49 N. Y. 122; O'Rourke v. Bates, 73 Misc. 414, 133 N. Y. Supp. 392.

Mr. Charles Frankel for respondent.

Hiscock, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought to recover the value of merchandise delivered by plaintiff to defendant, a cartman, for transportation within the city of New York. After the goods had been delivered to him and placed upon his cart he was temporarily called away, and while thus absent some thief drove his cart away and stole the merchandise.

It was established, we think, that if defendant received these goods as an ordinary bailee he was not guilty of any neglect of duty which made him responsible for the value thereof. On the other hand, it is practically conceded by him that if he received the goods as a common carrier he has not offered any excuse or defense which relieves him from responsibility for their value. It has thus far been held as matter of law that he was not a common carrier, and was not liable for the value of the merchandise. The decisive question, therefore, presented for our consideration, is whether this conclusion was correct. We do not think that it was.

Defendant was a public cartman, duly licensed under an ordinance of the city of New York. Under this ordinance and the license which he took out thereunder he became engaged in the business of public, that is, general, carting. He was privileged, in the case of certain bulky articles, to make a special contract for his compensation, but otherwise he was compelled to carry such articles as might be intrusted to him under a regular scale of prices.

So far as appears, his time was devoted to this business of carting.

He had a regular stand upon one of the streets of the city, whereof the only purpose could be to invite and accept such business as might be offered to him by anyone who desired his services. Much stress is laid upon the fact that the bulk of his business came from certain classes of merchants in the neighborhood of the stand which he occupied, but to our mind this means nothing more than that naturally those who sought and employed his services were the ones near by, who knew of his location, rather than those in some distant part of the city, who knew nothing of him, and whose convenience would not be served by hiring him. There is nothing to indicate that his customers were controlled or classified by any other test or rule than that of mere proximity and convenience.

The business which he carried on is fairly described by him in his evidence, some of which may be quoted as follows:

Q. Are you located at any particular place or have you a stand at any particular place?

A. I stand at Fifteenth street and Sixth avenue.

Q. Where are your customers?

A. They are around in that particular neighborhood. . . .

Q. Where do you truck merchandise to?

A. To the piers and city deliveries.

Q. You make deliveries all over the city?

A. Yes, sir. . . .

Q. Do you have any special routes? Not exactly special routes—it all depends on the goods you have for delivery?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many deliveries do you make in a day—any special number?

A. Sometimes twenty, sometimes fifteen, and sometimes thirty.

Q. That depends?

A. It depends on what I pick up from certain people.

Q. When you get a truckload full, you start off to deliver?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you wait until you have a truck full before you start delivering; is that correct?

A. Yes, sir, I take all that I can possibly get from all the people, and when they give me their goods and when I get a truck full, I go around and make deliveries.

As we have indicated, it seems to us perfectly clear that the business thus described was that of a common carrier of goods. Defendant was either a private carrier, carrying occasionally for some particular person under some particular arrangement, or he was a common carrier engaged in the general business of carrying goods

Carrier—cart-man as common carrier.

generally for those who desired his services. It seems plain that his case is not fitted by the former description, but that he comes within the latter definition. Anderson v. Fidelity & C. Co. 228 N. Y. 475, 9 A.L.R. 1544, 127 N. E. 584; Jackson Architectural Iron Works v. Hurlbut, 158 N. Y. 34, 70 Am. St. Rep. 432, 52 N. E. 665; Allen v. Sackrider, 37 N. Y. 341.

According to these views, we think the judgment appealed from should be reversed, and a new trial granted, with costs to abide event.

Hogan, McLaughlin, Crane and Andrews, JJ., concur.

Chase and Cardozo, JJ., dissent.

ANNOTATION.

Persons or corporations engaged in local transportation of goods as common carriers.

- I. In general, 1316.
- II. One carrying for special customer, 1317.
- III. One contracting out conveyance, 1317.
- IV. One who carries as an occasional occupation, 1317.
- V. One who carries on single occasion, 1318.
- VI. Necessity for fixed rates, 1318.
- VII. Necessity for fixed routes or regular trips, 1319.
- VIII. Necessity for fixed stand, 1319.

I. In general.

It will be observed that the annotation is confined to the question of status as a common carrier, and is not concerned with the rights, duties, or responsibilities dependent upon or resulting from that status.

The question whether one is a common carrier can sometimes be known only by particular proof of how his business was conducted and what profession he made to the public regarding it. Thompson v. New York Storage Co. (1902) 97 Mo. App. 135, 70 S. W. 938; Campbell v. A. B. C. Storage & Van Co. (1915) 187 Mo. App. 565, 174 S. W. 140.

The test is not whether he is carrying on a public employment, or wheth-

- IX. Discrimination as to goods, 1319.
- X. Discrimination as to patrons, 1319.
- XI. Effect of special contract for carrying, 1320.
- XII. Common carrier within particular statute or ordinance, 1321.
- XIII. Cartmen, draymen, and truckmen, 1322.
- XIV. Storage and moving companies; warehousemen, 1323.
- XV. Transferrers of baggage, 1323.
- XVI. Transferrers between railroads, 1324.

er he carries to a fixed place; but whether he holds out, either expressly or by a course of conduct, that he will carry for hire, so long as he has room, the goods of all persons, indifferently, who send him goods to be carried. Robinson v. Cornish (1890) 34 N. Y. S. R. 695, 13 N. Y. Supp. 577; Nugent v. Smith (1875) L. R. 1 C. P. Div. (Eng.) 19.

So, whether a party is a common carrier or not depends upon the facts, and when there is a question whether the carrier is a private or a common carrier it is to be determined by the facts relating to, first, whether the business is a public business or employment, and whether the service is rendered to all indifferently; second, whether one has held himself out as so engaged so as to make him liable for refusal to accept the employment offered; and along these lines may go the question as to whether the contracts under which the business is accepted are made on the basis of a private or public carriage. This last, however, is only a circumstance which may be looked at in arriving at a conclusion on the two above-mentioned questions. For if one, by reason of the circumstances, is a common carrier as to the goods in question, he cannot, by any special contract, change his status as such, or exempt himself from the responsibilities growing out of that relation. If, however, the above questions be answered in the affirmative, then he is a common carrier, with all the rights and responsibilities flowing from that status or relation. Campbell v. A. B. C. Storage & Van Co. (Mo.) supra.

If one is a common carrier in fact, it makes no difference whether he solicits the particular employment or is solicited to accept it. Haynie v. Baylor (1857) 18 Tex. 498.

So, too, it is not the extent of the business or the number of trips performed, but the readiness to carry for all, that determines whether one is a common carrier. Verner v. Sweitzer (1858) 32 Pa. 208.

And in order to constitute one a common carrier the mode of transporting the goods which he employs is immaterial. Arkadelphia Mill. Co. v. Smoker Merchandise Co. (1911) 100 Ark. 37, 139 S. W. 680.

And it is not necessary that the carrier devote himself exclusively to the business of carrying. Jackson Architectural Iron Works v. Hurlbut (1899) 158 N. Y. 34, 70 Am. St. Rep. 432, 52 N. E. 665.

One once a common carrier is no more liable in that character than any other person if it be conclusively shown that he has abandoned the business. Satterlee v. Groat (1828) 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 272.

II. One carrying for special customer.

A cartman carrying goods for particular customers at prices fixed in each case by specific contract is not a common carrier. Faucher v. Wilson (1895) 68 N. H. 338, 89 L.R.A. 431, 38 Atl. 1002.

One who carries for a particular person only is not a common carrier. Ingate v. Christie (1850) 3 Car. & K. (Eng.) 61.

III. One contracting out conveyance.

One who rents teams and wagons with drivers to certain firms and corporations under time contracts, which are exclusively within the control and under the direction of the users, is not a carrier, not being engaged in carrying, hauling, or transporting goods, but merely in leasing the paraphernalia and men constituting the means by which such hauling is accomplished, and so the vehicles are not "public carts" within the meaning of an ordinance regulating and licensing "public carts." Chicago v. A. M. Forbes Cartage Co. (1901) 1 Ill. C. C. 473.

Also one who keeps horses and wagons which are engaged by various firms under monthly contracts for hauling goods, each wagon being kept exclusively for the firm contracting for it, the men operating the wagons being employed by the owner, but being under the direction and control of the contracting firm, the wagons not being kept at the public stands for licensed vehicles, and never being used for odd jobs, but only under the monthly contracts, does not come within the purview of an ordinance making it unlawful for any person to keep drays and wagons for hire for the transportation of goods without first obtaining a license. Such an owner is not a common carrier; he does not hold himself out as ready to serve any person who may have goods to transfer, and his business is not such as would authorize the council to prescribe the compensation which he is entitled or required to receive from his patrons. McCauley v. State (1909) 83 Neb. 431, 119 N. W. 675.

IV. One who carries as an occasional occupation.

If one is accustomed to undertake for hire to transport the goods of those who choose to employ him, though it be not his constant or usual, but only an occasional, occupation, he is a common carrier; at least, whenever he holds himself out in any way to the public as a carrier, or undertakes, as a matter of business and profit, the transportation of goods. Haynie v. Baylor (1857) 18 Tex. 498.

A planter whose wagons are engaged in hauling his crop to market, and who also is in the habit of taking loads of goods back on the return trip when he can get them, is to be regarded in law as a common carrier. Harrison v. Roy (1860) 39 Miss. 396.

So, too, in Chevallier v. Straham (1847) 2 Tex. 115, 47 Am. Dec. 639, one whose principal business was farming, but who, during a part of the time, and during the season of hauling, ran his wagon whenever he could get a chance, was held to be a common carrier and liable as such for loss of goods. The court stated that it considered Gordon v. Hutchinson (Pa.) cited infra under V., quite decisive of that point.

But in Samms v. Stewart (1851) 20 Ohio, 69, 55 Am. Dec. 445, it was held that a farmer who was accustomed to haul produce to a neighboring city, and who often carried return loads of freight for local merchants, was not a common carrier, since he did not hold himself out to the world as such, although it was shown that when about to go to the city he had frequently asked the local merchants for return loads. The court stated that Gordon v. Hutchinson (Pa.) cited infra, under V., was opposed to the current of authority on the subject.

V. One who carries on single occasion.

One who undertakes to carry a load of goods for another, not for the sake of profit, but as a matter of accommodation, is not a common carrier. Haynie v. Baylor (1857) 18 Tex. 498.

One who undertakes for hire to haul the goods of another by wagon upon a single occasion is not a common carrier thereof. Fish v. Chapman (1847) 2 Ga. 349, 46 Am. Dec. 393; ——— v. Jackson (1792) 2 N. C. (1 Hayw.) 14.

So, too, a person, not a common carrier, who sends his servant with a wagon to transport goods belonging to a particular person from one place to another, with special instructions not to take the goods of any other person for transportation, is not liable as a common carrier in case of loss or embezzlement of goods of another taken for transportation in violation of such orders. Satterlee v. Groat (1828) 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 272.

One who contracts to tear down a house and haul the materials to another place is, in such hauling, a private, and not a common, carrier. McBurnie v. Stelsly (1906) 29 Ky. L. Rep. 1191, 97 S. W. 42.

However, a farmer who, being about to go to another place, solicited a local merchant to give him a return load, was held in Gordon v. Hutchinson (1841) 1 Watts & S. (Pa.) 285, 37 Am. Dec. 464, liable as a common carrier with respect thereto. The court stated that it considered a wagoner who carries goods for hire to be a common carrier, whether transportation be his principal and direct business, or an occasional and incidental employment.

VI. Necessity for fixed rates.

Truckmen, wagoners, cartmen, porters, and other persons who undertake to carry goods for hire for the public generally and as a common employment in a city, are common carriers, and the fact that they have no regular tariff for their charges, but fix a special price for each job, does not change the relation. 4 R. C. L. 558.

So, a corporation with a number of branch offices in a large city, which is engaged in transporting parcels, boxes, and packages for wholesale houses, department stores, and factories, and delivering them throughout the city, is a common carrier, notwithstanding it has no particular rate or schedule charges, but deals with each customer separately, and so is subject to an ordinance requiring license for every express wagon, furniture van, dray, or other vehicle used for conveying goods within the city for hire. Johnson Exp. Co. v. Chicago (1907) 136 Ill. App. 368. And to the same effect, see Hastings Exp. Co. v. Chicago (1907) 135 Ill. App. 268.

But see NEY v. HAUN (reported herewith) ante, 1310, which holds that to constitute one a common carrier in a particular instance, the carriage must be over a route within a territory over or within which there has been a general undertaking by the person—a holding of himself out as undertaking—to carry goods for the public generally as a business over that route or within that territory.

VII. Necessity for fixed routes or regular trips.

It is not necessary, in order to constitute a common carrier one who has undertaken to carry, that he make regular trips or between fixed termini. Campbell v. A. B. C. Storage & Van Co. (1915) 187 Mo. App. 565, 174 S. W. 140; Liver Alkali Co. v. Johnson (1872) L. R. 7 Exch. (Eng.) 267.

VIII. Necessity for fixed stand.

The status of common carrier of one carrying on the business of carting is not altered by the circumstance that none of his vans stand in any of the public express stands. Culver v. Lester (1901) 21 Can. L. T. O. N. 295, 37 Can. L. J. 421; Hastings Exp. Co. v. Chicago (1907) 135 Ill. App. 268.

So, too, an express company may be a common carrier although it does not solicit business or have stands for its wagons upon the streets of the municipality, but makes special contracts for the carriage of all the goods it hauls, and does not carry for all who apply, or at the rates fixed by ordinance. Hastings Exp. Co. v. Chicago (Ill.) supra.

IX. Discrimination as to goods.

It is not necessary that the carrier carry all kinds of goods; if he profess to carry only a certain kind, this does not take from him his status as a common carrier; but, of course, before he can be held liable as such, the goods in question must be such as he professes to carry. Campbell v. A. B. C. Storage & Van Co. (1915) 187 Mo. App. 565, 174 S. W. 140.

And in Parmelee v. Lowitz (1874)

74 Ill. 116, 24 Am. Rep. 276, an action to recover the value of articles in a trunk delivered by the appellee to appellant to be carried for him from the depot to appellee's residence, in affirming a judgment in the court below in favor of appellee, the court held that appellant was a common carrier and as such was bound to carry the trunk and its contents safely, though it was not such as was usually carried by him as baggage; there being no fraud or deception practised by the appellee as to the contents of the trunk, the appellant not inquiring as to said contents, and the appellee not being under a special obligation to make the contents known.

To charge one as carrier for loss of goods which are of considerable bulk and weight, there must be shown either a special contract and undertaking to carry the particular goods, or a general usage to carry that kind of goods. Tunnel v. Pettijohn (1886) 2 Harr. (Del.) 48.

X. Discrimination as to patrons,

The mere fact that one holding himself out as a common carrier does discriminate between patrons, accepting some and rejecting others, does not absolve him from liability as a common carrier for the loss of goods which he undertakes to carry. Lloyd v. Haugh & K. Storage & Transfer Co. (1909) 223 Pa. 148, 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 188, 72 Atl. 516. The court said that to claim that one is not a common carrier because he persistently disregards the duty to carry for all who may apply, and arbitrarily chooses whom he will serve, notwithstanding he has invited the public generally to apply, is to make a public duty determinable by the pleasure of the individual, and not by principle or law.

So, too, that one carrying on the business of cartage is a private carrier is not shown by proof that in some instances he refused to undertake the work of a carrier for those applying, where he did so only where he had too many engagements, or his men or horses were worn out or overworked by the engagements he had.

hold goods of another is not a common carrier, where he does not hold himself out to the public as such. O'Rourke v. Bates (1911) 73 Misc. 414, 133 N. Y. Supp. 392.

And a furniture mover who was admittedly not a common carrier, who did not hold himself out as ready to carry for anyone who should apply, but, before carrying, requested to inspect the furniture and make a special contract as to its carriage, was held in Watkins v. Cottell [1916] 1 K. B. (Eng.) 10, 85 L. J. K. B. N. S. 287, 114 L. T. N. S. 333, 32 Times L. R. 91, 60 Sol. Jo. 404, not thereby to take upon himself the liability of a common carrier.

A storage and moving company, in agreeing for a stipulated consideration well and safely to remove household effects from point to point in a city, is a bailee for hire, and does not by such contract assume the liability of a common carrier. Jaminet v. American Storage & Moving Co. (1904) 109 Mo. App. 257, 84 S. W. 128.

And in Thompson v. New York Storage Co. (1902) 97 Mo. App. 135, 70 S. W. 938, it was held that in contracting to haul two loads of household goods from one dwelling to another for a sum in excess of the usual charge on account of overloading the vans, the corporation, engaged in storing and moving goods for hire, did not become a common carrier so as to entitle it to a carrier's lien on the goods for its charge. The court said that, while the testimony was meager, it thought that defendant was a private carrier or bailee for hire, and was not bound to serve everyone without discrimination.

A town cartman who lets carts by the day or job is not a common carrier. Brind v. Dale (1837) 8 Car. & P. (Eng.) 207, 2 Moody & R. 80.

XII. Common carrier within particular statute or ordinance.

Those engaged in the business of draymen or truckmen for the transportation of goods and merchandise within a city are common carriers, and so subject to reasonable public regulations. Lawson v. Judge of Re- corder's Ct. (Larson v. Connolly) (1913) 175 Mich. 375, 45 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1152, 141 N. W. 623.

In Neal v. Deans (1913) 14 Ga. App. 100, 80 S. E. 293, one who was a regular drayman was held to be a common carrier, and as such liable for injury to a piano that he contracted to carry, under a Code provision that one who pursues the business constantly or continually for any period of time, or any distance, of transportation, is a common carrier, and, as such, bound to use extraordinary diligence.

One licensed under a municipal ordinance regulating the fees of expressmen, and requiring them to serve the first who may apply to them, who holds himself out as willing to carry for anyone who may employ him, is a common carrier. Culver v. Lester (1901) 21 Can. L. T. O. N. 295, 37 Can. L. J. 421.

Transfer companies are common carriers within the constitutional provision prohibiting a common carrier from acquiring or operating by purchase, leave, or otherwise, any parallel line or competing business. Fields v. Holland (1914) 158 Ky. 544, L.R.A. 1915C, 365, 165 S. W. 699.

One who holds himself out to the public as ready to undertake for hire or reward to transport household goods from place to place is a common carrier, and entitled as such to a lien on goods for his charges, and so is not guilty of larceny by bailee in retaining them for that purpose. Com. v. Shepherd (1916) 62 Pa. Super. Ct. 102.

But a local storage or express and baggage transfer line is not a common carrier within the meaning of § 2, subdivision 9, of the New York Public Service Consolidation Law, so as to prevent its being the agent, with authority to stipulate for the usual terms of transportation, of one who orders it to take certain trunks to a railroad station and express them to certain points. Walker v. Taylor, (1919) 186 App. Div. 544, 174 N. Y. Supp. 520.

And in Chicago v. Mayer (1919) 290 Ill. 142, 124 N. E. 842, it was held that one engaged in the moving and express business in a city was not a common "carrier" within the meaning of the Public Utility Act which provided that "the term 'common carrier' when used in this act includes all . . . express companies . . . and every corporation, company, association, joint stock company or association, firm, partnership or individual, their lessees, trustees or receivers appointed by any court whatsoever owning, operating or managing any such agency for public use in the transportation of persons or property within the state," as it is evident from the statute that the legislature intended only to put within the jurisdiction of the public utility commission companies organized to carry on a large and extensive business as common carriers, and so it was subject to an ordinance regulating moving operations and the rates to be charged therefor.

See also cases under III.

XIII. Cartmen, draymen, and truckmen.

Cartmen or truckmen employed to carry goods from one part of a city to another are to be regarded as common carriers if they undertake to carry goods for hire for the public generally and as a common employment in the city. Hinchliffe v. Wenig Teaming Co. (1916) 274 Ill. 417, 113 N. E. 707.

And see W. N. STEVENSON & Co. v. HARTMAN (reported herewith) ante, 1314, which held to be a common carrier, a duly licensed cartman who had a regular stand upon a public street to accept such business as might offer, although the bulk of his business came from a certain class of merchants in the neighborhood of his stand.

And see supra, under VII., Campbell v. A. B. C. Storage & Van Co. (1915) 187 Mo. App. 565, 174 S. W. 140. Also, supra, under VIII., Culver v. Lester (1901) 21 Can. L. T. O. N. 295, 37 Can. L. J. 421, and Hasting Exp. Co. v. Chicago (1907) 135 Ill. App. 268. See also cases cited supra under XI.

But in Brind v. Dale (1837) 8 Car. & P. (Eng.) 207, 2 Moody & R. 80, Lord Abinger, at nisi prius, expressed the opinion that a town cartman who had carts for hire, and who let them out by the hour, day, or job, would not become a carrier.

And see supra, II., Faucher v. Wilson (1895) 68 N. H. 338, 39 L.R.A. 431, 38 Atl. 1002. Also supra, under III., see Chicago v. A. M. Forbes Cartage Co. (1901) 1 Ill. C. C. 473, and McCauley v. State (1909) 83 Neb. 431, 119 N. W. 675. Also supra, under IX., see Tunnel v. Pettijohn (1836) 2 Harr. (Del.) 48. Also supra, under X., see Wolf Thread Co. v. Rosenbusch. (1920) 180 N. Y. Supp. 94, and Belfast Rope-work Co. v. Buskell [1918] 1 K. B. (Eng.) 210, 8 B. R. C. 783, 118 L. T. N. S. 310, 34 Times L. R. 156, 87 L. J. K. B. N. S. 740, 23 Com. Cas. 162.

A drayman employed by one to transfer household goods to a freight station is a common carrier. Benson v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. (1909) 35 Utah, 241, 136 Am. St. Rep. 1052, 99 Pac. 1072, 19 Ann. Cas. 803.

So, too, persons who engage in the business of transporting goods from place to place in a city in drays or transfer wagons may be common carriers. Arkadelphia Mill. Co. v. Smoker Merchandise Co. (1911) 100 Ark. 37, 139 S. W. 680.

And in Gisbourn v. Hurst (1710) 1 Salk. 249, 91 Eng. Reprint, 220, it was held that one who undertook to carry in his wagon for hire the goods of all persons, indifferently, was a common carrier, and so the goods were privileged from distress for rent due by the owner of the wagon.

A public truckman engaged in the business of transporting for hire the goods of such as choose to employ him is a common carrier, and as such liable for loss of goods delivered him for transportation. Heyman v. Stryker (1909) 116 N. Y. Supp. 638.

So, too, one keeping a large number of horses and trucks, and advertising himself as a general truckman whose specialty is the moving of heavy machinery, is a common carrier. Jackson Architectural Iron Works v. Hurlbut (1899) 158 N. Y. 34, 70 Am. St. Rep. 432, 52 N. E. 665. The court said: "Truckmen, wagoners, cartmen, and porters who undertake to carry goods for hire as a common employment in a city . . . are common carriers. It is not necessary that the exclusive business of the parties shall be carrying, . . . but the circumstance that the defendants had no regular tariff of charges for their work, but that a special price was fixed by agreement, does not change the relation. The necessity for a different charge in each case arises, of course, out of the difference in labor in handling articles of great bulk. The charge in each case may be proportioned to the risk assumed, and commensurate with the carrier's responsibility as such. A common carrier is one who, by virtue of his calling, undertakes, for compensation, to transport personal property from one place to another for all such as may choose to employ him; and everyone who undertakes to carry for compensation the goods of all persons, indifferently, is, as to liability, to be deemed a common carrier."

One doing business as a "transfer company," with a large number of horses and vehicles, who transports freight and packages from point to point in a city for all who may choose to employ and pay him therefor, is a common carrier. Caye v. Poole (1900) 108 Ky. 124, 49 L.R.A. 251, 94 Am. St. Rep. 348, 55 S. W. 887. And see Johnson Exp. Co. v. Chicago (1907) 136 Ill. App. 368, supra, VI.

Also in Arkadelphia Mill. Co. v. Smoker Merchandise Co. (1911) 100 Ark. 37, 139 S. W. 680, a transfer company was held to be a common carrier, and so liable as such for loss by fire of goods in its possession, where shown to have been engaged in the carriage business as an habitual employment, and held itself out to the public to transfer goods from place to place indiscriminately for hire, and was under obligation to carry goods for all who chose to employ it as a carrier.

A driver of a slide with oxen, who made a business of transporting for hire from anyone who applied to him, was held in Robertson v. Kennedy (1834) 2 Dana (Ky.) 431, 26 Am. Dec. 466, to be a common carrier, and liable as such for loss of goods.

XIV. Storage and moving companies; warehousemen.

A company engaged in the moving and storage of goods for the public at large is a common carrier. Gates v. Bekins (1906) 44 Wash. 422, 87 Pac. 505.

A storage and moving company that holds itself out as engaged in the general business of moving for all who choose to employ it is, as to that part of its business, a common carrier, and as such liable for loss due to the van becoming on fire while goods are being transported. Collier v. Langan & T. Storage & Moving Co. (1910) 147 Mo. App. 700, 127 S. W. 435. The court distinguished Thompson v. New York Storage Co. (1902) 97 Mo. App. 135, 70 S. W. 938, as a decision based on the particular facts in that case, and also distinguished Jaminet v. American Storage & Moving Co. (1904) 109 Mo. App. 257, 84 S. W. 128, as a case of the construction of a specific contract, the decision being based on a ground other than what constitutes a common carrier.

And see supra, X., Lloyd v. Haugh & K. Storage & Transfer Co. (1909) 223 Pa. 148, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 188, 72 Atl. 516.

A warehouseman who, upon receiving payment of his storage charges, agrees to deliver to the owner stored goods by a specified hour, thereby becomes a common carrier, and is liable as such if the goods are destroyed by fire before the arrival of the hour fixed for delivery. Snelling v. Yetter (1898) 25 App. Div. 590, 49 N. Y. Supp. 917, appeal dismissed in (1900) 163 N. Y. 601, 57 N. E. 1124.

But it was held in Armfield v. Humphrey (1882) 12 Ill. App. 90, that a warehouseman does not become a common carrier by merely moving as an incident of storage, household goods from a dwelling to its warehouse.

XV. Transferrers of baggage.

A city expressman who makes it a business to solicit from the public the carriage of trunks and packages from place to place for hire is, to all intents and purposes, a common carrier. Richards v. Westcott (1858) 2 Bosw.

United States to the Federal courts.

Knickerbocker Ice Co. v. Stewart, 253 U. S. 149, 64 L. ed. 834, 11 A.L.R. 1145, 40 Sup. Ct. Rep. 438; Southern P. Co. v. Jensen, 244 U. S. 205, 61 L. ed. 1086, L.R.A.1918C, 451, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 524, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 900, 14 N. C. C. A. 596; The C. Vanderbilt, 86 Fed. 785; The Seguranca, 58 Fed. 908; The Gilbert Knapp, 37 Fed. 209; Roberts v. The Windermere, 2 Fed. 722.

The hydro-aeroplane, when afloat, navigating the waters, is a vessel, and is within the admiralty jurisdiction.

28 Harvard L. Rev. p. 200; 3 California L. Rev. 143; Charles Barnes Co. v. One Dredge Boat, 169 Fed. 895.

Mr. E. C. Aiken, with Mr. Charles D. Newton, Attorney General, for respondent:

The state industrial commission had jurisdiction, and was not ousted therefrom by the jurisdiction of the Federal courts.

Southern P. Co. v. Jensen, 244 U. S. 205, 61 L. ed. 1086, L.R.A.1918C, 451, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 524, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 900, 14 N. C. C. A. 596; The Crawford Bros. 215 Fed. 269; The Big Jim, 61 Fed. 503; The Osceola, 189 U. S. 153, 47 L. ed. 760, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 483; Chelentis v. Luckenbach S. S. Co. 247 U. S. 372, 62 L. ed. 1171, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 501, 19 N. C. C. A. 309; Richardson v. Harmon, 222 U. S. 96, 56 L. ed. 110, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 27.

Cardozo, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Claimant was employed in the care and management of a hydro-aeroplane which was moored in navigable waters at Gravesend bay, Brooklyn. The plane traveled between Brooklyn, New York, and Miami, Florida. While moored in these navigable waters, it began to drag anchor and drift toward the beach, where it was in danger of being wrecked. Claimant waded into the water to turn the plane about, and was struck by the propeller. The question to be determined is whether he was injured by a vessel. If he was, the jurisdiction of the admiralty excludes the jurisdiction of the commission. Knickerbocker Ice Co. v. Stewart, 253 U. S. 149, 64 L. ed. 834, 11 A.L.R. 1145, 40 Sup. Ct. Rep. 438. If he was not, employment and injury suffice to justify an award. The latest of man's devices for locomotion has invaded the navigable waters, the most ancient of his highways. Riding at anchor is a new craft which would have mystified the Lord High Admiral in the days when he was competing for jurisdiction with Coke and the courts of common law. 1 Holdsworth, History of Eng. Law, 321, 322; Mears, Admiralty Jurisdiction; 2 Anglo-American Legal Essays, 354.

We think the craft, though new, is subject, while afloat, to the tribunals of the sea. Vessels in navigable waters are within the jurisdiction of the admiralty. Any structure used, or capable of being used, for transportation upon water, is a vessel. Comp. Stat. title 1, chap. 1, § 3, 9 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 391; Charles Barnes Co. v. One Dredge Boat (D. C.) 169 Fed. 895. All that remains is to ascertain the uses and capacities of the structure to be classified. The conclusion might be more dubious if the word "vessel" had been interpreted grudgingly and narrowly. The fact is that it has been interpreted liberally and broadly. It includes a canal boat drawn by horses (The Robert W. Parsons (Perry v. Haines), 191 U. S. 17, 30, 48 L. ed. 73, 78, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 87); a bath-house upon floats (The Public Bath [D. C.] 61 Fed. 692); a raft (The Mary [D. C.] 123 Fed. 609); a scow (The Sunbeam, 115 C. C. A. 370, 195 Fed. 468; George Leary Constr. Co. v. Matson [C. C. A.] 272 Fed. 461); a dredge (Charles Barnes Co. v. One Dredge Boat, supra; Saylor v. Taylor, 23 C. C. A. 343, 42 U. S. App. 206, 77 Fed. 476; Ellis v. United States, 206 U. S. 246, 259, 51 L. ed. 1047, 1054, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 600, 11 Ann. Cas. 589); a temporarily sunken drill boat (Eastern S. S. Corp. v. Great Lakes Dredge & Dock Co. 168 C. C. A. 13, 256 Fed. 497); anything upon the water where movement is predominant rather than fixity or permanence (Cope v. Vallette Dry Dock Co. 119 U. S. 625, mischief is traceable to the function that is auxiliary and secondary. Collision does not cease to be collision and a peril of the sea because the structure is amphibious. We cannot even say that the chance that the peril will be encountered is so remote as to be negligible. The records of the Navy Department show that there have been times, in transatlantic flights, when planes, abandoning the air, moved for days upon the water. The cause might be lack of fuel or other disability. Even in the absence of such causes, there must always, for at least some space, be movement upon the water before there is ascent into the air. Jurisdiction cannot vary as the distance is short or longer. That would require us to say that the plane, by keeping to the water, could transform itself into a vessel, but would leave us helpless to define the point at which transformation would be suffered. From such embarrassments of definition there is but one avenue of escape. It is found in the conclusion that the plane is a vessel, and hence within the jurisdiction of the admiralty, when it is in fulfilment of its functions as a traveler through water, and has put aside its functions and capacities as a traveler through air.

30 L. ed. 501, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 336; Berton v. Tietjen & L. Dry Dock Co. [D. C.] 219 Fed. 763, 774; The Mac, L. R. 7 Prob. Div. 126, 51 L. J. Prob. N. S. 81, 46 L. T. N. S. 907, 5 Asp. Mar. L. Cas. 555; The Mudlark, L. R. [1911] Prob. 116, 80 L. J. Prob. N. S. 117, 27 Times L. R. 385; The Whitton, L. R. [1896] Prob. 42, 57, 65 L. J. Prob. N. S. 17, 73 L. T. N. S. 698, 44 Week. Rep. 263, 8 Asp. Mar. L. Cas. 110, affirmed in [1897; H. L.] A. C. 337, 66 L. J. Prob. N. S. 99, 76 L. T. N. S. 663). A hydro-aeroplane, while in the air, is not subject to the admiralty (The Crawford Bros. [D. C.] 215 Fed. 269), or so, at least, we may assume, because it is not then in navigable waters, and navigability is the test of admiralty jurisdiction. A hydro-aeroplane, while afloat upon waters capable of navigation, is subject to the admiralty, because location and function stamp it as a means of water transportation. Such a plane is, indeed, two things—a sea plane and an aeroplane. To the extent that it is the latter, it is not a vessel, for the medium through which it travels is the air. The Crawford Bros. supra. To the extent that it is the former, it is a vessel, for the medium through which it travels is the water. If a sea plane, incapable of flight, breaks its moorings and causes injury to man or ship, there will be a remedy against the offending res. If, moving upon the water, it becomes disabled, and is rescued on the high seas by a ship, it will be subject to a lien for salvage. We think the jurisdiction of the admiralty is not less where the structure found afloat is sea plane and aeroplane combined. It is true that the primary function is then movement in the air, and that the function of movement in the water is auxiliary and secondary. That is, indeed, a reason why the jurisdiction of the admiralty should be excluded when the activities proper to the primary function are the occasion of the mischief. It is no reason for the exclusion of jurisdiction when the

Workmen's compensation —injury by hydro-aeroplane.

The conclusion to which we are thus led is in accordance with the practice of the government, so far as practice has developed. The Treasury Department of the United States requires sea planes or hydro-planes to be registered as vessels. The same department has held that in navigating the water they are subject to the rules of the road. It has also held them to be vessels within the meaning of the Tariff Law (Act Oct. 3, 1913, § 4-J, subds. 5 and 6 [U. S. Comp. Stat. §§ 5309, 5310, 2 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 885]; Treasury Decision No. 36,156). Rulings not dissimilar have been made by the Department of Commerce. A libel against a hydro-aeroplane has been filed in the United States district court for the southern district of New York, and process issued thereon. American Bar Asso. 1921, Report of the Special Committee on the Law of Aviation, pp. 7, 24.

The order of the Appellate Division and the award of the Commission should be reversed, and the claim dismissed, with costs against the Industrial Commission in the Appellate Division and in this court.

Hiscock, Ch. J., and Hogan, Pound, McLaughlin, Crane, and Andrews, JJ., concur.

ANNOTATION.

Jurisdiction of admiralty over aircraft, or combined air and water craft.

The reported case (REINHARDT v. NEWPORT FLYING SERVICE CORP. ante, 1324) holds that an injury by a hydro-aeroplane while it was moored in navigable waters was by a vessel within the admiralty jurisdiction, and that, therefore, the injury could not be compensated for under a state workmen's compensation act. (See, in that connection, annotation in 11 A.L.R. 1155, and the annotation to Berry v. M. F. Donovan & Sons, — A.L.R. —.) The court calls attention to the fact that the government departments require sea planes or hydro-aeroplanes to be registered as vessels, and hold that in navigating the water they are subject to the rules of the road. It was also stated that a hydro-aeroplane is two things — a sea plane, as which it is the subject of admiralty jurisdiction, and an aeroplane, as which it does not come within such jurisdiction, since it is not a vessel. This appears to be the first case which has considered the question of the jurisdiction of admiralty over a combined air and water craft. One case has been disclosed, however, which has passed upon the question as to an aircraft.

In the case just referred to (The Crawford Bros. (1914) 215 Fed. 269) it was decided that admiralty had no jurisdiction of a libel in rem for repairs to an aeroplane. The court here said: "This is a libel in rem for repairs to an aeroplane. The matter is before the court upon exceptions by an intervening libellant, asserting a salvage claim for having salvaged the aeroplane after it had fallen into the waters of Commencement bay,—the same being navigable waters of Puget Sound,—while on a flight over said bay. The intervening libellant expressly avers that he does not wish to enforce his maritime lien for salvage. The exception is that the court has no jurisdiction in the matter. It is conceded, by counsel for libellant, that there is no precedent for this proceeding, but it is contended that, as jurisdiction in admiralty has, in the past, been extended to meet the needs of commerce and the questions arising therefrom, in the face of this new need, the jurisdiction should grapple with the questions arising out of navigation of the air, and not await legislative action. Familiar instances of the growth or evolution of the admiralty jurisdiction are pointed out: The adoption of navigability as the test of jurisdiction, rather than confining it to the ebb and flow of the tide; its extension to include steam vessels upon their advent, holding floating elevators, dry docks, rafts, submarine vessels subject to the jurisdiction; the giving of a maritime lien for personal injuries, as well as one to the stevedore. The progress thus shown, it is asserted, warrants the court in assuming jurisdiction of this cause. In 1909 an International Juridic Committee on Aviation was organized at Paris. The committee on January 16, 1910, decided upon the outline of a legal Code of the Air, which has since been in course of elaboration, and progress upon which is regularly reported in the committee's review. The committee itself consists of jurists, lawyers, and legal students in France and French colonies, several of the states of

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

DAVID JONES, Appt.,
v.
CONTINENTAL CASUALTY COMPANY.

Iowa Supreme Court — September 29, 1920.

(— Iowa, —, 179 N. W. 203.)

Insurance — loss of foot — meaning of “at ankle.”

1. Amputation of the foot immediately in front of the ankle joint and heel, between the cuneiform and scaphoid, and through the cuboid bones, is within an accident policy insuring against severance of the foot at or above the ankle.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1339.]

— construction of policy.

2. A strained or unreasonable construction of the language of an insurance policy should not be indulged, where there is no real ambiguity.

[See 14 R. C. L. 931, 932.]

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Lee County (Hamilton, J.) in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on an accident insurance policy. Reversed.

Statement by Preston, J.:

Action at law to recover upon an accident insurance policy. Trial to a jury. At the close of plaintiff's evidence, the trial court sustained defendant's motion for a directed verdict in his favor. Plaintiff appeals.

Mr. E. C. Weber, for appellant:

The policy of insurance should be most favorably construed in favor of the plaintiff.

Meyer v. Fidelity & C. Co. 96 Iowa, 378, 59 Am. St. Rep. 374, 65 N. W. 328; Kirkpatrick v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 141 Iowa, 74, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1255, 117 N. W. 1111; Simpkins v. Hawkeye Commercial Men's Asso. 148 Iowa, 551, 126 N. W. 192.

An insurance policy is to be interpreted according to its true character and purpose, and in the sense in which the insured had reason to suppose it was understood.

Sneck v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 88 Hun, 94, 34 N. Y. Supp. 545; Lord v. American Mut. Acci. Asso. 89 Wis. 19, 26 L.R.A. 741, 46 Am. St. Rep. 815, 61 N. W. 293.

Severance “at or above the ankle” should be construed according to the ordinary and fair meaning of the words used, and not in an anatomical or technical sense.

Sheanon v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. 18 A.L.R.—84.

77 Wis. 618, 9 L.R.A. 685, 20 Am. St. Rep. 151, 46 N. W. 799; 1 C. J. § 8, p. 417.

The provision in the policy, “loss, as used with reference to hand or foot, means complete severance at or above the wrist or ankle,” is reasonably susceptible to two constructions, and the one most favorable to the insured should be adopted.

Peterson v. Modern Brotherhood, 125 Iowa, 563, 67 L.R.A. 631, 101 N. W. 289; Young v. Travelers Ins. Co. 80 Me. 244, 13 Atl. 896.

It was a question for the jury whether the amputation (or severance) was at or above the ankle.

Moore v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 75 Or. 47, L.R.A.1915D, 264, 146 Pac. 151, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 1005; 1 C. J. 467; Beber v. Brotherhood of R. Trainmen, 75 Neb. 183, 121 Am. St. Rep. 782, 106 N. W. 168; Sheanon v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. supra.

Messrs. George R. Sanderson, J. M. C. Hamilton, Manton Maverick, and M. P. Cornelius, for appellee:

Where a policy of accident insurance promises payment for the loss of either foot, by complete severance at or above the ankle, there can be no recovery for loss of a foot where it appears through undisputed evidence that a substantial portion of the foot remains.

Wiest v. United States Health & men v. Walsh, 89 Ohio St. 15, 103 N. E. 759; Continental-Casualty Co. v. Bows, 72 Fla. 17, 72 So. 278; Hardin v. Continental Casualty Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 195 S. W. 653; Peterson v. Modern Brotherhood, 125 Iowa, 562, 67 L.R.A. 631, 101 N. W. 289; Bingham v. Clubb, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 312, 95 S. W. 675.

Where the only promise to pay for the loss of a foot by a policy of accident insurance is a promise to pay for the loss of the foot by complete severance at or above the ankle, such a provision is valid. Where it is proved that a substantial portion of the foot below the ankle remains, the insured cannot recover and there is no occasion for the application of the doctrine of strict construction.

Mady v. Switchmen's Union, 116 Minn. 147, 133 N. W. 472; Stoner v. Yeomen of America, 160 Ill. App. 432; Newman v. Standard Acci. Ins. Co. 192 Mo. App. 159, 177 S. W. 803; Metropolitan Casualty Ins. Co. v. Shelby, 116 Miss. 278, 76 So. 839.

Before a court can consider the applicability of the doctrine of strict construction, it must first be sure that there is a real ambiguity as to the intention of the contracting parties. If a consideration of the entire instrument indicates that there is no ambiguity, then no question of construction can arise. Courts should not and will not conjure up a fanciful uncertainty by torturing the plain words of a policy, and, having by this means evolved an imaginary ambiguity, construe the same against the insurance company.

Mitchell v. German Commercial Acci. Co. 179 Mo. App. 1, 161 S. W. 362; McKinney v. General Acci. F. & L. Assur. Co. 128 C. C. A. 449, 211 Fed. 951; Blume v. Pittsburgh Life & T. Co. 183 Ill. App. 295; John Church Co. v. Aetna Indemnity Co. 13 Ga. App. 826, 80 S. E. 1093; Leshner v. United States Fidelity & G. Co. 239 Ill. 502, 88 N. E. 208; Imperial F. Ins. Co. v. Coos County, 151 U. S. 452, 38 L. ed. 231, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 379; Standard Life & Acci. Ins. Co. v. McNulty, 85 C. C. A. 22, 157 Fed. 224; Delaware Ins. Co. v. Greer, 61 L.R.A. 137, 57 C. C. A. 188, 120 Fed. 916; Perry v. Provident L. Ins. & Invest. Co. 99 Mass. 162; Perry v. Standard Life & Acci. Ins. Co. 59 Tex. Civ. App. 50, 125 S. W. 374; Continental Casualty Co. v. Ogburn, 175

101 Tex. 102, 105 S. W. 35.

While it is true that a policy of insurance should be construed favorably to the insured in cases of doubt or ambiguity, this rule ought not to be permitted to have the effect to make a plain agreement ambiguous, and then to interpret it in favor of the insured.

Tigg v. Register Life & Annuity Ins. Co. 152 Iowa, 723, 133 N. W. 322; Currie v. Continental Casualty Co. 147 Iowa, 281, 140 Am. St. Rep. 300, 126 N. W. 164; Peterson v. Modern Brotherhood, 125 Iowa, 562, 67 L.R.A. 631, 101 N. W. 289; Hall v. Hardaker, 61 Fla. 267, 55 So. 977; Southern Home Ins. Co. v. Putnal, 57 Fla. 199, 49 So. 922.

Preston, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff's foot was accidentally crushed under a car wheel. He had an accident policy in defendant company. Amputation was necessary, and the severance was at the point indicated by the line in the cut here shown:

EXHIBIT 6

By the policy defendant promised to pay plaintiff "indemnity for loss of life, limb, limbs, sight, or time, resulting from a personal bodily injury, all in the manner and to the extent hereinafter provided. . . . For loss of either foot, the principal sum of $1,000." A later provision in the policy reads: "'Loss,' above used with reference to hand or foot, means complete severance at or above the wrist or ankle." The petition is in two counts. In the first plaintiff claimed that he received an injury to his foot to the extent that amputation was necessary, and that he lost the use of his foot. In the second count he claimed he received an injury to his foot, and that it was amputated and severed at the ankle, and that he lost the use of said foot. He asks judgment on both counts in the total sum of $1,000. The answer is in general denial.

Plaintiff testified that he could bear his weight on this leg, but cannot use it; it gets weak and turns over; cannot get around without a crutch, only a few steps. The surgeon who made the amputation testified that the operation is what is called the "Forbes operation;" that means the line of separation between the cuneiform and scaphoid, and through the cuboid.

"Cuboid bone was severed. The scaphoid is located back towards the heel, and the cuneiform bones are in front, or towards the toes. There are three cuneiform bones. The bones right above the line and on the side of the great toe where it was amputated is the scaphoid, and the cuboid is on the side of the little toe. Half of that remains and half was removed. The tarsus bones are all the bones of the foot back of the metatarsus, and contain what is known as the talus, or astragalus; the talus, or astragalus, being known as one of the tarsal bones. The amputation of Mr. Jones's foot was probably an inch from the talus or astragalus. In my opinion, for the purpose of having an artificial foot for Mr. Jones, it would have been better if the amputation would have been made above what is commonly known as the 'ankle joint.' Because of the amputation as made, the function of the foot has been diminished."

The amputation of the foot has changed the relation of the bones. One half of the arch is removed, and the portion of the arch remaining must tip a little so the heel hits back a little as he puts his weight on it. In my opinion, he could walk without a crutch or cane. The calcaneum, or the os calcis, is one of the tarsal bones, and the astragalus rests upon it. Articulation of the astragalus with the leg bone is what forms the ankle joint.

Q. If there is a tipping back and forth of the heel bone, would it not affect the astragalus?

A. The weight of the body might fall on a slightly different surface.

Q. That would not be the natural condition of the astragalus?

A. No, sir.

The cuboid attaches to the os calcis and the forepart of the two small metatarsals; the astragalus, os calcis, scaphoid, cuneiform, and cuboid bones are known as the "tarsal bones." The foot consists of twenty-six bones; seven in the tarsus, called the "astragalus," the os calcis, the scaphoid, the cuboid, and three cuneiform bones, and there are five metatarsals and fourteen phalanges.

The motion to direct a verdict was on these grounds:

"(1) Because the plaintiff's petition states no cause of action.

"(2) Because the plaintiff has failed to prove facts entitling him to recover in this action.

"(3) Because the policy of insurance upon which plaintiff brings this action contains the provision that "loss," as above used with reference to hand or foot, means complete severance at or above the wrist or ankle;" and the plaintiff has failed to allege or prove a complete severance of his foot at or above the ankle.

"(4) Because the evidence shows that the severance or amputation was made below the ankle.

"(5) Because the evidence shows that a substantial portion of plaintiff's left foot still remains attached to plaintiff's body."

1. It may be conceded at the outset that the provision in the policy in question is valid, and that the court will not make a contract for the parties; and further, that, if the language employed is plain and unambiguous, the language used insurance—construction of policy. construction of the language used, where there is no real ambiguity, should not be indulged. On the other hand, it is conceded by counsel for either party that if the policy is reasonably susceptible of two constructions, and there is doubt as to the meaning, and therefore an ambiguity, the same is to be construed strictly against the company. These propositions are so well settled that we shall not enter into any extended discussion of the cases, but simply cite some of them. On the several propositions before set out appellee cites the following: Mitchell v. German Commercial Acci. Co. (1913) 179 Mo. App. 1, 161 S. W. 362; McKinney v. General Acci. F. & L. Assur. Co. (1914) 128 C. C. A. 449, 211 Fed. 951; Blume v. Pittsburgh Life & T. Co. (1913) 183 Ill. App. 295; John Church Co. v. Aetna Indemnity Co. (1913) 13 Ga. App. 826, 80 S. E. 1093; Leshner v. United States Fidelity & G. Co. (1909) 239 Ill. 502, 88 N. E. 208; Imperial F. Ins. Co. v. Coos County (1894) 151 U. S. 452, 38 L. ed. 231, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 379; Standard Life & Acci. Ins. Co. v. McNulty (1907) 85 C. C. A. 22, 157 Fed. 224; Delaware Ins. Co. v. Greer (1903) 61 L.R.A. 137, 57 C. C. A. 188, 120 Fed. 916; Perry v. Provident Life Ins. & Invest Co. 99 Mass. 162; Perry v. Standard Life & Acci. Ins. Co. (1910) 59 Tex. Civ. App. 50, 125 S. W. 374; Continental Casualty Co. v. Ogburn (1912) 175 Ala. 357, 57 So. 852, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 377; Continental Casualty Co. v. Wade (1907) 101 Tex. 102, 105 S. W. 35; Hall v. Hardaker, 61 Fla. 267, 275, 55 So. 977; Southern Home Ins. Co. v. Putnal, 57 Fla. 199, 223, 49 So. 922; Tigg v. Register Life & Annuity Ins. Co. 152 Iowa, 723, 133 N. W. 322; Currie v. Continental Casualty Co. 147 Iowa, 281, 140 Am. St. Rep. 300, 126 N. W. 164, Peterson v.

It may be conceded, too, that the language used in the policy is a part of the promise, and that to authorize a recovery the loss must fall within the promise.

2. It is further contended by appellee, where a policy of accident insurance promises payment for the loss of either foot by complete severance at or above the ankle, there can be no recovery for loss of a foot where it appears, from the undisputed evidence, that a substantial portion of the foot remains. On this proposition they cite: Wiest v. United States Health & Acci. Ins. Co. 186 Mo. App. 22, 171 S. W. 570; Brotherhood of R. Trainmen v. Walsh, 89 Ohio St. 15, 103 N. E. 759; Continental Casualty Co. v. Bows, 72 Fla. 17, 72 So. 278; Hardin v. Continental Casualty Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 195 S. W. 653; Peterson v. Modern Brotherhood, 125 Iowa, 562, 67 L. R.A. 631, 101 N. W. 289; Bigham v. Clubb, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 312, 95 S. W. 675. Also the following cases to the same point, and to the further point that under such circumstances there is no occasion for the application of the doctrine of strict construction. Mady v. Switchmen's Union, 116 Minn. 147, 133 N. W. 472; Stoner v. Yeomen of America, 160 Ill. App. 432; Newman v. Standard Acci. Ins. Co. 192 Mo. App. 159, 177 S. W. 803; Metropolitan Casualty Ins. Co. v. Shelby 116 Miss. 278, 76 So. 839.

We may say in passing that it is possible, and some of the cases hold, that there may be a loss of a foot without any severance; that is, the loss of the use of the foot. But it may be conceded that under the policy in the instant case there must have been a severance. There was a severance. Under the terms of the policy such severance must have been at or above the ankle. We shall spend no time in discussing the question as to whether the severance in this case was above the ankle, because it is not necessary that there should be such severance in order to authorize a recovery. If there was a loss of the foot by a severance at the ankle, it is sufficient. Whether the severance was at the ankle we shall consider later. It should be borne in mind, however, that the promise in this policy is to pay for the loss of a foot, and the later provision in the policy defines, or attempts to define, the meaning of such term.

We shall notice some of appellee's cited cases, and those most strongly relied upon to sustain its contention. In the Wiest Case, supra, the policy provided for the payment of the principal sum for the loss of one hand, which was stipulated to mean loss by severance at or above the wrist joint. The plaintiff's injury necessitated amputation of the thumb and first three fingers, and a large portion of the palm, leaving only the little finger and a part of the palm supporting it. The little finger and the portion of the palm remaining were permanently paralyzed and of no use or service. Plaintiff lost the entire use of his hand as completely as if it had been severed at the wrist joint. The question was whether, plaintiff having suffered the total loss of the use of the hand, he was entitled to recover without proof of the actual, physical severance thereof at or above the wrist joint. The court said in part:

"But here the policy provides that the loss of a hand shall mean loss by severance at or above the wrist joint. Not only is it provided that the loss of such member shall be by physical severance thereof, but the extent of such loss is made exact and definite by locating the precise point at or above which such severance shall take place. . . .

"In the instant case, had the provision of the policy agreeing to indemnify plaintiff in the amount of the principal sum of the policy for the 'loss of one hand' stood entirely alone, and unaffected by any other provision thereof, beyond doubt plaintiff would have been entitled to recover, having lost the entire use of his hand. However, the very next paragraph of the policy provides, in unmistakable terms, what shall be meant by the 'loss of one hand,' to wit, the loss thereof by severance at or above the wrist joint. Plaintiff has not suffered a loss of his hand by severance at or above the wrist joint, and, if effect is to be given to the last-mentioned provision, plaintiff's case must fail.

"If any ambiguity or uncertainty of meaning could be said to inhere in the pertinent provisions of the policy, it would readily be resolved in favor of the insured and against the insurer. Such is the well-established and wholesome doctrine with respect to the construction of insurance contracts. . . .

"If it appears that the portions of the policy under consideration, when read and construed together, were at all ambiguous or of doubtful import, we should not hesitate in the least to 'blandly' resolve such ambiguity or doubt in favor of the insured. Indeed, the policy should, if possible, be construed so as to effectuate the insurance, and not to defeat it; for the indemnity is the very object and purpose of the contract, for which the insured has paid a consideration. See Stix v. Travelers Indemnity Co. 175 Mo. App. 171, 157 S. W. 870.

"But it appears that that defendant has chosen apt language to indicate that it does not agree to indemnify the insured for the loss of a hand, unless such loss shall consist in the actual physical severance of the hand at or above the wrist joint. It is by no means likely that the policyholder so understood, or that he would knowingly have accepted the policy with such restrictive limitations upon his right to recover the indemnity for the loss of a hand or foot; but we can find the intention of the parties only from the language employed in the contract, having regard to the rules of interpretation which may be applied to contracts of this character. We cannot disregard it altogether; for, however great may be our inclination or duty to protect a policyholder against intricate or obscure technical provisions designed for the avoidance of liability on the part of the insurer, we cannot make a contract for the parties. The stipulation in question, as we have said, follows immediately that portion of the policy providing for specific losses, in the same type in which the body of the policy is printed. Its meaning appears to be plain and unmistakable. It pointedly defines what shall constitute the 'loss of a hand.' "

It will be noticed that in that case the severance was to be at the joint. This, we think, fixes the point more definitely than would have been the case if it had been omitted. It should be said, however, that some, though not all, the definitions of "ankle," say it is the joint connecting the foot and the leg. This feature will be taken up later in the opinion. Though the court in that case "blandly," or, perhaps, strictly speaking, positively, states that the policy fixes the severance at the precise point at or above which the severance shall take place, we have grave doubt whether the use of the words "at the ankle" does fix an exact, definite, or precise point. It will be observed that in the Wiest Case the question of the meaning of the word "at," and whether it does fix a precise point, is not discussed, but only asserted. A careful reading of that case shows, we think, that the court was interpreting the contract more especially with reference to the question whether there was a loss of the hand without a severance, as distinguished from a loss with a severance.

In Brotherhood of R. Trainmen v. Walsh, 89 Ohio St. 15, 103 N. E. 759, the provision of the policy was for the severance of an entire hand at or above the wrist joint, etc. Plaintiff's thumb was amputated, permanently disabled from using the hand to perform any manual service. Construing the pleadings in that case, the court held that no severance was alleged, and the court held that there was no amputation or severance of an entire hand at or above the wrist joint, and that there was no ambiguity. The language of the policy in that case is more precise and definite than in the case at bar, in that the words "entire" and "joint" are used.

In the Bows Case, 72 Fla. 17, 72 So. 278, a case against this defendant and under a policy like the one now in controversy, where the policy provided for the loss of either hand by complete severance at or above the wrist, it was shown that the ends of the metacarpal bones were disjointed and separated, or, in a sense, severed from the carpals. This left the thumb sticking out so far that there was no place to get the muscles of the thumb attached to anything, and one bone of the wrist was removed so the thumb could be set further back to bring the muscles down, and thus get an attachment for the muscles, and give him some use of the thumb. The court, discussing the question whether there was a complete severance of plaintiff's hand at or above the wrist, held that there was not such a severance, and denied a recovery. The question was whether there had been a severance within the meaning of the policy. The opinion in that case cites the Wiest, Walsh, and other cases cited by appellee.

The Hardin Case, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 195 S. W. 653, was on a policy issued by this defendant, where the claim was for the loss of a hand by complete severance at or above the wrist. It was shown by the evidence: "That the appellant's hand was amputated, so that all the phalanges or finger bones were gone, except the proximal one half of the first phalange of the thumb; all of the fifth metacarpal bone is except the proximal heads of bone, and that there remain of the hand the proximal heads of the second, third, and fourth metacarpals, the proximal half of the first phalange of the thumb, all of the first metacarpal, and all of the rest of the bones of the hand. It was agreed upon the trial of the case between the parties that the human hand is composed of scaphoid, semilunar, cuneiform, pisiform, trapezium, trapezoides, os magnum, and the unciform bones and five metacarpal bones and fourteen phalanges."

The trial court found as a fact, from the evidence, that plaintiff's hand was not completely severed at the wrist in contemplation of the provision of the policy. The appellate court held that the finding had sufficient support in the evidence, and that the evidence shows that not all of the hand was severed, and that it does not show that the entire hand was severed at the wrist. The court interpolated the word "entire," which is not in the policy. No discussion of the meaning of the word "at."

Fuller v. Locomotive Engineers' Mut. Life & Acci. Ins. Asso. 122 Mich. 548, 48 L.R.A. 86, 80 Am. St. Rep. 598, 81 N. W. 326, is cited in the Bows Case and by appellee herein. In that case it was held substantially that the amputation of a person's foot so as to leave all of the heel, and substantially all of the hollow of the foot, and a part of the ball, does not give a right to the full amount of the insurance on the ground that the full use of the foot is lost, under a by-law of the association providing for full payment in case of "amputation of a limb (whole hand or foot)," as the word "whole" applies to the foot, as well as to the hand, and the injury insured against is not the loss of the use of a hand or foot, but the amputation of a limb that should include a whole hand or whole foot. More of the foot remained there than in the instant case. The pivot-struck to mean a whole foot as well as a whole hand. The foregoing cases are more nearly in point than some of the others cited, but for the reasons indicated they are not quite "gray horses" or "spotted mules" with the case at bar. The other cases will be referred to more briefly.

In the Mady Case the question was whether there was a total disability under a policy providing for a physical separation of the loss of four fingers of one hand, at or above the third joint, and so on, where, after the amputation, the entire first finger and the thumb remained attached to, and a part of the hand. It was held that the evidence showed a loss of but approximately 50 per cent in the usefulness of the index finger, and he was allowed only a part of the recovery instead of as for total disability.

In the Stoner Case, where it was provided for the loss of a hand by severance at or above the wrist, it was held that the loss of the use was not sufficient to establish liability.

The Bigham Case arose out of an election contest. The statute exempted those from payment of poll tax who have lost a hand or foot. The evidence showed that the party had lost three fingers and part of the forefinger, but had not lost the palm and thumb. The court said that the loss of the members is what constitutes the exemption, and not the maiming of them; that a man may lose the use of a limb and not lose the limb.

In the Newman Case the court said that the point of severance is stipulated in the contract, and must be enforced as made. The stipulation was for the loss of the thumb and index finger by severance at or above the metacarpophalangeal joints.

In the Shelby Case the loss of the use of a hand was not within the provision of the policy providing for severance at or above the wrist, since severance means the removal mough of the flesh of the hand was left to cover the bones of the wrist. A hardened callous, but no more than good surgery would require for protection of the bones of the wrist. The court said that substantially nothing remains of plaintiff's hand but a worse than useless fragment. The court held that the language used was reasonably susceptible of two interpretations, and that the doubt should be resolved in favor of the insured. The court said further: "Let us consider the relations of the parties and the object which plaintiff had in view when he took out this policy. He had a good hand, against losing the use of which he desired to insure. If he had been told the intent and meaning of the policy was such that, if, in case of a necessary amputation, the surgeon should leave some useless shred of his hand to be a source of annoyance and inconvenience, and thereby his policy would be practically worthless, does any sane person believe for a moment he would have taken out the policy? The substance of what he sought was insurance against the possible loss of his hand as a useful member of his body. Substantially he has lost his hand by removal at the wrist. In view of all the decisions, it is apparent that the words 'by removal at or above the wrist' were introduced as a safeguard against possible fraud, and to prevent a recovery in cases where there had been no substantial removal of the injured member; but here the hand, as a hand, is gone. Practically the plaintiff has no hand."

The court refers to the Sneek Case as sustaining its conclusions. In the Sneek Case the provision was against loss by severance of one entire hand. The court quotes from the Sneek Case as follows: "To require the insured to submit to a strictly literal interpretation of the contract prepared for him by the insurer, without regard to the purpose of the contract or the understanding thereof by the parties, would be to hold that only in case of the severance of the entire hand, in a most accurately anatomical or technical sense, could the insured recover under the clause of the policy. We do not believe that such a conclusion is required in the present case. The term 'entire hand' is to be taken in its general acceptance and ordinary meaning. In construing this contract the law does not require an injury which comes within a strictly accurate and technical definition of the words employed, but one which reasonably, fairly, and practically comes within the meaning of the terms employed in their general and usual meaning and acceptance. In a contract of insurance providing for indemnity for the loss of a limb, the compensation to be paid is not merely for the physical pain of its amputation, but principally for the deprivation of its use as a member of the body. It would seem to be an extremely narrow and technical construction of this contract to say that only a physical removal of every particle of that portion of the human anatomy known as the hand would entitle the insured to recover under the clause of the policy now under consideration. Is it not more reasonable and logical to conclude that, in the use of the language above referred to, the 'entire hand,' as a part of the human structure, is considered in connection with the use to which it is adapted, and the injury which the loss of such would entail? Is it not also fair to assume that this was regarded by the parties as the sense in which the contract was to be understood, and was one of the considerations which influenced the insured to enter into the contract?"

We think the Oregon Case is the better authority, and we are inclined to follow it. The Sheanon Case is not so nearly in point. The provision there provided indemnity for the loss of two entire feet. The court held that the loss of the use of the feet authorized a recovery, though there was no amputation.

There are some other considerations, however, which appear to us worthy of consideration, and seem not to have been considered in any of the cases, and that is the construction of the word "at" in the term "at or above the ankle," and what constitutes the ankle. One definition of ankle is: The joint which connects the foot with the leg; the tarsus. Webster's Dict. Another: Tarsus, the ankle; the bones or cartilages are part of the foot between the metatarsus and the leg, consisting, in man, of seven short bones. Webster's Dict.; Elements of Physiology, by R. T. Brown, M. D. Another: The bones of the tarsus, or the ankle, are seven in number. 1 Enc. Britannica, 9th ed. p. 830. Another: The ankle joint is formed by the tibia and fibula above and the astragalus below. 1 New International Enc. pp. 783, 784.

The joint which connects the foot with the leg; by extension, the slender part of the leg between the calf and the ankle joint. 8 New National Enc.

The joint connecting the foot at the leg; also the prominence on either side of it. (2) The part of the leg near the ankle joint. Standard Dict.

The joint by which the foot is united to the leg. 1 American Encyclopædic Dict.

The ankle is the joint which connects the foot with the leg; the slender part of the leg between the joint and the calf. New Eng. Dict. (Murray, Oxford).

The ankle is a perfect ginglymus or hinged joint. The bones which enter into its formation are: The lower extremity and internal malleolus of the tibia and the external malleolus of the fibula above, and the upper and lateral articular surfaces of the astragalus below. Human Anatomy, Morris, P. Blackeston's Son & Co. 266 (1898).

"Foot." (1) "The extremity of the leg below the ankle; the part of the leg which treads on the ground in standing or walking, and on which the body is supported. (2) The foot consists of many bones, viz., seven bones of the tarsus (q.

v.), five metatarsal bones, and the phalanges of the toes. Essentially they are homologous with those of the hand." 2 American Encyclopædic Dict.; 1 Hand Atlas of Human Anatomy, Spalteholz, 147-151.

Foot: "The segment of the limb of a vertebrate animal upon which the body rests in standing; the part below the ankle (pes) in man, or below the ankle or wrist (manus or pes) in other vertebrates. The human foot consists of three parts: The ankle or tarsus, the instep or metatarsus, and the toes or phalanges." Standard Dict. 20th Century ed.

These definitions of "ankle" differ. Some give it as the lower part of the leg. If this is accurate, why may it not be said to be the upper part of the foot? Some of the definitions say it is the joint. The joint, perhaps, would be more definite than the ankle, but even "joint" does not necessarily mean the exact point of articulation. Other definitions say it is the tarsus, or that part of the foot between the metatarsus and the leg, consisting of seven short bones. It was some of these seven bones that were severed, or divided, in plaintiff's foot. Can it be said that any of these definitions fix a definite or precise point, or place, when used in connection with the words "severance at the ankle?" It is very clear to us that none of them do so. Under these definitions, what is the ankle? What do the words "at the ankle" mean? Can it be said reasonably that it is plain that there is no doubt or ambiguity as to the precise point where the severance must be, so that the language used is not susceptible of two constructions? Clearly not. The language could have been made more precise and specific. For instance, it could have provided that the severance should be at the articulation of the lower end of the leg bones and the bone or bones upon which they rest, or in some such language. The use of the words "at or above" indicates quite clearly that no definite or precise point of severance was fixed. It could be at or above. From some of the definitions, the point of severance in this case—that is, the bones that are severed—are a part of the ankle. If such bones at the point of severance are a part of the ankle, then clearly the severance was at the ankle. If the bones severed are a part of the ankle, they are in the ankle, and if in the ankle, it is, of course, at the ankle. Furthermore, we find that the word “at” is a preposition of extremely various use. Being less restricted as to relative positions, it may, in different constructions, assume their office, and so become equivalent to “in,” according to the context, or “in or near,” “near,” “close to,” etc. 5 C. J. 1420, 1422.

We do not hesitate to say that, since the bones severed and the point of severance were a part of the ankle, the severance was at the ankle. Plaintiff was insured against the loss of his foot. He did lose his foot by severance, and the severance was at the ankle.

—loss of foot—meaning of “at ankle.”

As has been said, the use of the words “at or above” negated the thought of a precise point, and we find that the use of the word “at” usually negatives the idea that precision or an exact coincidence is intended, either of place or time. It is a word of great relativity and elasticity of meaning, and is somewhat indefinite, shaping itself easily to varying contexts and circumstances. It is not a word of precise and accurate meaning, or of clean, clear-cut definition, and it has been said that the connection furnishes the best definition. The word is not definitely locative when applied to the place or location of an object, and, so used, is less definite than “in” or “on,” having a much wider signification, and it may include all that “in” would include, and less than “in and near.” Its primary idea, as applied to place, is “nearness,” and it is commonly used as the equivalent of “near.” 5 C. J. 1422 to 1427. See also Old Ladies Home v. Hoffman, 117 Iowa, 716, 89 N. W. 1066.

Of course the word may, under some circumstances, indicate a definite point of time or place.

We reach the conclusion that under the evidence plaintiff lost his foot, and the use of it, by severance at the ankle; at least, it was a question for the jury. We hold that the words used as indicating the point of severance are, at the most, ambiguous; and that to carry out the purposes intended—that is, to pay indemnity for the loss of plaintiff's foot—it could be properly found that the severance was at the ankle. It follows that the court erred in directing a verdict for the defendant. The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded.

Weaver, Ch. J., and Evans and Salinger, JJ., concur.

ANNOTATION.

Loss or mutilation of member, or loss of sight, contemplated by indemnity provisions of accident insurance policy.

- I. Provisions against loss of hands or feet, generally, 1339.
- II. Provisions against loss of “entire” members, or members “at or above” certain points, 1341.
- III. Express provisions as to severance, amputation, or physical separation, 1341.
- IV. Provisions against loss of arm, 1345.
- V. Provisions as to breaking arm or leg, 1345.
- VI. Provisions against loss of eyesight, 1346.

As to what amounts to loss of member within the meaning of Workmen's Compensation Act, see annotation to McLean v. American R. Exp. Co. post, 1350.

I. Provisions against loss of hands or feet, generally.

In some of the early forms of accident insurance policies there was a provision for indemnity in the event of the loss of hands or feet. It was contended by the insurers that under these policies a recovery could not be had where there had been no amputation or severance from the body of the injured member. The courts, however, have, as a rule, refused to give this meaning to such provisions, and have held that under them a recovery may be had if the insured, by reason of his injury, has been deprived of the use of the member. Supreme Ct. of Honor v. Turner (1901) 99 Ill. App. 310; Theorell v. Supreme Ct. of Honor (1904) 115 Ill. App. 313; Sisson v. Supreme Ct. of Honor (1904) 104 Mo. App. 54, 78 S. W. 297; Lord v. American Mut. Acci. Asso. (1894) 89 Wis. 19, 26 L.R.A. 741, 46 Am. St. Rep. 815, 61 N. W. 293; Sheanon v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. (1890) 77 Wis. 618, 9 L.R.A. 685, 20 Am. St. Rep. 151, 46 N. W. 799.

Thus, it has been held that there was a loss of a hand where a load of gunshot passed through the palm of the insured's hand, tearing the muscles of the thumb and injuring the abductor muscles, and destroying all practical use of the hand for laboring purposes. Supreme Ct. of Honor v. Turner (Ill.) supra.

And in Sisson v. Supreme Ct. of Honor (1904) 104 Mo. App. 54, 78 S. W. 297, where the policy provided for the payment of indemnity in case of the loss of a hand, the question whether there had been a loss warranting a recovery was held for the jury, there being evidence that the hand was crushed so that it was of no practical use, although the whole hand was not removed.

In Modern Order of Praetorians v. Taylor (1910) 60 Tex. Civ. App. 217, 127 S. W. 260, where the policy provided for the payment of a certain sum if a member "shall lose a foot or hand by accident," it was held that there need not be a severance of a foot or hand, but that a loss of the member must be permanent, and that a total paralysis of a foot, depriving the insured of the use of it temporarily, would not justify a recovery.

In Brotherhood Locomotive F. & E. v. Aday (1911) 97 Ark. 425, 34 L.R.A.

(N.S.) 126, 134 S. W. 928, it was held that an insured was entitled to recover on a benefit certificate insuring him against permanent disability for performing manual labor on account of permanent paralysis of either extremities, where one hand was paralyzed so that it compelled him to abandon his calling, and there was no way of restoring it to usefulness except by an operation which he had no means to secure.

And in Theorell v. Supreme Ct. of Honor (1904) 115 Ill. App. 313, under a policy providing for indemnity in case of the loss "of both feet, both hands, or both eyes," the question whether there had been a loss of both feet warranting a recovery was held for the jury, where there was evidence that insured, while working at his trade as a carpenter, fell and received injuries resulting in paralysis of his lower limbs, so that he was unable to stand without support, although he was able to move about with crutches.

In Lord v. American Mut. Acci. Asso. (1894) 89 Wis. 19, 26 L.R.A. 741, 46 Am. St. Rep. 815, 61 N. W. 293, under a policy providing for a certain indemnity in case of injuries resulting in the "loss of one or both hands" causing immediate total disability, it was held a question of fact for the jury whether an injury resulting in the tearing off of three fingers, and a part of the other, and cutting the hand, and destroying the joint of the thumb, was the loss of one hand causing immediate and total disability.

But in Stevens v. People's Mut. Acci. Ins. Asso. (1892) 150 Pa. 132, 16 L.R.A. 446, 24 Atl. 662, under an accident policy excluding liability for injuries resulting directly or indirectly from disease, and insuring against disablement by "loss of one hand or foot," it was held that no recovery could be had where the insured's foot was not injured, but, by reason of an injury to his back, he was able to use it only when he wore a plaster jacket, which prevented the injury to his back affecting the use of his foot.

And in Nashelman v. Grand Lodge,

P. O. W. (1918) 209 Ill. App. 637, it is stated in the abstract of the decision that to recover under an accident policy for the loss of a hand, through sustaining a fracture in falling, the plaintiff must show that the injury resulted in a total loss of the usual functions of the hand.

II. Provisions against loss of "entire" members, or members "at or above" certain points.

For cases in which these terms are used in a provision which expressly includes the severance, or amputation, see infra, III.

Under a provision for indemnity in case of the loss of "two entire feet," there was held to be a loss within the meaning of the provision, where there was an entire destruction of the use of both of a person's feet by paralysis, caused by accidental pistol wounds in the back. Sheanon v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. (1890) 77 Wis. 618, 9 L.R.A. 685, 20 Am. St. Rep. 151, 46 N. W. 799.

But it has been held that a recovery for the loss of one hand cannot be had under a policy providing for an indemnity for the "loss of one entire hand and one entire foot, or of two entire hands or two entire feet," since such policy provides for an indemnity in case of loss of two limbs,—and not of one limb, or part of two limbs. Gentry v. Standard Life & Acci. Ins. Co. (1896) 6 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 114.

In Fidelity & C. Co. v. Hart (1911) 142 Ky. 25, 133 S. W. 996, an accident policy provided that if the insured should contract any disease which should result, independently of all other causes, in permanent paralysis, whereby the insured should entirely lose the use of both hands, or both feet, or of one hand and one foot, and on account of either of the conditions be permanently unable to engage in any work or occupation for wages or profit, a specified indemnity should be paid upon the filing of a satisfactory proof of the continuance for fifty-two consecutive weeks of such paralysis; and another clause provided that written notice, as early as might be reasonably possible, must be given of disability for which a claim was to be made, with full particulars, and that affirmative preliminary proofs of paralysis must be furnished within fourteen months from the date of the beginning of paralysis. The insured in this case claimed to recover because of the entire loss of the use of his left hand and foot, caused by a stroke of paralysis, and it was held that, in order to recover the indemnity, the paralysis must have deprived the insured of the capacity to labor so as to earn wages for fifty-two consecutive weeks, but that it need not have been a total paralysis of the limbs at the beginning, but that it was only necessary that within fifty-two weeks of its beginning it should have resulted in such total paralysis, and that this condition should have been permanent.

In Gahagan v. Morrissey (1897) 6 Pa. Dist. R. 135, where the insured had lost the use of a hand, although he was employed by the company for which he was working when insured, in another line of work, it was held that, under a provision that any member suffering "the loss of a hand at or above the wrist joint" should be considered totally disabled, the entire loss of the use of a hand might fairly be regarded as coming within the terms of the policy, and that it did not necessarily apply only to cases of an amputation of the hand.

But in Stoner v. Yeoman of America (1911) 160 Ill. App. 432, it was held that the insured had not suffered the "loss of a hand at or above the wrist," where he had lost his third and little finger, and injured the knuckle joint of the middle finger, but had at least half of the hand left, since it was held that he had not lost a hand at or above the wrist.

III. Express provisions as to severance, amputation, or physical separation.

The later forms of policies expressly provide for indemnity in case of the severance, amputation, or physical separation of a member, and under these provisions recovery has generally been denied, where there was no severance of the injured member from the body. Continental Casualty Co. v. Bows (1916) 72 Fla. 17, 72 So. 278; Metropolitan Casualty Ins. Co. v. Shelby (1917) 116 Miss. 278, 76 So. 839; Wiest v. United States Health & Acci. Ins. Co. (1914) 186 Mo. App. 22, 171 S. W. 570; Newman v. Standard Acci. Ins. Co. (1915) 192 Mo. App. 159, 177 S. W. 803; Brotherhood of R. Trainmen v. Walsh (1913) 89 Ohio St. 15, 103 N. E. 759; Chevaliers v. Shearer (1905) 27 Ohio C. C. 509; Eminent Household, C. W. v. Hancock (1915) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 174 S. W. 657; Hardin v. Continental Casualty Co. (1917) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 195 S. W. 653.

Thus, in Metropolitan Casualty Ins. Co. v. Shelby (1917) 116 Miss. 278, 76 So. 839, where an accident policy provided for the payment of a certain sum if the insured should "sustain the loss of one hand by severance at or above the wrist," it was held that no such loss had occurred, although the insured's left hand, as a result of an accidental injury, had become paralyzed and atrophied so that it was of little use. The court said: "Without dispute, the hand was not severed at or above the wrist; in fact it was not severed at all. The evidence does show that plaintiff had lost the use of his hand to a great extent, but his hand is still there. He had simply lost the use of his hand to a great extent. Among the definitions given by Mr. English in his Law Dictionary of the word 'severance' is 'removing anything from the realty, as trees, crops,' etc. The same author defines 'sever' as 'to put apart.' The Revised Encyclopedic Dictionary defines 'severance' this way: 'The act of severing, dividing, or separating; the state of being severed; the state of being disjoined or separated.' All of the standard dictionaries give similar definitions."

And in Wiest v. United States Health & Acci. Ins. Co. (1914) 186 Mo. App. 22, 171 S. W. 570, where the policy expressly defined "loss of member" as "loss by severance at or above the wrist joints or ankle joints," it was held that there was not a "loss of a hand" within the meaning of the policy, where the insured met with an accident which necessitated the removal of all the hand, except the little finger and a portion of palm which were paralyzed and of no use. The court said: "In the instant case, had the provision of the policy agreeing to indemnify plaintiff in the amount of the principal sum of the policy for the 'loss of one hand' stood entirely alone and unaffected by any other provision thereof, beyond doubt, plaintiff would have been entitled to recover, having lost the entire use of his hand. However, the very next paragraph of the policy provides, in unmistakable terms, what shall be meant by the 'loss of one hand,' to wit, the loss thereof by severance at or above the wrist joint. Plaintiff has not suffered a loss of his hand by severance at or above the wrist joint; and if effect is to be given to the last-mentioned provision, plaintiff's case must fail. If any ambiguity or uncertainty of meaning could be said to inhere in the pertinent provisions of the policy, it would readily be resolved in favor of the insured and against the insurer. Such is the well-established and wholesome doctrine with respect to the construction of insurance contracts. As is said by Lamm, J., in Mathews v. Modern Woodmen (1911) 236 Mo. 342, 139 S. W. 151, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 483: 'It is a just and settled rule that the restrictive terms of insurance contracts shall be taken most strongly against the insurer. The doctrine of contra proferentem is strictly applied with unaccommodating vigor, and . . . ambiguities are blandly resolved in favor of the insured.' If it appeared that the portions of the policy under consideration, when read and construed together, were at all ambiguous or of doubtful import, we should not hesitate in the least to 'blandly' resolve such ambiguity or doubt in favor of the insured. Indeed, the policy should, if possible, be construed so as to effectuate the insurance, and not to defeat it; for the indemnity is the very object and purpose of the contract, for which the insured has paid a consideration. See Stix v. Travelers Indemnity Co. (1913) 175 Mo. App. 171, 157 S. W. 870. But it appears that the defendant has chosen apt language to indicate that it does not agree to indemnify the insured for the loss of a hand, unless such loss shall consist in the actual physical severance of the hand at or above the wrist joint. It is by no means likely that the policyholder so understood, or that he would knowingly have accepted the policy with such restrictive limitations upon his right to recover the indemnity for the loss of a hand or foot; but we can find the intention of the parties only from the language employed in the contract, having regard to the rules of interpretation which may be applied to contracts of this character. We cannot 'blandly' construe the troublesome provision out of the contract, and disregard it altogether; for, however great may be our inclination or duty to protect a policyholder against intricate or obscure provisions, designed for the avoidance of liability on the part of the insurer, we cannot make a contract for the parties. The stipulation in question, as we have said, follows immediately that portion of the policy providing for specific losses, in the same type in which the body of the policy is printed. Its meaning appears to be plain and unmistakable. It pointedly defines what shall constitute the 'loss of a hand' so as to entitle the assured to the indemnity provided therefor. Under the circumstances it cannot well be said to constitute a 'snare to the unwary,' such as is denounced in La Force v. Williams City F. Ins. Co. (1891) 43 Mo. App. 530. See also Stark v. John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. (1913) 176 Mo. App. 574, 159 S. W. 758. Nor do we perceive any ground upon which plaintiff may properly be relieved from the effect thereof."

And in Newman v. Standard Acci. Ins. Co. (1915) 192 Mo. App. 159, 177 S. W. 808, there was held to be no "loss of thumb and index finger of either hand by severance at or above metacarpophalangeal joints," where the insured sustained an accident which necessitated the severance through the bone of the thumb and finger, two eighths and three eighths of an inch, respectively, below the articulations, so that two stubs of the thumb and finger bones were plainly visible in an X-ray picture of the hand. The court said: "The contract, in using the word 'joint,' fixed a place—a point of severance; it had no reference to the structures which must exist in order that a joint may be made. We do not mean to hold that, for the severance to be 'at the joint' within the meaning of the policy, it must follow and coincide with the line of articulation, but only that it must be such as destroys the joint as a joint; that is, as an anatomical mechanism. That is to say, the joint must be dismembered."

And under a policy providing that any member of a benefit association, who should suffer the amputation or severance of an entire hand at or above the wrist joint, should be considered totally and permanently disabled, but not otherwise, it has been held that no recovery could be had where a member received an injury which necessitated the amputation of his thumb, and crushed and injured the hand from above the wrist joint so that he was permanently unable to use it to perform any manual service whatever. Brotherhood of R. Trainmen v. Walsh (1913) 89 Ohio St. 15, 103 N. E. 759.

So, in Chevaliers v. Shearer (1905) 27 Ohio C. C. 509, under a provision of the constitution providing for indemnity if the insured should, "by accident, lose one hand by amputation at or above the wrist," it was held that no recovery could be had where the insured's arm had been permanently disabled, and the full use and service of it practically destroyed, but neither the arm nor hand had been amputated.

And in Continental Casualty Co. v. Bows (1916) 72 Fla. 17, 72 So. 278, where the policy provided for the payment of a certain sum "for loss of either hand by complete severance at or above the wrist," it was held that a recovery under such provision was not justified by evidence that a hand was crushed, and all of it removed by amputation at the wrist, except the thumb, which was of little use, the court holding that there was not, under the facts, a "complete severance" within the meaning of the contract.

And in Hardin v. Continental Casualty Co. (1917) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 195 S. W. 654, where the policy provided for the payment of a certain sum in case of loss of a hand, and defined loss to be a complete severance at or above the wrist, it was held that the evidence did not show a loss of a hand within the meaning of the policy, the testimony showing an amputation and the loss of all the phalanges, except the proximal, one half of the first phalange of the thumb, the loss of all of the fifth metacarpal bones, except the proximal heads, and that there remained of the hand the proximal heads of the second, third, and fourth metacarpals, the proximal half of the first phalange of the thumb, all of the first metacarpal, and all of the rest of the bones of the hand.

And in Eminent Household, C. W. v. Hancock (1915) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 174 S. W. 657, where the insurer's constitution and by-laws were made a part of the contract, and provided that, if a member should sustain "the loss of one arm by severance at or above the wrist," a certain indemnity should be paid, it was held that recovery for the loss of an arm could be had only where there was a severance from the body, although the policy provided for recovery in the event of a loss of one arm; and it was held that no recovery could be had in case the insured's arm was totally paralyzed, but was not amputated or severed from the body.

And it has been held that the amputation of a person's foot, so as to leave all of the heel and substantially all of the hollow of the foot, and possibly a part of the ball of the foot, does not give any right to the full amount of insurance on the ground that all the use of the foot is lost, under a by-law of a mutual benefit association providing for full payment in case of the "amputation of a limb (whole hand or foot)," as the word "whole" applies to the foot as well as to the hand, and the injury insured against is not the loss of the use of a hand or foot, but an amputation of the limb that should include a whole hand or foot. Fuller v. Locomotive Engineers' Mut. Life & Acci. Ins. Co. (1899) 122 Mich. 548, 48 L.R.A. 86, 80 Am. St. Rep. 598, 81 N. W. 326.

And under a policy providing for indemnity for total disability by "suffering, by means of a physical separation, the loss of four fingers of one hand at or above the third joint. . . . providing the above amputations occur," it has been held that there can be no recovery where an insured receives an injury resulting in the amputation of the second, third, and fourth fingers above the third joint, and injuring the bone in the palm of the hand connected with the first finger, and causing that finger to be deflected somewhat from its normal line, and a loss of about one half the power and efficiency of the finger, since such injury does not come within the language of the provision, as the insured's first finger and thumb remained attached to the hand. Mady v. Switchmen's Union (1911) 116 Minn. 147, 133 N. W. 472.

In Sneck v. Travellers' Ins. Co. (1894) 81 Hun, 331, 30 N. Y. Supp. 881, under a policy providing indemnity for injuries "if loss by severance of one entire hand" should result, where the plaintiff's hand was cut off three fourths of an inch back of the knuckle joint, and just back of the second bone of the thumb, it was held that, to bring the case within the provisions, the loss must be of the entire hand, the court remarking that this meant substantially the entire hand, in respect both to its structure and use, and stated that in that case there was, upon the undisputed evidence, not such a loss in either respect. But on a subsequent appeal of this case in (1895) 88 Hun, 94, 34 N. Y. Supp. 545, affirmed in (1898) 156 N. Y. 669, 50

N. E. 1122, after the plaintiff had testified substantially that he had no use of the injured member as a hand, and never had had since the accident, although he admitted that upon the former trial he had probably testified that he could use it to place under and against objects for the purpose of lifting and pushing, it was held that the term "entire hand" was to be taken in its general acceptation and ordinary meaning, the court saying that it would seem to be an extremely narrow and technical construction to say that only a physical removal of every particle of that portion of the human anatomy known as the hand would entitle the insured to recover under the provisions of the policy; and it was held erroneous for the court to hold as a matter of law that the insured had not suffered a loss by severance of an entire hand.

In the reported case (JONES v. CONTINENTAL CASUALTY CO. ante, 1329) it was held that an amputation of the foot immediately in front of the ankle joint and heel between the cuneiform and scaphoid, and through the cuboid bones, was within the protection of an accident policy insuring against severance of the foot at or above the ankle, the court holding that there had been a substantial severance of the foot at or above the ankle.

And in Moore v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. (1915) 75 Or. 47, L.R.A.1915D, 264, 146 Pac. 151, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 1005, a policy providing compensation for accidental loss of a hand by removal at or above the wrist was held to cover an accident requiring the removal of all the bones of the fingers at the wrist, leaving only flesh enough to protect the bones remaining, and the thumb in a stiffened and useless condition.

In Beber v. Brotherhood of R. Trainmen (1905) 75 Neb. 183, 121 Am. St. Rep. 782, 106 N. W. 168, it was held that the question whether there was a total loss of the insured's hand at or above the wrist joint was for the jury, it appearing that the policy sued on provided that any member suffering, "by means of physical separation, the wrist joint," should be considered totally and permanently disabled, and there being evidence that the insured, by reason of an accident, had lost three fingers, and suffered an injury to the remaining finger and thumb which materially interfered with their use, and that a part of the palm had also been cut away.

. . . the loss of a hand at or above
18 A.L.R.—85.

IV. Provisions against loss of arm.

It has been held that the amputation of an arm a little below the elbow is the "loss of an arm," within the meaning of a policy which does not mention whether the loss insured against is a loss by amputation below or above the elbow joint. Garcelon v. Commercial Travelers' Eastern Acci. Asso. (1904) 184 Mass. 8, 100 Am. St. Rep. 540, 67 N. E. 868.

V. Provisions as to breaking arm or leg.

In Rogers v. Modern Brotherhood (1908) 131 Mo. App. 353, 111 S. W. 518, it was held that the construction of a provision for an indemnity if the insured should "accidentally break his leg or arm" was for the court. It was further held in the Rogers Case that the definition of the word "leg," as used in the policy, should not be influenced by the meaning placed on it by specialists, since the word has a well-defined common meaning, and it was accordingly held that evidence to define the word should not be admitted, but that the court should ascertain its meaning from the language of the contract, and it was also held that the policy which provided for indemnity if the insured should "break his leg or arm" covered fractures of bones of the limbs, whether such bones were in the hands or feet, or were in the upper and central divisions of the limbs; and it was accordingly held that a fracture of the heel bone was covered by the policy.

And in Southern Woodmen v. Morris (1916) 14 Ala. App. 464, 70 So. 953, a benefit certificate providing for the payment of a certain sum "in the event of a broken arm or broken leg" was held to cover a fracture of an arm, the court stating that the contract did not undertake to define the term "broken arm," or "broken leg," and that one definition of the word "broken" given by the Standard Dictionary was: "Separated forcibly into parts; fractured; shattered; ruptured; as broken reeds; a broken limb; broken skin; broken waves."

In Peterson v. Modern Brotherhood (1904) 125 Iowa, 562, 67 L.R.A. 631, 101 N. W. 289, a Pott's fracture, consisting of the breaking of one bone of the lower leg between the knee and ankle joint, and a severance of the malleolus process of the other one so as to effect a complete solution of the continuity of both bones, was held not to be covered by a policy providing for indemnity in case of the breaking of the shafts of both bones between the knee and ankle joints, since the shaft of the bone was held to be distinct from the malleolus process, so that such a break did not come within the definition of the breaking of a leg contained in the policy.

VI. Provisions against loss of eyesight.

It has been held that the words "total and permanent loss of the sight of both eyes," when used in a policy insuring a person who has but one eye, which fact is known to the insurer, means the loss of eyesight, and that a recovery may be had where the insured loses the sight of his remaining eye. Humphreys v. National Ben. Asso. (1891) 139 Pa. 264, 11 L.R.A. 564, 20 Atl. 1047.

So, under a policy defining permanent total disability to be "a complete and irrevocable loss of sight in both eyes," and permanent partial disability to be "a complete and irrevocable loss of sight in one eye," where the insured had only one eye at the time the policy was issued, which was known to the insurer's agent, and he afterwards lost the sight of the other eye, this was held to be "a complete and irrevocable loss of sight to both eyes." Bawden v. London, E. & G. Assur. Co. [1892] 2 Q. B. (Eng.) 534, 61 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 792, 57 J. P. 116.

And in Maynard v. Locomotive Engineers' Mut. Life & Acci. Asso. (1897) 16 Utah, 145, 67 Am. St. Rep. 602, 51 Pac. 259, under a by-law of a mutual benefit association providing for a certain indemnity in case of injury causing a "total and permanent loss of eyesight," which was in force when a member of the association, who was a locomotive engineer, received an injury which immediately affected his eyesight, and about a year later resulted in the permanent loss of the sight of one eye, which disabled him from pursuing his usual occupation, it was held that a recovery might be had, since the by-law did not provide that the benefit should not be received unless the injuries were such as to cause the loss of the sight of both eyes, and since the object of the association was the mutual protection and relief of its members; and an amendment of the by-law, passed after the injury, but before the loss of sight of the eye became permanent, allowing recovery in case of "total and permanent loss of one or both eyes," was held to make the true meaning of the provisions more apparent.

But in Phillippy v. Homesteaders (1908) 140 Iowa, 562, 118 N. W. 880, it was held that the loss of one eye did not entitle the insured to any recovery under a policy providing for the payment of an indemnity for "the loss of the sight of both eyes," since the provision necessarily excluded, as a ground for benefit, the loss of one eye, and there was held to be no ambiguity in the above provision; and evidence that it was the intention and understanding of the insured that he was to have a right to recover in case of the loss of the sight of one eye was held inadmissible to change the terms of the contract.

In Murray v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. (1916) 243 Fed. 285, where the policy provided for the payment of an indemnity for "loss of entire sight of one eye, if irrevocably lost" as the result of an accident, it was held that a recovery could be had, if by an accident all the useful and practical sight of the eye was irrevocably lost, although the injured eye could distinguish light from darkness, or perceive objects temporarily for brief intervals. The court said: "The indemnity is virtually for the loss of the benefit of sight or vision. The latter may be defined as the ability to perceive, distinguish, and recognize objects, and the former as satisfaction of will, need, or pleasure. If this ability is so far destroyed that what remains will not, to a practical and useful extent, confer any of this benefit, entire sight, within the construction of analogous terms in insurance law, is lost. So would it be in popular phrase or sense. The interpretation must be reasonable and relative, not literal. The ability to perceive light and objects, but no ability to distinguish and recognize objects, is not sight, but blindness. So would it be, though there were intermittent flashes of the latter ability. To no practical or useful extent would it serve the will, need, or pleasure."

And in Tracey v. Standard Acci. Ins. Co. (1920) 119 Me. 131, 9 A.L.R. 521, 109 Atl. 496, it was held that there was an "entire loss of sight" of an eye, where the insured could not distinguish colors, or one object from another in strong light, although he could distinguish between light and darkness.

And there was held to be a "loss of the entire sight of one eye" within the meaning of a policy, where the sight of one eye was lost to such an extent that it was useless, although there was a light penetration coming from the side which was useless, and there was no prospective cure. Watkins v. United States Casualty Co. (1919) 141 Tenn. 583, 214 S. W. 78.

And it has been held, under a provision for a specified indemnity if an accident should result in the loss "of the entire sight of one eye," that a recovery may be had where there is a practical loss of the entire sight of the eye, it being held not necessary that the whole sight should be destroyed in order to warrant a recovery.

International Travelers' Asso. v. Rogers (1914) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 163 S. W. 421.

In the Rogers Case (Tex.) supra, where there was testimony that, although the insured could see to some extent out of his injured eye, he could not use it for reading, or rely on it to get about with, the evidence was held sufficient to show a loss of the entire sight of the eye within the provision of the policy.

The evidence in the Murray Case (Fed.) supra, however, was held insufficient to warrant a finding that the plaintiff had lost the entire sight of his eye, there being evidence tending to show only that the sight of the eye had been impaired so that he was disabled to perform major operations, or to read continuously, and that, when the uninjured eye was closed, the injured one lost vision, and that natural co-ordination and accommodation were lacking, since the insurer did not undertake to pay upon the happening of these contingencies, but only when there was an entire loss of sight; that is, when all practical and useful sight, for any purpose of will, need, or pleasure, was lost.

In Fallin v. Locomotive Engineers' Mut. Life & Acci. Ins. Co. (1920) 24 Ga. App. 764, 102 S. E. 177, where an accident policy provided for the payment of the full benefit to any member "sustaining the total or permanent loss of sight in one or both eyes," but provided that the insurer would not recognize a claim for impaired eyesight, "but for total and permanent blindness only, in one or both eyes," it was held that a recovery for total blindness could not be had by an insured who had become color-blind in both eyes, as this did not come within the protection of the policy.

J. T. W.

ALLEN C. MCLEAN

v.

AMERICAN RAILWAY EXPRESS COMPANY, Appt.

Maine Supreme Judicial Court — October 22, 1920.

(119 Me. 322, 111 Atl. 383.)

Workmen's compensation — amputation of part of foot — how far loss of foot.

Amputation of so much of the foot as lies forward of the plane of the front surface of the shin bone does not effect the loss of the foot within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, where the injured person walks on what remains of the foot, with the aid of a specially constructed boot.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1350.]

APPEAL by defendant from a decree of the Supreme Judicial Court for Cumberland County, at Law, awarding compensation to claimant in a proceeding by him under the Workmen's Compensation Act to recover for injuries sustained to his foot while in defendant's employ. Modified.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Verrill, Hale, Booth, & Ives, and Leon V. Walker, for appellant:

Claimant did not suffer the loss of a foot within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, so as to entitle him to compensation for one hundred and twenty-five weeks.

Tetro v. Superior Printing & Box Co. 185 App. Div. 73, 172 N. Y. Supp. 722; Geiger v. Gotham Can Co. 177 App. Div. 29, 163 N. Y. Supp. 678; Thompson v. Sherwood Shoe Co. 178 App. Div. 319, 164 N. Y. Supp. 869; Ide v. Faul & Timmins, 179 App. Div. 567, 166 N. Y. Supp. 858; Mockler v. Hawkes, 173 App. Div. 333, 158 N. Y. Supp. 759; Grammici v. Zinn, 219 N. Y. 322, 114 N. E. 897; Adams v. Boorum & Pease Co. 179 App. Div. 412, 166 N. Y. Supp. 97; Barringer v. Clark, 184 App. Div. 695, 172 N. Y. Supp. 398; Carkey v. Island Paper Co. 177 App. Div. 73, 163 N. Y. Supp. 710; Packer v. Olds Motor Works, 195 Mich. 497, 162 N. W. 80; Adomites v. Royal Furniture Co. 196 Mich. 498, 162 N. W. 965; Carpenter v. Detroit Forging Co. 191 Mich. 45, 157 N. W. 374; Northwestern Fuel Co. v. Industrial Commission, 161 Wis. 450, 152 N. W. 856, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 533.

Mr. Harry E. Nixon for appellee.

Cornish, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On January 6, 1919, the claimant, an employee of the American Railway Express Company, sustained an injury to his right foot, in consequence of which so much of the foot as lay forward of the plane of the front surface of the tibia, or shin bone, was amputated. The industrial accident commission decided that this constituted "the loss of a foot" under Rev. Stat. chap. 50, § 16, and accordingly awarded the plaintiff, in addition to his medical bills, $132.50, the sum of $8.88, being one half of his average weekly wages for a period of one hundred and twenty-five weeks, beginning January 20, 1919.

It is admitted that the injury arose out of and in the course of employment, and the only question to be decided by this court on appeal is whether the commission erred, as a matter of law, in so construing the statute as to hold that the claimant had sustained the loss of a foot under § 16. Nor is there any controversy as to the extent of the injury and amputation. Dr. Twitchell, who performed the operation, and the only surgical witness in the case, testified that the length of his foot was 9½ inches, that 6 inches were removed, and 3½ inches were left, including the calcaneum, or heel, and the portion next the heel up to the line of severance; that it was necessary to take off the head of the astragalus, or ankle bone, where the shin bone articulates with it, because otherwise he could not get flap enough to cover it; that the ankle joint retains its motion, and that the heel support is the same as before the accident. In other words, the claimant has lost the toes and in-step, but not the heel, and walks upon what remains of the foot, with the aid of a specially constructed boot having a steel support running up the front of the tibia. It further appears that the claimant began work September 2, 1919, at a wage of $20.75 per week, which is greater than he was receiving at the time of the accident, and has been at work continuously since that time.

In determining the question whether the claimant has lost his foot, it must be remembered that the accident occurred in January, 1919, before the amendment (Pub. Laws, 1919, chap. 238) took effect whereby this provision was added to § 16 of the original statute: "In all cases in this class where the usefulness of a member or any physical function thereof is permanently impaired, the compensation shall bear such relation to the amount stated in the above schedule as the incapacity shall bear to the injuries named in this schedule and the commission shall determine the extent of the incapacity." This addition provided for cases of loss or impairment of use of a member where the member itself was not lost. Previous to this amendment the words "loss of a member" were construed to mean loss by severance and not by incapacity. Merchant's Case, 118 Me. 96, 106 Atl. 117. In other words, a distinction was drawn between loss, and loss of use.

Applying this rule, which must apply to this case, and eliminating the question of use, the single problem remains whether the loss of two thirds of a foot, as in this case, is the loss of a foot; whether, in other words, the part is equal to the whole. Anatomically speaking, the foot extends from the ankle joint to the end of the toes, and is divided into three parts—the tarsal bones or ankle, the metatarsal bones, or in-step, and the phalanges, or toes. In the case at bar the metatarsal bones and phalanges were severed, while the ankle bone and the heel were left practically unimpaired. If the loss contemplated by the statute is not of the entire foot, then what fractional part shall be fixed by the court as equal to the whole? Shall it be a loss of one third, or one half, or two thirds, or four fifths? Where shall the line be drawn? Such a construction would seem to be rather in the nature of judicial legislation than of judicial construction, and we think it more consonant with judicial interpretation to hold that, according to the common meaning of the language, the statutory words "the loss of a foot," mean the loss of an entire foot, and not a fractional part thereof.

Especially does this construction seem reasonable when we consider the fact that the legislature seems to have had in mind this very question in many instances, and, when it desired to make the loss of a part equivalent to the loss of the whole, it expressly provided for it. Thus, after specifying the compensation for the loss of a thumb and for the loss of each finger at a given rate, and the loss of the first phalange of the thumb or of any finger as one half of the amount for the whole, it added: "The loss of more than one phalange shall be considered as a loss of the entire thumb or finger." Again, after specifying the amount for the loss of a toe, and of the first phalange of any toe, the legislature expressly said: "The loss of more than one phalange shall be considered as the loss of the entire toe." In each of these instances it is indisputable that the words "thumb," "finger," and "toe," as used in the first clause, mean the entire thumb, finger, or toe, and that, when the intention was to make any part less than the whole equivalent to the whole, it was expressly so stated. If the claimant's contention is sound, then these special provisions were entirely unnecessary, because without them the loss of a substantial portion of a member is equivalent to the loss of the entire member.

Still again, "for the loss of an arm, or any part at or above the wrist," and "the loss of a leg, or any part at or above the ankle," are provisions carrying out the legislative intention with precision. But in the clause of § 16 now under consideration, there is no such modifying provision. It does not say, "for the loss of a foot or the parts in front of the heel," or "the loss of the toes and instep shall be considered as the loss of the entire foot," but, simply and baldly, "for the loss of a foot," without any diminution or qualification whatever. This must mean the entire foot, and nothing less.

Workmen's compensation—amputation of part of foot—how far loss of foot.

Counsel for claimant calls our attention to a line of cases in other states, but upon examination these are found to have arisen under statutes giving compensation for loss of use, and therefore are not authorities in the case at bar.

Our conclusion, therefore, is that the decree should be modified, and the claimant should be awarded, in addition to his medical expenses, $132.50, compensation for the loss of his toes at the rate of $8.88 per week for a period of sixty-five weeks from January 20, 1919.

Appeal sustained.

Decree to be modified in accordance with the opinion.

ANNOTATION.

Workmen's compensation: what amounts to loss of member within the meaning of the acts.

- I. Introduction, 1350.
- II. Loss of foot, 1351.
- III. Loss of leg, 1352.
- IV. Loss of arm, 1352.
- V. Loss of thumb, 1353.
- VI. Loss of fingers, 1353.
- VII. Loss of phalanges, 1354.
- VIII. Loss of hand, 1358.
- IX. Loss of both hands, 1360.

I. Introduction.

This annotation does not cover the questions as to what injuries constitute a total disability or incapacity under the compensation acts; or what amounts to a "loss of the use" of members, except to the extent that that phrase is regarded as the equivalent of "loss" of member. The question of the amount of compensation recoverable is also beyond its scope.

As to what amounts to loss of eyesight within meaning of act. see anno-

In some jurisdictions, where the acts provide for compensation for "loss" of a member, the view has been taken that there is not a "loss" of a member unless there is an actual physical separation of the whole member. Norwood v. Lake Bisteneau Oil Co. (1919) 145 La. 823, 83 So. 25; Merchant's Case (1919) 118 Me. 96. 106 Atl. 117; Clark v. Kennebec Journal Co. (1921) — Me. —, 113 Atl. 51; Carpenter v. Detroit Forging Co. (1916) 191 Mich. 45, 157 N. W. 374; Adomites v. Royal Furniture Co. (1917) 196 Mich. 498, 162 N. W. 965; Packer v. Olds Motor Works (1917) 195 Mich. 497, 162 N. W. 80; Wilcox v. Clarage Foundry & Mfg. Co. (1917) 199 Mich. 79, 165 N. W. 925; Northwestern Fuel Co. v. Industrial Commission (1915) 161 Wis. 450, 152 N. W. 856. Ann. Cas. 1918A. 533.

understood than an actual severance. It is true that for the sufferer the loss of the use of a member may be equivalent to the loss of the member itself, so long as the disuse remains, but the two things are quite distinct, and if one has lost the use of a member it would be so described, and never as the loss of the member."

And, a fortiori, the same result has been reached where the provision of the act is for an actual severance. Weber v. American Silk Spinning Co. (1915) 38 R. I. 309, 95 Atl. 603, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 153.

In Ballou v. Industrial Commission (1921) 296 Ill. 434, 129 N. E. 755, where the act made provision for compensation for loss of a hand, and also for the loss of the use of a hand, the court stated that the expressions "loss" and "loss of the use" should be given their ordinary meaning.

And in Franko v. Schollhorn Co. (1918) 93 Conn. 13, 104 Atl. 485, it was held that a provision for compensation in case of loss of a member means a deprivation of the member, and not an impairment of earning capacity.

Under the New York act it has been held that a member is not lost, providing it can fulfil in a degree, fair and worth considering, in any employment for which the claimant is physically and mentally fitted or adaptive, its normal and natural functions. Grammici v. Zinn (1916) 219 N. Y. 322, 114 N. E. 397; Baron v. National Metal Spinning & Stamping Co. (1918) 182 App. Div. 284, 169 N. Y. Supp. 337.

Although it is not intended here to indicate exhaustively the specific statutory provisions on the question under consideration, attention may be directed to the fact that by some acts it is provided that the "loss of the use" of specified members shall be equivalent to a "loss" of such members. These provisions were involved in the following cases, which are dealt with at length infra: Deemer Steel Casting Co. v. Frank (1919) 7 Boyce (Del.) 497, 108 Atl. 283; Hull v. United States Fidelity & G. Co. (1918) 102 Neb. 246, 166 N. W. 628; Rockwell v. Lewis (1915) 168 App. Div. 674, 154 N. Y.

Supp. 893, appeal dismissed in (1916) 218 N. Y. 692, 113 N. E. 1065; Re Sugg (1917) 180 App. Div. 133, 167 N. Y. Supp. 390; Supple v. Erie R. Co. (1917) 180 App. Div. 135, 167 N. Y. Supp. 391; Modra v. Little (1918) 223 N. Y. 452, 119 N. E. 853, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 177, 18 N. C. C. A. 789; Phonville v. New York & C. S. S. Co. (1919) 226 N. Y. 622, 123 N. E. 885; Bristow Cotton Oil Co. v. State Industrial Commission (1920) 77 Okla. 316, 188 Pac. 658; Chovic v. Pittsburgh Crucible Steel Co. (1919) 71 Pa. Super. Ct. 350.

It may likewise be of interest to state that some acts contain provisions that the loss of specified parts of a member shall be equivalent to a loss of the member. The following cases, involving such provisions, are considered infra: Re Petrie (1915) 215 N. Y. 335, 109 N. E. 549; Feinman v. Albert Mfg. Co. (1915) 170 App. Div. 147, 155 N. Y. Supp. 909; Fortino v. Merchants' Despatch Transp. Co. (1916) 171 App. Div. 956, 156 N. Y. Supp. 262; Ide v. Faul & Timmins (1917) 179 App. Div. 567, 166 N. Y. Supp. 858; Baron v. National Metal Spinning & Stamping Co. (N. Y.) supra; Forbes v. Evening Mail (1921) 194 App. Div. 563, 185 N. Y. Supp. 692; Choctaw Portland Cement Co. v. Lamb (1920) 79 Okla. 109, 189 Pac. 750; Pater v. Superior Steel Co. (1919) 263 Pa. 244, 106 Atl. 202, 18 N. C. C. A. 447.

II. Loss of foot.

It will be observed that in the reported case (McLEAN v. AMERICAN R. EXP. Co. ante, 1348) the loss of a foot was held not sustained within the meaning of the Compensation Act, where there was an amputation of so much of the foot as lay forward of the plane of the front surface of the shin bone, and, with the aid of a specially constructed boot and what remained of the foot, the employee was able to walk, the court holding that the words "the loss of a foot" meant the loss of the entire foot, and not a fractional part thereof.

And in State ex rel. Globe Indemnity Co. v. District Ct. (1917) 136 Minn. 147, 161 N. W. 391, there was held not

t
e
a 4 1
p o
e s t p a p o n
t.

t
w a b
v
1

C
4 b
o
t
t
a o
v
b r

(
w f
a t o
v
a j
t
a

i p
b

only entitled the claimant to compensation for the loss of a hand, but, where the injury caused the loss of the use of the entire arm, it was equivalent to the loss of the arm; and it was held that a finding was proper that the amputation of the claimant's arm between the wrist and elbow was equivalent to a loss of the arm, he having lost the use of his arm.

And in Stocin v. C. R. Wilson Body Co. (1919) 205 Mich. 1, 171 N. W. 352, a finding that there was a "loss of an arm" was held justified, and an award therefor sustained, where the evidence showed that the claimant's arm had been crushed at the junction of the upper and middle third, necessitating the amputation of the forearm near the elbow, and that an atrophy of the muscles of the upper arm, and a loss of a great part of the functions, resulted.

In Northwestern Fuel Co. v. Industrial Commission (1915) 161 Wis. 450, 152 N. W. 856, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 533, it was held that a schedule of compensation for specific injuries, including "the loss of an arm at the elbow," had reference solely to the physical loss of the member, and that it did not include a case of an impairment of the use of the arm, where there was no physical severance.

V. Loss of thumb.

In Packer v. Olds Motor Works (1917) 195 Mich. 497, 162 N. W. 80, where claimant's thumb was injured, necessitating the amputation of about one half of the distal phalange, but there remained a stump of the nail on the upper side of the thumb and a good cushion on the underside, it was held that there was not a "loss of a thumb," or "the first phalange of the thumb," within the provision of the act for compensation for specific injuries, the court stating that the statute nowhere provided for compensation for the loss of a part of a phalange.

And, relying on Packer v. Olds Motor Works (Mich.) supra, it was held in Adomites v. Royal Furniture Co. (1917) 196 Mich. 498, 162 N. W. 965, that compensation should not be awarded for the loss of a thumb under the provision for fixed compensation for the loss of certain members, where a thumb was injured and the flesh and all joints of the thumb remained with life and feeling, and there was no actual removal of the thumb as a whole, or of any phalange, although control and use of it were lost by reason of the stiffened, or ankylosed, joints.

And the amputation of the index finger between the second and third joints, and the severance of a small piece of bone, and pieces of tendons, and flesh of the thumb, do not amount to the "loss by severance at or above the second joint, of two or more fingers, including thumb." Weber v. American Silk Spinning Co. (1915) 38 R. I. 309, 95 Atl. 603, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 153.

See also cases under VII. infra.

VI. Loss of fingers.

In Merchant's Case (1919) 118 Me. 96, 106 Atl. 117, where the Compensation Act provided for specified awards "for the loss of the third finger," and "for the loss of the fourth finger," it was held that "loss" meant loss in the ordinary acceptation of the term,—that is, the physical loss of a member,—the court pointing out, by reference to other sections of the act, that there was an intention to distinguish between loss, and loss of use; and it was held that there was not a loss of the fingers, it appearing that the claimant's injury consisted in a laceration of the back of the left hand, which affected the extensor muscles controlling the third and fourth fingers, the third finger being drawn toward the palm of the hand at an angle of about 45 degrees, and the fourth finger at an angle of about 90 degrees, the two fingers being practically useless.

And in Norwood v. Lake Bisteneau Oil Co. (1919) 145 La. 823, 83 So. 25, it was held that, to come within a section of the Compensation Act providing for certain compensation for the loss of a finger, thumb, hand, etc., the member must have been severed or amputated, and that no award under that section was justified, where the

th
g tl
te

(
S ju tu
w te
a

M o p fo
tl
g tl
h ir a n w

a
v u
a fi fi
n
h
A

I fa
tl
tl
a
a tl
d u ir p it
e
(
w tl
e w
f

somewhat contradictory, and rather unsatisfactory in that they state in one place that the amputation of the phalange occurred near the first joint, and in another place that about one third of the bone of the distal phalange was cut off, we think that, construed together and in the light of the evidence, they may be regarded as stating that substantially all of the phalange was cut off, and on that theory the award may be sustained. The Workmen's Compensation Law was adopted in deference to a widespread belief and demand that compensation should be awarded to workmen who were injured and disabled temporarily or permanently in the course of their employment, even though sometimes the accident might occur under such circumstances as would not permit a recovery in an ordinary action at law. The underlying thought was that such a system of compensation would be in the interest of the general welfare by preventing a workman from being deprived of means of support, as the result of an injury received in the course of his employment. The statute was the expression of what was regarded by the legislature as a wise public policy concerning injured employees. Under such circumstances we think that it is to be interpreted with fair liberality, to the end of securing the benefits which it was intended to accomplish. Applying these rules to what happens to be in this case an accident of minor importance, we think we should hold that the provisions of the statute providing compensation for the loss of a certain portion of the finger become operative and applicable when it appears that substantially all of the portion of the finger so designated has been lost, and that we should not interpret such provisions too narrowly, for the purpose of defeating a recovery."

In Feinman v. Albert Mfg. Co. (1915) 170 App. Div. 147, 155 N. Y. Supp. 909, where there was an amputation of the third finger at the first phalange, and cellulitis of the joints followed so that the finger became practically useless, it was held that there was a loss of the entire finger, it appearing that the statute provided that a loss of more than one phalange should be equivalent to the loss of the entire finger; and it was accordingly held that the claimant could not maintain that there had not been a loss of the finger and that she was entitled to an award under a section providing for compensation for "other causes," it appearing that the result of this contention, if acquiesced in, would be that where a person had lost the entire use of a finger, only a portion of which had been amputated, he might be entitled to a larger compensation than one who had suffered the absolute amputation of an entire finger. And to the same effect are Possner v. Smith Metal Bed Co. (1915) — App. Div. —, 155 N. Y. Supp. 912, and O'Neil v. West Side Storage Warehouse Co. (1915) — App. Div. —, 155 N. Y. Supp. 912.

And in Fortino v. Merchants' Despatch Transp. Co. (1916) 171 App. Div. 956, 156 N. Y. Supp. 262, it was held that an award as for the total loss of a finger should be made where an amputation, made necessary by the injury, resulted in the taking of a portion of the second phalange of the finger.

In Tetro v. Superior Printing & Box Co. (1918) 185 App. Div. 73, 172 N. Y. Supp. 722, an award was held erroneous "for the equivalent of one half of the index finger of the right hand," where the claimant lost between a quarter and a half of the distal phalange of the index finger, including a portion of the bone. The court said: "It is a 'loss of the first phalange,' not of a part thereof, which is made equivalent to the loss of one half of the finger. Workmen's Compensation Law (Consol. Laws, chap. 67), § 15, subd. 3. It is not necessary that every particle of the first phalange be lost. Yet it is necessary to show that 'substantially all of the portion of the finger so designated has been lost.' Re Petrie (1915) 215 N. Y. 335, 109 N. E. 549. A loss of one quarter of the first phalange is not the loss of the entire phalange. Thompson v. Sherwood Shoe Co. (1917) 178 App. Div. 319, 164

N. Y. Supp. 869. The loss under consideration here was but little more than that considered in the Thompson Case. It certainly did not approximate a loss of substantially all of the first phalange, which was made the criterion by the Petrie Case. The award was, therefore, erroneous."

And the loss of the tip of a finger, so minute that only by careful examination of the X-ray photograph can any injury at all be discovered, does not amount to the loss of the first phalange of the finger, and therefore the equivalent of the loss of one half of the finger. Mockler v. Hawkes (1916) 173 App. Div. 333, 158 N. Y. Supp. 759.

And in Geiger v. Gotham Can Co. (1917) 177 App. Div. 29, 163 N. Y. Supp. 678, it was held that a loss of one eighth of an inch of the bone of the first phalange of a finger did not constitute a loss of the phalange, and justify an award under the Compensation Act for a loss of one half the finger.

And in Thompson v. Sherwood Shoe Co. (N. Y.) supra, it was held that an award for the loss of one half the finger was erroneous where the claimant suffered the loss of approximately one fourth of an inch of the tip of one of his forefingers, the entire bulbous terminal of the tip of the finger not being taken off. The court said: "The state industrial commission, holding that the injury constituted the loss of the first phalange of the finger, made an award of twenty-three weeks' compensation, which was the full statutory award for the loss of one half the finger. The employer and insurance carrier have appealed, claiming that the loss of so small a portion of the finger did not constitute the loss of substantially all the phalange, and hence that the award was not warranted. In this we think the appellants are correct. In the case of Geiger v. Gotham Can Co. (N. Y.) supra, we held, discussing authorities bearing upon the question, that the amputation of one eighth of the tip of a finger did not entitle the claimant to be awarded compensation for the loss of the entire first phalange. We do not think the loss of an additional one eighth of an inch of the tip of a finger, with the result shown in the case at bar, in any way alters the legal principle, and hence that the award should be set aside and the claim remitted to the commission for further consideration."

And in Ide v. Faul & Timmins (1917) 179 App. Div. 567, 166 N. Y. Supp. 858, where there was an amputation of one quarter of an inch of the distal phalange of the index finger, and one eighth of an inch of the distal phalange of the second finger, it was held that there was not a loss of a substantial portion of the phalanges, and that an award was improper under the provision that the loss of the first phalange should be equal to the loss of half of a finger. The court here distinguished the Petrie Case, supra, on the ground that there substantially all of the phalange was cut off, while in the case at bar this was not the fact.

And in Forbes v. Evening Mail (1921) 194 App. Div. 563, 185 N. Y. Supp. 592, there was held not to be a loss of the first phalange, where less than one fourth of the injured phalanges was amputated. The court said: "In our case the loss is stated in the employer's first report of injury to be a loss of 'pulp of middle and ring fingers.' It is stated in the employee's claim for compensation to be 'bone exposed on middle and ring fingers of right hand.' It is stated in the attending physician's report to be 'amputation of pulp of right middle and ring fingers, with part of distal phalange in each finger chipped off.' The finger loss is not otherwise stated in the testimony, and is not further proven, except by the X-ray photographs which appear in the record. A comparison of the finger phalanges which are sound, with those which have been chipped, as shown by these pictures, indicates that less than one fourth of each of the injured phalanges has been amputated. It is evidence that 'substantially all' of a phalange cannot be removed, and 'substantially all' of the same phalange be left after the removal. Necessarily, therefore, under the Petrie Case, the major portion or more than half of a phalange must be removed before the same is 'substantially lost,' and a loss of the first phalange,' within the meaning of the statute, is made out. Assuming, as nice wording would compel us to assume, that a phalange is a finger bone, no such loss has been proven in this case."

And in Edward E. McMorran & Co. v. Industrial Commission (1919) 290 Ill. 569, 125 N. E. 284, 19 N. C. C. A. 904, it was held that there was not a loss of the first phalange, where about one sixteenth of an inch of the phalange bone was missing, but the injury did not interfere with the use of the distal joint, which still remained serviceable.

And in Baron v. National Metal Spinning & Stamping Co. (1918) 182 App. Div. 284, 169 N. Y. Supp. 337, where the first or distal phalange of a thumb was amputated, and there was an injury to the second or proximal phalange, resulting in the removal of a very small piece of bone, it was held that an award should not be made as for the loss of an entire thumb, under a provision of the act that the loss of the first phalange of the thumb or finger should be considered equal to the loss of one half of such thumb or finger, and that "the loss of more than one phalange shall be considered as the loss of the entire thumb or finger." The court said: "Whether the award should have been for the loss of the entire thumb, or for the loss of only one half the thumb, depends very much upon the construction which should be given the last sentence above quoted. If the sentence means that the loss, however slight, of more than one phalange of a thumb or finger, shall entitle a claimant to an award of compensation for the loss of the entire thumb or finger, then the taking off of the most minute sliver of the second phalange, without regard to whether it in fact disabled the second phalange, would entitle the claimant to an award for the loss of an entire finger. However, if the sentence should be construed as requiring the loss of more phalanges than one in order to constitute the loss of an entire finger, then the loss of a portion of the second phalange must be so substantial as to entitle the claimant to an award, if it were the only phalange injured. Apparently it was not the intention of the legislature that a different rule should be applied to an injury to the proximal phalange of a thumb or finger, from that applicable to the distal phalange, and that an injury, which should be treated as inconsequential when occurring to one phalange should be treated as creating disability and compensative when occurring to another. The statute makes no such distinction. It treats both alike. In either case the disability to the phalange, to be compensative, must be, as was said in the frequently quoted portion of the opinion in Grammici v. Zinn (1916) 219 N. Y. 322, 114 N. E. 397: 'That a hand, or the use of it, was not lost, provided it could fulfil, in a degree fair and worth considering, in any employment for which the claimant was physically and mentally fitted or adaptive, its normal and natural functions.' In Re Petrie (1915) 215 N. Y. 335, 109 N. E. 549, it was held that the provisions of the statute for compensation for the loss of a certain part of a finger become operative and applicable when it appears that substantially all of the portion of the finger so designated has been lost. It is apparent from an inspection of the X-ray picture that the slight chipping off of the second phalange has not lessened the use of the phalange. The commission has made no finding that the injury has so done, or that the loss suffered by the claimant is of a substantial portion of the phalange."

And in Maxwell's Case (1921) 119 Me. 504, 111 Atl. 849, it was held that there was not a loss, even substantially, of all of the phalange, where the employee was able to bend the injured finger at the distal joint, and had practically one third of the bone of the phalange left, and some part, at least, of the nail.

In H. K. Toy & Novelty Co. v. Richards (1917) 68 Ind. App. 653, 117 N.

E. 260, the loss was held within subdivision (a) of the act providing for compensation "for the loss by separation of not more than one phalange of a thumb, or not more than two phalanges of a finger," where an employee lost one eighth of an inch of the first phalange of a finger. The court said: "Appellant contends that subdivision (a) of said section is only applicable when substantially two phalanges of a finger are lost by separation, and that, inasmuch as only a small portion of the first phalange of appellee's finger was thus lost, the provision for compensation for fifteen weeks does not apply. We cannot concur in this contention. The language of the act forbids it. It should be noted that the subdivision in question does not read 'not less than two phalanges,' or 'substantially two phalanges,' but reads 'not more than two phalanges.' A fair and reasonable construction of the language used makes it apparent that the loss by separation of the whole of the distal and middle phalanges of a finger, or any material fraction thereof, entitles an employee to compensation for fifteen weeks. While the loss by separation of only one eighth of an inch in length of the distal phalange of a finger may appear to be a small fraction thereof, it should be remembered that the loss by separation of any portion in length of such phalange necessarily removes the muscular cushion on the end thereof, and thereby seriously interferes with the use of such finger. This fact may have had its influence with the legislature in wording the clause under consideration in such manner as to give fifteen weeks' compensation 'for the loss by separation of not more than . . . two phalanges of a finger.'"

See also subds. V. and VI. supra.

VIII. Loss of hand.

In Grammici v. Zinn (1916) 219 N. Y. 322, 114 N. E. 397, there was held not a loss of a hand where the claimant lost the first, second, and third fingers, and the first phalange of the fourth finger, and it was stated that the fact that the injuries barred the claimant from the particular occupation or vocation he was engaged in did not, in or of itself, tend to prove that the hand was lost. The court said: "In the case at bar, the hand, or the use of it, was not lost, provided it could fulfil, in a degree fair and worth considering, in any employment for which the claimant was physically and mentally fitted or adaptive, its normal and natural functions. In case the hand was destroyed by amputation, directly or indirectly caused by the injuries, to such an extent that it could not thus fulfil its natural functions, it was, within the purview of the law, lost. Sneck v. Travelers' Ins. Co. (1895) 88 Hun, 94, 34 N. Y. Supp. 545, affirmed on opinion below in (1898) 156 N. Y. 669, 50 N. E. 1122. While the loss of a hand necessarily involves the loss of the use of it, the loss of the use of a hand does not involve the actual loss of the hand as a physical member—a distinction the law recognizes and observes. The question here was whether the first or second rate of compensation should be awarded. The uncontradicted evidence established that the hand was not lost, and that the first rate should be awarded."

And in Adams v. Boorum & P. Co. (1917) 179 App. Div. 412, 166 N. Y. Supp. 97, it was held that there could not be an award granting compensation for the loss of a hand, where it appeared that the claimant lost three fingers on a hand, and the index finger remaining was permanently ankylosed, that the thumb was in a normal condition, and the palm was not seriously affected, and the claimant had some use of the hand.

And in Deemer Steel Casting Co. v. Frank (1919) 7 Boyce (Del.) 497, 108 Atl. 283, where an employee was injured, and his index, middle, and ring fingers were amputated back of the metacarpal bones, and the first joint of the thumb was also amputated, but there was testimony that the hand would be 25 per cent efficient, it was held that an award should not be made under a clause providing compensation for all permanent injuries of certain classes, among which was "the loss of a hand," and providing that permanent loss of the use of a hand should be considered as equivalent to the loss of the hand.

In Rockwell v. Lewis (1915) 168 App. Div. 674, 154 N. Y. Supp. 893, appeal dismissed in 218 N. Y. 692, 113 N. E. 1065, where the act provided that the permanent loss of the use of a hand should be considered as the equivalent of the loss of such hand, it was held that there was a loss of the hand, where there had been a complete loss of the index, second, and third fingers, and the fourth finger was stiff and practically useless. The court said: "Such a hand as that is obviously permanently useless,—as much so, practically, as though it were amputated at the wrist,—and no good reason suggests itself why the compensation provided for a hand permanently useless should not be paid, rather than the rate established where one of the particular fingers is lost, and where the use of the hand may not be seriously impaired for doing many kinds of labor. We do not recognize the theory that the question of the use of the hand is to be determined by the particular work in which the claimant has been engaged; the act has not attempted to insure the workman in his particular avocation for life. It simply undertakes to compensate for the injury sustained, and the question presented to the commission is not whether the hand is permanently useless for a particular work, but whether it is useless for any kind of work to which the claimant may be adapted. We have no doubt, however, that, where the loss or injury to fingers and thumb results in the permanent loss of the use of the hand in the practical everyday work of the individual, the commission is authorized to recognize this fact and to treat the hand as lost in fixing the compensation. That is the natural and logical meaning of the language, which seeks to do approximate justice to the individual, and it should not be construed to work an injustice in a case such as is here presented."

And in Dutcher v. American Exp. Co. (1918) 183 App. Div. 162, 170 N. Y.

Supp. 442, it was held that there was an equivalent of the loss of the right hand, where the claimant sustained injuries which necessitated the amputation of all four fingers of the hand, up to and including the greater portion of their proximal phalanges, leaving a stump with no ends of the fingers or separations between the ends protruding, but with no involvement of the metacarpal bones, it also appearing that there were a laceration and fracture of the terminal phalange of his right thumb, resulting in some thickening, due to the growth of callos, and in the muscles and tendons becoming somewhat shortened and smaller, impairing the full use of the thumb, and resulting in inability to bring the thumb into conjunction with the palm of the hand, although he could hold a pencil for a short time between the thumb and palm, and write a little, and could also use the hand to some extent in his employment.

And in Cobb v. Library Bureau (1916) 176 App. Div. 91, 162 N. Y. Supp. 291, appeal dismissed in (1917) 221 N. Y. 574, 116 N. E. 1041, it was held that a finding by the commission that the employee had lost the use of his hand should be affirmed, where he had lost all the fingers, including the palm of the hand, and all the evidence before the commission, consisting of reports made by the employer, the employee, and the attending physician, was to the effect that he had probably lost the use of his hand.

And in Bristow Cotton Oil Co. v. State Industrial Commission (1920) 77 Okla. 316, 188 Pac. 658, where the Compensation Act provided that the permanent loss of the use of a hand shall be considered as the equivalent of the loss of such hand, it appearing that four fingers and a portion of the palm were amputated, leaving about an inch of the palm and the thumb, which were of little use, it was held that there was a loss of the use of, and therefore a loss of, the hand.

And in Chovic v. Pittsburgh Crucible Steel Co. (1919) 71 Pa. Super. Ct. 350, where the act provided that permanent loss of the use of a hand of the whet hand not re an a had l ant l of th suffe short move very

In N. B a los lost

In (191 when claim and capa was dent ing of a appa
the ered

In (191 when hanc shou clau

Arr

1.
ing is th asce sim and dem

[2

H

Appeal — error in evidence — affirmation.

2. Error in the admission or rejection of evidence will not be sufficient ground for reversal, when it appears upon the whole case, including the admissions of the defendant, that the verdict would not have been changed, and ought to be affirmed.

[See 2 R. C. L. 255; 2 R. C. L. Supp. 478.]

Criminal law — right to special verdict.

3. Section 5, chap. 131, of the Code (§ 4909), authorizing the circuit court to submit interrogatories to the jury upon the trial of any issue, for the purpose of having it render separate verdicts upon any one or more of the issues, does not apply to jury trials in criminal cases.

[See 27 R. C. L. 866.]

ERROR to the Criminal Court for Harrison County to review a judgment convicting defendant of assault with intent to kill. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Law & McCue for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. E. T. England, Attorney General, R. A. Blessing, Assistant Attorney General, and Steptoe & Johnson, for the State:

If an officer, without lawful authority or just cause, arrests a person, there is an illegal assault which such person has a right at once to resist and prevent.

Whart. Homicide, § 408, p. 631; Stockton v. State, 25 Tex. 772; Miers v. State, 34 Tex. Crim. Rep. 161, 53 Am. St. Rep. 705, 29 S. W. 1074; Miller v. State, 31 Tex. Crim. Rep. 609, 37 Am. St. Rep. 836, 21 S. W. 925; Noles v. State, 26 Ala. 31, 62 Am. Dec. 711; Coleman v. State, 121 Ga. 594, 49 S. E. 716.

Where one is about to be unlawfully deprived of his liberty, he may resist the aggressions of the offender, whether of a private citizen or a public officer.

State v. Gum, 68 W. Va. 105, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 150, 69 S. E. 463; Whart. Homicide, p. 737; Conraddy v. People, 5 Park. Crim. Rep. 234.

Lively, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This writ of error brings up for review the judgment of the criminal court of Harrison county, rendered on the 18th of November, 1920, which sentenced J. E. Boggs to confinement in the penitentiary for two years on a verdict finding him guilty of an unlawful assault with intent to maim, disfigure, disable, and kill Clyde Coffindaffer.

A justice of the peace had issued a warrant for the apprehension of Joe Costa for a violation of the prohibition law, and had appointed

John Siers as a special constable to make the arrest. Siers had obtained information that Costa was expected to arrive at Clarksburg in the nighttime, in an automobile, with a load of spirituous liquors, and that he would come from Shinnston by Maulsby bridge across the West Fork river. He had received information that Costa was a "bad" man, and would likely resist arrest, and that there would be danger in making the arrest. He secured the assistance of Boggs, the defendant, and George Darnell, both of whom were members of the department of public safety and stationed at that time in the vicinity of Clarksburg, where there was an industrial disturbance, informing them of the character of the person to be arrested and the possible danger attending the arrest. This special constable and these two members of the department of public safety went in an automobile to the Maulsby bridge, arriving there about 9 o'clock on the evening of October 5, 1920, and stationed themselves at the end of the bridge nearest to Clarksburg for the purpose of apprehending Costa if he should pass that way. The bridge was a covered bridge, and about 20 feet wide, and the record does not disclose its length. They had detained, temporarily, several persons until about the hour of 10:30 P. M., when an automobile coming from the direction of Shinnston entered the bridge. In this automobile were Dr. Clyde Coffindaffer, F. Byrl Wyer and wife, and John Ashcraft, who was driving the car. Clyde Coffindaffer was a physician, well known in that community, practising his profession at Clarksburg, and was then taking Mrs. Wyer, who was suffering from peritonitis, to a hospital at Clarksburg. She was sitting on the rear seat, with her husband on her left side. The doctor was sitting in the right front seat by the side of Ashcraft, and had his back toward the right door of the car, and was assisting in steadying Mrs. Wyer with his left hand. This car was a four-seated Chandler chummy roadster, and was somewhat similar to the car which Costa was supposed to be using. It appears that Siers, the special constable, was standing on the left-hand side of the bridge, a short distance inside thereof, and to the left of this car as it approached. He had an electric flashlight in one hand, which he waved at the approaching car, and two of the witnesses in the car stated that he had a pistol in the other hand. Siers denied that he had a pistol. Boggs was on the right-hand side of the car as it approached, and inside of the covered bridge a short distance, and just in front of another car which was standing there, which had been detained, and which belonged to a Mr. Raikes. Darnell was also standing on the same side of the bridge, and a short distance from the other end of the last-named car. As the doctor's car approached these men it slowed down, but as Siers and Boggs approached it, seemingly in a threatening manner, and without giving information of their design, the chauffeur quickly "put on more gas," and the speed of the car was quickly accelerated. Shooting then began, and there is considerable conflict as to whether the first shot was fired from the left-hand side of the car or from the other side. Siers states that Boggs was on the same side of the bridge with himself. Boggs stated that he was on the opposite side, and all of the other witnesses place him on the opposite side, from Siers. All of the occupants of the car state that the first shot penetrated the rear left-hand tire of the car, releasing the air therefrom, and almost immediately after the first shot the man standing on the opposite side of the car, and 4 or 5 feet from the car, presented his pistol at Dr. Coffindaffer, and shot him in the back, the doctor exclaiming, "Oh, I am shot!" The car was in rapid motion, and after it left the bridge some more shots were fired. The wounded man was immediately taken to the hospital at Clarksburg, where he received medical attention. The testimony of Boggs does not coincide with that of the occupants of the car respecting the actual shooting. He corroborates the state's evidence as to the place he was standing, but testified that after he approached the car when it slowed down, and after it had started to go faster, he commanded them to halt, and that the car had passed him and had almost reached Darnell, who was standing several feet from him, when Darnell also called on the car to halt, and he. Boggs, then began shooting, not at the occupants of the car, but at the tires, and for the sole purpose of stopping the car. He did not know that anyone was shot that night, and had no idea that anyone had been wounded until the next morning, when he heard from Siers, or saw it in the newspapers, that Dr. Coffindaffer had been severely wounded. He stated both before and on the trial that all of the shots which were fired that night were fired by him with a 45 Colt's Army revolver. Immediately upon learning that Dr. Coffindaffer had been wounded, he came to Clarksburg, admitted the shooting to the sheriff and others, and went to the doctor's sick room, where he admitted the shooting, but stated that he had no intention whatever of hurting anyone, and that his shots were in good faith at the tires of the automobile, and for the purpose of stopping it in order to make the arrest of Costa.

Boggs, Siers, and Darnell were indicted for malicious wounding, and Boggs elected to be tried separately. On the evidence, a summary only of which is above given, the jury found the defendant not guilty of malicious wounding, but of unlawful wounding with the intent to maim, disfigure, etc. Five instructions were offered by the state, all of which were objected to by the defense, but all were given except instruction No. 3. Instruction No. 1 was to the effect that an officer had no right to kill, or attempt to kill, in endeavoring to make an arrest for a misdemeanor, and unless the jury believed from the evidence that these officers were attempting to arrest Coffindaffer for the committing of the felony, or in the act of committing a felony, that the defendant was not authorized to shoot with intent to kill for the purpose of arresting Coffindaffer. This instruction simply lays down the law of arrest, and it is to the effect that defendant was not justified in shooting Coffindaffer with intent to maim, etc., unless the jury believe that Coffindaffer was doing an act which would justify such shooting. We can see no good objection to this instruction. It is apparent that defendant and the other officers were attempting to make the arrest of Joe Costa, the person for whom they had the warrant, and, when the car began to go faster at the command to halt, they erroneously concluded that Dr. Coffindaffer was the person for whom they had the warrant, or that he was in that car; and the instruction simply propounded the law applicable to that situation, to the effect that an officer is not justified in shooting with intent to kill the person for whom he has a warrant, unless that person has committed, or is in the act of committing, a felony; and in no case is an officer justified in shooting with like intent in making an arrest for a misdemeanor. The instruction is further objected to because there was no evidence of any attempt to kill anyone on that occasion; that the shooting was accidental. But the evidence of all the witnesses who were in the car was positive that the pistol which did the wounding was fired at Dr. Coffindaffer's back, when only a few feet from him. The question whether it was accidental or intentional is one for the jury. A man is presumed to intend that which he does, or which is the immediate or necessary consequence of his act. If the jury believed beyond a reasonable doubt that the shot was fired with the intent to kill or wound the doctor, then there was no justification, unless they further believed that the doctor was committing, or attempting to commit, a felony. These officers were evidently attempting to make an arrest, or, at least, to stop the occupants of the car for the purpose of ascertaining if Costa was therein in order to make the arrest. Neither purpose alone would justify the shooting of the occupants, unless with the qualification set out in the instruction. It is argued that the doctor should have stopped and permitted these men to make an examination of the car and search for Costa. But even if this be true, and he did not stop or permit search, that alone would not justify the defendant in shooting him, or in such reckless shooting as would be likely to kill or wound any of the occupants of the car.

Arrest—shooting innocent person—liability.

Objection is made to instruction No. 2, which was given for the state, because it is more or less abstract in laying down the law of arrest, in that an officer acts at his own peril in making such arrests; that it is unlawful in making the arrest of a person without at the time having a warrant for him, unless he is at the time committing a felony, or in the act of committing a felony, or has committed some offense less than a felony in the presence or view of such officer. While this instruction is somewhat abstract, we cannot see that it might have or did mislead the jury. Reed v. Com. 98 Va. 817, 36 S. E. 399.

given for the state, while objected to at the trial, are not insisted upon as error here. We can see no error in them. They correctly state the law on reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the prisoner.

Five instructions were asked for by the defendant, and all given except No. 3, which was refused, and error is assigned for that reason. This instruction was to the effect that the defendant, then assisting officers who had a warrant for Costa and awaiting him on the bridge, had the lawful right to temporarily detain Dr. Coffindaffer long enough to ascertain if he was Costa or some other person, and to use such reasonable force as was necessary to cause the doctor to pause for that purpose, if he refused such request.

The evidence did not disclose that Dr. Coffindaffer or any other person in the car knew that these men had a warrant for Costa or for any other person. He knew Siers, but it must be remembered that Siers was a special constable for this arrest only. Their mission was not known to him, nor did he know that they were officers; and the command of "Halt!" was not very communicative of their authority or design. Besides, if they had any right to detain him temporarily, the force used was not reasonable. We cannot accede to the proposition that an officer with a misdemeanor warrant may station himself on the highway and command innocent persons to halt, and if they, not much greater reason where an innocent traveler on the highway is not even sought to be arrested, but to be detained for examination. This instruction would tend to lead the jury to understand that the law would justify the defendant in using force necessary to cause Dr. Coffindaffer to pause for the purpose of being investigated. The force used was the firing of the shots, one of which almost caused death. Even this force was not sufficient to cause him to pause; on the contrary, it caused him to flee for his life. The instruction would, if given, have tended to justify the offense charged. Under this evidence the instruction was misleading and properly refused. It is argued that if an officer can break a door to enter a dwelling house in order to search for a criminal supposed to have taken refuge therein, then like force can be used to stop and enter an automobile and make search. But before an officer can break the doors and enter a dwelling house to make an arrest, he must first make due demand as an officer armed with authority, and a refusal would not justify the taking of life. The controlling feature on this question in this case is not what might have been done, but what was actually done.

Shooting with firearms by officers in pursuit of fugitives charged with minor crimes, as a ruse to prevent further flight, is illegal as a reckless use of firearms, and was disapproved in State use of Johnson v. Cunning- would attempt to run over the officers with his automobile; and also that Costa was expected to come through the bridge that night; and that he (Siers) had informed the defendant of what had been told him in that regard by Lohm; also, that the court refused to allow the warrant to be put in evidence, which witness had as a special officer for Costa, for violation of the prohibition law. The record discloses that practically all of this evidence went to the jury in another form.

The defendant testified that he was requested by Siers to help him make an arrest of a man who was coming in with liquor.

He [Siers] said he [Costa] was a bad man, and he did not feel like going after him alone; he wanted some assistance, and I felt it was my duty to do so, and I did.

Question: Was that man Joe Costa?

Answer: Joe Costa.

Question: At the time you went down to the bridge, did you know, or had you learned, that this fellow, Joe Costa, was a bad man, and would likely resist arrest?

Answer: I did.

Siers also testified that he had a warrant for Joe Costa at the time he went to the bridge, and requested the defendant and Mr. Darnell to accompany him to assist in making the arrest, and that they were all at the bridge for that purpose. The information which Siers had received from Lohm went to the jury, and the prisoner received the benefit of it. The fact that Siers had a warrant for Costa went to the jury, and it is not perceived how the warrant itself, if introduced to the jury, would have strengthened that fact. Moreover, it is apparent that the jury gave the defendant the benefit of this evidence. It did not find him guilty of malicious shooting. The object of that evidence was to repel the presumption of malice in the use of the deadly weapon, and the reason why the defendant was at the bridge. Malice was successfully eliminated. The verdict was for unlawful wounding. The error, if any, in refusing to allow Siers to give this evidence (which in fact went to the jury in another form), was harmless, in view of the verdict. State v. Miller, 85 W. Va. 326, 102 S. E. 303. Had Costa been in Dr. Coffindaffer's place, the jury would have been justified in finding a verdict for unlawful wounding. There is conflict in the evidence as to the actual shooting. All of the occupants of the car, four in number, testify that the shot which wounded the doctor was fired by a man standing immediately to the right of the car, and within 4 or 5 feet of the doctor, and that he pointed his pistol directly at, and in line with, the doctor's shoulder. The doctor felt the burn on his neck. The ball entered the posterior part of his right shoulder, close to the upper portion of the shoulder blade, or scapula, and came out just beneath the collar bone, which it broke, and lodged in his clothing. There was evidence that a pistol ball had penetrated the rear tire on the left side of the car, entering from the left side of the tire near the rim, and, glancing upward, came out of the opposite side of the tire, making a ragged hole. All of the occupants of the car testified that the first shot came from the left side, the side where Siers stood, and they heard the air go out of the tire, and immediately afterwards the shot which wounded the doctor was fired from the right by a man standing very close to the car, and in front of the other car standing on that side of the bridge. This was about the position which the defendant testified he occupied at the time of the shooting. The defendant very frankly and promptly stated that he had done all the shooting that was done there that night, and the other defendants make the same statement. As heretofore stated, the main conflict in the evidence concerning the immediate shooting arises between the statement of the witnesses that the shot was fired directly into the back of the doctor from a man on the right, and the statement of Boggs that the shots were not fired until after the car had passed him. The physical fact that the doctor was shot in the right shoulder, and the range of the bullet directly through his body, corroborates the testimony of the state's witnesses. These questions of fact were passed upon by the jury, and adversely to the defendant. It was within the province of the jury, under this testimony to say that the defendant either did the act maliciously or unlawfully. The jury was instructed by defendant's instruction No. 1 on the question of malice. That instruction reads as follows: "The court instructs the jury that the defense of accidental injury to Dr. Coffindaffer goes to the very gist of the charge, and denies all criminal intent, and throws the burden of proving the intent as charged in the indictment, beyond a reasonable doubt, upon the state. Therefore, although you may believe that the defendant Boggs did shoot and wound Dr. Coffindaffer, yet, unless you believe beyond all reasonable doubt that such shooting was done with intent to maim, disfigure, disable, and kill him, you must find the defendant not guilty of the malicious and unlawful shooting." This instruction put before the jury the full theory of the defense, and it may be that the result was the best for the defendant that he could expect under the circumstances. At least, the jury so disposed of the case, and it is not within the province of this court to gainsay it.

Appeal—error in evidence—affirmance.

Exception was made to the ruling of the court in refusing to permit Dr. Coffindaffer to state, on cross-examination, a conversation between himself and two men who passed him on Gipsy hill, a place about a mile from the bridge and between Shinnston and the bridge. The doctor had stated, on cross-examination, that he had passed two men at that point, who asked him if he had any whisky, and, if so,

"you had better not go ahead." To which he replied, "We haven't got any whisky; we have got a very sick woman;" and I said,—I don't know whether I said, 'We are in a hurry,' or not,—and they began to say something more, and I thought the fellows were drinking, and we just drove on." The defense then asked, "Now, doctor, I want you to state what these parties said to you when they came to you, or when they drove apast you, on the road before you reached the bridge." This question was objected to, and the court sustained the objection because the witness had practically answered the question, and because the court said it was not pertinent to the issue. There was another ground upon which this question was not proper. This was a cross-examination of the doctor, and he had not testified to this matter on direct examination. As to this conversation between these witnesses, the defense was making the doctor their own witness. He could have been recalled for that purpose when the defense put in its evidence. State v. Hatfield, 48 W. Va. 561, 37 S. E. 626.

Interrogatories were prepared by the defense and submitted to the jury, touching the questions of malice and the intention of the defendant in firing the shots, and were carried by the jury to their room, and afterwards, and before they returned their verdict, on motion of the state, these interrogatories were withdrawn from the jury over the objection and exception of the defense, and this action of the court is insisted upon here as error. The statute allowing interrogatories is found in chap. 120 of the Acts of 1882, and is § 5 of chap. 131 of the Code (§ 4909), which chapter relates to trials in civil cases. There is no reference to propounding such interrogatories in chapter 159 of the Code (§§ 5577-5601), which relates to the trial of criminal cases. The statute is as follows: "A circuit court may in any case before it, other than a chancery case, have an issue tried, or an inquiry of damages made by a jury, and determine all questions concerning the legality of evidence and other matters of law which may arise. Upon the trial of any issue or issues by a jury, whether under this section or not, the court may on motion of any party, direct the jury, in addition to rendering a general verdict, to render separate verdicts upon any one or more of the issues, or to find in writing upon particular questions of fact to be stated in writing. The action of the court upon such motion shall be subject to review as in other cases. Where any such separate verdict or special findings shall be inconsistent with the general verdict, the former shall control the latter, and the court shall give judgment accordingly." It is at once apparent from the context that right to special verdict.

Criminal law—

these interrogatories were intended to be used only in the trial of civil cases. On this question Judge Cooley says: "How far the jury are to judge of the law as well as of the facts is a question a discussion of which we do not propose to enter upon. If it be their choice to do so, they may return specially what facts they find established by the evidence, and allow the court to apply the law to those facts, and thereby to determine whether the party is guilty or not. But they are not obliged in any case to find a special verdict; they have a right to apply for themselves the law to the facts, and to express their own opinion, upon the whole evidence, of the defendant's guilt." Cooley, Const. Lim. 7th ed. p. 461.

"Statutes permitting findings to be required in response to interrogatories are held not to apply to criminal cases, for the reason that to so apply them would be to impair the right of trial by jury secured by the Constitution. It is one of the most essential features of the right of trial by jury that no jury should be compelled to find any but a general verdict in criminal cases, and the removal of this safeguard would violate its design and destroy its spirit.

"But though the jury cannot be compelled to answer specially, it is undoubtedly at liberty to include special findings in its verdict." Clementson, Special Verdicts, p. 49.

See also People v. Roat, 117 Mich. 578, 76 N. W. 91; People v. Marion, 29 Mich. 31; Maiden v. Com. 82 Ky. 133; Smith v. State, 59 Ohio St. 350, 52 N. E. 826; State v. Fooks, 65 Iowa, 196, 452, 21 N. W. 773.

This law has been on our statute books for thirty-eight years, and it has never been considered as applying to criminal cases by either the bench or the bar. This fact could be considered in the interpretation of the application of this statute, if it were necessary. "A construction of a statute that has been acted upon by the bench and bar for nearly half a century should not be disturbed. The common consent and opinion of the legal profession on a question of the construction and practical operation of a statute were held to be of persuasive force." 2 Lewis's Sutherland, Stat. Constr. 2d ed. p. 887.

As above intimated, we are of the opinion that special interrogatories cannot be propounded to the jury in criminal cases, and we see no error in the action of the trial court in withdrawing these interrogatories from the jury. In the first place, they should not have been submitted to the jury.

This is a most unfortunate case, both for the defendant and for Dr. Coffindaffer. The defendant is only twenty-six years of age, and for nearly two years he was with the American Expeditionary Forces in Europe, and his services were acknowledged by decorations for gallantry on the battlefield. Possibly his military training impelled him to act overhastily when the occupants of the car refused to heed the command of "Halt!" Possibly the influence of Army life, and the incidents of the battlefield, made it more difficult for him to heed the civil requirements in making arrests.

this court, perceiving no error in his trial, can give him no relief. .

Petition for rehearing denied May 10, 1921.

ANNOTATION.

Criminal law: criminal responsibility of peace officers for killing or wounding one whom they wished to investigate or identify.

The reported case (STATE v. BOGGS, ante, 1360) is the only one disclosed by an extended search wherein the criminal responsibility of peace officers for shooting to prevent the escape of one whom they wish to investigate or identify, in the belief or upon the suspicion that he is the particular misdemeanor whom they are seeking to arrest, and for whom they have a warrant, has been passed upon; but the decision therein to the effect that an officer with a misdemeanor warrant, who stations himself on a highway and commands innocent persons to halt, and, upon their refusal to do so because of lack of knowledge of his character, intent, or design, shoots so recklessly that fatalities or serious injuries occur, is criminally responsible, even though the officer believed that the supposed misdemeanor was attempting to escape, is in accord with the general rule governing the rights of peace officers in making arrests, which is that they must, at least, act in good faith and be free from negligence.

A somewhat similar situation was involved in the case of Wiley v. State (1918) 19 Ariz. 346, L.R.A.1918D, 373, 170 Pac. 869, which held that a peace officer, going by automobile at night to a point where he had been notified a felony had been committed, for the purpose of making an investigation, and having no warrant for arrest, was guilty of second-degree murder, where, upon overtaking an automobile upon the road and failing to bring it to halt by a command which he should have known was not heard, he killed an innocent occupant by firing a bullet into the car for the purpose of enforcing his command. This was upon the theory that the officer had no reasonable and probable cause to suspect the commission of a felony by the occupants of the other car which he had overtaken on the road, although he and his companions testified that they had believed that the other car was coming toward them, and upon their approach had suddenly turned back.

And in Castle v. Lewis (1918) 166 C. C. A. 279, 254 Fed. 917, a habeas corpus proceeding to secure the release of Federal officers who had killed a person, in attempting to arrest him for suspected unlawful transportation of intoxicating liquors, by firing at a fleeing automobile in which the deceased was riding, it was held that even conceding that the officers honestly believed that the person killed was, at the time of the shooting, actually engaged in unlawfully transporting intoxicating liquors, they could not act arbitrarily, but must use only such force as an ordinarily prudent and intelligent person would have deemed necessary under the circumstances. In reaching this conclusion the court said: "Was there any error of law, or mistake of fact, in that the judge failed to find under the evidence that the petitioners were acting within the scope of their authority in shooting into Mays's car and taking the chance of killing some of its occupants? Conceding, for the purpose of considering this issue only, that the petitioners were authorized to arrest the occupants of Mays's car without a warrant, for the felony of introducing liquor into Osage county, that authority included the lawful power to use such force as they then had reasonable cause to believe, and in the exercise of their sound discretion they did honestly believe, was necessary to make the arrest; but it included the right to use, no more, and the use of any greater force was beyond the scope of their authority, unauthorized, and without justification. Here, too, the measure of necessary force is that which an ordinarily prudent and intelligent person, with the knowledge and in the situation of the arresting officer, would have deemed necessary. 5 C. J. 424, § 59; 1 Bishop, New Crim. Proc. § 159. The officers testified that, as Mays's car approached them, they raised their hands and called "Halt!" The living occupants of Mays's car testified that they saw no motion and heard no call to stop. The officers and occupants of Mays's car testified that the former fired the first shot into the side of Mays's car as it passed them; the living occupants of the car testified that, as they passed, all they heard was a command to kill them all as the shooting commenced. The officers testified no such command was given, but the witnesses agree that the shooting continued for some time after the car passed, and that from eight to twenty shots were fired. Several of these shots struck the automobile; some passed through the back of it above the seat; some passed over it, and struck in the road ahead of it, as it was going up a hill. The officers testified that they fired into the machinery below the body of the car, and at the tires, for the purpose of stopping the car, and that they did not intend to injure the occupants. The officers knew Mays, Mosier, and Tinker; they recognized them, or some of them as Mays's car approached, and recognized that the car was Mays's; they knew that the lived in Pawhuska, toward which city they were going, and that they had lived there for many years. Mays was a married man, and had two children there. The occupants of Mays's car had no weapons, and had not resisted arrest; they testified they did not know that the officers wanted them to stop, or wanted to arrest them, until after the shooting. They were not fugitives from justice; they were not violent men; they were not itinerants or strangers. So it is that the evidence as to the sayings and doings of the parties when Mays's car passed the officers presents a substantial conflict as to what was said and done by the officers that invokes the consideration of a jury, and the facts that all the occupants of the car, except Roberts, were known by the officers to be settled residents and citizens of Pawhuska, and that they were going towards their homes there, whence the officers themselves came, render it difficult to conclude that a person of ordinary prudence and intelligence, knowing the facts and circumstances which these officers knew, could have had cause to believe, if he were in their situation, or could have honestly believed, that he could not have accomplished the arrest of the occupants of Mays's car in Pawhuska, which was only 5 miles away, or that it was necessary in the exercise of sound discretion, in order to make their arrest, to fire into the automobile and take the dangerous chances of injuring or killing some of its occupants. The judge below was unable to reach that conclusion, and no error or mistake in his findings here is discovered." And see People v. McCarthy (1888) 47 Hun (N. Y.) 491, affirmed in (1888) 110 N. Y. 309, 18 N. E. 128, wherein it was held that an officer who, upon seeing an unknown person, who was in fact guilty of no offense, running along a public street in the nighttime, and upon his failure to stop upon command, fired and killed him, could not justify the shooting by showing that burglaries had recently been committed in the neighborhood, and that he was searching for the offenders.

And, of course, there is considerable authority to the general effect that a peace officer cannot shoot to stop a person upon a suspicion that he has committed a felony, so that when such an officer does so shoot, and no felony has in fact been committed, the officer is both civilly and criminally liable; in other words, that the common-law rule allowing an officer to kill a felon in order to arrest him cannot be extended to cases of suspected felonies. That an officer acts at his peril in such a case, see Petrie v. Cartwright (1902) 114 Ky. 103, 59 L.R.A. 720, 102 Am.

St. Rep. 274, 70 S. W. 297, 13 Am. Crim. Rep. 72. And see Castle v. Lewis (Fed.) supra, wherein it is stated that the general rule is that, while an officer may arrest without a warrant under certain circumstances, he may not so arrest arbitrarily, or on a mere belief or suspicion that the party he arrests is guilty of a felony. Naturally, if he cannot arrest at all, he cannot use force. See also 5 C. J. title "Arrest," § 46. And see Kopplekom v. Huffman (1881) 12 Neb. 95, 10 N. W. 577. G. J. C.

CARL WILHELM OLSEN, Respt.,
v.

DANISH BROTHERHOOD IN AMERICA et al., Appts.

Minnesota Supreme Court—July 22, 1921.

(— Minn. —, 184 N. W. 178.)

Courts — affairs of foreign corporations — interference.

1. Courts refuse to entertain actions which interfere with or attempt to regulate the management of the internal affairs of a foreign corporation. Hence the complaint herein, which shows that the action is brought by plaintiff in his own behalf and in behalf of the other members of the defendant corporation, a fraternal beneficiary association incorporated under the laws of Nebraska, to enjoin said defendant and its officers from enforcing changes made in the assessment rates and benefits of the association, was demurrable.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1383.]

Corporation — foreign — internal management.

2. Changing rates of assessments and benefits in a fraternal beneficiary association pertains to the management of its internal affairs.

[See 12 R. C. L. 32.]

Headnotes by HOLT, J.

APPEAL by defendants from an order of the District Court for St. Louis County (Dancer, J.) overruling a demurrer to the amended complaint in an action brought to enjoin them from enforcing changes made in the assessment rates and benefits of the defendant association. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Warren E. Greene and Mason M. Forbes for appellants.

Mr. James A. Wharton, for respondent:

The changes made affect rights of a contractual nature, which could not be legally affected without the consent of the plaintiff.

Bornstein v. District Grand Lodge, I. O. B. B. 2 Cal. App. 624, 84 Pac. 271; Sexton v. National L. Ins. Co. 40 Colo. 60, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 504, 90 Pac. 58; Pittinger v. Pittinger, 28 Colo. 308, 89 Am. St. Rep. 193, 64 Pac. 195; Hart v. Life & Annuity Asso. 86 Kan. 318, 120 Pac. 363, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 672; Covenant Mut. Life Asso. v. Kentner, 188 Ill. 431, 58 N. E. 966; Wright v. Knights of Maccabees, 196 N. Y.

391, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 423, 134 Am. St. Rep. 838, 89 N. E. 1078; Ayers v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. 188 N. Y. 280, 80 N. E. 1020; Langan v. Supreme Council, A. L. H. 174 N. Y. 266, 66 N. E. 932; Green v. Supreme Council, R. A. 206 N. Y. 591, 100 N. E. 411; Pearson v. Knight Templars & M. Indemnity Co. 114 Mo. App. 283, 89 S. W. 588; Morton v. Supreme Council, R. L. 100 Mo. App. 76, 73 S. W. 259; Rockwell v. Knights Templars & M. Mut. Aid Asso. 134 App. Div. 736, 119 N. Y. Supp. 515; Smythe v. Supreme Lodge, K. P. 198 Fed. 967; Weber v. Supreme Tent, K. M. 172 N. Y. 490, 92 Am. St. Rep. 753, 65 N. E. 258; Campbell v. American Ben. Club

Fraternity, 100 Mo. App. 249, 73 S. W. 342.

Amendments to by-laws will be held to have a prospective operation only, unless a contrary intention clearly appears. - Voigt v. Kersten, 164 Ill. 314, 45 N. E. 543.

A fraternal society cannot, by amending its by-laws, cut down the amount of its benefit certificate.

Newhall v. Supreme Council, A. L. H. 181 Mass. 117, 63 N. E. 1; Wright v. Knights of Maccabees, 196 N. Y. 391, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 423, 134 Am. St. Rep. 838, 89 N. E. 1078; Ayers v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. 188 N. Y. 280, 80 N. E. 1020; Evans v. Southern Tier Masonic Relief Asso. 182 N. Y. 453, 75 N. E. 317; Bornstein v. District Grand Lodge, I. O. B. B. supra.

Amendments such as proposed in the case at bar were either held beyond the powers of the association, or unreasonable, or inoperative, so far as existing contracts were concerned, because they attempted to change vested rights.

Ruder v. National Council, K. L. S. 124 Minn. 431, 145 N. W. 118; Tebo v. Supreme Council, R. A. 89 Minn. 3, 93 N. W. 513; Thibert v. Supreme Lodge, K. H. 78 Minn. 448, 47 L.R.A. 136, 79 Am. St. Rep. 412, 81 N. W. 220; Leland v. Modern Samaritans, 111 Minn. 207, 126 N. W. 728; Olson v. Court of Honor, 100 Minn. 117, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 521, 117 Am. St. Rep. 676, 110 N. W. 374, 10 Ann. Cas. 622; Sisson v. Supreme Court of Honor, 104 Mo. App. 54, 78 S. W. 297; Edwards v. American Patriots, 162 Mo. App. 231, 144 S. W. 1117; Young v. Railway Mail Asso. 126 Mo. App. 325, 103 S. W. 557; Umbarger v. Supreme Council, R. L. — Mo. App. —, 118 S. W. 1199; Hines v. Modern Woodmen, 41 Okla. 135, L.R.A. 1915A, 264, 137 Pac. 675; Palmer v. Protected Home Circle, 252 Pa. 201, 97 Atl. 188; Ericson v. Supreme Ruling, F. M. C. 105 Tex. 170, 146 S. W. 160; Supreme Lodge, K. P. v. Mims, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 167 S. W. 835; Eaton v. International Travelers' Asso. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 136 S. W. 817; Jaeger v. Grand Lodge, O. H. S. 149 Wis. 354, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 494, 135 N. W. 869; Stirn v. Supreme Lodge, B. S. B. S. 150 Wis. 13, 136 N. W. 164.

Holt, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appeal from an order overruling a demurrer to an amended complaint, the questions involved being certified as doubtful.

It will not be necessary to set out the lengthy pleading, in view of the ground upon which we dispose of the appeal. The substance of the allegations, only, need be mentioned, and are these: That the defendant corporation is a fraternal beneficiary association, organized and existing under the laws of Nebraska, the other defendants being the officers of a subordinate lodge of the association at Duluth; that plaintiff is a member in good standing, and holds a membership benefit certificate issued by the association; that the association has been authorized to do business in this state; that at a convention of the association it undertook to change its by-laws, radically altering the membership assessments and the benefits; and that these changes were not made in accordance with the constitution or by-laws of the association, and were not made so as to comply with a certain Nebraska statute pleaded. Plaintiff alleges that he brings the action "in his own behalf and in behalf of other members of said order;" that defendants are about to promulgate and enforce said changes and amendment, and thereby irrevocably destroy the vested rights and equities of plaintiff and other members of said order; "that said amendment and change in their contract of insurance will impose increased rates, liens, charges, and in some cases loss of death benefit; will impair the value of certificates and deplete the present surplus funds; will create lapses with extended insurance privilege never intended in original certificate; and that said act is wrongful, unauthorized, illegal, and unreasonable, and constitutes a breach of contract with plaintiff and other members, and each of them," in nine specified respects pertaining to each member of the order. The prayer is that the said amendment and changes in the rates and plan of assessments be declared null and void, and that said defendants and each of them and their successors and agents be forever restrained "from carrying them into effect."

The demurrer was on two grounds: (1) That the court has no jurisdiction of the subject of the action, in that it appears that the acts complained of affect plaintiff solely as a member of the defendant corporation, and that the action relates altogether to the management of the internal affairs of a Nebraska corporation; and (2) the facts stated do not constitute a cause of action.

It is to be noted that the action is not confined to plaintiff's own contract and its preservation. It is brought in behalf of other members of the corporation, also, and to prohibit defendants from enforcing the adopted changes of rates and benefits. Such action in behalf of others is authorized under the proviso to § 7674, Gen. Stat. 1913. But it is quite apparent that fixing rates and benefits of a corporation of this kind pertains to the management of its internal affairs. Benefits promised must come from rates paid or assessments levied against the members. The very existence of the corporation depends upon a proper adjustment of rates and benefits. How this is to be done is peculiarly a problem of internal management, to be solved by the governing body of the corporation, or by delegates of its members in convention assembled. The necessary changes to maintain a proper ratio between receipts and disbursements must be worked out within the organization, under the supervision of its officers, and in the manner prescribed by its laws and the laws of the state of its domicil. It is apparent that, if an action of the nature here pleaded may be maintained in every state where the corporation has members, uniformity of either assessments or benefits could not be hoped for. The courts of one state might hold changes made by the corporation valid, while courts of other states declare them void. No association of the sort here involved, having members in different states, could well survive a condition where the courts of a state other than its domicil step in and determine for the future what the assessments and benefits of its members in such state shall be. The disaster likely to result to foreign fraternal beneficiary associations, if actions of the instant type lie, may well cause courts to pause before assuming jurisdiction. Especially so, in view of the decision in Supreme Council, R. A. v. Green, 237 U. S. 531, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 724, 59 L. ed. 1089, L.R.A.1916A, 771, where it was held that an adjudication as to rates and benefits by the courts of the domicil of the corporation binds its members, wherever residing. Some courts also give as a reason for declining to assume jurisdiction over affairs relating to the internal management of a foreign corporation, that neither its officers, or governing body, nor its records, are within the reach of the decrees, orders, or processes of any courts except the courts of its domicil.

This court has repeatedly recognized the rule that equity will not take jurisdiction of actions wherein it is sought to interfere with the internal management of a foreign corporation's business. Guilford v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 59 Minn. 332, 50 Am. St. Rep. 407, 61 N. W. 324; Selover v. Isle Harbor Land Co. 91 Minn. 451, 98 N. W. 344; State ex rel. Lake Shore Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. De Groat, 109 Minn. 168, 134 Am. St. Rep. 764, 123 N. W. 417; Gere v. Dorr, 114 Minn. 240, 130 N. W. 1022; Van Dyke v. Railway Mail Asso. 118 Minn. 390, 137 N. W. 15, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 455; Tasler v. Peerless Tire Co. 144 Minn. 150, 174 N. W. 731.

Langan v. Supreme Council, A. L. H. 174 N. Y. 266, 66 N. E. 932, is greatly relied on by respondent. It was there held, three justice dissenting, that an action for damages does not lie against a foreign fraternal benefit association for unlawfully increasing assessments, but the remedy is in equity to compel the association to live up to its contract with its member. However, it was not intimated that an action in behalf of other members would lie. Our attention has not been called to any other case of a similar ruling, and we have found none outside the state of New York. It is directly opposed to the decision in Ebert v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 81 Minn. 116, 83 N. W. 506, 834, 84 N. W. 457, where this equitable remedy was unsuccessfully urged upon the court. The experience of the New York courts seems to cast doubt on the practical workings of the rule there adopted; for, after Green v. Supreme Council, R. A. 206 N. Y. 591, 100 N. E. 411, was, in 237 U. S. 531, 59 L. ed. 1089, L.R.A.1916A, 771, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 724, reversed by the Supreme Court of the United States (wherein the appellate court of New York had applied the rule of the Langan Case, notwithstanding that the courts of the domicile of the corporation had held the change in the assessments valid), the case of Evans v. Supreme Council, R. A. 223 N. Y. 497, 1 A.L.R. 163, 120 N. E. 93, was determined. There the plaintiff, Evans, relying on the Green decision in 206 N. Y. 591, 100 N. E. 411, tendered the assessments according to the rate before the change, and, when the amount was refused, brought the action to enjoin the society from suspending him. He obtained a temporary injunction upon the giving of a bond to pay whatever rate the court would finally adjudge to be the lawful rate. The appellate court, under the decision of the Federal court in the Green Case, felt itself compelled to hold the change in the rate binding as determined by the courts of the domicile of the defendant, and that, therefore, Evans, because of the nonpayment of the assessments as changed, was deprived of membership, notwithstanding the courts of New York had attempted to maintain his status by means of the injunction.

Courts—affairs of foreign corporations—interference.

In our opinion the amended complaint shows on its face that the action is one in which a court of this state is asked to interfere with the internal management of a foreign corporation. Jurisdiction should not be assumed for that purpose, and the demurrer should be sustained.

Corporation—foreign—internal management.

The order is reversed.

NOTE.

The jurisdiction of an action or proceeding involving the internal affairs of a corporation is the subject of the annotation following BOYETTE v. PRESTON MOTORS CORP. post, 1383. As to the various specific subjects in regard to which this jurisdiction is exercised or invoked, see the various subdivisions of III. b, of that annotation.

RE FRYEBURG WATER COMPANY.

New Hampshire Supreme Court—January 7, 1919.

(— N. H. —, 106 Atl. 225.)

Courts — visitatorial power over foreign corporation.

1. Courts of one state have no visitatorial power over corporations of another state, and no jurisdiction to determine questions relating to their internal affairs.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1383.]

Conflict of laws — issuance of stock by corporation.

2. The issuance of stock by a corporation is regulated and controlled by the laws of the state of its incorporation, and exclusively subject to those laws.

Statutes — construction — issuance of corporate stock.

3. A statute conferring upon the public service commission power to control the issuance of stock by corporations doing business in the state will not be construed to apply to foreign corporations.

Corporations — power of legislature to determine stock issue.

4. The legislature of the state where a foreign corporation is engaged in business has no power to increase or diminish the amount of stock fixed by its charter.

— power of public service commission to consent to increase of stock.

5. The public service commission of a state in which a foreign corporation is doing business has no power to consent to the increase by it of its capital stock.

TRANSFER by the Public Service Commission, for determination by the Supreme Court, of questions arising in a proceeding by petitioner for the approval of the Commission of stock dividends. Case discharged.

The case was transferred by the Commission upon the following facts:

The Fryeburg Water Company is a public utility incorporated under the laws of Maine, and furnishes water to the public in both Maine and New Hampshire. It has accumulated from its earnings a surplus of $8,000, which it has used in improving its plant in both states. Under the laws of Maine, it has been authorized to issue a stock dividend of $8,000 to take up the surplus so invested. This proceeding is a petition to the public service commission for its approval of so much of the stock dividend as is represented by investment in the company's plant property in this state. This commission submits the following questions for determination: (1) Whether its approval is necessary to validate the stock dividend referred to; and (2) whether, if such approval is necessary, it has authority to approve a stock dividend.

There was no appearance of counsel in the case.

Walker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The first question presented by the case is whether the public service commission of this state has the power or jurisdiction to approve the proposed issue of additional stock by the Fryeburg Water Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the state of Maine. It is a well-recognized principle of law, that the courts of one state have no visitatorial power over corporations of another state, and no jurisdiction to determine questions relating to their internal affairs. Courts—visitatorial power over foreign corporation. Clark, Corp. 635.

Whether the object of a proceeding is intrinsically to regulate the internal affairs of a foreign corporation, or whether it is merely to enforce a contractual obligation or to prevent a fraud (Westminster Nat. Bank v. New England Electrical Works, 73 N. H. 465, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 551, 111 Am. St. Rep. 637, 62 Atl. 971), is not always easy to determine; and the result is that there is some apparent conflict in the authorities (see Kansas & E. Constr. Co. v. Topeka, S. & W. R. Co. 135 Mass. 34, 46 Am. Rep. 439; Madden v. Penn Electric Light Co. 181 Pa. 617, 38 L.R.A. 638, 37 Atl. 817; Guilford v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 59 Minn. 332, 50 Am. St. Rep. 407, 61 N. W. 324; Harding v. American Glucose Co. 182 Ill. 551, 633, 64 L.R.A. 738, 74 Am. St. Rep. 189, 55 N. E. 577.)

Little doubt, however, can be entertained that the issuing of stock is a corporate act which is regulated and controlled by the laws of the incorporating state, and which, relating to the internal conduct and management of the corporation, is exclusively subject to the local laws. Conflict of laws—issuance of stock by corporation.

"From the nature of corporate stock, which is created by and under the authority of a state, the right or duty to issue it, like the other attributes of the corporation, is governed by the local law of the state from which it derives its existence, and not by that of any other state." Kansas & E. R. Constr. Co. v. Topeka, S. & W. R. Co. 135 Mass. 40, 46 Am. Rep. 439, supra; North State Copper & Gold Min. Co. v. Field, 64 Md. 151, 20 Atl. 1039.

Although the language of the statute (Laws 1915, chap. 115), conferring power upon the public service commission to control the issuing of stock by a corporation doing business in this state, is sufficiently broad to include within its provisions foreign corporations, it is not to be presumed that the legis-

Statutes—
construction—issuance of corporate stock.

lature intended to give the commission power to regulate the internal affairs of such corporations. The fact that a foreign corporation is engaged in business in this state, and owns property located here, brings it within the jurisdiction of our courts in suits against it upon its contracts, or for fraud practised by it in the conduct of its business, but does not, also, subject it to legislation purporting to regulate the exercise of the inherent corporate powers conferred upon it by the legislative power of the incorporating state. North State Copper & Gold Min. Co. v. Field, supra; Howell v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 51 Barb. 378. If the amount of its capital stock is limited by the act of incorporation, the legislature of another state, where it happens to be

Corporations—
power of legislature to determine stock issue.

engaged in business, has no power to increase or diminish the amount of stock thus fixed and established. One of the apparent reasons for this proposition is "the impropriety and futility of interfering in the internal affairs of the corporation." Beale, Foreign Corp. § 307. The petitioner's request for the approval by the commission of an increase of its capital stock, which has been authorized by the laws of Maine, is misconceived, and is an application for the exercise of power by the commission which it does not possess. The effect of its approval of a domestic corporation's increase of stock is to render the stock legal; while its disapproval has the opposite effect. Laws 1915, chap. 115. But no one would claim that its disapproval in this case would render the stock authorized under the laws of Maine illegal or void.

—power of public service commission to consent to increase of stock.

In view of the foregoing discussion, the second question submitted by the Commission, whether it has power to approve a stock dividend (see Pub. Stat. chap. 273, § 11) which appears to represent actual value, becomes immaterial in this case, and, therefore, is not considered.

Case discharged.

All concur.

NOTE.

Jurisdiction of an action or proceeding involving the internal affairs of foreign corporations is treated in the annotation following BOYETTE v. PRESTON MOTORS CORP. post, 1383. Specifically, as to jurisdiction to compel the issuance of corporate stock, see subd. III. b, 4, of that annotation.

Corporation — visitatorial powers over foreign corporation.

1. Courts of one state have no jurisdiction to exercise visitatorial powers or supervisory powers over the management of the internal affairs of a corporation organized under the laws of another state where it is domiciled.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1383.]

— place of residence.

2. A corporation must dwell at the place of its creation, although it may do business wherever its charter permits if the right is not denied by local laws.

[See 7 R. C. L. 139.]

— power to compel issuance of stock.

3. A corporation cannot be compelled to issue stock if it is not provided for by the law of its incorporation and available to be issued.

Courts — power to determine merger of foreign corporations.

4. The courts of one state cannot determine whether or not there has been a merger of two corporations of another state, since to do so would require the exercise of visitatorial powers.

— power to determine rules governing foreign corporations.

5. The courts of one state cannot determine what principles and what circumstances, under the laws of another state, regulate the creation and merger of corporations created by such state, and regulate the relation of stockholders in such corporation to each other and to the corporation.

Conflict of laws — rights of holder of stock in foreign corporation.

6. One becoming a stockholder in a foreign corporation contracts with reference to the laws of the state of its origin, and not to those of his residence.

Courts — jurisdiction to compel issuance of stock by foreign corporation.

7. The holder of stock in a foreign corporation cannot resort to the courts of the state of his residence to compel issuance to him of stock of another corporation of the same state into which the corporation in which he held stock was merged.

APPEAL by complainant from a decree of the Circuit Court for Jefferson County (Locke, J.) dismissing a bill filed to compel the issuance of stock to complainant in the defendant corporation, or to pay an amount equal to the par value of stock held by him in another company. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. Thomas J. Judge, for appellant:

The relief sought does not involve the exercise of visitatorial powers over the internal affairs of a foreign corporation.

Westminster Nat. Bank v. New England Electrical Works, 73 N. H. 465, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 551, 111 Am. St. Rep. 637, 62 Atl. 971; Guilford v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 59 Minn. 332, 50 Am. St. Rep. 497, 61 N. W. 324.

Courts of this state will assume jurisdiction in cases involving the internal affairs of a foreign corporation, where complete relief can be granted and the decree enforced in this state.

5 Thomp. Corp. 2d ed. §§ 6743, 6744, p. 1542; State ex rel. Watkins v. North American Land & Timber Co. 106 La. 621, 87 Am. St. Rep. 309, 31 So. 172; Babcock v. Farwell, 245 Ill. 14, 137 Am. St. Rep. 284, 91 N. E. 683, 19 Ann. Cas. 74; Edwards v. Schillinger, 245 Ill. 231, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 895, 137 Am. St. Rep. 308, 91 N. E. 1048; Miller v. Quincy, 179 N. Y. 294, 72 N. E. 116; Richardson v. Clinton Wall Trunk Mfg. Co. 181 Mass. 580, 64 N. E. 400;

Guilford v. Western U. Tele. Co. 59 Minn. 332, 50 Am. St. Rep. 407, 61 N. W. 324; Westminster Nat. Bank v. New England Electrical Works, supra; Holbrook v. Ford, 158 Ill. 633, 27 L.R.A. 324, 46 Am. St. Rep. 917, 39 N. E. 1091; Travis v. Knox Terpezzone Co. 215 N. Y. 259, L.R.A. 1916A, 542, 109 N. E. 250, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 387; 19 Cyc. pp. 1345, 1346.

Messrs. Roscoe Chamberle and Weatherly, Birch, Chapman, & Hickman, for appellee:

The courts of a state have no jurisdiction to interfere by injunction, mandamus, or otherwise, in the management of the internal affairs of a foreign corporation, even at the suit of a resident stockholder, and even though the corporation may maintain an office and place of business in the state, and may have expressly or impliedly agreed to submit to the jurisdiction of the court in suits against it.

Importing & Exporting Co. v. Locke, 50 Ala. 332; North State Copper & Gold Min. Co. v. Fields, 64 Md. 151, 20 Atl. 1039; Hogue v. American Steel Foundries, 247 Pa. 12, 92 Atl. 1073; Madden v. Penn Electric Light Co. 181 Pa. 617, 38 L.R.A. 638, 37 Atl. 817; McCloskey v. Snowden, 212 Pa. 249, 108 Am. St. Rep. 867, 61 Atl. 796; Kinney v. Mexican Plantation Co. 233 Pa. 232, 82 Atl. 93; Taylor v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 97 Va. 60, 45 L.R.A. 621, 33 S. E. 385; Condon v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 89 Md. 99, 44 L.R.A. 149, 73 Am. St. Rep. 169, 42 Atl. 944; Electric Welding Co. v. Prince, 195 Mass. 242, 81 N. E. 306; Wason v. Buzzell, 181 Mass. 338, 63 N. E. 909; Kimball v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 157 Mass. 7, 34 Am. St. Rep. 250, 31 N. E. 697; Babcock v. Farwell, 245 Ill. 14, 137 Am. St. Rep. 284, 91 N. E. 683, 19 Ann. Cas. 74; Van Dyke v. Railway Mail Asso. 118 Minn. 390, 137 N. W. 15, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 455; State ex rel. Hartford L. Ins. Co. v. Shain, 245 Mo. 78, 149 S. W. 479; Jackson v. Hooper, 76 N. J. Eq. 592, 27 L.R.A. (N.S.) 658, 75 Atl. 568; Gregory v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 40 N. J. Eq. 38; Howard v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 125 N. C. 49, 45 L.R.A. 853, 34 S. E. 199; Moore v. Silver Valley Min. Co. 104 N. C. 534, 10 S. E. 679; Re Culver, 145 Iowa, 1, 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 384, 123 N. W. 743; Pacific Coast Coal Co. v. Esary, 85 Wash. 448, 148 Pac. 579; Edwards v. Schillinger, 245 Ill. 231, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 895, 137 Am. St. Rep. 308, 91 18 A.L.R.—87.

N. E. 1048; Dickey v. Southwestern Surety Ins. Co. 119 Ark. 12, 173 S. W. 398, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 634; State ex rel. Minnesota Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Denton, 229 Mo. 187, 138 Am. St. Rep. 417, 129 S. W. 709.

The courts of any one state other than the one by which the corporation was created have no jurisdiction "to exercise authority over the organization, the corporate functions, the by-laws, or the relations between the stockholders and its members; nor to determine the rights and obligations of the corporation, or its members, arising under the law of its creation and depending upon such local law."

Smith v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 14 Allen, 336.

Whether or not there exists a reorganization, consolidation, or merger of one or more corporations, incorporated under the laws of a particular state, depends upon express statutory authority of that state.

5 Thomp. Corp. 2d ed. §§ 5986, 6035.

The domicile of the corporation is the state where organized, and this domicile cannot be changed.

Canada Southern R. Co. v. Gebhard, 109 U. S. 527, 27 L. ed. 1020, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 363.

A corporation must dwell in the place of its creation and cannot migrate to another sovereignty, though it may do business in all places where its charter allows, and the local laws do not forbid.

Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. 588, 10 L. ed. 307; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Koontz, 104 U. S. 12, 26 L. ed. 645; Relfe v. Rundle (Life Asso. of America v. Rundle) 103 U. S. 226, 26 L. ed. 339; Sullivan v. Sullivan Timber Co. 103 Ala. 371, 25 L.R.A. 543, 15 So. 941; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Pike, 51 Colo. 238, 117 Pac. 899.

Thomas, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The bill, by a shareholder of the Preston Motor Car Company, was against the Preston Motors Corporation, and certain individuals averred to be the officers, and several of the directors of defendant corporation, to compel the issuance of stock to complainant in the latter corporation to the amount indicated, or an amount equal to the par value of stock held by plaintiff in the first-named company.

It is averred that the Preston "Motor Car Company" was organized (does not state where incorporated) for the purpose of manufacturing and selling automobiles; that plans and specifications of cars called "Preston" and "Preston Four" were obtained by "much work, labor, and expense" incurred by said corporation, and that the designs, names of the cars, and the good will of the company, and prestige acquired as the result of advertisement of said Preston cars, were the "only unencumbered assets of any practical value which were owned by the Motor Car Company." The respective corporations will be hereafter referred to as the Motor Car Company and the Motors Corporation.

Following the averment that the Motor Car Company was organized for the purpose we have indicated, that its only unencumbered assets of practical value were such designs, averred to be of great value, it is averred that prior to the organization of the Motors Corporation, organized under the laws of the state of Delaware, the officers and directors of the Motor Car Company "informed the stockholders" and "led them to believe" that stock would be issued to them in the Motors Corporation; that the assets of the Motor Car Company "were fraudulently transferred" to the Motors Corporation "without any consideration," and that the Motor Car Company has ceased to carry out the objects and purposes of its incorporation; that the personnel of the organization which established the Motor Car Company and abandoned the same, at the time of the filing of the bill, devoted time, attention, and energies to the promotion of the Motors Corporation, and has "fraudulently transferred" to the latter corporation the above-named assets, together with the good will, plans, tradename and whatever prestige the Motor Car Company had acquired, together with access to its books and business affairs, in violation of the rights of the stockholders of the Motor Car Company, which "illegal acts are tantamount, in effect, to a merger" of the two corporations. It is further averred that after the organization of the Motors Corporation its directors adopted a resolution to the effect that its capital stock should be issued to the stockholders of the Motor Car Company in exact proportion to the amount of the capital stock held by such stockholders in the former corporation; that pursuant to this resolution stock had been issued in the Motors Corporation to a number of stockholders of the Motor Car Company, upon surrender of their stock in said company, and, in lieu thereof, acceptance of stock in the Motors Corporation.

The bill contains the averment that the officers of the Motors Corporation are residents of Alabama; that said corporation owns no property in the state of Delaware; that its plant, and practically all its assets, are in Alabama; that meetings of the board of directors are held in Alabama; that its stock books, minute books, and records are kept in this state, where stock is signed and issued by its officers.

The outstanding features of the foregoing bill may be thus summarized: (a) That the individual officers and directors of the old corporation, who are named in the bill, used the good will and the name of the cars of the old corporation for the benefit of the new corporation, paying nothing therefor; (b) that these individuals promised the stockholders of the old corporation that they would issue stock in the new corporation for the stock in the old corporation of equal par value, share for share; (c) that it is not averred that this promise was based upon any consideration; (d) that the capitalization or relative value of stock in said corporations is not averred; nor (e) is it averred how much of the stock of the Motors Corporation is owned or held by subscribers or purchasers for value, who had no knowledge or notice of the interest (under the facts declared in the bill) of the Motor Car Company therein, or that there was available $18,000 of unissued stock of the Motors Corporation.

The relief sought is against the Motors Corporation (a Delaware corporation), that it be ordered to issue to the complainant an amount of stock of like number and value as that held by him in the Motor Car Company; failing in this, that the officers and directors of the Motor Car Company be required to pay complainant an amount equal to the par value of the stock held by him in said Motor Car Company, and that "a decree be made and entered for this amount against said parties."

Assuming, without deciding, that the bill is not multifarious, for the purpose of the plea to the jurisdiction, the relief sought will be treated as against the Motors Corporation, and that it, through its officers, be required to issue stock in specific performance of the alleged undertaking (without having averred that such unissued stock was available); or, in lieu thereof, that its directors and officers pay the money value of complainant's stock in the Motor Car Company out of the funds of the Motors Corporation.

If such bill contains equity, it must rest upon the alleged merger of the old with or in the new corporation, or some privity between the new corporation and the stockholders of the old corporation, including complainant. No such privity is disclosed. Do the facts and conclusion contained in the bill show a merger of the two corporations?

The two amended pleas to the jurisdiction of the court (to the bill as amended) aver that the cause of action or controversy involves "the question of an alleged merger of the two corporations," and that the Alabama courts are without jurisdiction, and that no further cognizance of the cause be taken, and that it be dismissed with its reasonable costs sustained. Exceptions were filed to the pleas (separately), which were overruled. Plaintiff declined to plead further, the court dismissed the bill, and for such action of the court error is assigned.

The question presented is whether "visitatorial power of an Alabama court over the respondent, a Delaware corporation," may be judicially exercised in awarding the relief prayed. The pleas are essentially alike, except that plea 1 is to the jurisdiction of the court over the subject-matter of the cause set forth in the bill, because the Motors Corporation, named as a respondent, is a foreign corporation, and pleads compliance with the Delaware laws, and that "the cause of action or controversy evidenced in and by the bill of complaint is one involving the alleged rights of stockholders, as such, of one of said corporations against another of said corporations, and involves questions relating to the internal management of the affairs of one or both of said foreign corporations and the exercise by this court of visitatorial powers over said Preston Motors Corporation, and involves particularly the question of the alleged right of complainant, as a stockholder of Preston Motor Car Company, to be admitted as a member or stockholder of Preston Motors Corporation, and to have its stock issued to him, or to be compensated for some alleged damage or injury to him, as a stockholder of said Preston Motor Car Company, against the officers and directors thereof, constituting matters over which the government, or the court, of the state of Delaware, has sole and exclusive jurisdiction."

Plea 2 is to the jurisdiction of the court "over the subject-matter of the cause or causes set forth, or attempted to be set forth, in said bill of complaint in the first aspect," so far as said bill is applicable to and seeks relief against the Motors Corporation, because said corporation is a foreign corporation.

The last plea presents the simple question of jurisdiction of the Alabama court to entertain the cause of action as to the Motors Corporation; and this aspect of the case will be now considered. Though the bill avers that the Motors Corporation was organized under the laws of Delaware, it is not averred that it maintains a principal office and place of business in Wilmington, Delaware; and though it does aver that the Motor Car Company was organized for the purpose indicated, it does not aver that it was incorporated under the laws of the state of Delaware. Hence, the sufficiency of the bill was not questioned by demurrer, such matter being set up by the special pleas to the sufficiency of which exception was taken.

It is established that a corporation must dwell at the place of its creation (Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. 588, 10 L. ed. 307; La Fayette Ins. Co. v. French, 18 How. 404, 408, 15 L. ed. 451, 453; Sioux Remedy Co. v. Cope, 235 U. S. 197, 59 L. ed. 193, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 57), though it may do business wherever its charter permits, provided that right is not denied by local law (Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Koontz, 104 U. S. 5, 12, 26 L. ed. 643, 645; Western U. Tele. Co. v. Kansas, 216 U. S. 1, 33, 54 L. ed. 355, 369, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 190; Security Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Prewitt, 202 U. S. 246, 50 L. ed. 1013, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 619, 6 Ann. Cas. 317; Interstate Amusement Co. v. Albert, 239 U. S. 560, 60 L. ed. 439, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 168). However, the corporation carries its charter—as the law of its existence—wherever it may and does go for business. Relfe v. Rundle (Life Asso. of America v. Rundle) 103 U. S. 222, 226, 26 L. ed. 337, 339; Shaw v. Quincy Min. Co. 145 U. S. 444, 450, 36 L. ed. 768, 772, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 935; St. Louis, V. & T. H. R. Co. v. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. 145 U. S. 393, 36 L. ed. 738, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 953; Nashua Sav. Bank v. Anglo-American, etc., Co. 189 U. S. 221, 47 L. ed. 782, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 517; Converse v. Hamilton, 224 U. S. 243, 56 L. ed. 749, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 415, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 1292. That is to say, the powers and limitations of its charter are the same abroad as at home. Beard v. Union & American Pub. Co. 71 Ala. 60, 62; Christian v. American Freehold Land Mortg. Co. 89 Ala. 198, 7 So. 427; Sullivan v. Sullivan Timber Co. 103 Ala. 371, 379, 25 L.R.A. 543, 15 So. 941; State v. Anniston Rolling Mills, 125 Ala. 121, 27 So. 921; Holman v. Durham Buggy Co. 200 Ala. 556, 76 So. 914; Ashurst v. Arnold-Henegar-Doyle Co. 201 Ala. 480, 78 So. 386; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Dawson, 14 Ala. App. 272, 68 So. 674; 2 Beach, Priv. Corp. §§ 416, 890; Canada Southern R. Co. v. Gebhard, 109 U. S. 527, 27 L. ed. 1020, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 363; Shaw v. Quincy Min. Co. 145 U. S. 444, 450, 36 L. ed. 768, 772, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 935; Nashua Sav. Bank v. Anglo-American Land, Mortg. & Agency Co. 189 U. S. 221, 47 L. ed. 782, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 517.

Mr. Thompson (Corp. 2d ed. §§ 5986, 6035, et seq.) collects authorities to the effect that reorganization, consolidation, and merger of corporations have no other source of authority than by statute; and whether or not there was reorganization, consolidation, or merger of one or more corporations incorporated under the laws of a particular state, depends upon authority of law of that state (Meyer v. Johnston, 64 Ala. 603, 656, 657, 662; State v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 202 Ala. 558, 81 So. 60; Alabama, T. & N. R. Co. v. Tolman, 200 Ala. 449, 76 So. 381; Southern Steel Co. v. Hopkins, 157 Ala. 175, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 848, 131 Am. St. Rep. 20, 47 So. 274, 16 Ann. Cas. 690).

In Smith v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 14 Allen, 336, 341, the rule is stated that state courts, other than in the state in which a corporation is created, have no jurisdiction to exercise authority over the organization, the corporate functions, the by-laws, the relations between the corporation and its members, or to determine the rights and obligations of the corporation or its members arising under the law of its creation, such questions or matters depending on local law. 7 R. C. L. p. 1065, § 103; id. p. 415, § 403.

The many authorities bearing upon the question are to the effect that courts of one state have no jurisdiction to exercise visitatorial or supervisory powers over the management of the internal affairs of a corporation organized and domiciled under the laws of another state, such powers belonging to the —visitatorial powers over foreign corporation.

state in which the corporation was created, and by which it is continued in life. As a corollary of such rule, state courts have no jurisdiction to interfere by injunction, mandamus, or otherwise, in the management of the internal affairs of a foreign corporation at the suit of a resident stockholder, even though the corporation may maintain an office and place of business in the state, and may, expressly or impliedly, agree to submit to the jurisdiction of the court in suits against it. New York L. Ins. Co. v. Pike, 51 Colo. 238, 117 Pac. 899; Importing & Exporting Co. v. Locke, 50 Ala. 332, 335.

The provisions of § 3054 of the Code of 1907, as construed in Iron Age Pub. Co. v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 83 Ala. 498, 3 Am. St. Rep. 758, 3 So. 449; Rucker v. Morgan, 122 Ala. 308, 318, 25 So. 242; Tigrett v. Taylor, 180 Ala. 296, 60 So. 858; Montgomery Enterprises v. Empire Theater Co. 204 Ala. 566, — A.L.R. —, 86 So. 880, and Alcazar Amusement Co. v. Mudd & Colley Amusement Co. 204 Ala. 509, 86 So. 209, are not to a contrary effect. The statute merely provides jurisdiction in courts of chancery when the defendants reside in this state, and against nonresidents in the classes of cases indicated, to wit: "When the object of the suit concerns an estate of, lien, or charge upon, lands [in this state], or the disposition thereof, or any interest in, title to, or encumbrance on personal property within this state, or where the cause of action arose, or the act on which the suit is founded was to have been performed, in this state."

See Montgomery Enterprises v. Empire Theater Co. 204 Ala. 566, — A.L.R. —, 86 So. 880.

The relief sought is for the issue of $18,000 of stock of the Motors Corporation at its home office in Delaware, which cannot be done if such stock was not —power to compel issuance of stock.

authorized by the law of its incorporation and available for such issue—this latter possibility involving the question of whether or not the whole amount of the capital stock of the corporation had been issued and sold to other parties. The alternative relief prayed for is—failing in the issue of said stock—that a money judgment be rendered against that corporation, which latter liability would be dependent upon whether or not there was a legal merger of the two Delaware corporations. Preliminary to the inquiry of such liability is that whether the Motor Car Company had been merged with the Motors Corporation—a question which the Alabama courts may not decide without exercising visitatorial powers; and this the courts have uniformly declined to do. Any other rule would produce inextricable confusion and breach of comity that should exist between states.

Courts—power to determine merger of foreign corporations.

The bill of complaint shows clearly that the only injury, if any, the complainant Boyette may have sustained by reason of the alleged wrong of the officers and directors of the Motor Car Company, was a common injury, which he and all the other stockholders of the old company sustained; and his claim is differentiated in no respect from the rights of the other stockholders, except as to the number of shares owned by each stockholder. Therefore, it necessarily follows that a decision in this case as to the liability vel non of the Motors Corporation, or its officers, or the other respondents, will establish a precedent for the other claims, and, hence, the court must say what principle and what circumstances, under the laws of Delaware, regulate the creation, merger, etc., of corporations in such state, and regulate the relation of stockholders

—power to determine rules governing foreign corporations.

in such corporations to each other and to the corporations. This claim cannot be established and finally adjudicated by the Alabama courts, and have due regard to the sovereignty of the state of Delaware over all corporations created by it.

The question is stated in Guilford v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 59 Minn. 332, 50 Am. St. Rep. 407, 61 N. W. 324: "The doctrine is well settled that courts will not exercise visitatorial powers over foreign corporations, or interfere with the management of their internal affairs. Such matters must be settled by the courts of the state creating the corporation. This rule rests upon a broader and deeper foundation than the mere want of jurisdiction in the ordinary sense of that word. It involves the extent of the authority of the state (from which its courts derive all their powers) over foreign corporations. The only difficulty is in drawing the line of demarcation between matters which do, and those which do not, pertain to the management of the internal affairs of a corporation. To entertain an action to dissolve a corporation; to determine the validity of its organization; to determine which of two rival organizations is the legal one, or who of rival claimants are its legal officers; to restrain it from declaring a dividend, or to compel it to make one; to restrain it from issuing its bonds, or for making an additional issue of stock—would clearly all be the exercise of visitatorial powers over the corporation, or an interference with the management of its internal affairs. . . . But in the present case there is no question as to the issue, validity, or forfeiture of the stock. There is not even any controversy as to the right of the plaintiff to a certificate as evidence of his title. The only dispute is over the terms or conditions upon which that certificate shall be issued. We do not see how the granting of such relief is, in any proper sense, the exercise of visitatorial powers or an interference with the management of the internal affairs of the defendant."

See also Taylor v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 97 Va. 60, 45 L.R.A. 621, 33 S. E. 385.

In this jurisdiction, in Importing & Exporting Company of Georgia v. Locke, supra, it was sought to have an Alabama court declare the charter of a Georgia corporation forfeited; and, on authority of Society for Propagation of Gospel v. New Haven, 8 Wheat. 464, 5 L. ed. 662, it was said: "The courts of Alabama have not jurisdiction to adjudge a forfeiture of a Georgia corporation."

See 8 Am. St. Rep. 199, note; Edwards v. Schillinger, 245 Ill. 231, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 895, 137 Am. St. Rep. 308, 91 N. E. 1048; Hogue v. American Steel Foundries, 247 Pa. 12, 92 Atl. 1073; North State Copper & Gold Min. Co. v. Field, 64 Md. 151, 20 Atl. 1039; Dickey v. Southwestern Surety Ins. Co. 119 Ark. 12, 173 S. W. 398, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 634; Babcock v. Farwell, 245 Ill. 14, 91 N. E. 683, 137 Am. St. Rep. 284, 307, note, 19 Ann. Cas. 74; Madden v. Penn. Electric Light Co. 181 Pa. 617, 621, 622, 38 L.R.A. 638, 37 Atl. 817; Wilkins v. Thorne, 60 Md. 253; Stafford v. American Mills Co. 13 R. I. 310.

After all that may be said of comity between states by public policy, it is sufficient that when complainant became a stockholder in the Motor Car Company, a corporation organized and operating under the laws of Delaware, he subjected himself—in assuming the relation of stockholder—to the general corporate laws of that state as affecting that corporation's powers, obligations, and merger or consolidation with other corporations organized under the laws of that state; and he is presumed, or is held, to have contracted with reference to the laws of Delaware, and not of Alabama. Canada Southern R. R. Co. v. Gebhard, 109 U. S. 527, 27 L. ed. 1020, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 363, and other like cases we have cited above. See also Wright v. Hix, 203 Ala. 425, 83 So. 341.

(— Ala. —, 89 So. 746.)

The instant bill does not present a case of well-recognized exception to the general rule. 5 Thomp. Corp. 2d. ed. §§ 6743, 6744; Travis v. Knox Terpezone Co. 215 N. Y. 259, L.R.A.1916A, 542, 109 N. E. 250, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 387; 19 Cyc. 1345, 1348; Westminster Nat. Bank v. New England Electrical Works, 73 N. H. 465, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 551, 111 Am. St. Rep. 637, 62 Atl. 971, 137 Am. St. Rep. 307, note; Lockwood v. United States Steel Co. 209 N. Y. 375, L.R.A. 1915C, 471, 103 N. E. 697; Guilford v. Western U. Teleg. Co. supra. The legal obligation of a corporation to keep its records or registry of stock transfers, etc., according to the laws of the state of its creation (which laws are pleaded), imposes the obligation to keep the books at the place its charter designates. Under the averments of the plea, the principal situs of the stock, for the purpose of its transfer upon the books, is in the state in which the incorporation, merger, or consolidation took place or was effected. 10 Cyc. 593.

Courts—jurisdiction to compel issuance of stock by foreign corporation.

The judgment of the circuit court in equity is affirmed.

Anderson, Ch. J., and McClellan and Somerville, JJ., concur.

Petition for rehearing denied, June 23, 1921.

ANNOTATION.

Jurisdiction of action or proceeding involving internal affairs of foreign corporation.

- I. General rule, 1383.
- II. Reasons of rule:
 - a. Impropriety of exercising jurisdiction, 1386.
 - b. Ineffectiveness of remedy, 1388.
- III. Application of rule:
 - a. What constitute "internal affairs", 1390.
 - b. Scope of jurisdiction:
 1. In general, 1392.
 2. Ultra vires act, 1394.
 3. Funds and property of corporation, 1394.
 4. Issuance of stock, 1396.

III. b—continued.

5. Transfer of stock, 1397.
6. Rights of stockholders, 1398.
7. Inspection, etc., of books, 1399.
8. Payment of dividends, 1402.
9. Contract of insurance, 1402.
10. Reorganization of corporation, 1403.
11. Dissolution of corporation, 1403.
12. Appointment of receiver, 1404.

I. General rule.

It is well established that, as a general rule, courts will not take jurisdiction of the internal affairs of a foreign corporation, or, in the exercise of visitatorial powers, interfere with, supervise, administer, or direct the management of such a corporation.

United States.—Republican Mountain Silver Mines v. Brown (1893) 24 L.R.A. 776, 7 C. C. A. 412, 19 U. S. App. 203, 58 Fed. 648, reviewing (1893) 55 Fed. 9; Leary v. Columbia River & P. S. Nav. Co. (1897) 82 Fed. 777; London, P. & A. Bank v. Aronstein (1902) 54 C. C. A. 663, 117 Fed. 609, certiorari denied in (1902) 187 U. S. 641, 47 L. ed. 345, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 841;

Parks v. United States Bankers' Corp. (1905) 140 Fed. 160; Chicago Title & T. Co. v. Newman (1911) 109 C. C. A. 263, 187 Fed. 573. Hanssen v. Pusey & J. Co. (1921) 276 Fed. 296. See also Sidway v. Missouri Land & Live-Stock Co. (1900) 101 Fed. 486.

Alabama. — BOYETTE v. PRESTON MOTORS CORP. (reported herewith) ante, 1376. See also Importing & Exporting Co. v. Locke (1874) 50 Ala. 335.

Arkansas. — See Dickey v. Southwestern Surety Ins. Co. (1915) 119 Ark. 12, 172 S. W. 398, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 634.

California. — Miles v. Woodward (1896) 115 Cal. 308, 46 Pac. 1076, 47 Pac. 360.

Delaware. — Swift v. State (1886) 7 Houst. 351, 40 Am. St. Rep. 127, 6 Atl. 856, 32 Atl. 143.

District of Columbia. — Clark v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. (1899) 14 App. D. C. 154, 43 L.R.A.

Ins. Co. (1867) 14 Allen, 336; Kansas & E. R. Constr. Co. v. Topeka, S. & W. R. Co. (1883) 135 Mass. 34, 46 Am. Rep. 439; New Haven Horse Nail Co. v. Linden Spring Co. (1886) 142 Mass. 349, 7 N. E. 773; Kimball v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (1892) 157 Mass. 7, 34 Am. St. Rep. 250, 31 N. E. 697; Andrews v. Mines Corp. (1910) 205 Mass. 121, 137 Am. St. Rep. 428, 91 N. E. 122.

Minnesota. — Guilford v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (1894) 59 Minn. 332, 50 Am. St. Rep. 407, 61 N. W. 324; State ex rel. Lake Shore Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. DeGroat (1909) 109 Minn. 168, 134 Am. St. Rep. 764, 123 N. W. 417; Van Dyke v. Railway Mail Asso. (1912) 118 Minn. 390, 137 N. W. 15, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 455; Tasler v. Peerless Tire Co. (1919) 144 Minn. 150, 174 N. W. 731; OLSEN v. DANISH BROTHERHOOD (reported herewith) ante, 1370. See also Selover v. Isle Harbor Land Co. (1904) 91 Minn. 451, 78 N. W. 344.

Missouri. — State ex rel. Minnesota

8
E
E
4
P

(
8
I
M
A
B
E
I
A
F
I
(
F
A

N
(
3

(
P
M
M
(
A

615, 55 N. E. 1100; Howe v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. (1911) 142 App. Div. 451, 126 N. Y. Supp. 1090; Butler v. Standard Milk Flour Co. (1911) 146 App. Div. 735, 131 N. Y. Supp. 451; De Raismes v. United States Lithograph Co. (1914) 161 App. Div. 781, 146 N. Y. Supp. 813; Travis v. Knox Terpezone Co. (1915) 215 N. Y. 259, L.R.A.1916A, 542, 109 N. E. 250, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 387; People ex rel. Solomon v. Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators & Paperhangers (1916) 218 N. Y. 115, 112 N. E. 752; Sauerbrunn v. Hartford L. Ins. Co. (1917) 220 N. Y. 363, 115 N. E. 1001.

North Carolina. — Moore v. Silver Valley Min. Co. (1889) 104 N. C. 534, 10 S. E. 679; Howard v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. (1899) 125 N. C. 54, 45 L.R.A. 853, 34 S. E. 199; Brenizer v. Supreme Council, R. A. (1906) 141 N. C. 409, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 235, 53 S. E. 835; Reid v. Norfolk S. R. Co. (1913) 162 N. C. 355, 78 S. E. 306.

Ohio.—State ex rel. Ferencz v. Unida Gold Min. Co. (1910) 32 Ohio C. C. 60.

Oregon.—Beard v. Beard (1913) 66 Or. 512, 133 Pac. 797, 134 Pac. 1196.

Pennsylvania. — Madden v. Penn Electric Light Co. (1897) 181 Pa. 617, 38 L.R.A. 638, 37 Atl. 817; Madden v. Penn Electric Light Co. (1901) 199 Pa. 454, 49 Atl. 296, affirming (1898) 7 Pa. Dist. R. 304; McCloskey v. Snowden (1905) 212 Pa. 249, 108 Am. St. Rep. 867, 61 Atl. 796; Hartley v. Welsh (1899) 8 Pa. Dist. R. 546, 16 Montg. Co. L. Rep. 13; Morris v. Stevens (1867) 6 Phila. 488; Bank of Virginia v. Adams (1850) 1 Pars. Sel. Eq. Cas. 534; American Grease Co. v. Vogellus (1900) 23 Pa. Co. Ct. 664; Cheyney v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. (1907) 16 Pa. Dist. R. 765; Flory Mfg. Co. v. Bangor Slate Co. (1908) 18 Pa. Dist. R. 564; Happersett v. Eaton (1909) 19 Pa. Dist. R. 640, 38 Pa. Co. Ct. 2; Com. ex rel. Kinney v. Mexican Plantation Co. (1909) 19 Pa. Dist. R. 861; Kinney v. Mexican Plantation Co. (1911) 233 Pa. 232, 82 Atl. 93; Hogue v. American Steel Foundries (1913) 42 Pa. Co. Ct. 215, affirmed in (1915) 247 Pa. 12, 92 Atl. 1073; Kelly v. Thomas (1912) 234 Pa. 419, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 122, 83 Atl. 307; Loan Soc. of Phila. v. Eavenson (1913) 241 Pa. 65, 88 Atl. 295.

Texas.—Royal Fraternal Union v. Lunday (1908) 51 Tex. Civ. App. 637, 113 S. W. 185. See also American Tribune New Colony Co. v. Schuler (1904) 34 Tex. Civ. App. 560, 79 S. W. 370.

Vermont.—Corry v. Barre Granite & Quarry Co. (1917) 91 Vt. 413, 101 Atl. 38.

Virginia.—Taylor v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. (1899) 97 Va. 60, 45 L.R.A. 621, 33 S. E. 385.

Washington.—Tolbert v. Modern Woodmen (1915) 83 Wash. 287, 145 Pac. 183.

Wisconsin. — Ganzer v. Rosenfeld (1913) 153 Wis. 442, 141 N. W. 121; State ex rel. Wisconsin Dry Milk Co. v. Circuit Ct. (1922) — Wis. —, 186 Nev. 732.

Canada.—Merritt v. Copper Crown Co. (1902) 36 N. S. 383.

"The general rule has been declared by the decisions of many courts, and has been stated by text-writers, to be that the courts of one state will not exercise the power of deciding controversies relating merely to the internal management of the affairs of a corporation organized under the laws of another state, or of determining rights dependent upon such management." Babcock v. Farwell (1910) 245 Ill. 14, 137 Am. St. Rep. 284, 91 N. E. 683, 19 Ann. Cas. 74.

"It is a well-recognized principle of law that the courts of one state have no visitatorial power over corporations of another state, and no jurisdiction to determine questions relating to their internal affairs." RE FRYEBURG WATER CO. (reported herewith) ante, 1373.

Actions involving the internal affairs or management of a foreign corporation, wherein it is sought to regulate or control the same, should be maintained in the courts of the domicil. Leary v. Columbia River & P. S. Nav. Co. (1897) 82 Fed. 777; Wilkins v. Thorne (1883) 60 Md. 253; Loan Soc. of Phila. v. Eavenson (1913) 241 Pa. 65, 88 Atl. 295; Lehr v. Murphy (1908) 136 Wis. 92, 116 N. W. 893. And see cases cited supra.

In Wilkins v. Thorne (1883) 60 Md. 258, the court said: "This is clearly a controversy relating to the internal management of the corporation, and the validity of the acts of those who claim to be, and indeed are admitted to be, de facto, its president, directors, and stockholders. Now if this were a Maryland corporation, there could be no question as to the jurisdiction of a Maryland court over the subject. But such is not the case. This corporation was created under the laws of another state, and it seems to us that all such controversies must be determined by the courts of the state by which the corporation was created. Our researches have enabled us to find no case in which the courts of another state have ever assumed jurisdiction over a controversy like this, and we think none can be found."

See also North State Copper & G. Min. Co. v. Field (1885) 64 Md. 151, 20 Atl. 1039.

So, in Andrews v. Mines Corp. (1910) 205 Mass. 121, 137 Am. St. Rep. 428, 91 N. E. 122, the court said: "It has often been decided that this court will not take jurisdiction, in ordinary cases, to regulate the internal affairs of a foreign corporation, which ought to be managed under the laws and by the direction of the courts of the state or country where it is organized."

In an earlier case in the same jurisdiction this view was lucidly expressed as follows: "The rule is well established in this commonwealth that ordinarily our courts will decline jurisdiction in matters which pertain to the interior life and conduct of a corporation as a creature of a foreign state, and which particularly involve a knowledge and application of the statutes of that state, and which often require for their proper adjustment full jurisdiction of the corporation and of its members for different purposes." Richardson v. Clinton Wall Trunk Mfg. Co. (1902) 181 Mass. 580, 64 N. E. 400.

II. Reasons of rule.

a. Impropriety of exercising jurisdiction.

The rule rests, according to some decisions on considerations of policy and propriety, rather than of power.

Though the court has acquired jurisdiction of the necessary parties, and of the subject-matter, the exercise of that power rests in its discretion, and in the exercise of that discretion courts have refused to render a decree affecting the internal affairs or management of a foreign corporation, deeming it expedient that the matter should be committed to the courts of the domicile. Edwards v. Schillinger (1910) 245 Ill. 231, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 895, 137 Am. St. Rep. 308, 91 N. E. 1048; Smith v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. (1867) 14 Allen (Mass.) 336; New Haven Horse Nail Co. v. Linden Spring Co. (1886) 142 Mass. 349, 7 N. E. 773; Guilford v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (1894) 59 Minn. 332, 50 Am. St. Rep. 407, 61 N. W. 324; Lewisohn Bros. v. Anaconda Copper Min. Co. (1899) 26 Misc. 622, 56 N. Y. Supp. 807; Moore v. Silver Valley Min. Co. (1889) 104 N. C. 534, 10 S. E. 679. And see Babcock v. Farwell (1910) 245 Ill. 14, 137 Am. St. Rep. 284, 91 N. E. 683, 19 Ann. Cas. 74. Compare Chicago Title & T. Co. v. Newman (1911) 109 C. C. A. 263, 187 Fed. 573.

In an early case, Smith v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. (1867) 14 Allen (Mass.) 336, the court, in assigning this reason for the rule, said: "Aside from the question of power depending on the right of jurisdiction, we regard it as within the province of this court sitting as a court of equity, in its discretion, to decline to exercise jurisdiction in such cases; referring parties to the tribunals of the state upon whose laws their relations and rights peculiarly depend, and where alone they can be effectually and properly administered. This course is especially appropriate in the case of a foreign corporation, when the proceeding is such as not merely to affect its external relations, but also to involve its organic laws, which are necessarily local, and require local administration."

And in a later case the same court, in further explanation of the rule, said: "Where the rights sought to be passed upon and determined are those which arise from the relation between a corporation and its members, they depend upon the local law which exists at the place of its creation, and true policy would seem to require us to leave them to be there determined. The liability which the stockholders are alleged to be under to the corporation and its creditors has little analogy to a debt due according to the generally recognized principles of law. It is of a peculiar character, involving the organic law by which the corporation is created, and requiring local administration." New Haven Horse Nail Co. v. Linden Springs Co. (1886) 142 Mass. 353, 7 N. E. 773.

So, in Edwards v. Schillinger (1910) 245 Ill. 231, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 895, 137 Am. St. Rep. 308, 91 N. E. 1048, it was said: "If a court . . . has jurisdiction of the necessary parties and of the subject-matter, and has power to grant an effective remedy, there has never been any question about the existence of the jurisdiction, but the question has been as to the propriety of assuming jurisdiction in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion."

But it would seem that, in the case of corporations which are nonresident only in that they were created in another state,—the officers, agents, stockholders, business, and property, all being within the jurisdiction of the court,—the court will not deny relief, in a proper case, on the ground that the "internal affairs" of the corporation will be affected. Babcock v. Farwell (1910) 245 Ill. 14, 137 Am. St. Rep. 284, 91 N. E. 683, 19 Ann. Cas. 74; State ex rel. Watkins v. North American Land & Timber Co. (1901) 106 La. 621, 87 Am. St. Rep. 309, 31 So. 172; Beard v. Beard (1913) 66 Or. 512, 133 Pac. 797, 134 Pac. 1196; Corry v. Barre Granite & Quarry Co. (1917) 91 Vt. 413, 101 Atl. 38.

A comprehensive statement of this rule and its application was made in a recent case, Corry v. Barre Granite & Quarry Co. (Vt.) supra, wherein it was said: "It may safely be said that when a corporation is nonresident only in that it is the creation of another state,—its officers, agents, stockholders, business, and property, all being within the jurisdiction of the court,—policy and expediency do not require the court to deny relief, in a proper case, on the ground that the internal affairs of the corporation will be affected. Where the relief sought is within the general jurisdiction of a court of chancery, and all the parties necessary to the full and proper adjustment of the rights involved are before the court, and where the relief sought does not require an exercise of the visitatorial power of the government, the court should determine the controversy, instead of remitting suitors to a foreign jurisdiction."

Likewise, in State ex rel. Watkins v. North American Land & Timber Co. (1901) 106 La. 634, 87 Am. St. Rep. 309, 31 So. 172, the court said: "Whether a court should exercise jurisdiction in a particular case against a foreign corporation is, in our opinion, a question to be determined with reference rather to its power to enforce any decree that it may find it necessary to render, in order to do complete justice, than with reference to the possible effect of the suit upon the internal management of the corporation." And in the same case the court expressed the opinion that "if a corporation succeeds in migrating into another state than that of its creation, and in carrying there its officers and property, and holds its corporate meetings and transacts its corporate business within the jurisdiction of the courts of such other state, so that any judgment rendered by such courts concerning such business can be completely enforced, we know of no reason why controversies as to the regulation of that business, whether arising among the members of the corporation, or between them and third persons, should not be determined by these courts."

But in a few cases the fact that, because the defendant is a foreign corporation, and its officers and books and assets are in another state, it may be impossible to grant full relief, was held not to affect the jurisdiction of the court. Guilford v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (1894) 59 Minn. 332, 50 Am. St. Rep. 407, 61 N. W. 324, followed in Lively v. Husebye (1910) 60 Wash. 47, 110 Pac. 675; Clark v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. (1898) 76 Miss. 22, 23 So. 453.

In Guilford v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (Minn.) supra, which was a suit to compel the corporation to issue a certificate of stock, it was contended by counsel for the defendant that the court ought not to entertain the action, because it had no means of enforcing its decree by compelling the issue of a certificate. The court said: "It is undoubtedly true that courts will not entertain an action, where it is apparent that if a judgment was rendered they would be wholly unable to enforce it. But the mere fact that they may be unable to compel specific performance in a particular way is no reason why the suit should not be entertained. If the defendant should refuse to issue certificates in accordance with the judgment, it would be entirely competent for the court, in accordance with the prayer of the complaint, to render judgment for the value of the stock. Our conclusion is that the action can be maintained."

Similarly, in Clark v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. (Miss.) supra, it was said: "As we understand counsel, the proposition is that by reason of the facts adverted to a moment ago by us, viz., that the appellee is a foreign corporation, domiciled in New York, and that its offices and books of account, and its assets, are all beyond the boundaries of our own state, our courts will, in the exercise of judicial discretion, decline to entertain jurisdiction when it thus is made to appear that the court may, in the progress of the cause, find itself unable to grant administrative relief, if the appellee shall decline to make discovery, or otherwise refuse obedience to the orders or decrees of the court. It is suggested that it does not comport with judicial dignity to assume jurisdiction of a case where it is apparent that the court may be balked in its efforts to administer the law by a recalcitrant litigant. It would seem better to comport with judicial dignity for the court to proceed upon the supposition that obedience will be promptly yielded to its orders and decrees by every litigant before it, and to endeavor to find some legal method of enforcing obedience to its commands, if they shall be sought to be defied or evaded. It will be time enough for the court to abdicate its powers when it finds itself powerless to enforce its authority."

It follows that where, in some form, a satisfactory remedy may justly be given, a court will assume jurisdiction. Raynes v. Sharp (1921) 238 Mass. 20, 130 N. E. 199.

b. Ineffectiveness of remedy.

Many cases declare the reason of the rule against assuming jurisdiction of an action involving the internal affairs of a foreign corporation, to be the impossibility of enforcing the decree or order.

United States.—See Leary v. Columbia River & P. S. Nav. Co. (1897) 82 Fed. 777.

District of Columbia. — Clark v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. (1899) 14 App. D. C. 154, 43 L.R.A. 390.

Illinois.—Patterson v. Lynde (1884) 112 Ill. 206. See also Babcock v. Farwell (1910) 245 Ill. 14, 137 Am. St. Rep. 284, 91 N. E. 683, 19 Ann. Cas. 74.

Louisiana.—State ex rel. Watkins v. North American Land & Timber Co. (1901) 106 La. 632, 87 Am. St. Rep. 309, 31 So. 172.

Minnesota.—See OLSEN v. DANISH BROTHERHOOD (reported herewith) ante, 1370.

New Jersey.—Gregory v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (1885) 40 N. J. Eq. 44; Jackson v. Hooper, 76 N. J. Eq. 592, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 658, 75 Atl. 568.

New York.—Howell v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (1868) 51 Barb. 383; Hallenborg v. Greene (1901) 66 App. Div. 590, 73 N. Y. Supp. 403; Fisher v. Charter Oak L. Ins. Co. (1885) 20 Jones & S. 179. See also Redmond v. Enfield Mfg. Co. (1872) 13 Abb. Pr. N. S. 332.

North Carolina.—Howard v. Mutual Reserve Fund L. Asso. (1899) 125 N. C. 54, 45 L.R.A. 853, 34 S. E. 199.

Texas.—Royal Fraternal Union v. Lunday (1908) 51 Tex. Civ. App. 637, 113 S. W. 185.

Virginia. — Taylor v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. (1899) 97 Va. 60, 45 L.R.A. 621, 33 S. E. 385.

Washington. — Lively v. Husebye (1910) 60 Wash. 47, 110 Pac. 673.

"The reasons for such a rule are apparent. Only the courts of the state in which the corporation has its residence can enforce their judgment and orders against them; only those courts have power to remove the officers of such corporation for dereliction of duty, or to declare a forfeiture of their charters." Howard v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. (N. C.) supra. See also Taylor v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. (Va.) supra.

"The orders and decrees of a court have no extraterritorial effect or force. They can only be enforced directly against property within the state, or in personam against individuals or officers of corporations found within the jurisdiction of the court, and thereby affect property without the state. When a judgment against a foreign corporation would not be effectual without the aid of the courts of a foreign country, or of a sister state, and it may contravene the public policy of the foreign jurisdiction, or rest upon the construction of a foreign statute the interpretation of which is not free from doubt,—as where the subject-matter of the litigation and the judgment would relate strictly to the internal affairs and management of the foreign corporation,—the court should decline jurisdiction, because such questions are of local administration, and should be relegated to the courts of the state or country under the laws of which the corporation was organized." Hallenborg v. Greene (1901) 66 App. Div. 590, 73 N. Y. Supp. 403.

Likewise, it has been said: "It is the duty of the state to provide for the collection of debts from foreign corporations, due to its citizens, and this has been done; and it is the duty of the state to protect its citizens from fraud, by all the means in its power, whether against domestic or foreign wrongdoers. This, however, does not authorize the courts to regulate the internal affairs of foreign corporations. The courts possess no visitatorial power over them. We can enforce no forfeiture of charter for violation of law, nor can we remove directors for misconduct. These powers all properly belong to the courts of the state from which they derive their existence." Howell v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (1868) 51 Barb. (N. Y.) 379.

So, where neither the officers nor the property of the corporation are within the state, the court can render no effective decree, and if it were to undertake to act in such cases, has no power, and therefore cannot bring the officers, or the corporate books, or the assets of the corporation within its jurisdiction, to be subject to its process. Its decrees could be enforced only by proceedings for contempt, and yet there would be no person subject to that process, to be coerced to act for the corporation. Clark v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. (1899) 14 App. D. C. 151, 43 L.R.A. 390.

See also Fisher v. Charter Oak L. Ins. Co. (1885) 20 Jones & S. (N. Y.) 188; Taylor v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. (1899) 97 Va. 60, 45 L.R.A. 621, 33 S. E. 385.

"Whilst a court may have jurisdiction to hear and determine a cause against a corporation, and to render judgment commanding it to perform a particular act, and may also have such power for the enforcement of its judgment as its grantor can confer, nevertheless, if the corporation has its domicile in a foreign state or country, and the particular officers to whom alone the necessary compulsion can be applied are beyond the reach of its process, the jurisdiction, as a whole, falls short; and, as the court will be powerless to enforce obedience, the judgment will not be rendered." State ex rel. Watkins v. North American Land & Timber Co. (1901) 106 La. 632, 87 Am. St. Rep. 309, 31 So. 172.

Where the only person who might be proceeded against for contempt, in the event that a decree was rendered and disobeyed, is a mere local agent of the corporation, the assumption of jurisdiction would be futile. Clark v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. (1899) 14 App. D. C. 154, 43 L.R.A. 390.

a. What constitute "internal affairs."

It has been observed that the term "internal affairs," within the meaning of the rule that a court will not entertain an action involving the internal affairs of a foreign corporation, has no very definite or fixed meaning. Edwards v. Schillinger (1910) 245 Ill. 231, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 895, 137 Am. St. Rep. 308, 91 N. E. 1048.

"To trace . . . the precise line of demarcation between the controversies affecting a foreign corporation in which jurisdiction will be assumed, and those in which jurisdiction will be declined, would be a difficult and hazardous venture. A litigant is not, however, to be excluded because he is a stockholder, unless considerations of convenience, or of efficiency, or of justice, point to the courts of the domicile of the corporation as the appropriate tribunals." Travis v. Knox Terpezone Co. (1915) 215 N. Y. 259, L.R.A.1916A, 542, 109 N. E. 260, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 337.

Courts will not exercise visitatorial powers over foreign corporations, or interfere with the management of their strictly internal affairs. The difficulty is in drawing the line of demarcation between matters which do, and matters which do not, pertain to the management of the internal affairs of the corporation. The purpose of the rule which restricts interference by a court in the internal affairs of a foreign corporation is the protection of the corporation. The defense, therefore, is available only to the corporation; it cannot be maintained as against the corporation, in a proceeding brought on its behalf and at its instance. Beard v. Beard (1913) 66 Or. 512, 133 Pac. 799, 134 Pac. 1196.

After commenting on the difficulty of drawing any clear line of distinction between the acts of a corporation relating to its internal management, and those acts which do not, the distinction was explained in the leading case of North State Copper & G. Min. Co. v. Field (1885) 64 Md. 151, 20 Atl.

member of the corporation, whether it be as stockholder, director, president, or other officer, and is the act of the corporation, whether acting in stockholders' meeting, or through its agents, the board of directors, that then such action is the management of the internal affairs of the corporation, and in case of a foreign corporation our courts will not take jurisdiction. Where, however, the act of the foreign corporation complained of affects the complainant's individual rights only, then our courts will take jurisdiction, whenever the cause of action arises here."

In several cases the distinction drawn in the case last cited has been accepted and approved. Bradbury v. Waukegan & W. Min. & Smelting Co. (1904) 113 Ill. App. 608; Jackson v. Hooper (1910) 76 N. J. Eq. 592, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 658, 75 Atl. 573; Howard v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. (1899) 125 N. C. 49, 45 L.R.A. 853, 34 S. E. 199; State ex rel. Ferencz v. Unida Gold Min. Co. (1910) 32 Ohio C. C. 60; Madden v. Penn Electric Light Co. (1897) 181 Pa. 617, 38 L.R.A. 638, 37 Atl. 817; McCloskey v. Snowden (1905) 212 Pa. 249, 108 Am. St. Rep. 867, 61 Atl. 796. Compare State ex rel. Watkins v. North American Land & Timber Co. (1901) 106 La. 634, 37 Am. St. Rep. 309, 31 So. 172.

In Madden v. Penn Electric Light Co. (1897) 181 Pa. 617, 38 L.R.A. 638, 37 Atl. 817, the court added that it was immaterial that the visible, tangible property of the foreign corporation was situated within the state. See to the same effect, Sprague v. Universal Voting Mach. Co. (1907) 134 Ill. App. 379.

But in a later Pennsylvania case, Kelly v. Thomas (1912) 234 Pa. 419, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 122, 83 Atl. 307, the court said: "In view of the circumstances of the present case we do not feel that a departure from our own rule would be justifiable; but in a case free from the peculiarities of this one, where the foreign corporation was exercise of visitatorial powers is not requisite to the relief, the rule as to noninterference should be restricted, and not carried further than is absolutely required by universal fixed rules of law; for, where possible, we should prevent its use as a cloak to cover apparent fraudulent conduct on the part of officers of foreign corporations to the prejudice of Pennsylvania stockholders."

So, it has been said: "Statements are sometimes found to the effect that where the act of the corporation complained of affects a person solely in his capacity as a member of the corporation, or where the rights of a person grow solely out of his membership in the corporation, and not out of some external transaction, the subject relates to the management of the internal affairs of the corporation, over which the courts of another state should not assume jurisdiction. Such general statements must always be construed in connection with the particular facts of the cases in which they are used. Moreover, such statements are not strictly correct as abstract propositions in the broad and unqualified sense in which they are sometimes understood. We think there are cases, and that this is one of them, where, although the rights of a party grow out of his membership in the corporation, yet, as the matter affects only his individual rights under the contract by which the stock was issued, therefore an enforcement of those rights will not be an interference with the internal management of the corporate affairs within the meaning of the rule." Guilford v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (1894) 59 Minn. 332, 50 Am. St. Rep. 407, 61 N. W. 324.

In a number of other cases the courts have defined what affairs of a foreign corporation will not be interfered with.

Examples of such cases are suits to dissolve a corporation; to appoint a receiver; to determine the validity of its organization, or which of two rival organizations is legal; to restrain it from declaring a dividend or compel it to make one; to restrain an issue of stock or of bonds; to compel a division of its assets; to restore a stockholder to his right to vote at stockholders' meetings from which he has been excluded; or to compel the recognition of one claiming to have been elected a director." Babcock v. Farwell (1910) 245 Ill. 14, 137 Am. St. Rep. 284, 91 N. E. 683, 19 Ann. Cas. 74.

"To entertain an action to dissolve a corporation; to determine the validity of its organization; to determine which of two rival organizations is the legal one, or who of rival claimants are its legal officers; to restrain it from declaring a dividend, or to compel it to make one; to restrain it from issuing its bonds, or from making an additional issue of stock—would clearly all be the exercise of visitatorial powers over the corporation, or an interference with the management of its internal affairs." Guilford v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (Minn.) supra.

So, it has been said: "Where the acts complained of affect the plaintiff in his rights as corporator, or stockholder, or as a member of a mutual benefit or insurance company or other corporation, and the acts are those of the corporation, done and performed in the course of the administration of the corporate affairs, and especially when claimed to have been done and performed, or authorized to be done, by virtue of authority derived from its charter or by-laws, the courts of another state or jurisdiction will not interfere, or attempt to exercise jurisdiction to direct, control, or revise corporate action." Clark v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 14 App. D. C. 154, 43 L.R.A. 390.

In Tasler v. Peerless Tire Co. (1919) 144 Minn. 150, 174 N. W. 731, the court said: "The courts of this state have no 'visitatorial powers' over foreign corporations. They have no jurisdiction to interfere with their 'internal management'; that is, they could not enforce forfeiture of charter, or removal of officers, nor could they exercise authority over corporate functions, or direct the manner of the transaction of the corporate business."

Similarly, it has been held that "courts of one state cannot exercise visitatorial powers over corporations of other states, such as requiring them to pay such dividends as, on an accounting of the affairs of the corporation, may appear to be proper, nor to determine whether a stockholder has been wrongfully excluded from his privileges, and matters of that kind." Edwards v. Schillinger (1910) 245 Ill. 231, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 895, 137 Am. St. Rep. 308, 91 N. E. 1048.

In Ives v. Smith (1888) 19 N. Y. S. R. 556, 3 N. Y. Supp. 651, the court said: "The rule deducible from the cases is that the courts of this state will entertain actions against foreign corporations, in favor of resident plaintiffs, not only to recover at law, but also in equity, including suits in favor of resident shareholders, who have clear rights to be protected; and they will compel the enforcement, by officers and directors of foreign corporations, if properly brought into court, of the contract obligations of the corporation, if the neglect or violation of such contract obligations amounts to a breach of trust or duty which will be productive of injury to such resident shareholders, in matters removed from the ordinary powers or discretion of such directors, and no adequate remedy at law is available."

Courts have power to govern and control the acts of foreign corporations which constitute doing business within the state, and, by assuming jurisdiction respecting business transactions, the court does not regulate the internal affairs of the corporation. London P. & A. Bank v. Aronstein (1902) 54 C. C. A. 663, 117 Fed. 601, certiorari denied in (1902) 187 U. S. 641, 47 L. ed. 345, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 841.

b. Scope of jurisdiction.

1. In general.

Jurisdiction will be assumed, in a proper case, to grant mandamus compelling a resident officer of a foreign corporation to discharge certain duties. State ex rel. Richardson v. Swift (1885) 7 Houst. (Del.) 137, 30 Atl. 781.

It has been held that a suit may be maintained to compel the former directors of a foreign corporation, resident in the state, to account for losses sustained by the corporation by reason of their negligent and fraudulent acts while officers of the corporation. Loan Soc. of Phila. v. Eavenson (1913) 241 Pa. 65, 88 Atl. 295, wherein it was said: "The defendants against whom the corporation is proceeding are residents of the state, are within the jurisdiction of the court, and have been duly served. Any decree that may be entered against them can be enforced by the court. The suit is a proceeding to compel the defendants to account for losses sustained by the corporation, by reason of their negligent and fraudulent acts while officers of the corporation. To enforce this relief the bill prays for an accounting and discovery. This, of course, involves an investigation of the management of the affairs of the corporation by the defendants, while they are acting in their official capacity as directors. This investigation is necessary in order to establish the tortious acts of the defendants complained of in the bill, and for which the corporation itself now seeks reparation. This is not, however, an interference with the internal management of the corporation, within contemplation of the rule which denies jurisdiction to our courts. It does not seek to control or regulate the affairs of the corporation. It does not attempt to control the acts of any of the officials of the corporation. It does not seek to determine the rights of the stockholders among themselves, or between them and the corporation. There is no attempt to test the right of any officer or director to his office, or to control his action in the performance of any official duty. The proceeding was instituted against the defendants after they had severed their connection with the corporation, to compel them to account to the corporation for losses sustained while acting in their official capacity as directors. This, as already observed, involves an investigation of the official conduct of the defendants as directors of the corporation, but it does not regulate or interfere with the management of the corporation. It seeks redress for the mismanagement and misfeasance of the defendants as directors, but it does not ask the court to control or regulate the management of the corporation."

A like result was reached in Ganzer v. Rosenfeld (1913) 153 Wis. 442, 141 N. W. 121, the court saying: "The only serious question involved is whether stockholders and creditors of a foreign corporation, which has its business office in this state, may maintain an action in equity in the courts of this state against resident officers of the corporation, to recover, on behalf of the corporation, corporate moneys converted by such officers, as well as moneys lost to the corporation by their fraudulent and negligent conduct. This question must be answered in the affirmative. It is doubtless true that the courts of a state will not assume to dissolve or regulate the internal affairs of a foreign corporation; in other words, they will not exercise visitatorial powers over such a corporation; but they may, and will in a proper case, require an accounting and restoration of property and money misappropriated or wasted by unfaithful officers who are within their jurisdiction." And this case was followed in State ex rel. Wisconsin Dry Milk Co. v. Circuit Ct. (1922) — Wis. —, 186 N. W. 732.

But while the court may require an agent of the corporation who is resident in the state to render an account of his transactions as agent, yet a prayer of a bill that a foreign corporation be required to exact of a local agent due and proper accounts of his transactions as agent will not be granted, although the corporation has its place of business and principal office within the state, on the ground that to do so "would be beyond the jurisdiction of the court, and within the rule relating to the internal management of a foreign corporation." Sloan v. Clarkson (1907) 105 Md. 179, 66 Atl. 18.

So, in Wason v. Buzzell (1902) 181 Mass. 338, 63 N. E. 909, the petitioners alleged that they were two of five directors of a corporation organized under the laws of the state of Maine, having an office in that state, authorized to do business in Massachusetts, and having its usual place of business in the latter state. The petition was filed against the corporation, the three remaining directors, and two other persons, for a writ of mandamus commanding the three directors to recognize and act with the petitioners as directors, and commanding the other respondents to refrain from attempting to act as directors. All of the individual petitioners and respondents were residents of Massachusetts. The court said: "It is plain that the demurrer [to the petition] must be sustained. The only thing in controversy is whether the petitioners have been elected directors in accordance with the law of the home of the corporation—a question relating simply to the official relations existing between them and the corporation. This is a question relating solely to the management of the internal affairs of the corporation."

The courts of one state cannot, by injunction, afford equitable relief, even to one of its residents who is a member of a foreign corporation, by an order commanding and requiring such corporation to do, or not to do, certain specified acts connected with the internal management of its corporate affairs. Howard v. Mutual Reserve Life Asso. (1899) 125 N. C. 49, 45 L.R.A. 853, 34 S. E. 199.

Where a foreign corporation is chartered expressly for the purpose of doing business in another state, and the majority of its directors, its business, and its property are located therein, the courts of such latter state will entertain jurisdiction of an action against it, and will decree equitable relief, although it involves an interference with the internal affairs of the corporation. Corry v. Barre Granite & Quarry Co. (1917) 91 Vt. 413, 101 Atl. 38.

"When a foreign corporation accepts a license to do business in this state, or does some act which subjects itself to the jurisdiction of this state, it may be treated as a domestic corporation to the extent of rendering it subject to the writ of mandamus. . . . Where, however, it has not been authorized to do business in this state, and has done no act to subject it to the jurisdiction of this state, its action in reference to its internal affairs may not be controlled by the writ of mandamus." People ex rel. Solomon v. Brotherhood of Painters (1916) 218 N. Y. 115, 112 N. E. 752.

The rule under consideration does not militate against the power of the court, by virtue of its equity jurisdiction, to take charge of a foreign corporation within the jurisdiction of the court, and to enforce the rights of creditors and stockholders in respect to the same. Culver Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. Culver (1906) 81 Ark. 102, 118 Am. St. Rep. 17, 99 S. W. 391.

In Lehr v. Murphy (1908) 136 Wis. 92, 116 N. W. 898, which was a creditor's action, it was contended that the court was without jurisdiction, because it sought to regulate the internal affairs of the corporation. The court disposed of this contention as follows: "It is sufficient to say, as to such contentions, that the primary purpose, at least, of this action, is merely to conserve corporate assets within the jurisdiction of the court, for the benefit of creditors in, or that may come into, such jurisdiction. It is neither a winding-up action nor an action to regulate the internal affairs of the corporation."

"The question of membership in a foreign corporation relates to the internal affairs of the corporation, and is subject to regulation only by the courts of the state or country to which the corporation owes its existence." People ex rel. Solomon v. Brotherhood of Painters (N. Y.) supra.

The courts will not assume jurisdiction to set aside the election of officers of a foreign corporation, nor will they restrain the action of such officers, when elected. Butler v. Standard Milk Flour Co. (1911) 146 App. Div. 735, 131 N. Y. Supp. 451. See also Travis v. Knox Terpezone Co. (1915) 215 N. Y. 259, L.R.A.1916A, 542, 109 N. E. 260, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 387.

It has been held that the question whether a contract entered into by a foreign corporation is disadvantageous, as alleged in a stockholder's bill in equity, is one relating to the internal management of the corporation.

Madden v. Penn Electric Light Co. (1896) 7 Pa. Dist. R. 304.

In Clifford v. Hedrick (1910) 159 Ill. App. 63, the court refused to issue an injunction restraining the defendants, who constituted the executive board of a trade-union incorporated under the laws of Indiana, from revoking, or attempting to revoke, the charter of a local union, it not appearing that any question of property rights was involved.

In OLSEN v. DANISH BROTHERHOOD (reported herewith) ante, 1370, it was held that an action to enjoin a change of rates in the matter of assessments and benefits, in a fraternal benefit association incorporated in another state, involved an interference with the internal affairs of such corporation, and jurisdiction of the action could not be entertained.

2. Ultra vires act.

If the officers of the corporation are within the state, and all of its property is situated therein, the court may enjoin the officers from carrying on in the state a business not authorized by the company's charter. Richardson v. Clinton Wall Trunk Mfg. Co. (1902) 181 Mass. 580, 64 N. E. 400.

3. Funds and property of corporation.

Where it appears that there is danger of the destruction or misappropriation of funds or property within the jurisdiction, and belonging to a foreign corporation, the local courts will assume jurisdiction to prevent the same. Fisk v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1868) 53 Barb. (N. Y.) 513, 3 Abb. Pr. N. S. 453; Whitman v. Holmes Pub. Co. (1900) 33 Misc. 47, 68 N. Y. Supp. 167; Moneuse v. Riley (1903) 40 Misc. 110, 81 N. Y. Supp. 325.

Consequently, if the officers and property are within the jurisdiction of the court, an accounting of funds diverted and misappropriated will be decreed. Babcock v. Farwell (1910) 245 Ill. 14, 91 N. E. 683, 137 Am. St. Rep. 284, 19 Ann. Cas. 74; Wineburgh v. United States Steam & Street R. Advertising Co. (1899) 173 Mass. 60, 73 Am. St. Rep. 261, 53 N. E. 145; Richardson v. Clinton Wall Trunk Mfg. Co. (1902) 181 Mass. 580, 64 N. E.

400; Miller v. Quincy (1904) 179 N. Y. 294, 72 N. E. 116, reviewing (1903) 88 App. Div. 529, 85 N. Y. Supp. 310.

As was said in Babcock v. Farwell (III.) supra: "In many cases, under various circumstances, the courts have entertained jurisdiction of a suit brought against a foreign corporation and its directors or agents, to compel the restoration of property misappropriated by such officers. . . . Accordingly, actions by minority stockholders in foreign corporations, to redress grievances in corporate management have been sustained, where the court has obtained jurisdiction of the persons of the necessary parties, and the relief sought could be accomplished by acting directly on the persons of the defendants. . . . Where minority stockholders seek to have restored to the corporation property fraudulently appropriated to their own use by directors, who, together with the corporation itself, are personally subject to the jurisdiction of the court, we think it is the better doctrine that the court should exercise its jurisdiction for the determination of the controversy."

Likewise, in Acken v. Coughlin (1905) 103 App. Div. 1, 34 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 200, 92 N. Y. Supp. 700, the court said: "The courts of this state, at the suit of an officer, director, stockholder, or creditor of a foreign corporation, have jurisdiction to compel the officers or directors of the corporation, over whom jurisdiction has been acquired by the service of process, to account to the corporation for property of the corporation in their hands, or which they have misapplied."

In Richardson v. Clinton Wall Trunk Mfg. Co. (1902) 181 Mass. 580, 64 N. E. 400, it appeared that the defendant corporation was established under the laws of Maine, but that all of its officers, except its clerk, were residents of Massachusetts, and all its property was in Massachusetts. The prayer of the bill was for an injunction against the defendant officers, to prevent them from using the name or property of the company for carrying on business contrary to its charter, for an account of the company's property taken and misappropriated by them, and for general relief. It was stated in the bill that the defendant directors had fraudulently used the property and franchise of the corporation for their own private gains, and had misappropriated the property in different ways, in respect to the prayer that the defendant directors should be ordered to account for the company's property taken and misappropriated by them, it was contended that this called for an interference by the court with the management of the internal affairs of the corporation, which should be left to the courts of the state in which the company was incorporated. The court said that "this part of the present plaintiff's case is rather in the nature of a suit by the corporation against wrongdoers whose persons and property are in this commonwealth."

If some of the officers of the corporation have been served with process, and the corporation has appeared generally, and the subject-matter of the suit is a fund which is within the jurisdiction, the court will enjoin the use of such fund in violation of the contracts of the corporation. Ives v. Smith (1888) 19 N. Y. S. R. 556, 3 N. Y. Supp. 651.

If the court has jurisdiction of the parties, it may determine, without infringing on the rule forbidding interference with the internal affairs of a foreign corporation, an issue as to a conspiracy and fraudulent agreement, under which it is proposed to divest the company of its property without consideration; and, if the facts shown and circumstances then existing seem to warrant that course, the court may perpetually enjoin the consummation of such a fraudulent contract and the transfer of the property of the company, and require an accounting, and compel the restoration of any of its property appropriated by the defendants, even though such decree will operate on property beyond the jurisdiction of the court. Hallenborg v. Greene (1901) 66 App. Div. 590, 73 N. Y. Supp. 403.

A fraudulent transfer of personalty situated within the state will be set aside. Kidd v. New Hampshire Trac- tion Co. (1903) 72 N. H. 273, 66 L.R.A. 574, 56 Atl. 465. See also Wilson v. American Palace Car Co. (1903) 64 N. J. Eq. 534, 54 Atl. 415.

Likewise, in a proper case, the court will decree a rescission of a contract for the sale of lands of the corporation which lie within the state. Watkins v. North American Land & Timber Co. (1902) 107 La. 107, 31 So. 683.

In Beard v. Beard (1913) 66 Or. 512, 133 Pac. 797, 134 Pac. 1191, it appeared that mandamus proceedings were begun to compel the defendant to deliver to the plaintiff, as secretary of a certain corporation, certain books, papers, and promissory notes. The writ set forth the organization of the corporation under the laws of Washington, and that the plaintiff was the duly qualified and acting secretary of the corporation, entitled to the books and choses in action of the company, some of which were without the state of Oregon where the action was commenced. It recited that the defendant resided in Oregon, and could not be personally served in Washington, and that the defendant had been secretary of the corporation before the alleged election of the plaintiff, and had refused to turn over the books and papers to the plaintiff. The defendant in his defense claimed to be secretary, and denied the legality of the plaintiff's election. The court, deciding that it had jurisdiction, said: "This is not an action where it is claimed that an officer of a corporation has offended solely against the majesty of the state of Washington. It appears from the pleadings and all the evidence that the action is brought to protect the rights of stockholders and citizens of this state to the property in the corporation. No good reason appears why they are not entitled to receive full relief in our courts, in so far as such relief can be accomplished by acting directly on the person of the defendant. Should there be a question as to the enforcement of the judgment, we should be inclined to apply the suggestion made in the case of Kalyton v. Kalyton (1904) 45 Or. 116, 74 Pac. 491, 78 Pac. 332, and declare the law, irrespective of consequences that may result therefrom."

4. Issuance of stock.

There is a conflict of authority as to whether a foreign corporation may be compelled to issue shares of its stock. According to some courts, this may be done.

Thus, in Guilford v. Western U. Tele. Co. (1894) 59 Minn. 332, 50 Am. St. Rep. 407, 61 N. W. 324, which was an action brought to have the plaintiff adjudged the owner of certain shares of the stock of the defendant company, and to compel the company to issue to him new certificates therefor in place of the originals, which were alleged to have been lost, it appeared that the defendant was a corporation organized under the laws of another state, that its principal place of business was located, that all its general officers resided, and that all its stock and other books were kept, in such other state. The only business transacted by the defendant in the forum was the maintenance of telegraph lines and the transmission of telegrams, for which purpose, exclusively, it had local agents. The court said: "In the present case there is no question as to the issue, validity, or forfeiture of the stock. There is not even any controversy as to the right of the plaintiff to a certificate as evidence of his title. The only dispute is over the terms or conditions upon which that certificate shall be issued. We do not see how the granting of such relief is, in any proper sense, the exercise of visitatorial powers, or an interference with the management of the internal affairs of the defendant."

And in Babcock v. Schuylkill & L. Valley R. Co. (1890) 56 Hun, 649, 31 N. Y. S. R. 643, 9 N. Y. Supp. 845, it was held that a court may decree specific performance of an agreement by a foreign corporation to issue certain of its capital stock to another company. See also Pitts v. Pittsburgh Metals, Min. & Milling Co. (1908) 17 Pa. Dist. R. 821.

However, a contrary view was expressed in Kansas & E. R. Constr. Co. v. Topeka, S. & W. R. Co. (1883) 135

Mass. 34, 46 Am. Rep. 439, the court saying: "The determination of the question, Who shall be entitled to receive from the corporation certificates of its stock, so that they shall thereby become members of it? is one which does not alone affect the external relations of the corporation, but involves its organic laws, which are necessarily local and require local administration."

The latter view has been approved in RE FRYEBURG WATER CO. (reported herewith) ante, 1373, wherein the court said: "Little doubt . . . can be entertained that the issuing of stock is a corporate act, which is regulated and controlled by the laws of the incorporating state, and which, relating to the internal conduct and management of the corporation, is exclusively subject to the local laws. 'From the nature of corporate stock, which is created by and under the authority of the state, the right or duty to issue it, like the other attributes of the corporation, is governed by the local law of the state from which it derives its existence, and not by that of any other state.'"

In BOYETTE v. PRESTON MOTORS CORP. (reported herewith) ante, 1376, it is held that the court will not compel a foreign corporation to issue stock in another corporation, on the ground that a merger has occurred, entitling the original shareholders to new certificates of stock.

In one jurisdiction the view has been taken that an illegal issue of stock may be enjoined, without infringing on the rule that courts should decline jurisdiction to decide questions relating strictly to the internal affairs and management of foreign corporations, which are of local administration in the state of their incorporation. Ernst v. Rutherford & B. S. Gas Co. (1899) 38 App. Div. 388, 56 N. Y. Supp. 403; Kraft v. Griffon Co. (1903) 82 App. Div. 29, 81 N. Y. Supp. 438.

But in Kimball v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (1892) 157 Mass. 7, 34 Am. St. Rep. 250, 81 N. E. 697, which was a suit in equity brought by certain holders of preferred stock to enjoin a corporation organized under the laws of Missouri, but having a place of business in Massachusetts, and having five directors residing therein, from issuing bonds, except under certain conditions, the court said: "The plaintiffs necessarily will be referred to the courts of Missouri to compel the defendant to respect their rights, in case compulsion is necessary. The most that we can do, if they have the right they claim, is to reduce it to res judicata. Whether they have that right is a question of Missouri law touching the internal affairs of a Missouri corporation. The objection to our proceeding with the case was taken at the outset, and we are of opinion that it must prevail. We assume, for the purposes of decision, that we have jurisdiction in such a sense that, if we proceeded to a decree upon the merits, it would be binding in Missouri. But it seems to us clear that, as among the states of this Union, the plaintiffs ought to resort in the first instance to that court which alone can declare the law of the case with authority, and can compel obedience to it by force. It would be a misuse of our powers to attempt to control the action of those courts in a case like this, by an adjudication which would depend upon them for enforcement, and which they might say had mistaken the Missouri law."

Also, it has been held that a court will not determine whether stock of a foreign corporation was properly issued, but that the court of the corporation's domicil is the proper forum to determine that question. Gregory v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (1885) 40 N. J. Eq. 44.

5. Transfer of stock.

In the matter of compelling a foreign corporation to transfer stock on the books, the courts are agreed. It is uniformly held that such a course is open to an aggrieved stockholder. London P. & A. Bank v. Aronstein (1902) 54 C. C. A. 663, 117 Fed. 601, certiorari denied in (1902) 187 U. S. 641, 47 L. ed. 345, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 841; Westminster Nat. Bank v. New England Electrical Works (1906) 73 N. H. 479, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 551, 111 Am.

St. Rep. 637, 62 Atl. 971; Travis v. Knox Terpezone Co. (1915) 215 N. Y. 259, L.R.A.1916A, 542, 109 N. E. 250, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 387; Lively v. Husebye (1910) 60 Wash. 47, 110 Pac. 673; Citizens Nat. Bank v. Consolidated Glass Co. (1918) 83 W. Va. 1, 97 S. E. 689. See BOYETTE v. PRESTON MOTOR CORP. (reported herewith) ante, 1376.

Thus, in Citizens Nat. Bank v. Consolidated Glass Co. (1918) 83 W. Va. 1, 97 S. E. 689, the rule was stated as follows: "It is well settled that the right of a vendee of stock to a transfer thereof on the books of the corporation involves only his individual contractual rights, and is not a matter relating to the essential internal management of the company, cognizable only in the courts of the state in which the charter was granted, and that this right is enforceable wherever the corporation is properly made a party defendant."

Likewise, in Westminster Nat. Bank v. New England Electrical Works (1906) 73 N. H. 479, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 551, 111 Am. St. Rep. 637, 62 Atl. 971, the court said: "The plaintiff's right to a transfer, therefore, depends on the contract of the corporation. The bank is merely seeking the enforcement of a contracted obligation. It is not attempting in this proceeding to interfere with the essentially internal affairs of the corporation. It asks merely that the corporation—a party to the suit—shall recognize it as a stockholder, by virtue of its representation to the bank at the time of the sale that it would do so. The court is not asked to determine what the rights of a stockholder may be in this foreign corporation, or to exercise a discretion in behalf of the plaintiff in regard to the corporate management of the defendant. The relief sought is merely the enforcement of a contractual right which accrued to the plaintiff when it bought the stock of Bibber. It then impliedly promised that it would permit the transfer."

As to the remedies available to one complaining against a foreign corporation for a refusal to transfer stock, it has been said: "The law gave him a choice of remedies, equitable and legal. He might treat the refusal to transfer the shares as a conversion, and sue the corporation for their value, either in trover or in assumpsit. . . . He might assert his ownership of the shares, irrespective of the registry, and sue for dividends declared upon them. . . . He might, finally, maintain an action to compel the specific performance of the contract expressed in the certificate, and thereby place himself in possession of the evidence of title. None of these forms of action involves in any prohibited sense a regulation of the internal management of a foreign corporation. That is just as true of the action which calls for equitable remedies as it is of the actions where the remedy is at law. In each there must be an inquiry into the ownership of the shares, and a determination of the relation between the claimant and his corporation, before the court can proceed to judgment. In each that inquiry is merely preliminary or incidental to the inquiry whether a contract has been broken, a tort committed, a right of ownership infringed. From liability for such wrongs, a foreign corporation is not emancipated because it is foreign. The defendants are subject to our process; they have appropriated shares of stock which belong to a resident of our state; and he is entitled to the aid of our courts to protect his ownership and perfect his muniments of title." Travis v. Knox Terpezone Co. (1915) 215 N. Y. 259, L.R.A.1916A, 542, 109 N. E. 250, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 387.

6. Rights of stockholders.

Where an agreement was made by the plaintiff and another, owners of a majority of the stock of a foreign corporation, that it should be deposited with the defendant, another stockholder, and held by him with all the powers incident to stock ownership, one of such majority owners to have the privilege to purchase the stock at any time within a year on certain conditions, and it appeared that the defendant fraudulently inserted a clause in the deposit agreement to the effect that if the option was not exercised within the year the deposit was to remain with the defendant two years longer, it was held that it was not an interference with the internal management of the corporation for the court to restrain the defendant from exercising any of the privileges of a stockholder, by virtue of the plaintiff's stock held by him, during the pendency of an action to restrain other defendants from selling or otherwise disposing of or issuing treasury stock, and from acting as directors and officers of the corporation. Butler v. Standard Milk Flour Co. (1911) 146 App. Div. 735, 181 N. Y. Supp. 451.

It has been held not to be an interference with the internal affairs of a foreign corporation for a court to entertain jurisdiction of an action against promoters and officials of a foreign corporation to have an issue of stock to such defendants declared fraudulent, and to restrain the defendants from voting the stock, or otherwise disposing of it. Gere v. Dorr (1911) 114 Minn. 240, 180 N. W. 1022, wherein the court said: "It is charged that appellant, a resident of this state, for the purpose of obtaining money from the plaintiffs, entered into a conspiracy with other persons to organize the corporation for the fraudulent purpose of securing 50,000 shares of the stock without consideration; that it never was the intention to purchase lands and cultivate them in good faith for the benefit of the plaintiffs, although that was represented by him to be the purpose, when they subscribed for stock. If the plaintiffs parted with their money on account of such representations, and if by such means appellant secured control of the corporation to the detriment of the plaintiffs, they and the other stockholders are entitled to some relief. The purpose of this action, in part, is to prevent appellant from parting with the stock. The courts of this state have jurisdiction as against him for that purpose, even if no jurisdiction exists as to the corporation or the nonresident defendants. It is a personal matter between the appellant and the plaintiffs, and this proceeding is not an interference with the management of the internal affairs of the corporation."

But it has been held that a court will not exercise jurisdiction to compel a foreign corporation to call a meeting of its stockholders. State ex rel. Lake Shore Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. De Groat (1909) 109 Minn. 168, 134 Am. St. Rep. 764, 123 N. W. 417; State ex rel. Ferencz v. Unida Gold Min. Co. (1910) 32 Ohio C. C. 60.

And in like manner it has been held that the court will not grant mandamus against the secretary of a foreign holding corporation, on the application of another holding corporation, to require the secretary to call a meeting of the corporation for the consideration of particular questions. State ex rel. Lake Shore Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. De Groat (Minn.) supra.

Likewise, a court cannot compel a foreign corporation to supply a stockholder with a list of stockholders for the organization of a club to care for their joint interests. Com. ex rel. Kinney v. Mexican Plantation Co. (1910) 19 Pa. Dist. R. 861.

Where the right of the registered holder of stock to vote the shares is doubtful, under the law of the corporation's domicile, the court will not enjoin such stockholder from voting at a stockholders' meeting. Lewisohn Bros. v. Anaconda Copper Min. Co. (1899) 26 Misc. 622, 56 N. Y. Supp. 807.

7. Inspection, etc., of books.

It has been held in numerous cases that a court will entertain jurisdiction of an action to compel an inspection of the corporate books of a foreign corporation, and will require an officer having custody thereof to permit a proper person to examine and copy the same, where such books are within the jurisdiction.

Alabama. — Nettles v. McConnell (1907) 151 Ala. 538, 43 So. 838.

Connecticut. — Cummings ex rel. Elliott v. Lake Torpedo Boat Co. (1916) 90 Conn. 638, L.R.A.1916F, 1033, 98 Atl. 580.

Delaware. — State ex rel. Richardson v. Swift (1885) 7 Houst. 137, 30 Atl.

781; Swift v. State (1886) 7 Houst. 338, 40 Am. St. Rep. 127, 6 Atl. 856, 32 Atl. 143.

District of Columbia. — Compare Clark v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 14 App. D. C. 154, 43 L.R.A. 390 (books apparently outside jurisdiction).

Louisiana.—State ex rel. Watkins v. North American Land & Timber Co. (1901) 106 La. 634, 87 Am. St. Rep. 309, 31 So. 172.

Massachusetts.—Andrews v. Mines Corp. (1910) 205 Mass. 121, 137 Am. St. Rep. 428, 91 N. E. 122; Klotz v. Pan-American Match Co. (1915) 221 Mass. 38, 108 N. E. 764, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 895.

Missouri.—State ex rel. English v. Lazarus (1907) 127 Mo. App. 401, 105 S. W. 780.

Ohio. — State ex rel. Templin v. Farmer (1892) 7 Ohio C. C. 429, 4 Ohio C. D. 664.

Pennsylvania.—McGrew v. Pitts- corporation to do business in this commonwealth, and subject it to the jurisdiction of our courts, any proper jurisdiction may be exercised which concerns its dealings with third parties here, whereby their rights are affected. Rights of third parties, whether they happen to be stockholders or not, if the rights are such as are recognized by our laws, may be enforced by our courts, unless they relate to such internal affairs of the corporation as ought to be regulated only by the courts of the state or country to which it owes its existence. Where all that is desired is an examination of books, and the corporation has a usual place of business in this commonwealth, and the books and their custodian are here, there is every reason of policy and convenience why our courts should enforce a stockholder's right to examine them."

And in State ex rel. English v. Lazarus (Mo.) supra, a like view was whether the courts of this state have jurisdiction to enforce here the law of the state of Maine which gives to stockholders the right to inspect the stock books and records of the respondent corporation. It is claimed by the respondent that to do so would be to interfere with the internal affairs of the corporation, and should not be done. But this is not so. The order applied for would in no way interfere with the management of the corporation's business affairs by its directors, to whom are intrusted the powers of contracting for the corporation, investing its funds, and other internal affairs. It would not change the relations of the stockholder to the corporation or his fellow stockholders. The purpose of the proceeding is to compel an officer of the corporation having its books and papers in this state, where the corporation has its office and chief place of business, to do what the laws of the state under which it exists require to be done. The courts of this state have jurisdiction of the parties. The books sought to be inspected are within their jurisdiction, so that the order asked for can be enforced by them. Had the purpose of the application been to enforce the common-law right of inspection, it is not claimed that the order asked for would be denied. Such orders have frequently been made in other jurisdictions."

The reason for thus allowing an inspection of corporate books was stated in Machen v. Machen & M. Electrical Mfg. Co. (1912) 237 Pa. 212, 42 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1079, 85 Atl. 100, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 420, as follows: "We are at a loss to see how the granting of the relief sought in this proceeding will regulate, or interfere in any way with, the internal affairs of the corporation. It is simply a demand on the part of the plaintiff that he be permitted to see the books, records, and documents of the corporation, that he may perform the duties of director, which the stockholders and others interested in the corporation have the right to demand of him. To deny him this right is, in effect, to exclude him from the directorate of the corporation, as well as to announce the principle that a majority of the directors may, at their pleasure, exclude the minority from all participation in the management of the corporation. Unless the court assumes jurisdiction and grants the relief prayed for, the plaintiff is without any adequate remedy to enforce a manifest right. The books desired, and the officers and directors having the custody of them, are within the jurisdiction of the court, and a foreign court could not grant the relief which the plaintiff seeks, and to which he is entitled. It would be worse than idle to compel the plaintiff, a citizen of this state, to go to the domiciliary jurisdiction to seek the relief he asks here."

In New York the rule has been laid down that a proceeding by mandamus, which has no other purpose than an inspection of the books of a foreign corporation, is unauthorized. Re Rappleye (1899) 43 App. Div. 84, 59 N. Y. Supp. 338, appeal dismissed in (1899) 161 N. Y. 615, 55 N. E. 1100; Re Crosby (1899) 43 App. Div. 618, 59 N. Y. Supp. 340, reversing (1899) 28 Misc. 300, 59 N. Y. Supp. 865; Mitchell v. Northern Security Oil & Transp. Co. (1904) 44 Misc. 514, 90 N. Y. Supp. 60, affirmed in (1904) 99 App. Div. 624, 91 N. Y. Supp. 1104. But see to the contrary People ex rel. Singer v. Knickerbocker Trust Co. (1902) 38 Misc. 446, 77 N. Y. Supp. 1000; People ex rel. Miles v. Montreal & B. Copper Co. (1903) 40 Misc. 282, 81 N. Y. Supp. 974. In Re Rappleye (N. Y.) supra, the court said: "The member's right to inspect the books of a foreign corporation depends upon the law of that corporation's being, and can only be enforced by the courts of its legal existence. The foreign corporation, as a legal entity, is not here, although its officers, property, and books may be found here." But the court may compel an agent of a foreign corporation, having custody within the state of the transfer books of the company, to permit a stockholder to examine such books in a proper case. Kennedy v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1884) 14 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 326. See also People ex rel. Daniels v. Crawford (1898) 68 Hun, 547, 22 N. Y. Supp. 1025. It is otherwise, however, if the books are not within the state. People ex rel. Hoffman v. Tedcastle (1895) 12 Misc. 468, 34 N. Y. Supp. 257.

In a Pennsylvania decision, Kinney v. Mexican Plantation Co. (1911) 233 Pa. 232, 82 Atl. 93, the court denied a writ of mandamus to a stockholder to require the officers of a foreign corporation to permit the relator to examine the books and records of the corporation, containing the names and addresses of the stockholders of the corporation.

8. Payment of dividends.

In the matter of payment of dividends it has been held that a court will not interfere to restrain a foreign corporation from making such payment, in the absence of a showing of fraud. Howell v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (1868) 51 Barb. (N. Y.) 378. See also Edwards v. Schillinger (1910) 245 Ill. 231, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 895, 137 Am. St. Rep. 308, 91 N. E. 1048.

And the view has been taken that, where the officers and place of business of the corporation are not within the jurisdiction of the court, a decree for the payment of dividends will not be made because of the inability of the court to secure obedience thereto. Williston v. Michigan S. & N. I. R. Co. (1866) 13 Allen (Mass.) 400.

So, in Berford v. New York Iron Mine (1888) 24 Jones & S. 286, 4 N. Y. Supp. 836, it is held that, as there is no remedy by which a decree can be enforced, jurisdiction will not be assumed to compel the payment of dividends by a foreign corporation.

But where the right to a dividend is clear and fixed by contract, but action by the directors is necessary before it can be asserted by a suit at law, and a restraint by injunction is essential to maintain the right of the stockholder, the interposition of a court of equity is a proper exercise of its power, and not an improper interference with the internal affairs of a foreign corporation. Boardman v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (1881) 84 N. Y. 157.

So a court will enjoin a foreign corporation from paying dividends in violation of contract. Prouty v. Michigan S. & N. I. R. Co. (1874) 1 Hun (N. Y.) 655.

9. Contract of insurance.

Where, in a suit by a policyholder against a foreign life insurance company for an accounting with respect to certain accumulations to which the former is entitled, the company appears generally, a decree may be rendered in accordance with the prayer of the bill. Pierce v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. (1887) 145 Mass. 56, 1 Am. St. Rep. 433, 12 N. E. 858. See also Clark v. Equitable Life Assur. Co. (1898) 76 Miss. 22, 23 So. 453.

But where the officers and principal place of business of the corporation are in another jurisdiction, the court, it has been held, will not interfere, by mandamus or injunction, with the act of an insurance company in declaring void a policy of insurance held by a resident. Clark v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. (1899) 14 App. D. C. 154, 43 L.R.A. 390; North State Copper & Gold Min. Co. v. Field (1885) 64 Md. 151, 20 Atl. 1039; Smith v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. (1867) 14 Allen (Mass.) 336; Royal Fraternal Union v. Lunday (1908) 51 Tex. Civ. App. 637, 113 S. W. 185; Taylor v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. (1899) 97 Va. 60, 45 L.R.A. 621, 33 S. E. 385; Tolbert v. Modern Woodmen (1915) 83 Wash. 287, 145 Pac. 183.

In Clark v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. (D. C.) supra, the court said: "For the disregard or violation of an injunction, the ordinary remedy is a proceeding and punishment for contempt. But how could that be made effectual as against parties beyond the jurisdiction of the court, and who claim to be proceeding in accordance with what may be legal authority derived from their own state? It is very clear, therefore, that this prayer for an injunction could not be granted."

"The fact that the statutes of a state make provisions for admitting of foreign life insurance associations to do business therein, and for appointment of an agent upon whom service of process may be made, does not enable the courts of the state to exercise extraterritorial jurisdiction to the extent of controlling the internal affairs of such association." Tolbert v. Modern Woodmen (Wash.) supra.

So, it has been held that the court cannot restrain a foreign life insurance company from demanding and collecting mortuary calls from one of its members. Howard v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. (1899) 125 N. C. 49, 45 L.R.A. 853, 34 S. E. 199.

10. Reorganization of corporation.

In a case where a stockholder in a foreign corporation declined to assent to a reorganization thereof, and retained his original stock, it was held that a local court would not take jurisdiction of his action to recover accumulated dividends. Hogue v. American Steel Foundries (1915) 247 Pa. 12, 92 Atl. 1073, wherein the court said: "The position taken by plaintiffs is one which ignores entirely the effect of the reorganization of the corporation. The claim which is advanced is that, out of any dividends which may have been declared, the plaintiffs, as holders of original preferred stock, were entitled to be paid, in accordance with the terms of the original certificate, before anything was to be awarded to the holders of any other stock issued by the company. The determination of the question thus raised would require us to investigate and determine the validity of the plan of reorganization, and would require us to ascertain and pronounce upon the rights of the original shareholders, as between themselves and their own corporation. These questions are, we think, for the New Jersey courts to determine, as arising under the local law. If any wrong has been done to plaintiffs, by the process of reorganization, that wrong must be ascertained, and the remedy applied, according to the law of the domicile of the corporation. The action of which plaintiffs here complain is not something which affects merely their own individual rights. It concerns the rights of all the nonassenting holders of preferred stock. The validity of the action taken by the company depends upon the legality of the reorganization proceedings, under which the old preferred stock, and the old common stock, were retired, and new stock of but one class was issued in lieu thereof. It seems clear that the prosecution of such an inquiry would involve interference with the management of the internal affairs of a foreign corporation."

11. Dissolution of corporation.

A court of one state has no power to dissolve a corporation created by the laws of another state. The corporation retains its legal existence until dissolved by a proceeding in the state which created it.

United States.—Republican Mountain Silver Mines v. Brown (1893) 24 L.R.A. 776, 7 C. C. A. 412, 19 U. S. App. 203, 58 Fed. 648; Parks v. United States Bankers' Corp. (1905) 140 Fed. 160.

Alabama.—Importing & Exporting Co. v. Locke (1874) 50 Ala. 382.

Delaware.—Swift v. State (1886) 7 Houst. 351, 40 Am. St. Rep. 127, 6 Atl. 856, 32 Atl. 143.

Georgia.—Dodge v. Pyrolusite Mangane Co. (1882) 69 Ga. 665.

Illinois.—Young v. Farwell (1891) 139 Ill. 326, 28 N. E. 845; Edwards v. Schillinger (1910) 245 Ill. 240, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 895, 137 Am. St. Rep. 308, 91 N. E. 1048; Mead v. Davies (1899) 84 Ill. App. 562; Heitkamp v. American Pigment & Chemical Co. (1910) 158 Ill. App. 587.

Maryland. — Wilkins v. Thorne (1883) 60 Md. 253.

Massachusetts.—Richardson v. Clinton Wall Trunk Mfg. Co. (1902) 181 Mass. 580, 64 N. E. 400.

New York.—Barclay v. Talman (1843) 4 Edw. Ch. 123; Redmond v. Enfield Mfg. Co. (1872) 13 Abb. Pr. N. S. 332. Compare Hyde v. Scott (1912) 75 Misc. 487, 183 N. Y. Supp. 904.

In one of the leading cases establishing this rule the court said: "It would be a strange anomaly in our system of jurisprudence if the courts of one state could be vested with the power to dissolve a corporation created by another, and assume control over its property for the purpose of distributing it among those claiming to be its stockholders." Wilkins v. Thorne (Md.) supra.

And the fact that the officers and some of the property of the corporation are within reach of the process of the court does not affect the question. Redmond v. Enfield Mfg. Co. (1872) 13 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 332, wherein the court said: "To attempt, by a judgment of this court, to compel a foreign corporation to distribute its assets among stockholders, because some of the directors were resident here, or because some of the funds were within the jurisdiction of the court, would be assuming a power which the court ought not to exercise, and rendering a judgment which could not be enforced against the company in the place of its existence."

So a court will not entertain jurisdiction to enjoin the business of a foreign corporation, where the injunction would practically suspend the corporate franchise. Way v. Keyport & M. P. S. B. Co. (1863) 16 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 320.

But it has been held under the Canadian Winding-up Act that a Canadian court has power to wind up the affairs of a foreign corporation, so far as they are within its territorial jurisdiction. Hyde v. Scott (N. Y.) supra.

12. Appointment of receiver.

Generally, a court has no jurisdiction to appoint a receiver with power to liquidate the affairs of a foreign corporation. Leary v. Columbia River & P. S. Nav. Co. (1897) 82 Fed. 777; Sidway v. Missouri Land & Live-Stock Co. (1900) 101 Fed. 486; Parks v. United States Bankers' Corp. (1905) 140 Fed. 160; Heitkamp v. American Pigment & Chemical Co. (1910) 158 Ill. App. 587; State ex rel. Minnesota Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Denton (1910) 229 Mo. 187, 138 Am. St. Rep. 417, 129 S. W. 709; Dreyfus v. Charles Seale & Co. (1899) 37 App. Div. 351, 55 N. Y. Supp. 1111, reversing (1896) 18 Misc. 551, 41 N. Y. Supp. 875; Acken v. Coughlin (1905) 103 App. Div. 1, 34 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 200, 92 N. Y. Supp. 700; Day v. United States Car Spring Co. (1853) 2 Duer (N. Y.) 608;

Stafford v. American Mills Co. (1881) 13 R. L. 310.

In Sidway v. Missouri Land & Live-Stock Co. (1900) 101 Fed. 481, it was said: "The question . . . arises whether or not a court of equity, in the jurisdiction where the foreign corporation has a situs for transacting its business and where its property is situated, and without the presence of its nonresident directors, has jurisdiction, at the suit of a minority stockholder who complains alone of the internal management of its affairs, whereby the value of his stock has been diminished and is threatened with further prospective injury, to appoint a receiver for such corporation, and thereby assume the management of its business, with a view to winding up its affairs and distributing its assets. While there are persuasive reasons which appeal to a chancellor to exert to the utmost his powers to come to the relief of the resident stockholder, and save him the trouble, expense, and possible unequal chances of seeking redress in a distant foreign jurisdiction, it is sufficient for this court to say that, in the absence of a statute conferring such jurisdiction, the settled rules of equity seem to answer this question in the negative."

In Leary v. Columbia River & P. S. Nav. Co. (Fed.) supra, the court said that it deemed it unwise, and a dangerous precedent, for a court of equity to take control of the property of a foreign corporation, with a view of experimenting to ascertain if a stockholder's investment might not be made more profitable to him by having the business of the corporation conducted by a receiver, instead of by officers and agents chosen by a majority of the stockholders.

In Acken v. Coughlin (1905) 103 App. Div. 1, 34 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 200, 92 N. Y. Supp. 700, the court said: "A court of this state has no authority to appoint a general receiver of the corporation, and to enjoin it from exercising the powers granted by a sister state or a foreign government. Its judgment can affect only property in this state, which, of course, includes property of the corporation in the possession of its officers or agents who are in this state, and over whom the court has acquired jurisdiction."

But a receiver of the assets of a foreign corporation, as distinguished from a receiver of the corporation, will be appointed to prevent waste or dispersion of the assets.

United States.—Palmer v. Texas (1909) 212 U. S. 118, 53 L. ed. 435, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 230, affirming (1907) 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 316, 85 C. C. A. 603, 158 Fed. 705; Shinney v. North American Sav. Loan & Bldg. Co. (1899) 97 Fed. 9; Lewis v. American Naval Stores Co. (1902) 119 Fed. 396 (power of Federal court to appoint receiver, where corporation has submitted to jurisdiction of court); Sims v. United Wireless Tele. Co. (1910) 179 Fed. 540.

Arkansas.—Culver Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. Culver (1906) 81 Ark. 114, 118 Am. St. Rep. 17, 99 S. W. 391.

Connecticut.—Fawcett v. Supreme Sitting, O. I. H. (1894) 64 Conn. 170, 24 L.R.A. 815, 29 Atl. 614.

District of Columbia.—Barley v. Gittings (1899) 15 App. D. C. 427; Mitchell Min. Co. v. Emig (1910) 35 App. D. C. 527.

Florida.—John H. McGowan Co. v. Ingalls (1910) 60 Fla. 116, 53 So. 932.

Georgia.—Merchants' & P. Nat. Bank v. Masonic Hall (1879) 63 Ga. 549.

Idaho.—Idaho Fruit Land Co. v. Great Western Beet Sugar Co. (1909) 17 Idaho, 273, 105 Pac. 562.

Illinois.—Holbrook v. Ford (1894) 153 Ill. 643, 27 L.R.A. 324, 46 Am. St. Rep. 917, 39 N. E. 1091.

Indiana.—Security Sav. & L. Asso. v. Moore (1898) 151 Ind. 174, 50 N. E. 869.

Louisiana.—Van Vleet v. Evangeline Oil Co. (1911) 129 La. 406, 56 So. 343.

Minnesota.—Tasler v. Peerless Tire Co. (1919) 144 Minn. 150, 174 N. W. 731.

New Jersey.—National Trust Co. v. Miller (1880) 33 N. J. Eq. 155; Minchin v. Second Nat. Bank (1883) 36 N. J. Eq. 436; Albert v. Clarendon Land Invest. & Agency Co. (1895) 53 N. J. Eq. 623, 23 Atl. 8.

New York.—MacNabb v. Porter Air-Lighter Co. (1899) 44 App. Div. 102, 60 N. Y. Supp. 694; Popper v. Supreme Council, O. C. F. (1901) 61 App. Div. 405, 70 N. Y. Supp. 637; Reusens v. Manufacturing & Selling Co. (1904) 99 App. Div. 214, 90 N. Y. Supp. 1010; Hall v. Holland House Co. (1895) 12 Misc. 55, 33 N. Y. Supp. 50; Redmond v. Hoge (1874) 3 Hun, 171; Mosher v. Supreme Sitting, O. I. H. (1895) 88 Hun, 394, 34 N. Y. Supp. 816; Phoenix Foundry & Mach. Co. v. North River Constr. Co. (1884) 6 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 106; Woerishoffer v. North River Constr. Co. (1884) 6 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 113, affirmed in (1885) 99 N. Y. 398, 2 N. E. 47; Burgoyne v. Eastern & W. R. Co. (1890) 19 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 384, 13 N. Y. Supp. 537; Glines v. Supreme Sitting, O. I. H. (1892) 22 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 437, 20 N. Y. Supp. 275; Murray v. Vanderbilt (1863) 39 Barb. 140; De Bemer v. Drew (1890) 57 Barb. 438, 39 How. Pr. 466; Patten v. Accessory Transit Co. (1857) 4 Abb. Pr. 139.

North Carolina.—Summit Silk Co. v. Kinston Spinning Co. (1911) 154 N. C. 421, 70 S. E. 820, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 897.

Tennessee.—Smith v. St. Louis Mut. L. Ins. Co. (1880) 6 Lea, 564, affirming (1876) 3 Tenn. Ch. 502.

Texas.—Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. State (1907) 47 Tex. Civ. App. 299, 105 S. W. 851.

England.—Re Federal Bank [1893] W. N. 46, affirmed in [1893] W. N. 77.

Thus, in Reusens v. Manufacturing & Selling Co. (1904) 99 App. Div. 214, 90 N. Y. Supp. 1010, the court said: "There is a radical distinction between an action which seeks to have a receiver appointed of the property and assets of a corporation, in order that they may be preserved from unlawful disposition and waste, and an action for the appointment of a receiver of the corporation. In the former case it is settled by an abundance of authority that the action will lie."

So, if an insolvency statute authorizes proceedings against nonresidents, the court has jurisdiction of a proceeding in involuntary insolvency against a foreign corporation, the object of which is to subject the property of the corporation within the state to the payment of its creditors.

Re Castle Dome Min. & Smelting Co. (1888) 3 Cal. Unrep. 1, 18 Pac. 794.

And the courts of one state have jurisdiction over the officers and corporate assets, within its own borders, of a foreign corporation, so far as to be empowered to appoint a receiver to take possession of its property and sell it for the purpose of paying the debts of local creditors. Flory Mfg. Co. v. Bangor Slate Co. (1908) 18 Pa. Dist.

R. 564. See also Stockley v. Thomas (1899) 89 Md. 663, 43 Atl. 766.

Thus, where a general appearance has been made in a suit to have a receiver appointed, the court has discretion to decide the merits of the case, notwithstanding it involves the internal affairs of a foreign corporation. Chicago Title & T. Co. v. Newman (1911) 109 C. C. A. 263, 187 Fed. 573. L. F. C.

BELZONI HARDWOOD LUMBER COMPANY

v.

MRS. NELLIE LANGFORD.

Mississippi Supreme Court (Division A) — December 5, 1921.

(— Miss. —, 89 So. 919.)

Death — husband — damages — effect of misconduct of wife.

1. In a suit by the wife for the death of her husband, it is error to instruct the jury that the marital relations, or misconduct of the wife at the time of and prior to the husband's death, should be considered by the jury in estimating the amount of damages, because her conduct could not affect the amount due her as "damages to the decedent," expressly allowed by statute.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1409.]

Master and servant — employee away from station — injury — liability.

2. The employer is liable for negligent injury to an invitee, or to an employee of another department, who is negligently injured while at a place where he had a right to be, or where he habitually served with the sanction of the employer, though not employed for that particular work.

[See 18 R. C. L. 580.]

Damages — death — inadequacy.

3. A judgment for $1,500 as damages for the wrongful death of a person thirty-five years of age, earning $4 per day, is grossly inadequate.

[See 8 R. C. L. 852.]

Headnotes by HOLDEN, J.

CROSS APPEALS from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Humphreys County (Davis, J.) in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for the death of her husband; defendant appealing from so much of the judgment as held it liable, and plaintiff appealing from the amount of damages assessed. Affirmed on direct appeal. Reversed on cross appeal.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. J. M. Cashin for defendant.

Messrs. Fulton Thompson, Jesse D. Jones, R. H. Thompson, and J. H. Thompson, for plaintiff:

Langford's death resulted in consequence of the improper loading of the car.

Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. McCaskell, 118 Miss. 629, 79 So. 817; Gulfport & M. Coast Traction Co. v. Faulk, 118 Miss. 894, 80 So. 340.

The verdict of the jury was for an inadequate amount.

(— Miss. —, 89 So. 919.)

Coccora v. Vicksburg Light & Traction Co. 126 Miss. 718, 89 So. 257.

Holden, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellee, Mrs. Nellie Langford, recovered a judgment of $1,500 against the appellant as damages for the death of her husband, who was killed while in the employment of appellant, from which judgment the appellant directly appeals, and the appellee cross appeals.

Langford, the husband of appel-lee, was employed by the appellant Hardwood Lumber Company as a log loader, was earning $4 per day, and was thirty five years of age.
The appellant operated a sawmill at Belzoni for the manufacture of hardwood lumber. It owned a tract of timberland some miles out on the east side of the Yazoo river, from which it obtained its logs to be sawed at its sawmill. It would send its logging train out into the woods daily, where the logs were loaded upon the flat cars and transported back to the mill. The deceased was employed to load logs upon the cars with a log-loader machine. He would go out on the train daily, and return with it to the mill when the cars were loaded with logs. On the day of his fatal injury he had started out on the logging train, when the crew of the train stopped to pick up a flat car loaded with square bridge timbers to take out on the logging line for repair purposes.
He assisted the train crew in switching the car of square timbers onto the main line by a method known as "poling" the car, so that the engine could couple to it and take it with the train. While assisting the crew in "poling" or switching this car of timber into the train, or immediately after the "poling" of the car had been done, and while Langford was standing near the car, one of the heavy timbers fell from the top of the car, striking him upon the head and killing him.

The testimony in the record shows that the car was improperly and negligently loaded with the heavy square timbers, and that the timber fell when the car was jarred by the engine, or shortly thereafter, because of the negligent manner of its loading without standards, braces, or any means of holding the timber upon the car. There is scant room for dispute as to the evidence showing negligence on the part of the appellant, which caused the death of Langford.

On direct appeal the appellant urges reversal on the ground that Langford was killed while acting as a volunteer in assisting to switch the car into the train; that he was not acting within the scope of his employment because he was employed as a log loader, and not employed in the moving or switching of the train when he was killed, and therefore there is no liability of appellant, because it owed him no duty except to not wilfully injure him.

But this contention of appellant can avail nothing; for the reason that the evidence in the record clearly shows that Langford had the right to ride upon the train in going to his work, and therefore had a right to be at the place where he was killed; and, even though he was acting outside of his employment at the time, still he was, at least, an invitee, toward whom the appellant should have used reasonable care not to injure, and should not have invited him into a situation which was not a reasonably safe place.

Master and servant—
employee away from station—injury—liability.

Furthermore, the testimony shows that Langford had habitually and daily assisted the train crew in switching the cars in and about the train, and had assisted in doing any other necessary thing, so as to aid in getting the train out into the woods and back to the mill. This daily train service by Langford was with the knowledge and sanction of the officers of appellant; consequently it will not do for appellant to contend that it owed no duty to use reasonable care to prevent injury to Langford. Therefore, the lower court did not err in refusing a peremptory instruction for appellant, and the judgment of the lower court on direct appeal is affirmed as to liability.

The cross appellant, Mrs. Langford, complains that the amount of damages assessed is grossly inadequate, and seeks a reversal as to the amount of damages only. The cross appellee opposes this contention on the ground that no motion for a new trial was made in the lower court, and that, therefore, complaint as to the amount of damages cannot be made now. The position of cross appellee in this regard is well taken, and would settle the cross point raised if that were all that cross appellant relied upon. Coccora v. Vicksburg Light & Traction Co. 126 Miss. 713, 89 So. 257.

But it is urged by cross appellant that the court erred in its ruling with reference to the measure of damages in its instructions to the jury, and in erroneously admitting certain evidence which influenced the jury to render a verdict for an inadequate amount. The court permitted the cross appellee lumber company to show that Mrs. Langford had been separated from her husband for several years prior to his death, and that she, on one occasion in Memphis, had introduced to the witness a man whom she said was her husband. The court also instructed the jury, which is claimed to be error and damaging to cross appellant, that, "in estimating the amount of damages to be awarded plaintiff, they should take into consideration the marital relations existing between Langford [the decedent] and the plaintiff at the time of his death and prior thereto," and it is contended that this testimony submitted to the jury, together with the said instruction, resulted in serious injury to the cross appellant's case, with reference to the amount of damages recoverable in the case. It is unnecessary for us to decide whether or not the testimony complained of was admissible, because we are convinced that the granting of the instruction was error, and, considered in connection with the testimony, undoubtedly prejudiced the rights of the cross appellant with reference to the amount of damages that should have been assessed by the jury. We are led to this view on the reasoning that the statute provides for the recovery of "all damages of every kind to the decedent." Certainly the fact, if it were a fact, that Mrs. Langford was guilty of misconduct in any way as a wife, could not alter the amount of "damages to the decedent," since her conduct could not affect her right to recover "all damages of every kind to the decedent," as expressly provided by the statute. So, she being the wife, the law gives to her the "damages to the decedent," regardless of "the marital relations existing between the parties at the time of his death and prior thereto." The instruction ingeniously points at the conduct of the wife, and tells the jury to take her conduct into consideration in fixing the amount of damages. This was not correct as to the damages due for the death of the husband.

We do not say that the conduct of the wife, or the strained relations existing between a man and his wife, might not affect the right to recover for some of the elements of damages that are allowed under the statute in such cases. However, we decide nothing in this regard, as it is unnecessary to go further than announced above in order to reverse on cross appeal. The judgment of $1,500 is grossly inadequate.

The judgment on cross appeal as to the amount of damages is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial on the question of the amount of damages only. Affirmed on direct appeal.

Death—husband—damages—effect of misconduct of wife.

Damages—death—inadequacy.

ANNOTATION.

Damages for wrongful death of spouse as affected by personal relations of the spouses, or the marital misconduct of either spouse.

- I. In general, 1409.
- II. Abandonment:
 - a. By husband, 1409.
 - b. By wife, 1410.
- III. Effect of living apart, 1410.
- IV. Effect of wife's contemplated proceedings for divorce, 1412.
- V. Effect of immorality on part of wife, 1412.
- VI. Effect on wife's action of husband's relations with relative of defendant, 1413.

I. In general.

The relations between the spouses, or the misconduct of either of them not culminating in a divorce, do not defeat or destroy the right of the survivor to maintain an action for the negligent death of the other, though they may affect the amount of recovery, and in extreme cases, where the survivor by misconduct had forfeited his or her marital rights, may so conclusively negative the sustaining of substantial damages from the death as to leave no question for the jury in that regard.

II. Abandonment.a. By husband.

The legal liability of a father and husband to contribute to the support of his wife and minor child may be the basis of assessing damages against one who has negligently caused his death, although he had deserted the wife and child, and they did not know his whereabouts, and were being supported by the wife's father. Ingersoll v. Detroit & M. R. Co. (1910) 163 Mich. 268, 32 L.R.A. (N.S.) 362, 128 N. W. 227.

And the Ingersoll Case was followed in Andrus v. Louisiana Western R. Co. (1917) 112 La. 318, 76 So. 727, as authority for the right of a wife to maintain an action on behalf of herself and her minor child for the wrongful death of her husband, although for some time previous to his death they had not lived together, nor had he contributed to their support.

18 A.L.R.—89.

And in Falk v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (1916) 133 Minn. 41, 157 N. W. 904, an action for the negligent death of a husband, it was held that although the husband's obligation to support his wife, whom he has abandoned, may rest lightly upon him, and although there may be little likelihood of his resuming the burden, yet there is a legal liability which the wife may enforce, and the recovery is not limited to nominal damages.

In Dallas & W. R. Co. v. Spicker (1884) 61 Tex. 427, 48 Am. Rep. 297, in holding that there was no error in refusing to charge that if deceased a year or more before his death left his wife, and after that had no further communication with her, and the jury believed from the evidence that he had abandoned her for good, and that at the time of his death she had no reasonable expectation of deriving any aid or advantage from the continuance of his life, so far as the widow was concerned they should either find for the defendant or allow her nominal damages, the court said: "So long as the marital relation existed, without reference to the will of the husband,—the wife not being shown to have forfeited her rights thereto by her own wrong,—she was entitled to a decent support, in accordance with her station in life, from her husband. The marital relation created this right, and it would have continued to exist so long as the relationship continued, and so without reference to the will of the husband. There is no legal presumption that such relation would ever have been dissolved prior to the time when one of the parties thereto, in the ordinary course of events, would have died. The wrong of the appellant terminated the relationship by causing the death of the husband prior to the time when, in the ordinary course of events, he would have died, and thereby deprived the wife of that pecuniary support and benefit which the law would have entitled her to from her husband so long as they remained husband and wife."

Upon the authority of the last case it was held, in Holland v. Closs (1912) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 146 S. W. 671, error to charge that the wife could not recover if deceased had left her for the purpose of a permanent abandonment, and the jury believed that he would not have contributed to her support and the support of their infant child.

Abandonment by a man of his family will not defeat a recovery by them for his death under the Federal Employers' Liability Act, if his legal liability still remained, and earning power and capacity on his part existed, so that, had he lived, the legal right to pecuniary assistance might have been enforced as a thing real and measurable. Fogarty v. Northern P. R. Co. (1915) 85 Wash. 90, L.R.A.1916C, 803, 147 Pac. 652, 11 N. C. C. A. 84.

Evidence of such abandonment may, however, be taken into consideration in determining the amount of pecuniary loss of the wife and child. Holland v. Closs (Tex.) supra.

So, in Gilliam v. Southern R. Co. (1917) 108 S. C. 195, 93 S. E. 865, an action under the Federal Employers' Liability Act to recover for death of husband, it was held that, since only actual pecuniary loss may be recovered, an instruction on the measure of damages is erroneous which fails to take into account the fact that the husband had, some years prior to his decease, abandoned his wife, and had not thereafter contributed to her support.

So, in Creamer v. Moran Bros. Co. (1906) 41 Wash. 636, 84 Pac. 592, a verdict for $13,500, awarded in an action brought by a widow and three children for the death of the husband and father, was held excessive and reduced to $8,000, where it appeared that the deceased was forty-eight years old, was earning $3.50 a day, and that he had once abandoned his family for a time, and had again left his home some time prior to the accident, and his wife did not know of his whereabouts and did not learn of the accident until several days thereafter.

b. By wife.

An instruction that "if from the evidence you believe that the plaintiff . . . voluntarily abandoned her husband with the fixed purpose of never returning to him, and fully repudiated the relation of wife, . . . and had determined not to receive any benefit or aid from him had he lived, then his death, under such circumstances, inflicted no injury upon her, and consequently, though you may believe . . . death was the result of negligence on the part of defendant, no recovery can be had by her," was held in Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Bryant (1903) 31 Tex. Civ. App. 483, 72 S. W. 885, to have been properly refused, as a clear invasion of the right of the jury to pass upon the facts and determine whether the wife was damaged by the death of her husband.

III. Effect of living apart.

The fact that a wife may have separated from her husband before his death will not exclude her from recovering damages for his death.

United States.—Dunbar v. Charleston & W. C. R. Co. (1911) 186 Fed. 175.

Delaware.—Wood v. Philadelphia, B. & W. R. Co. (1910) 1 Boyce, 336, 76 Atl. 613.

Louisiana.—Williams v. Nona Mills Co. (1911) 128 La. 811, 55 So. 414.

Minnesota.—Boos v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co. (1914) 127 Minn. 381, 149 N. W. 660.

Mississippi.—BELZONI HARDWOOD LUMBER CO. v. LANGFORD (reported herewith) ante, 1406.

Pennsylvania.—Kephart v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (1855) 16 Pa. Dist. R. 756.

Texas.—International & G. N. R. Co. v. Jones (1901) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 60 S. W. 978; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Murray (1907) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 99 S. W. 144; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Saint (1918) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 204 S. W. 1021.

Canada. — Scarlett v. Canadian P. R. Co. (1913) 15 Can. Ry. Cas. 184, 4 Ont. Week. 718, 23 Ont. Week. N. 948, 9 D. L. R. 780.

So, the fact that the wife is separated from her husband, pending his suit for divorce on the alleged ground of adultery, is not such desertion as will preclude a recovery by her for the wrongful death of her husband. Williams v. Nona Mills Co. (La.) supra. The court stated that voluntary separation of either party, pending a divorce suit, cannot be deemed a desertion, since such separation is justified.

In Kephart v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (Pa.) supra, an action by a father to recover damages for the death of his son, a compulsory nonsuit was ordered, since the son left a widow and minor children, and so the right of action, if any, was in the widow for the benefit of herself and the minor children, even though at the time of the husband's decease he was living apart from his wife.

Nothing short of desertion by the wife may be inquired into to defeat a recovery or in mitigation of damages. Boos v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co. (Minn.) supra.

In Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Saint (Tex.) supra, the court stated that the jury may take into consideration the probability of a reconciliation, as well as the wife's right to be supported by the husband in a proper case, and the probability of such support, and her community interest in any property that he may acquire, notwithstanding such separation.

The fact that a husband and wife were separated at the time of the former's death is material only as it bears upon the loss of support as claimed by her. Wood v. Philadelphia, B. & W. R. Co. (1910) 1 Boyce (Del.) 336, 76 Atl. 613.

The apportionment of damages for wrongful death between a widow and the mother of deceased, under the Fatal Accident Act, is not affected by the fact that the widow was separated from her husband, so long as he continued liable for her support.

Scarlett v. Canadian P. R. Co. (Can.) supra.

A wife who was separated from her husband, who was a deaf-mute, at the time of his death, and who had supported herself, was held in International & G. N. R. Co. v. Jones (1901) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 60 S. W. 978, to be entitled to recover damages for his death. In this case, however, the court considered that a verdict of $1,500 was too large, and that it should be reduced to $500, in view of the deceased's limited earning capacity, and the probability that it would have decreased as he grew older.

The fact that shortly before deceased met his death he and his wife had separated will not preclude the latter from recovering damages for wrongful death under the Employers' Liability Act. Dunbar v. Charleston & W. C. R. Co. (1911) 186 Fed. 175.

And in New Orleans & N. E. R. Co. v. Harris (1918) 247 U. S. 367, 62 L. ed. 1167, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 535, an action for death under the Federal Employers' Liability Act, which makes the widow the sole beneficiary when there is no child, it was held that, since it is only in the absence of both widow and child that the parents of deceased may be considered, where deceased leaves a widow, proof of the mother's pecuniary loss will not support a recovery under the act, where, although deceased and his wife had lived apart, no claim is made that rights and liabilities consequent upon marriage had disappeared under the local law.

But a husband who had lived separate from his wife for over eight years, and with whom, although they lived within a few doors of each other, he had not exchanged a spoken word, was held in Harrison v. London & N. W. R. Co. (1885) Cab. & El. (Eng.) 540, an action under Lord Campbell's Act for the wrongful death of the wife, not to have had any reasonable prospect of pecuniary benefit from his wife if she had lived, so as to entitle him to an action for damages for her death.

A wife who separated from her husband soon after their marriage, the husband not thereafter contributing to her support, is entitled to recover substantial damages for his wrongful death, and not nominal damages merely, where there has been no divorce, and nothing appears to show that she might not at any time have enforced her conjugal rights under the laws of the state of which they are residents. Southern R. Co. v. Miller (1920) 267 Fed. 376, certiorari denied in (1920) 254 U. S. 646, 65 L. ed. 455, 41 Sup. Ct. Rep. 17, citing, as authority, New Orleans & N. E. R. Co. v. Harris (1918) 247 U. S. 367, 62 L. ed. 1167, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 535.

And in Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State (1895) 81 Md. 371, 32 Atl. 201, it was held that a wife's recovery for the wrongful death of her husband was not limited to nominal damages only, by the fact that for a period of about twelve years immediately preceding his death he had been separated from his family, and had contributed nothing to their support. The court stated: "The marital relation still continued to exist between the parties at the time of the death of the husband, and while they had not, for the period stated, lived together as man and wife, her legal right had suffered no change or impairment. It is very clear from the testimony in the record that the wife had not by her own wrong forfeited her right to additional support from her husband in accordance with her station in life. The marital relation created this right, and it continued to exist in law until the death of the husband, and this, too, without reference to the will or wishes of the husband."

But Goen v. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. (1913) 179 Ill. App. 566, is to the effect that it is necessary for a widow to prove that she received some support or pecuniary aid from her husband, or had reason to believe that she would thereafter receive such support, before she will be entitled to recover more than nominal damages.

In Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v.

Downey (1901) 96 Ill. App. 398, where it appeared that the deceased, who was sixty years old, and earned about $40 per month, left a widow about his age, who for some time had not been living with him, but lived in a house of her own, and, so far as appeared, did not receive anything from him, and also left four children all of whom were over twenty years of age, and who had received no fixed or regular allowance from their father, it was held that a verdict of $5,000 for his death was excessive.

IV. Effect of wife's contemplated proceedings for divorce.

The fact that a wife has consulted counsel as to her right to obtain a divorce will not affect her right to recover for the death of her husband through the negligence of another. Abel v. Northampton Traction Co. (1905) 212 Pa. 329, 61 Atl. 915.

V. Effect of immorality on part of wife.

Under a statute providing that in case of death through negligence a right of action shall accrue to the widow of the person killed, his lineal heirs, etc., the decedent's widow may recover, although she has separated from her husband, and has lived in adultery. Cole v. Mayne (1901) 122 Fed. 836. The court stated that in the absence of a divorce dissolving the bonds of matrimony, which in this country is a civil contract, her status is that of his widow, and she would be entitled to dower in his estate in the absence of a statute forfeiting the right on account of desertion and adultery.

And in Consolidated Stone Co. v. Morgan (1902) 160 Ind. 241, 66 N. E. 696, an action for the wrongful death of one who left a widow and child, it was held that evidence of acts and habits and moral character of the widow of the deceased was properly excluded, since the statute under which the action was brought provided that the damages recovered must inure to the exclusive benefit of the widow and the children, and they do not in any wise depend upon the character or conduct of one or more of the persons who might or might not be entitled to share in the distribution.

And see the reported case (BELZONI HARDWOOD LUMBER Co. v. LANGFORD, ante, 1406), which held that the wife's misconduct could not affect her right to recover damages, under a statute allowing recovery of "all damages of every kind to the decedent."

On the other hand, in Stimpson v. Wood (1888) 59 L. T. N. S. (Eng.) 218, 57 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 484, 36 Week. Rep. 734, 52 J. P. 822, an action brought under Lord Campbell's Act by a widow, to recover damages for her husband's death, it was held that she could not recover, since at the time of the husband's death she was living apart from him and in open adultery with another. In distinguishing this case, the court in Cole v. Mayne (Fed.) supra, said: "This was based on the theory that the design of that act was to secure compensation to those who by law were entitled to support from the deceased, or had reasonable ground of expectation of support at his hands while living. There is a radical difference between Lord Campbell's Act and the statute under consideration. The former is for the benefit of the husband, wife, parent, and child. The designated parties yet living are joint beneficiaries in the right of action. Each named beneficiary has a separate independent interest. The executor or administrator brings the action in the name of the beneficiary for his or her proportion, and the jury makes the apportionment on the basis of compensation, dependent upon the relation of dependents and expectancy of the beneficiaries in the life of the deceased. But under a statute like the one in question, giving a sole right of action to a designated person, eo nomine, to the exclusion of other designated beneficiaries, so long as the first in right under the statute is living, no misconduct of such preferred person constitutes a disqualification to maintain the action, unless imposed by the legislature which gives the right."

And in Orendorf v. New York C. &

H. R. R. Co. (1907) 119 App. Div. 638, 104 N. Y. Supp. 222, where a statute awarded only such sum as was deemed "to be a fair and just compensation for the pecuniary injuries resulting from the decedent's death, to the person or persons for whose benefit the action is brought," in an action by the widow of the deceased, it was held competent to show that she had not lived with the deceased for a number of years, and was, at the time of his death, living in open adultery with another man. The court stated that this evidence had a material bearing upon the question of how much the husband would have contributed to the support of the wife.

So, too, in Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co. v. Floyd (1893) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 21 S. W. 544, a verdict in favor of a wife for the death by wrongful act of her husband was set aside, where it was shown that at the time of his death she was living separate from him and in a house of prostitution, the court stating that she had forfeited all right to support from her deceased husband, and that the evidence failed to show any reason on her part to expect that he would ever again have contributed anything toward her support, had he not been killed. The court added that there might be a case of such misconduct on the part of the husband as would preclude such a defense, but that no such case was here presented.

But the appellate court will go extremely slow in reversing a judgment in favor of a woman for the death of her husband because of evidence tending to show that she had forfeited all right to support by a dissolute life, where the verdict, based on conflicting evidence, has been approved by the trial judge. Fogarty v. Northern P. R. Co. (1915) 85 Wash. 90, L.R.A.1916C, 803, 147 Pac. 652, 11 N. C. C. A. 84.

VI. Effect on wife's action of husband's relations with relative of defendant.

Evidence that deceased had rav-defendant in the widow's action to recover damages for his death is inadmissible, where compensatory damages only are sought. Gilfillan v. McCrillis (1900) 84 Mo. App. 576. The court stated: "Unquestionably, if the plaintiff had sought to recover both compensatory and punitive damages, then it would have been competent for the defendant to show that the circumstances of the homicide were of such a mitigating character as that the plaintiff should be restricted in her recovery to damages of the former kind, or, which is the same thing, to such as were the necessary result of the homicide. Where a plaintiff, for the purpose of recovering damages exceeding a compensatory sum, introduces evidence tending to show circumstances of an aggravating character, the defendant in such case may show, by evidence, mitigating or extenuating circumstances to diminish or reduce the recovery to the necessary injuries resulting from the wrong. In this state the rule seems to be fairly well settled that, in actions of tort, mitigating circumstances may be shown in evidence in reduction of punitive actual damages."

In a wife's action to recover damages for the wrongful killing of her husband, the fact that the deceased had had improper relations with the daughter of the defendant, which relations led to defendant's killing deceased, is admissible, but in mitigation of exemplary damages only. Holland v. Closs (1912) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 146 S. W. 671. The court stated: "If the killing was unlawful—that is, neither justified nor excused in law—circumstances which would tend to mitigate the moral wrong ought not to affect the recovery of such actual pecuniary loss as appellants have suffered. Exemplary damages, however, are given in punishment of the offender, and it is entirely proper that such evidence be received and considered by the jury upon this issue; but the court in its charge should instruct the jury that, if the killing was neither justifiable nor excusable in law (and in the present case the only attempt to justify or excuse in law was under the plea of self-defense), such evidence could only be considered in mitigation of exemplary damages." J. H. B.

MRS. LULU BUCHANAN, Appt.,

v.

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH COMPANY, Respt.

South Carolina Supreme Court — October 12, 1920.

(115 S. C. 433, 106 S. E. 159.)

Master and servant — liability of telegraph company for act of messenger delivering message.

A telegraph company is liable for an insult offered by the messenger by whom it is delivering a telegram to the addressee in her own home, although it grows out of a matter purely personal to the messenger.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1416.]

Messrs. Tillman & Mays, for appellant:

The action of Moseley, the delivery boy of the telegraph company, in insulting the plaintiff, constituted a tort for which the company is responsible.

Jones v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 108 S. C. 217, 94 S. E. 490; Dunn v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 2 Ga. App. 845, 59 S. E. 189; Jones, Teleg. & Teleph. Companies, 236; Fields v. Lancaster Cotton Mills, 77 S. C. 546, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 822, 122 Am. St. Rep. 593, 58 S. E. 608; Magouirk v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 79 Miss. 632, 89 Am. St. Rep. 663, 31 So. 206; Richberger v. American Exp. Co. 73 Miss. 161, 31 L.R.A. 390, 55 Am. St. Rep. 522, 18 So. 922; Dillingham v. Russell, 73 Tex. 47, 3 L.R.A. 634, 15 Am. St. Rep. 757, 11 S. W. 139.

Mr. J. William Thurmond also for appellant.

Messrs. John Gary Evans and Grier, Park, & Nicholson for respondent.

Fraser, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action for damages. The plaintiff lived, at the time set up in the complaint, in Greenwood, in this state. The plaintiff's husband was working in Columbia, and sent to his wife, through the defendant company, $11.50. The agent of the defendant sent a check for the money to the plaintiff by one of its regular messengers. The messenger found the plaintiff at home alone. While the plaintiff was in the act of signing the receipt the messenger is alleged to have made an indecent proposal to her. There is also evidence that the plaintiff offered to strike the messenger, but the messenger at first advanced towards the plaintiff, and then seized the receipt and ran away. The question is the liability of the defendant for the conduct of its messenger.

At the close of the testimony, the defendant moved for direction of a verdict in its favor. The presiding judge directed the verdict for the defendant, but said, "I am rather disposed to think that it is a step that the law ought to take, but it hasn't taken yet." The majority of this court think that the principle has been settled.

We are unable to differentiate this case, in principle, from the case of Jones v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 108 S. C. 217, 94 S. E. 490. The fact that the defendant undertook to transact its business in the home of the plaintiff, instead of in its own office, makes no difference. Certainly, none in favor of the defendant. It is more in keeping with the spirit of the law to protect the homes of the people than railway, express, and telegraph offices. A consignee may send another to get his freight, as Jones did. The communication of the telegraph company is with the person to whom the message is sent. The appearance of their messenger to most people is startling. It indicates an urgent necessity for immediate action; otherwise, the mail will do. The appearance of their messenger throws caution to the winds and opens almost every door. May it admit, with impunity, a thief, a murderer, a rapist? It seems to us that it is going to the extreme limit to say that if the messenger is sent to the house of A, and he turns aside and enters the house of B, then the telegraph company is not responsible, because the transaction with B was not within the scope of his employment. The transaction with A is certainly within the scope of his employment, or there is no ground for responsibility for any delict. The servant in Jones's Case was writing a card to his wife, which was a purely private matter. The interruption of that private matter caused the difficulty. It was not within the scope of the servant's employment to write to his wife, or to abuse and threaten those who came for their freight, and yet the employer was held responsible. Here the injury was inflicted while the business for which the messenger was sent was being transacted.

The injury was committed in the home of the plaintiff, to which the servant of the defendant had gained admission by reason of this very business, and inflicted in its performance.

Master and servant—liability of telegraph company for act of messenger delivering message.

The judgment appealed from is reversed.

Watts and Gage, JJ., concur.

Hydrick, J., dissenting:

We think the ruling was right. The law is well settled that the master is liable for the wrongful acts of his servant within the scope of his employment. The converse of the proposition is equally well settled—that the master is not liable for the conduct of his servant which is not within the scope of his employment; that is, for his servant's acts which are not done about, or in furtherance of, the master's business.

The conduct here complained of was entirely foreign to the master's business, or the purpose for which the boy was employed. It had no connection with or relation to the master's business, but was the boy's own personal escapade, wholly unconnected with the duty for which he was employed; and therefore, as to that act, he was not defendant's servant. McClenaghan v. Brock, 39 S. C. L. (5 Rich.) 17; Simmons v. Okeetee Club, 86 S. C. 73, 68 S. E. 131; Knight v. Laurens Motor Car Co. 108 S. C. 179, L.R.A.1918B, 151, 93 S. E. 869; Thomp. Neg. § 525; Savannah Electric Co. v. Hodges, 6 Ga. App. 470, 65 S. E. 322, and authorities cited by the court in a clear and well-reasoned opinion.

The fact that the boy was admitted to plaintiff's house because he was defendant's servant, and the fact that at that place and time he was about his master's business in delivering the money and getting a receipt for it, are not determinative of the question whether his wrongful conduct was within the scope of his employment. In some circumstances, time and place may be elements to be considered in determining that question, but here they are mere incidents, and the nature of the wrong complained of is the prime factor to be considered in solving the question.

Gary, Ch. J., concurs.

Petition for rehearing denied.

ANNOTATION.

Liability for misconduct or negligence of messenger not directly related to the service.

This annotation is intended to include only cases which have considered the liability of one furnishing messenger service, for acts of a messenger which have no direct relation to the service which he was performing, and so cases of liability for loss or theft of property intrusted to the messenger are not within its scope.

Misconduct.

Aside from the reported case, no other case has been found which has considered the master's liability for indecent conduct on the part of one of its messengers.

The liability of the employer for the negligence of one of its messengers, causing a personal injury, has been presented in a number of cases.

In an action against a telegraph company for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by being run into by a messenger boy on a bicycle, it is necessary for the plaintiff to show, in order to enable him to recover, that the boy who collided with him was not only in the employ of the telegraph company, but was acting within the scope of his employment as one of its messenger boys at the time. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Lamb (1918) 140 Tenn. 107, 203 S. W. 752.

One employed by a telegraph company to collect and deliver messages is its servant, so as to render it liable for injuries inflicted by him upon a pedestrian, by the bicycle which he was riding while engaged in delivering a message, although he furnished his own uniform and bicycle and was paid a commission for each message delivered. Postal Telegraph Co. v. Murrell (1918) 180 Ky. 52, L.R.A.1918D, 357, 201 S. W. 462. In holding that the manner of payment, or the fact that the boy owned and rode his own bicycle in performing the messenger service, did not affect the question of the company's liability, the court said: "He was under the control of the telegraph company in the sense that it directed him when to go, and when to return, and what to do; he had no discretion of his own to exercise, except that he might select the route to be traveled in attending to the business committed to his care; but whatever route he selected, or whatever means of conveyance he adopted, his employer controlled his movements to the extent that it derived certain results therefrom, and the accomplishment of these results consisted in doing what his employer told him to do." The decision in this case, it will be seen, turned upon whether, under the facts, the messenger boy was an independent contractor for whose negligence the telegraph company would not be liable. No other reported case has been found where that question is considered with regard to a messenger boy.

A messenger company and a telegraph company, which occupied the same office and had the same agent, were held in Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Rust (1909) 55 Tex. Civ. App. 359, 120 S. W. 249, to be liable for injuries to one as the result of a collision with a bicycle ridden by a messenger sent by the telegraph company to perform services for a patron, and without charge to him, as against the contention of the messenger company and the telegraph company that such patron was liable, where the messenger's wages were paid by the messenger company, and the telegraph company paid the messenger company for any services the messenger boy performed at its request, and the patron in this case neither paid the boy, nor had any control over him, beyond indicating what services were to be performed.

A messenger boy in the employ of a telegraph company is acting within the scope of his employment in obeying a summons of his superior to report at the office to deliver a message, after having been given the evening off, so as to render the company liable for injuries to one who collided with the wheel ridden by the boy, the wheel being his own and ridden with the knowledge and assent of the company, but not by its requirement, although the actual purpose of the summons was that he might relieve the night operator, who called him, which was not one of his duties. Kueh-michel v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (1914) 125 Minn. 74, L.R.A.1918D, 355, 145 N. W. 788.

In an action against a telegraph company for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by being run into by one of the company's messenger boys while he was on the business of the company, the jury will be warranted in inferring that the boy was on the business of his employer, where it is shown that the boy passed immediately from the scene of the accident to the offices of the company. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Lamb (Tenn.) supra.

But the allegations of a petition of one who sued a telegraph company for personal injuries that he was run over by a bicycle messenger boy in the service of the company were not sustained by evidence that the plaintiff was struck by "a boy on a wheel;" that "the boy had a blue uniform and cap from the Western Union Company;" that he, the witness, "did not know whether it was the Western Union Company's wheel, or not, but the rider had a uniform on." Clower v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (1916) 18 Ga. App. 775, 90 S. E. 730.

A telegraph company, it was held in Phillips v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (1917) 270 Mo. 676, L.R.A.1917F, 489, 195 S. W. 711, 16 N. C. C. A. 71, is not liable for an injury caused to one standing on a public highway, by a from a newboy, and in an attempt to escape runs heedlessly against the person injured. The court distinguished cases of assault by employees in carrying out the instructions of the employer, and also distinguished cases where the injury was inflicted by some instrumentality furnished by the employer for the performance of the employee's duties, such as a horse to ride, or an automobile to transport him in. The court added: "The most of us frequently send our servants to the postoffice or the store, or, if we have no one regularly employed to do these errands, expend a nickel or a dime for a special messenger for such purposes. The traveling salesmen in the employ of commercial houses go from store to store and house to house in pursuance of their calling. Boys engaged in this employment frequently encounter their juvenile enemies, and we who employ them do not think of worrying over our financial responsibility for the result. The youth who goes to the postoffice with our letter on a 4th-of-July morning may carry a bundle of firecrackers and distribute them freely along the route; or the festive drummer, on a holiday occasion, may fall over a slight and quiet traveler; or the boy who carries a parcel may, at the same time, try to control his boon companion, the bull pup, with a string. Many of us have seen painful accidents resulting from such conditions, but have seen no legal authority for holding the master liable in damages growing out of the rollicking movements of his servants on the street, even though his own business may have taken them to the very place at that very time, unless he instigates the wrong which caused the injury. Nor are we prepared to hold that a corporation is, in this respect, subject to a more stringent rule of liability than a natural person."

This case, in effect, overrules Phillips v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (1916) 194 Mo. App. 458, 184 S. W. 958, an ferred by him because of injuries to his wife, which upheld the liability of the telegraph company, basing its decision upon the fact that, though the boy deviated from his course when he snatched the newspaper, he had returned to it at the time the accident occurred.

In St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Robinson (1915) 117 Ark. 37, 173 S. W. 822, it was held that the fact that a railway call boy, who was not required by the company to use a bicycle or furnished with one, for his own convenience, and with the knowledge of the company, used his own wheel, did not warrant a jury in finding that the call boy necessarily used the bicycle in making his calls, so as to make it liable for injury to one struck by the wheel while it was being ridden by the boy in the performance of his duties. The only question in this case was as to whether the use of the bicycle was authorized, actually or impliedly, by the company; the question of employment, or whether the boy was on his master's business, not being involved. The decision turned on the fact that the limited territory covered by the call boy did not call for the use of a bicycle, so as to make its use by the boy for his own convenience, though known to the company, an implied authorization of the use thereof by the master, or sufficient evidence of the necessity therefor, and so, perhaps, distinguishes this case from those of telegraph messenger boys who are required to cover a more extended territory. The court in this case did say that, "if the service required of the call boy could not have been performed in the time given therefor without the aid of the instrumentality used,—the bicycle,—it would have occasioned a necessity; and the knowledge by the agent of such use in the performance of the service would have amounted to an implied authorization thereof, making the railroad liable for a negligent injury thereby."

J. H. B.

CHARLES NEAD, Plff. in Err.,
v.
PHILIP HERSHMAN.

Ohio Supreme Court — June 21, 1921.

(— Ohio St. —, 132 N. E. 19.)

Trial — motion for directed verdict — right to jury.

Where a motion by defendant for a directed verdict is made at the close of plaintiff's testimony and overruled, and then renewed at the close of all the testimony, followed by a like motion on the part of plaintiff, and the court passes on the latter motion first, sustaining it, and then overrules defendant's motion, and thereupon, and next in order of procedure, defendant requests the withdrawal of his motion and the submission of the case to the jury, there being a jury issue, the refusal of the court to submit the issue to the jury under proper instructions is error.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1433.]

Headnote by the COURT.

ERROR to the Court of Appeals for Hamilton County to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas in favor of plaintiff and overruling a motion for new trial, in an action brought to recover damages for failure of defendant to deliver to plaintiff a general warranty deed for his property. Reversed.

Statement by Hough, J.:

This case came on for trial to the court and jury in the court of common pleas of Hamilton county, Ohio, upon the issues joined by the petition and answer.

At the close of the plaintiff's testimony, the defendant, plaintiff in error here, moved the court for a directed verdict, which was overruled. At the close of all the testimony, the motion was renewed, and thereupon the plaintiff, defendant in error here, also moved the court for an instructed verdict in his behalf.

Next in the order of procedure, according to the record, the two motions pending having been made in the order above named, the court passed upon the latter, sustaining it, and stating that he would direct the jury to bring in a verdict for the plaintiff. After which the court proceeded to overrule the motion of the defendant for a directed verdict. Thereupon counsel for the ant withdrew, or offered to withdraw, the motion theretofore made by him, and requested the court to send the case to the jury for the jury's determination of the facts.

This the court declined to do, but directed the jury to return a verdict for the plaintiff, which was done, and judgment was entered on the verdict. Motion for a new trial was overruled, and error prosecuted to the court of appeals, where the judgment was affirmed.

Messrs. James G. Stewart and Harry H. Shafer for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Moses Ruskin and Charles S. Bell, for defendant in error:

It was not error to instruct the jury to return a verdict for the plaintiff, after the merits of the case were submitted to him.

Turner v. Pope Motor Car Co. 79 Ohio St. 153, 86 N. E. 651; First Nat. Bank v. Hayes, 64 Ohio St. 100, 59 N. E. 893; Strangward v. American Brass Bedstead Co. 82 Ohio St. 121, 91 N. E. 988; Perkins v. Putnam County, 88 Ohio St. 495, 103 N. E. 377.

Hough, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The principal ground of error relied upon in this court, and the only one that it will be necessary to consider, is a question of procedure.

The plaintiff in error contends that the court erred in refusing to allow his motion to withdraw his former motion for a directed verdict, and erred in refusing to submit the case upon that motion to the jury, under proper instructions.

The defendant in error, on the other hand, contends that the application, made after the court had indicated his decision, came too late, and that the submission of a motion by each party to the suit at the conclusion of all the testimony, asking for a directed verdict, was in effect a waiver of a jury, and a final submission of the whole controversy to the court.

In Turner v. Pons Motor Car Co.

other party sustained, give evidence in support of his case."

Although this may be considered as an authority to sustain the contention of the defendant in error, it still does not present the identical question made in this record.

A case nearer in point is that of First Nat. Bank v. Hayes, 64 Ohio St. 100, 59 N. E. 893. The first proposition of the syllabus in that case reads: "Where, at the conclusion of the evidence in a case, each party requests the court to instruct the jury to render a verdict in his favor, the parties thereby clothe the court with the functions of a jury, and where the party whose request is denied, does not thereupon request to go to the jury upon the facts, the verdict so rendered should not be set aside by a reviewing court, unless clearly against the weight of the evidence."

In the above case no motion was defendant's motion. At this juncture, and next in order as appears from the record, defendant's counsel requested the withdrawal of his motion, and the submission of the case to the jury.

From the record, as it appears, we are of the opinion that this request to submit the case to the jury came at the earliest moment at which it could consistently have been made. Had the court passed upon the motions in the order in which they were offered, as was done in the case of Perkins v. Putnam County, 88 Ohio St. 495, 103 N. E. 377, and, after the overruling of his motion, counsel for defendant had then delayed until the court had disposed of the motion of the other party, there might be some merit in the contention of the defendant in error.

It appears to us, in the light of what was actually done as disclosed by the record, that the defendant was entitled to have the case submitted to the jury, and that the refusal of the court so to do is a violation of a constitutional provision that the action of the court in this respect was error.

The judgment will be reversed and the cause remanded to the Court of Common Pleas for proceedings according to law.

Marshall, Ch. J., and Wanamaker, Robinson,
Matthias, JJ., concur.

NOTE

The effect of a request for a directed verdict of submission of the case is treated in the annotation MANSKA v. SAN BENITO I 1433. Specifically, as to the question to go to the jury, a case, see subd. I. b and c

ROBERT J. MCCLURE, Appt.,

v.

CHARLES A. WILSON et al., Respts.

Washington Supreme Court (Department No. 1) — December 22

(109 Wash. 166, 186 Pac. 302.)

Trial — denial of motion for directed verdict — power of court of case.

1. The denial of motions by both parties for directed verdict of submission of the case to the jury deprive the court of power to decide the case upon the merits as to questions of fact.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1433.]

— question for jury — negligence and contributory negligence.

2. The jury must determine the question of negligence and contributory negligence, where a street car passenger, after leaving the car at the front end and reaching the sidewalk, returns to the rear end of the car to pay the conductor his fare, and, although knowing that an automobile is approaching a block away, immediately after paying the fare, turns again towards the side for ascertaining the whereabouts of the automobile, and the driver, seeing his action, continues without warning or apprising him of his speed, and strikes the passenger with the front end of the street car, the driver is liable for the injury to the passenger without duty to look out for persons from street cars.

[See 2 R. C. L. 1186 Supp. 725.]

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for King County (Frater, J.) in favor of defendants, notwithstanding a verdict for plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries, alleged to have been caused by the negligent operation of an automobile by defendant Wilson. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Paul Shaffrath and Arthur C. Dresbach, for appellant:

Plaintiff is entitled to a reversal and a direction to the trial court to enter judgment on the verdict.

Hull v. Seattle, R. & S. R. Co. 60 Wash. 162, 110 Pac. 804; Hines v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 105 Wash. 178, 177 Pac. 795; Roe v. Standard Furniture Co. 41 Wash. 546, 83 Pac. 1109; Davies v. Rose-Marshall Coal Co. 74 Wash. 565, 134 Pac. 180; Lautenschlager v. Seattle, 77 Wash. 12, 137 Pac. 323; Withiam v. Tenino Stone Quarries, 48 Wash. 127, 92 Pac. 900; Spokane Grain Co. v. Great Northern Express Co. 55 Wash. 545, 104 Pac. 794; Donaldson v. Great Northern R. Co. 89 Wash. 162, 154 Pac. 133; Washington Trust Co. v. Keyes, 88 Wash. 287, 152 Pac. 1029; Fobes Supply Co. v. Kendrick, 88 Wash. 284, 152 Pac. 1028; Moore v. Roddie, 103 Wash. 386, 174 Pac. 648; Norris-Short Co. v. Everson Mercantile Co. 103 Wash. 399, 174 Pac. 645.

The court must jealously guard the rights of litigants against the apparent predilection of the trial judges to enter judgments contrary to the verdicts reached by juries.

Wagner v. Northern L. Ins. Co. 75 Wash. 106, 134 Pac. 685; Brown v. Walla Walla, 76 Wash. 670, 136 Pac. 1166; Kiebert v. Seattle, 84 Wash. 196, 146 Pac. 400; Okazaki v. Sussman, 79 Wash. 623, 140 Pac. 904; Forsyth v. Dow, 81 Wash. 137, 142 Pac. 490; Mathis v. Granger Brick & Tile Co. 85 Wash. 634, 149 Pac. 3; Paich v. Northern P. R. Co. 86 Wash. 381, 150 Pac. 814; McDonnell v. Shine, 86 Wash. 393, 150 Pac. 817; Carkonen v. Columbia & P. S. R. Co. 86 Wash. 473, 150 Pac. 1162; Jorgenson v. Crane, 97 Wash. 676, 167 Pac. 49.

Messrs. Morris B. Sachs and W. R. Crawford for respondents.

Parker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff, McClure, commenced this action in the superior court for King county, seeking recovery of damages which he claims to have suffered as a result of the negligent operation of an automobile by the defendant Wilson, while driving the same as agent for the defendant Matheny, the owner thereof. A trial upon the merits in the superior court, sitting with a jury, resulted in a verdict awarding the plaintiff recovery in the sum of $2,780. Thereafter the court rendered in favor of the defendants a judgment notwithstanding the verdict, upon motion timely made in that behalf by their counsel. From this disposition of the cause the plaintiff has appealed to this court.

The main question here to be decided is whether or not the trial court erred in refusing to render judgment in favor of appellant in accordance with the verdict, and in rendering the judgment against him notwithstanding the verdict. In view of the contention made by counsel for respondents that the condition of the record is such as to call for the conclusion that the trial court rendered its decision upon the questions of both law and fact, and that it was warranted in so doing, as if the case had been tried before the court without a jury, it seems necessary that we first determine the viewpoint the trial judge was required or permitted to assume in rendering his decision upon the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict; that is, whether he was required to dispose of that motion as in any other ordinary jury case where a verdict is rendered, or whether he was, because of prior motions by counsel for the respective parties and the peculiar circumstances of the trial, authorized to dispose of the motion as if he were then deciding the case upon the merits, upon questions of both law and fact. If the judge was required to dispose of the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict purely as such, having in mind that the verdict of the jury would be controlling unless wrong as a matter of law, it is plain we must test the correctness of his decision by determining whether or not there is evidence to support the verdict; while if the judge was, by reason of prior motions made by counsel for both parties and the peculiar circumstances of the trial, authorized to dispose of the motion as if he were deciding the case upon the merits, as to questions of fact as well as law, it is equally plain we must test the correctness of his decision by determining whether or not the weight of the evidence preponderates against it.

The facts determinative of the correctness of the decision upon this preliminary question may be summarized as follows: At the conclusion of the introduction of all of the evidence upon the trial, both sides having rested, a motion was made in behalf of respondents for an instructed verdict in their favor, rested upon the ground, in substance, that the evidence would not support any finding of negligence on the part of respondents; that appellant's injuries were conclusively proven to be the result of his own contributory negligence, and that, therefore, it should be so decided as a matter of law. This motion was immediately heard and denied. Immediately thereafter a motion was made in behalf of appellant, as follows: "We ask at this time, also, for an instructed verdict for the plaintiff, for the reason and upon the ground that the evidence distinctly shows by Mr. Wilson himself that he deliberately, wilfully, ran this man down." This motion was also immediately heard and denied. Thereupon the trial judge instructed the jury, submitting to it the question of respondents' negligence and of appellant's contributory negligence, the instructions fully and fairly covering these questions, including a fair statement of the law relative to the burden of proof as to each. Thereupon counsel for the respective parties made their arguments to the jury, and a verdict was returned in favor of appellant as already noticed.

Counsel for respondents now contend that the motions for directed verdict made at the close of the evidence by counsel for the respective parties constituted, in effect, a consent on the part of each that the trial judge should dispose of the case upon the merits as to questions of both law and fact, and that such consent warranted the judge in so disposing of the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, even after the denial of the motions for directed verdict before the submission of the case to the jury. Counsel invoke what they insist is the general rule that, when at the conclusion of a jury trial, before the submission of the case to the jury, motions for directed verdict are made by counsel upon both sides, such action on their part becomes, in effect, a waiver of trial by the jury, and a consent to the submission of the case to the trial judge, to be decided by him upon the merits as to questions of both law and fact,—citing our decisions in Knox v. Fuller, 23 Wash. 34, 62 Pac. 131, Easterly v. Mills, 54 Wash. 356, 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) 952, 103 Pac. 475, and Sevier v. Hopkins, 101 Wash. 404, 172 Pac. 550.

Had the trial judge taken the case from the jury and decided it upon the merits, as to questions of both law and fact, at the time of disposing of the motions for instructed verdict, before the submission of the case to the jury, we may concede for present purposes that he would have been warranted in so disposing of the case; but we are of the opinion that since these motions were denied, and the judge did, as a matter of fact, submit the case to the jury, fully and fairly submitting to it the questions of respondent's negligence and appellant's contributory negligence, the disposition of the motions for directed verdict, made before such submission of the case to the jury, is a closed incident in the trial, which can have no effect upon the subsequent proceedings therein. This is a law case of the purest kind, no relief being sought other than a money judgment for damages. It is not a question, therefore, of the verdict of the jury being merely advisory, as may occur in an equity case. After the disposition of the motions for directed verdict, the trial judge proceeded in the usual course of the trial of a law action, fully and fairly submitting all the issues in the case to the jury, which were proper to be submitted to the jury in such a case. It seems quite clear to us that the jury's verdict was as binding upon the judge in this case as in any other law case, and that we must now test the correctness of his disposition of the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, in the same manner as if the prior motions for directed verdict had not been made. That is, in so far as the question here to be decided is concerned, we must wholly ignore the making and disposition of these motions. It follows that we are now called upon to determine, as a matter of law, the questions of whether or not there was evidence to support the verdict rendered by the jury, and whether or not contributory negligence on the part of appellant, preventing his recovery, was conclusively proven.

Trial—denial of motion for directed verdict—power of court to dispose of case.

At the time appellant was injured he was walking upon the paved portion of the roadway for vehicles on Alaska street, on the north side of the street car track, in or very near the intersection of that street with Thirty-eighth avenue southeast, in Seattle. Alaska street runs east and west, while Thirty-eighth avenue crosses it at right angles, running north and south. Appellant lives on the east side of Thirty-eighth avenue, a short distance north of Alaska street. The street car track is approximately 15 feet from the curb on the north side of Alaska street, which 15-foot space is occupied by the paved roadway on the north side of the car track. The portion of Alaska street within the car track, and to the south thereof, is unimproved, and unused by wheeled vehicles.

Late in the afternoon of the day in question appellant was going to his home, riding on a street car proceeding west on Alaska street. When he got on the car it was very much crowded with passengers, and apparently by the direction of the conductor he got on the front platform. He rode there until the car stopped at Thirty-eighth avenue, the car stopping as usual with the front platform near the east line of Thirty-eighth avenue. He then stepped off the front platform on the north side, and proceeded north along the line of the sidewalk on the east side of Thirty-eighth avenue, towards his home. When he reached the curb at the northeast corner of the street intersection, he was reminded of the fact that he had not paid his fare to the conductor, who was on the rear platform of the street car. He then started back to the car to pay his fare, the car starting about the same time. He reached the rear end of the car as it was proceeding across the street intersection, and somewhat hurriedly walked or ran west along the north side of the moving car for a distance of about 15 feet, and handed his fare to the conductor, who was still on the rear platform. He then turned to his right, which would be to the north or northwest, to go across the roadway to the north side of Alaska street. Just after he had so turned, and reached a point near the center line of the paved roadway some 6 or 7 feet from the car, and evidently while still facing more to the west than to the north or east, he was struck from the rear by the front left corner of the automobile being driven by respondent Wilson, being struck by the front left fender and the left end of the guard or bumper on the front of the automobile, and severely injured. He was struck a blow of such force as to indicate that the automobile was moving at a considerable rate of speed. The speed of the automobile was, by various witnesses, estimated at from 10 to 20 miles per hour. The evidence was, in any event, such that the jury might well have believed that the speed of the automobile was at that time at least 15 miles per hour, and might also have believed from the testimony of witnesses that the speed of the automobile was 25 miles or more per hour just before reaching the street intersection.

Appellant says that when he started back to the street car from the curb at the northeast corner of the street intersection, to pay his fare, he noticed an automobile headed west, standing near the north curb of Alaska street, about 20 feet east of Thirty-eighth avenue, and that he looked at that automobile with a view of making sure that it was not going to start west along the roadway across which he was proceeding. He also says he saw the automobile which struck him, when it was coming from the east, while it was about a block away. It seems evident that he could not then know or appreciate, with any degree of accuracy, the speed at which it was coming. This seems to have been observed by him just before he reached the street car to pay his fare. The evidence is not in harmony as to just how far west appellant was when the automobile struck him, but it seems evident that he was well within the boundaries of the intersection, somewhere between the middle of Thirty-eighth avenue and the west boundary thereof. He says he did not see the on-coming automobile between the time he saw it to the east about a block away and almost at the instant it struck him, and we may assume, as it is claimed, that he did not look during that period to the east, to observe the on-coming automobile, seemingly resting in the belief that it would in no event reach him before he would pay his fare and get back across the roadway to the north on his way home. The evidence was sufficient, we are quite convinced, to have warranted the jury in believing that the automobile did not, upon its approach to the street intersection and while it was crossing the street intersection, decrease its speed below 15 miles per hour. Wilson, the driver of the automobile, when at a considerable distance before reaching the intersection, plainly saw appellant and his actions, saw appellant hurry across the roadway and alongside the street car for some little distance, and hand the conductor something, during which time it must have been apparent to Wilson that appellant was facing west, with his back to the east, intent on giving something to the conductor on the platform, and as the jury, we think, might well believe, such situation should have caused Wilson to anticipate that appellant intended to, immediately after handing the something to the conductor, again cross the roadway to the north. We think the evidence was such as to warrant the jury in believing the facts and drawing inferences therefrom as above summarized. We do not say that were we the triers of the facts we would necessarily arrive at these same conclusions. We only say that the jury could reasonably do so, and that is as far as we are permitted to go.

We conclude, then, in view of the fact that this unfortunate accident occurred at a public street crossing, where it was just as much the duty of Wilson, the driver of the automobile, to look out for appellant, a pedestrian, as it was for appellant to look out for the automobile; in view of the speed at which the jury might believe the automobile was running, both immediately before and at the time of the accident; in view of the situation in which appellant was at the time, his necessary haste, his seeming confidence—well-founded, as the jury might well believe—that the on-coming automobile would in no event reach him before he would be back across the roadway to the north—that neither the question of respondent's negligence nor appellant's contributory negligence could be determined as a matter of law; but that both, under all the circumstances, were for the jury to determine. Our decisions in the following cases, we think, support this conclusion: Hull v. Seattle, R. & S. R. Co. 60 Wash. 162, 110 Pac. 804; Richmond v. Tacoma R. & Power Co. 67 Wash. 444, 122 Pac. 351; Davies v. Rose-Marshall Coal Co. 74 Wash. 565, 134 Pac. 180; Lautenschlager v. Seattle, 77 Wash. 12, 137 Pac. 323; Fobes Supply Co. v. Kendrick, 88 Wash. 284, 152 Pac. 1028; Hines v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 105 Wash. 178, 177 Pac. 795.

We are of the opinion that the judgment notwithstanding the verdict rendered in favor of respondents must be reversed, and the case remanded to the Superior Court, with directions to enter its judgment in favor of appellant, awarding him recovery as found by the verdict of the jury.

It is so ordered.

Holcomb, Ch. J., and Mackintosh, Mitchell, and Main, JJ., concur.

NOTE

The effect of a request by both parties for a directed verdict as a waiver of submission to jury is considered in the annotation following MANSKA v. SAN BENITO LAND CO. post, 1433. It will be observed, however, that in the reported case (McCLURE v. WILSON, ante, 1421) the fact that the questions of fact were submitted to the jury after the denial of motion of both parties removed the case from the operation of the majority rule on that subject.

E. H. MASON

v.

GEORGE SAULT.

Vermont Supreme Court — October 7, 1919.

(93 Vt. 412, 108 Atl. 267.)

Trial — motion for directed verdict — effect.

1. A mere motion for a directed verdict does not impair any right possessed by the moving party to have the case submitted to the jury.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1433.]

Appeal — failure to brief — effect.

2. An exception not briefed is waived.

Trial — absence of conflict in evidence — question for court.

3. In the absence of conflict in the evidence or dispute as to the facts, the only questions are of law, to be determined by the court.

[See 16 R. C. L. 189.]

— direction of verdict.

4. Where plaintiff's evidence makes a prima facie case, and defendant offers no evidence, the court should, on motion, direct a verdict for plaintiff.

[See 26 R. C. L. 1069; see also note in 8 A.L.R. 802.]

Bankruptcy — injury to mortgaged property — ownership.

5. Mortgaged personalty is the property of the mortgagee within the meaning of the clause of the Bankruptcy Act denying discharge for debts which are liabilities for wilful and malicious injury to the property of another.

Mortgage — conversion by mortgagor.

6. A mortgagor of personalty cannot sell the mortgaged property and appropriate the proceeds to his own use.

Bankruptcy — sale of mortgaged property as wilful injury.

7. The sale of the property by a mortgagor of personalty, and appropriation of the proceeds to his own use, is a wilful and malicious injury to the property of the mortgagee, within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, preventing discharge from liability for such injury.

Mortgage — conversion of property — remedy.

8. A mortgagee is not bound to pursue the mortgaged property when it is wrongfully sold by the mortgagor, but may proceed against him for damages for the conversion.

[See 5 R. C. L. 446.]

Bankruptcy — discharge — liability for conversion of property.

9. A conversion of property may be committed under such circumstances that liability therefor will be barred by a discharge in bankruptcy.

EXCEPTIONS by defendant to rulings of the Orange County Court (Stanton, J.) made during the trial of an action brought to recover damages for the alleged conversion of a mare, which resulted in a verdict for plaintiff. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. H. H. Blanchard, H. G. Tupper, and Charles Batchelder, for defendant:

The court erred in directing a verdict for the plaintiff.

Seaver v. Lang, 92 Vt. 501, 104 Atl. 877; Fitzsimmons v. Richardson, 86 Vt. 229, 84 Atl. 811.

The evidence did not justify the finding of the judge that the cause of action arose from a wilful and malicious injury done by defendant to the personal property of plaintiff, and that the defendant ought to be confined in close jail.

Flanders v. Mullin, 80 Vt. 124, 66 Atl. 789, 12 Ann. Cas. 1010; First Nat. Bank v. Bamforth, 90 Vt. 75, 96 Atl. 600; Re Ennis & Stoppani, 22 Am. Bankr. Rep. 679, 171 Fed. 755.

Mr. March M. Wilson for plaintiff.

Taylor, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The action is trover for the conversion of a mare. The trial was by jury, resulting in a directed verdict for the plaintiff, and the defendant brings exceptions.

The plaintiff introduced evidence tending to show that the defendant executed and delivered to him a mortgage of the mare in question to secure the payment of a promissory note of even date therewith; that the mortgage was duly recorded; that the mare was, at the time the mortgage was executed, in the defendant's possession, and so remained until some ten months later, when, without leave or knowledge of the plaintiff, the defendant sold her at public sale to a person residing at Montpelier, Vermont, receiving and retaining the purchase price. It was in evidence that the plaintiff had not demanded possession of the mare of the defendant. The defendant introduced no evidence, but rested at the close of the plaintiff's evidence, and moved the court for a directed verdict on the ground that there was no evidence of a demand by the plaintiff. While the defendant's motion was pending, the plaintiff moved that a verdict be directed in his favor, whereupon the court directed the jury to return a verdict for the plaintiff. The defendant was allowed exceptions, both to the overruling of his motion and to the granting of the plaintiff's motion.

The defendant waives the exception to the overruling of his motion for a directed verdict by not briefing Appeal—failure to brief—effect. it. Nor does he contend in his brief that the evidence did not make a case for the plaintiff. His sole claim under the latter exception is that it is for the court to direct such a verdict as in its judgment the evidence requires only when it affirmatively appears that neither party wishes to go to the jury, and that he did not waive his right thereto by moving for a directed verdict in his favor.

The mere fact that a party moves the court to direct a verdict in his favor does not amount to a waiver of the right, if such he has, to have the case submitted to the jury. Such a motion is in the nature of a demurrer to the evidence of the adverse party, and challenges his right to go to the jury; but the moving party does not thereby concede that the case should be taken from the jury and submitted to the court on the evidence. Seaver v. Lang, 92 Vt. 503, 512, 104 Atl. 877. The province of the court on such a motion is pointed out in Bass v. Rublee, 76 Vt. 395, 400, 57 Atl. 965. It does not follow, however, that the court erred in directing a verdict for the plaintiff. In stating his claim the defendant overlooks an important prerequisite to the right to go to the jury. If there is no conflict in the evidence, or any dispute as to

—absence of conflict in evidence—question for court.

the facts, there is nothing for the jury. The only questions to be determined upon the evidence are then questions of law, which can be determined only by the court. St. Johnsbury v. Thompson, 59 Vt. 300, 311, 59 Am. Rep. 731, 9 Atl. 571. The evidence tended to support the complaint and admittedly made a prima facie case for the plaintiff.

—direction of verdict.

The defendant offered no evidence, so there was no issue of fact to be determined by the jury, and it was the plain duty of the court on motion to direct a verdict for the plaintiff.

On motion by the plaintiff at the time of rendering judgment, and solely upon consideration of the evidence introduced on the trial, the court found and certified as follows: "It is found and adjudged from the evidence in this case that the cause of action in said case arose from a wilful and malicious injury done by the defendant to the personal property of the plaintiff, and that said defendant ought to be confined in a close jail."

The defendant was allowed an exception to this certificate, and now contends that the evidence did not justify such a finding. The finding was evidently phrased with a view to its effect upon possible discharge in bankruptcy. The question for decision then depends upon the proper construction to be given the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act, excepting certain provable debts from the operation of such a discharge. Wellman v. Mead, 93 Vt. 322, 107 Atl. 396, 404. See also Larrow v. Martell, 92 Vt. 437, 104 Atl. 826.

The act declares that a discharge in bankruptcy "shall release a bankrupt from all his provable debts, except such as . . . are liabilities . . . for wilful and malicious injury to the person or property of another." Act July 1, 1898, chap. 541, § 17, 30 Stat. at L. 550 (as amended by 32 Stat. at L. 798, chap. 487, Comp. Stat. § 9601, 1 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 708). The mare in question was the property of the plaintiff in contemplation of this exception. It does not appear whether or not the condition of the mortgage had been broken, but at least the general title was in the plaintiff. The mortgage operated as an absolute sale by the defendant to the plaintiff, subject to the right to redeem according to the terms of the contract. Mower v. McCarthy, 79 Vt. 142, 148, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 418, 118 Am. St. Rep. 942, 64 Atl. 578. It passed the general property to the plaintiff; and, if the condition of the mortgage should not be duly performed, the whole title would then vest absolutely at law in the plaintiff, subject to the defendant's right in equity to redeem. Thompson v. Fairbanks, 75 Vt. 361, 370, 104 Am. St. Rep. 899, 56 Atl. 11; Wood v. Dudley, 8 Vt. 430. His possession, even, was permissive, and not a matter of right. McLoud v. Wakefield, 70 Vt. 558, 43 Atl. 179. It follows that he had no better

Bankruptcy—injury to mortgaged property—ownership.

right to sell the animal and appropriate the proceeds of the sale to his own use than he would have had to thus dispose of any other of plaintiff's property that might come into his possession permissively. It remains to consider whether the unauthorized sale of the mare, in the circumstances disclosed in the evidence, was "a wilful and malicious injury" thereto within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act.

Prior to the pronouncement by the Supreme Court of the United States in McIntyre v. Kavanaugh, 242 U. S. 138, 61 L. ed. 205, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 38, there was a conflict respecting this matter in the decisions of the inferior courts. But that case has clarified the situation, and renders the holdings of other courts to the contrary of no force as precedents. That was a case in error to the court of appeals of New York. Plaintiff in error was a member of a firm engaged in business as brokers. The partnership received certain stock certificates owned by the defendant in error to hold as security for his indebtedness, amounting to less than one sixth of their market value. Within a few weeks, without authority and without his knowledge, they sold the stocks and appropriated the avails to their own use. Shortly thereafter both the firm and its members were adjudged bankrupts. After his discharge in bankruptcy suit was instituted against the plaintiff in error for the wrongful conversion of the stock. He relied upon such discharge in bar of the action. The trial court held that the liability was for wilful and malicious injury to property, and expressly excluded from release by the provision of the Bankruptcy Act here in question. A judgment for damages was affirmed by the appellate division, and, in turn, by the court of appeals. The case was argued in the supreme court in May, 1915, and reargued in October, 1916. In an opinion affirming the judgment below, without dissent speaking through Mr. Reynolds, said: "To other of his property deliberately disposing of it without semblance of authority is certainly an injury thereto without acceptance of the words

The court disposes of the words in question by saying: "The court disposes of the words in question by saying: find no sufficient reason for a narrow construction.

of subserving the purposes of the statute, it tends to bring about not irrational, results. example, should a ba had stolen a watch escaped damages, but remains for one maliciously brought

The court reaffirmed of a wilful and malicious injury within the meaning of the exception previously given in Colwell, 193 U. S. 754, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 754, to which see Wellman supra), and held that conversion of the stock in the circumstances disclosed was sufficient to constitute a wilful and malicious injury to property, for which the error remained liable to damages notwithstanding the charge in bankruptcy. The authoritative holding was by Mr. Loveland in Bankruptcy, wherein "An ordinary liability for conversion is barred by discharge, but may not be based on malice or fraud, Bankr. 1365.

Some of the cases holding conversion to be within the exception must amount to hold that such is not the holding in Kavanaugh. The rule deducible therefrom is that the disposal of another's property without his knowledge or consent, intentionally in disregard of his duty, to injury, is a wilful and malicious injury to property within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act. See Covington v. Rosenbusch, 148 Ga. 459, 97 S. E. 78. It is said that the plaintiff's rights were in no way affected by the sale; that he could follow the property in the hands of third parties, either by foreclosure or by a proper action. But that his rights were invaded by the sale is too evident to admit of controversy. He was not obliged to follow the security converted by the defendant, if perchance it happened to be within his reach, but could pursue his remedy against him for damages for the conversion, which implies the injury contemplated. See Smith v. Turner, 141 Ga. 313, 80 S. E. 993, 32 Am. Bankr. Rep. 864.

Mortgage—conversion of property—remedy.

the property of the plaintiff. It was held that it was only in an equitable sense that the bank had any interest therein.

It may properly be noticed in passing that a conversion of property may be committed in such circumstances as to be barred by a discharge in bankruptcy. But a simple conversion and a conversion which shows design or willingness to inflict a wrong upon another, or the reckless disregard of the other's rights, are entirely different in character. Kavanaugh v. McIntyre, 128 App. Div. 722, 112 N. Y. Supp. 987.

Bankruptcy—discharge—liability for conversion of property.

We hold that the evidence before the court was sufficient to support the finding excepted to.

Judgment affirmed.

NOTE.

The effect of a request by both parties for a directed verdict as waiver of submission of the case to the jury is treated in the annotation following MANSKA v. SAN BENITO LAND CO. post, 1433. For the minority view on this subject which was adopted in the reported case (MASON v. SAULT, ante, 1426) see subd. II. of that annotation.

C. A. MANSKA,

v.

SAN BENITO LAND COMPANY, Appt.

Iowa Supreme Court—September 30, 1921.

(— Iowa, —, 184 N. W. 345.)

Trial — motion for directed verdict — effect on right to jury.

The fact that both parties move for directed verdict at the close of the evidence does not authorize the court to take the case from the jury if there is evidence to be submitted to them.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1433.]

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Monona County (Jepson, J.) in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover a commission alleged to have been earned by him as defendant's agent in a sale of certain real estate. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Zumbrunn & Meyer and Miles W. Newby for appellant.

Messrs. Prichard & Prichard for appellee.

Weaver, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It is the claim of the plaintiff that defendant, being the owner of 435 acres of land in Monona county, employed or authorized him as its agent to find a purchaser for said property at the stated price of $85 per acre, for which service, when performed, defendant agreed to pay plaintiff a commission of $2.50 per acre. Plaintiff alleges that, acting upon such appointment and authority, he did find and produce the defendant a purchaser, ready, able, and willing to buy the land at the price of $85 per acre, thereby earning the agreed commission, but defendant neglects and refuses to pay the same.

The defendant denies the allegations of the petition. A jury was impaneled for the trial of the issues joined, and at the close of the plaintiff's evidence in chief the defendant moved for a directed verdict in its favor on the ground that the evidence was clearly insufficient to sustain a verdict for the plaintiff. The motion was denied and defendant proceeded to introduce evidence to sustain its defense. At the close of all the evidence, defendant renewed its motion for a directed verdict. The plaintiff also moved for a directed verdict against the defendant.

On these filings being made, the court denied the defendant's motion, sustained the motion filed by the plaintiff, and directed the jury to find for plaintiff for the full amount claimed by him. On the verdict so returned judgment was entered, and defendant appeals.

The position taken by the court on the questions so presented will be better understood by one or two brief citations from the record upon which this appeal has been presented. In denying defendant's motion for a verdict filed in chief, the court, after stating the situation as it has then been developed by plaintiff's testimony, said that "under the state of the record there is a question for the jury." When both motions had been filed at the close of all the evidence, the court announced its ruling in favor of plaintiff, saying:

"There are facts in this case in my judgment that, if a motion had not been made by both sides, would have warranted the court in submitting this case to the jury.

"Both sides having asked for a directed verdict, that is a concession by both sides that it is a question of law only; that is, the uncontroverted evidence on one side or the other entitles one side or the other to a directed verdict.

"The court does not know that it can say any more in ruling on this motion than it has suggested to counsel in the way of suggestions, during the trial, and during the argument.

"The court is of the opinion that if Mr. Maska had the conversation with Mr. Doffing that he claims to have had, that the jury might well find that when he found a purchaser, Kehoe & Kempmeyer were in a position to take care of the transaction.

"As stated before, a great deal of counsel's argument would have full force was this an action between Mr. Mohr and Mr. Doffing to compel the performance of Mohr's contract. But it is not. This is simply an action to recover a commission for finding a purchaser, and both sides having asked for a directed verdict, the motion on the part of the plaintiff will be sustained."

The italics in this quotation are ours, and the language so emphasized clearly indicates the controlling influence upon the mind of the court of the fact that each of the parties had asked a directed verdict, while the ruling, in its entirety, makes it equally clear that were it not for the fact that both had so moved, the issues would necessarily have been submitted to the jury. If there was error in this ruling, it will necessitate a reversal without consideration of other errors assigned. The question is not a new one in our practice, and has had the attention of the court on several occasions. The rule stated by the trial court has the support of precedents in some jurisdictions; but in other jurisdictions, including our own, it has been expressly disapproved. In First Nat. Bank v. Mt. Pleasant Mill Co. 103 Iowa, 524, 72 N. W. 689, after stating the proposition and saying it seems to be established by the weight of authority, we expressly refrain from passing upon it. In a later case (German Sav. Bank v. Bates Addition Improv. Co. 111 Iowa, 432, 82 N. W. 1005), we said: "This court has never passed upon the question of application of the rule in our state, and we understand that the practice with us has been different;" and we refused to recognize it in the case there decided. Later, in German Sav. Bank v. Bates Addition Improv. Co. 111 Iowa, 435, 82 N. W. 1005, the point was again considered. There, as here, at the close of all the evidence the plaintiff and defendant each moved for a directed verdict in its favor; the court held with plaintiff and directed a verdict against defendant. There, as here, also, it was argued that both parties having asked a directed verdict, it was tantamount to an express waiver by each of the right to go to the jury, but we held otherwise. Such motions do not indicate any agreement or mutual concession by the parties, but rather an irreconcilable difference. Neither is willing as against the motion of the other to waive a jury, and there is no implication of such waiver from the mere fact that each thinks he has ground for asking a peremptory in-

Trial—motion for directed verdict—effect on right to jury.

struction. This holding was re-affirmed in M. M. Walker Co. v. Dubuque Fruit & Produce Co. 113 Iowa, 428, 53 L.R.A. 775, 85 N. W. 614; Teeple v. Hawkeye Gold Dredging Co. 137 Iowa, 214, 114 N. W. 906; and again in Hamill v. Joseph Schlitz Brewing Co. 165 Iowa, 294, 143 N. W. 110, 145 N. W. 511. In the latter case we said the point "must be considered settled." For similar holdings in other states, see Wolf v. Chicago Sign Printing Co. 233 Ill. 501, 84 N. E. 614, 13 Ann. Cas. 369; Poppitz v. German Ins. Co. 85 Minn. 118, 88 N. W. 438; Hite v. Keene, 149 Wis. 207, 134 N. W. 383, 135 N. W. 354, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 251; Lonier v. Ann Arbor Sav. Bank, 153 Mich. 253, 116 N. W. 1088; Farmers' Nat. Bank v. McCall, 25 Okla. 600, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 217, 106 Pac. 866. .

In the Wolf Case, supra, the Illinois court, after a careful consideration of the conflicting precedents upon the question of practice, says that to hold "that a request to the court to decide a pure question of law clothes the court with power to decide controverted questions of fact would be both illogical and inconsistent with the nature of the motion. . . . When one party asks the court to direct a verdict in his favor, the fact that the other party makes a similar motion cannot in any way affect the rights of the first party."

In our own case, Teeple v. Hawkeye Gold Dredging Co. 137 Iowa, 214, 114 N. W. 906, the court was urged to disapprove or overrule our former precedents to this effect; but we said: "It is true that the rule is different in many jurisdictions, but in our view the ends of justice will in general be subserved by adhering to the rule we have entered upon."

We find no sufficient reason in the present case to depart from the settled practice in this respect.

Counsel cite us to the opinion in Conkling v. Knights & Ladies Security, 183 Iowa, 665, 166 N. W. 384, as sustaining the ruling of the trial court in this case. An exam-nation of the opinion referred to demonstrates it is not an authority for that contention. It there appears that a motion for directed verdict, having been made by both plaintiff and defendant, counsel for plaintiff, in answer to a question, by the court, said, "Yes, that waives a jury," and defendant's counsel did not contend otherwise or except that this was held a waiver of the right to go to the jury. It is also to be noticed, as was there pointed out in the opinion, that the objection to the ruling was not presented or argued to this court as required by the rule and statute, and what is there said was at best dictum. Nor is any authority in support of appellee's position to be found in the other cited case, Murray v. Brotherhood of American Yeomen, 180 Iowa, 626, 163 N. W. 421. The opinion there expressly concedes the general rule in this state to be as we have hereinbefore stated it, but says there are "some exceptions, as where both sides of the case either expressly or impliedly consent to a disposition of the case by the court." It is sufficient here to say there is in the instant case no showing of an express consent by the defendant to the decision of the fact issue by the court, and nothing from which such consent is necessarily to be implied.

The assignment of error upon the order directing a verdict is well taken. That except for the supposed effect of the filing of the two motions the record presented an issue of fact for the jury was conceded by the trial court, and that there was such an issue an inspection of the record makes very plain.

The error in directing a verdict was necessarily prejudicial to the appellant, and the judgment appealed from must be and it is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

Evans, Ch. J., and Preston and De Graff, JJ., concur.

ANNOTATION.

Request by both parties for directed verdict as waiver of submission to jury.

I. Majority rule:

- a. Rule stated, 1433.
- b. Effect of request to go to jury, 1444.
- c. Timeliness of request to go to jury, 1449.
- d. Questions presented for review, 1451.

II. Minority rule:

- a. Rule stated, 1455.
- b. Exception to rule, 1458.

III. Rule in Georgia, 1460.

IV. Rule in Kansas, 1460.

I. Majority rule.

a. Rule stated.

In a majority of the jurisdictions wherein the question has arisen, it has been held that where each of the parties to an action requests the court to direct a verdict in his favor, and makes no request that the jury shall be allowed to determine any question of fact, the parties will be presumed to have waived the right to a trial by jury, and to have constituted the court a trier of questions both of law and of fact.

United States.—Chrystie v. Foster (1894) 9 C. C. A. 606, 26 U. S. App. 67, 61 Fed. 551; Merwin v. Magone (1895) 17 C. C. A. 361, 35 U. S. App. 741; Magone v. Origet (1895) 17 C. C. A. 363, 35 U. S. App. 744, 70 Fed. 776, 778; Bradley Timber Co. v. White (1903) 58 C. C. A. 55, 121 Fed. 779, affirming (1902) 119 Fed. 989; United States v. Bishop (1903) 60 C. C. A. 123, 125 Fed. 181; McCormick v. National City Bank (1906) 73 C. C. A. 350, 142 Fed. 132, 6 Ann. Cas. 544; Mead v. Darling (1908) 86 C. C. A. 552, 159 Fed. 684; Sena v. American Turquoise Co. (1911) 220 U. S. 497, 55 L. ed. 559, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 488; Pensacola State Bank v. Merchants' & Farmers' Bank (1910) 180 Fed. 504, affirmed on other grounds in (1911) 105 C. C. A. 634, 183 Fed. 1022; American Nat.

Bank v. Miller (1911) 107 C. C. A. 456, 185 Fed. 338, affirmed on other grounds in (1913) 229 U. S. 517, 57 L. ed. 1310, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 883; Melton v. Pensacola Bank & Trust Co. (1911) 111 C. C. A. 166, 190 Fed. 126; Lawton v. Carpenter (1912) 115 C. C. A. 264, 195 Fed. 362, certiorari denied in (1912) 225 U. S. 710, 56 L. ed. 1267, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 840; Re Iron Clad Mfg. Co. (1912) 116 C. C. A. 642, 197 Fed. 280; Murch Bros. Constr. Co. v. Johnson (1913) 121 C. C. A. 353, 203 Fed. 1; Stratton's Independence v. Howbert (1912) 207 Fed. 419, affirmed in (1914) 127 C. C. A. 667, 211 Fed. 1023, on mandate of Supreme Court (1913) 231 U. S. 399, 58 L. ed. 285, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 136, in response to questions certified; United States v. Two Baskets (1913) 123 C. C. A. 310, 205 Fed. 37; Schlottman v. E. I. Du Pont de Nemours Powder Co. (1913) 210 Fed. 356, affirmed on other grounds in (1914) 134 C. C. A. 161, 218 Fed. 353, which has writ of certiorari denied in (1915) 235 U. S. 705, 59 L. ed. 434, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 282; New York v. Third Nat. Bank (1915) 137 C. C. A. 75, 221 Fed. 175, certiorari denied in (1915) 238 U. S. 628, 59 L. ed. 1496, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 791; Williams v. Vreeland (1918) 250 U. S. 295, 63 L. ed. 989, 3 A.L.R. 1038, 39 Sup. Ct. Rep. 438, affirming judgment (1917) 156 C. C. A. 632, 244 Fed. 346; Michigan Copper & Brass Co. v. Chicago Screw Co. (1920) 269 Fed. 502; Richman v. Mulcahy & Gibson (1921) 269 Fed. 786. See also St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. S. Samuels & Co. (1914) 128 C. C. A. 188, 211 Fed. 588.

Alabama.—Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Cody (1902) 137 Ala. 597, 34 So. 1003.

Arkansas.—St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Mulkey (1911) 100 Ark. 71, 139 S. W. 643, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1339; Bankers Surety Co. v. William Miller & Sons Co. (1912) 105 Ark. 697, 150 S. W. 570; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. McMillan (1912) 105 Ark. 25, 150 S. W. 112; Home F. Ins. Co. v. Wilson (1913) 109 Ark. 324, 159 S. W. 1113; Sims v. Everett (1914) 113 Ark. 198, L.R.A. 1918C, 7, 168 S. W. 559, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 629; Ozark Diamond Mines

Corp. v. Townes (1915) 117 Ark. 552, 174 S. W. 151; Nutt v. Fry (1915) 119 Ark. 450, 177 S. W. 1137; Hill v. Kavanaugh (1915) 118 Ark. 134, 4 A.L.R. 1, 176 S. W. 336; Miellnier v. Toledo Scale Co. (1917) 128 Ark. 211, 193 S. W. 497; Wells, F. & Co. Exp. v. Townsend & F. Co. (1918) 134 Ark. 560, 204 S. W. 417; Gibson v. Allen-West Commission Co. (1919) 138 Ark. 172, 211 S. W. 142; Oil Trough Gin Co. v. Hines (1919) 141 Ark. 133, 216 S. W. 310; Security L. Ins. Co. v. Bates (1920) 144 Ark. 345, 222 S. W. 740; Sanderson v. Marconi (1921) — Ark. —, 231 S. W. 554; Watkins v. Louisiana State L. Ins. Co. (1922) — Ark. —, 237 S. W. 89. See also Gee v. Hatley (1914) 114 Ark. 376, 170 S. W. 72.

Colorado.—Saxton v. Perry (1909) 47 Colo. 263, 107 Pac. 281; Butcher v. Butcher (1912) 21 Colo. App. 416, 122 Pac. 397.

Indiana. Deeter v. Burk (1914) 59 Ind. App. 449, 107 N. E. 304; Indianapolis Traction & Terminal Co. v. Vaughn (1917) 65 Ind. App. 581, 117 N. E. 673.

Michigan.—Culligan v. Alpern (1910) 160 Mich. 241, 125 N. W. 20; Hatch v. Calhoun County (1912) 170 Mich. 322, 136 N. W. 350; Germain v. Loud (1915) 189 Mich. 38, 155 N. W. 373; Kyselka v. Northern Assur. Co. (1916) 194 Mich. 430, 160 N. W. 559; Superior Steel Spring Co. v. New Era Spring & Specialty Co. (1921) — Mich. —, 184 N. W. 440.

Montana.—Fifty Associates Co. v. Quigley (1919) 56 Mont. 348, 185 Pac. 155; Bank of Commerce v. United States Fidelity & G. Co. (1920) 58 Mont. 236, 194 Pac. 158.

Nebraska.—Dorsey v. Wellman (1909) 85 Neb. 262, 122 N. W. 989; Martin v. Harvey (1911) 89 Neb. 173, 130 N. W. 1039; Howell v. Bowman (1911) 89 Neb. 389, 131 N. W. 597; Segear v. Westcott (1909) 83 Neb. 515, 120 N. W. 170; Henton v. Sovereign Camp, W. W. (1910) 87 Neb. 552, 138 Am. St. Rep. 500, 127 N. W. 869; Kreck v. Supreme Lodge, F. V. (1914) 95 Neb. 428, 145 N. W. 859; Fairbanks, M. & Co. v. Austin (1914) 96 Neb. 137, 147 N. W. 126, rehearing denied and opinion modified in (1914) 96 Neb.

139, 148 N. W. 332; Hamilton v. North American Acci. Ins. Co. (1916) 99 Neb. 579, 157 N. W. 111, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 409; Modern Woodmen v. Berry (1917) 100 Neb. 820, 161 N. W. 534; Merchants' Mechanics' First Nat. Bank v. Cavers Elevator Co. (1920) 105 Neb. 321, 180 N. W. 588.

New Mexico.—Home Sav. Bank v. Woodruff (1908) 14 N. M. 502, 94 Pac. 957; De Burg v. Armenta (1917) 22 N. M. 443, 164 Pac. 838. See also Bank of Commerce v. Broyles (1910) 16 N. M. 414, 120 Pac. 670.

New York.—Leggett v. Hyde (1874) 58 N. Y. 272, 17 Am. Reg. 244; Koehler v. Adler (1879) 78 N. Y. 287; Briggs v. Waldron (1881) 83 N. Y. 582, affirming (1879) 9 N. Y. Week. Dig. 219; Dillon v. Cockroft (1882) 90 N. Y. 649; Stratford v. Jones (1885) 97 N. Y. 586; Provost v. McEncroe (1886) 102 N. Y. 650, 5 N. E. 795; Kirtz v. Peck (1889) 113 N. Y. 222, 21 N. E. 130; National City Bank v. Westcott (1890) 118 N. Y. 468, 16 Am. St. Rep. 771, 23 N. E. 900; Reck v. Phenix Ins. Co. (1891) 130 N. Y. 160, 29 N. E. 137; Daly v. Wise (1892) 132 N. Y. 306, 16 L.R.A. 236, 30 N. E. 837; Clason v. Baldwin (1897) 152 N. Y. 204, 46 N. E. 322; Porter v. Traders Ins. Co. (1900) 164 N. Y. 504, 52 L.R.A. 424, 58 N. E. 641; Sigua Iron Co. v. Brown (1902) 171 N. Y. 488, 64 N. E. 194, affirming (1901) 58 App. Div. 436, 69 N. Y. Supp. 295; Beach v. Supreme Tent, K. M. (1904) 177 N. Y. 100, 69 N. E. 281, affirming (1902) 74 App. Div. 527, 77 N. Y. Supp. 770; Prentice v. Goodrich (1896) 1 App. Div. 15, 36 N. Y. Supp. 740; McGuire v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. (1896) 7 App. Div. 575, 40 N. Y. Supp. 300, affirmed in (1899) 158 N. Y. 680, 52 N. E. 1124; Persons v. Hawkins (1899) 41 App. Div. 171, 58 N. Y. Supp. 831; Ranken v. Donovan (1899) 46 App. Div. 225, 61 N. Y. Supp. 542, affirmed in (1901) 166 N. Y. 626, 60 N. E. 1119; Lyman v. Mead (1900) 56 App. Div. 582, 67 N. Y. Supp. 254; Paul v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. (1902) 72 App. Div. 449, 76 N. Y. Supp. 552, affirmed in (1903) 175 N. Y. 478, 67 N. E. 1087, which has reargument denied in (1903) 175 N. Y. 513, 67 N. E. 1087; Leggat v. Leggat (1903) 79 App. Div.

141, 80 N. Y. Supp. 327, affirmed in (1903) 176 N. Y. 590, 68 N. E. 1119; Cullinan v. Fidelity & C. Co. (1903) 84 App. Div. 292, 82 N. Y. Supp. 695, affirmed in (1904) 177 N. Y. 574, 69 N. E. 1122; Rosenstein v. Vogemann (1905) 102 App. Div. 39, 92 N. Y. Supp. 86, affirmed on other grounds in (1906) 184 N. Y. 325, 77 N. E. 625, 6 Ann. Cas. 13, 20 Am. Neg. Rep. 148; Zirinsky v. Post (1906) 112 App. Div. 74, 98 N. Y. Supp. 132; Zeller v. Leiter (1906) 114 App. Div. 148, 99 N. Y. Supp. 624, reversed on other grounds in (1907) 189 N. Y. 361, 82 N. E. 158; Johnston v. Trask (1886) 40 Hun, 417, affirmed in (1889) 116 N. Y. 136, 5 L.R.A. 630, 15 Am. St. Rep. 394, 22 N. E. 377; Reilly v. Lee (1891) 61 Hun, 627, 16 N. Y. Supp. 313; Banker v. Knibloe (1893) 69 Hun, 539, 23 N. Y. Supp. 1091; Benjamin v. Welch (1893) 73 Hun, 371, 26 N. Y. Supp. 156; Smith v. Weston (1895) 88 Hun, 25, 34 N. Y. Supp. 557, affirmed in (1899) 159 N. Y. 194, 54 N. E. 38; Cohen v. Moshkowitz (1896; Sup. Ct. App. T.) 17 Misc. 389, 39 N. Y. Supp. 1084; Krautman v. Friedman (1899; Sup. Ct. App. T.) 26 Misc. 821, 57 N. Y. Supp. 84; Schreyer v. Jordan (1900; Sup. Ct. App. T.) 30 Misc. 764, 61 N. Y. Supp. 889; Edgar v. Clason (1900; Sup. Ct. App. T.) 31 Misc. 763, 64 N. Y. Supp. 359; Griffin v. Interurban Street R. Co. (1905; Sup. Ct. Tr. T.) 46 Misc. 328, 94 N. Y. Supp. 854; Hagaman v. Burr (1876) 9 Jones & S. 423; Marcus v. Thornton (1879) 12 Jones & S. 411; Green v. Shute (1889; City Ct. Gen. T.) 26 N. Y. S. R. 114, 7 N. Y. Supp. 69, affirmed in (1889) 15 Daly, 358, 361, 7 N. Y. Supp. 645, 646; Bradley Fertilizer Co. v. South Pub. Co. (1891; N. Y. City Ct. Gen. T.) 39 N. Y. S. R. 218, 14 N. Y. Supp. 917, reversed on other grounds in (1892; C. Pl. Gen. T.) 44 N. Y. S. R. 119, 17 N. Y. Supp. 587; Nesbit v. Mathews (1891; City Ct. Gen. T.) 41 N. Y. S. R. 89, 16 N. Y. Supp. 202; Gitty v. Allen (1901) 62 App. Div. 622, 71 N. Y. Supp. 88; Baker v. Appleton (1905) 107 App. Div. 358, 95 N. Y. Supp. 125, affirmed without opinion in (1907) 187 N. Y. 548, 80 N. E. 1104; Sturmdorf v. Saunders (1907) 117 App. Div. 762, 102 N. Y. Supp. 1042, affirmed without opinion in (1908) 190 N. Y. 555, 84 N. E. 1132; Colaneri v. General Acci. Assur. Corp. (1908) 126 App. Div. 591, 110 N. Y. Supp. 678; Sandel v. Sommers (1909) 131 App. Div. 537, 115 N. Y. Supp. 357; Coffey v. Burke (1909) 132 App. Div. 128, 116 N. Y. Supp. 514; Clancy v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. (1909) 133 App. Div. 119, 117 N. Y. Supp. 233, reversed on other grounds in (1911) 201 N. Y. 235, 94 N. E. 867; Secor v. Ardsley Ice Co. (1909) 133 App. Div. 136, 117 N. Y. Supp. 414, affirmed in (1911) 201 N. Y. 603, 95 N. E. 1139; Buffalo Glass Co. v. Assets Realization Co. (1909) 133 App. Div. 775, 117 N. Y. Supp. 1087; Fairbanks v. Nichols (1909) 135 App. Div. 298, 119 N. Y. Supp. 752; New York v. Thirty-Fourth Street Crosstown R. Co. (1910) 137 App. Div. 644, 122 N. Y. Supp. 344; Marus v. Central R. Co. (1916) 175 App. Div. 783, 161 N. Y. Supp. 546; Gertner v. Glens Falls Ins. Co. (1920) 193 App. Div. 836, 184 N. Y. Supp. 669; Durham v. Stuyvesant Ins. Co. (1920) 112 Misc. 440, 182 N. Y. Supp. 887, reversed on other grounds in (1921) 196 App. Div. 924, 187 N. Y. Supp. 659. See also Ormes v. Dauchy (1880) 82 N. Y. 443, 37 Am. Rep. 583; Guenther v. Amsden (1900) 16 App. Div. 607, 44 N. Y. Supp. 982, affirmed in (1897) 162 N. Y. 601, 57 N. E. 1111; Burges v. Jackson (1897) 18 App. Div. 296, 46 N. Y. Supp. 326, affirmed in (1900) 162 N. Y. 632, 57 N. E. 1105; Frecking v. Rolland (1871) 1 Jones & S. 499; Harrison v. Vermont Manganese Co. (1892; City Ct. Gen. T.) 1 Misc. 402, 20 N. Y. Supp. 894; Sewell v. Home Ins. Co. (1909) 131 App. Div. 131, 115 N. Y. Supp. 345; People ex rel. Ross v. Dooling (1909) 132 App. Div. 50, 116 N. Y. Supp. 371; Forschirm v. Mechanics' & T. Bank (1910) 137 App. Div. 149, 122 N. Y. Supp. 168, reversed in (1912) 206 N. Y. 745, 100 N. E. 1127; Kinner v. Whipple (1910) 198 N. Y. 585, 92 N. E. 1088, reversing (1908) 128 App. Div. 736, 113 N. Y. Supp. 337, on dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Cochrane; Lord v. Woolley (1913) 82 Misc. 656, 144 N. Y. Supp. 385; Newcomb v. La Roe (1915) 167 App. Div. 566, 152 N. Y. Supp. 635; A. E. McBee

Co. v. Shoemaker (1916) 174 App. Div. 291, 160 N. Y. Supp. 251, affirmed on other grounds in (1918) 225 N. Y. 621, 121 N. E. 852; Landau v. Veith (1917) 164 N. Y. Supp. 230; McCormack v. Security Mut. L. Ins. Co. (1917) 220 N. Y. 447, 116 N. E. 74, reversing order in (1914) 161 App. Div. 33, 146 N. Y. Supp. 613; Riess v. Supreme Conclave, I. O. H. (1917) 177 App. Div. 845, 164 N. Y. Supp. 878.

North Dakota.—New England Mortg. Secur. Co. v. Great Western Elevator Co. (1897) 6 N. D. 407, 71 N. W. 130; Bank of Park River v. Norton (1904) 12 N. D. 497, 97 N. W. 860; Larson v. Calder (1907) 16 N. D. 248, 113 N. W. 103; Aber v. Twitchell (1908) 17 N. D. 229, 116 N. W. 95; Duncan v. Great Northern R. Co. (1908) 17 N. D. 610, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 952, 118 N. W. 826; Citizens Nat. Bank v. Osborne-McMillan Elevator Co. (1911) 21 N. D. 335, 131 N. W. 266; Van Woert v. Modern Woodmen (1915) 29 N. D. 441, 151 N. W. 224; Foote v. L. C. Smith & Bros. Typewriter Co. (1919) 43 N. D. 33, 172 N. W. 833. See also Umsted v. Colgate Farmers' Elevator Co. (1909) 18 N. D. 309, 122 N. W. 390; Gooler v. Eidsness (1909) 18 N. D. 338, 121 N. W. 83.

Ohio.—Victoria First Nat. Bank v. Hayes (1901) 64 Ohio St. 100, 59 N. E. 893; Snow v. Modern Woodmen (1902) 24 Ohio C. C. 142; Richter v. Phoenix Bldg. & Loan Co. (1905) 27 Ohio C. C. 793; Strangward v. American Brass Bedstead Co. (1910) 82 Ohio St. 121, 91 N. E. 988; McHenry v. Old Citizens Nat. Bank (1911) 85 Ohio St. 203, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1111, 97 N. E. 395; Schenck v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. (1919) 11 Ohio App. 164. See also Canton v. Pryke (1916) 5 Ohio App. 364.

Oregon.—Patty v. Salem Flouring Mills Co. (1909) 53 Or. 356, 96 Pac. 1106, modified on rehearing (1909) 53 Or. 357, 98 Pac. 521, second rehearing denied in (1909) 53 Or. 362, 100 Pac. 298; First Nat. Bank v. Bach (1920) 98 Or. 332, 193 Pac. 1041.

South Dakota.—Grigsby v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (1894) 5 S. D. 561, 59 N. W. 734; Yankton F. Ins. Co. v. Fremont, E. & M. Valley R. Co. (1895) 7

S. D. 428, 64 N. W. 514; Sundling v. Willey (1905) 19 S. D. 293, 103 N. W. 38, 9 Ann. Cas. 644; McComb v. Baskerville (1906) 20 S. D. 353, 106 N. W. 300; Lindquist v. Northwestern Port Huron Co. (1908) 22 S. D. 298, 117 N. W. 365; Farman v. United States Exp. Co. (1910) 25 S. D. 96, 125 N. W. 575; Bower v. Jones (1910) 26 S. D. 414, 128 N. W. 470; Rice v. Bennett (1912) 29 S. D. 341, 137 N. W. 359; Share v. Coats (1912) 29 S. D. 603, 137 N. W. 402; Black Hills Trust & Sav. Bank v. Plunkett (1918) 40 S. D. 130, 166 N. W. 527; Langbehn v. American Ins. Co. (1919) 41 S. D. 581, 171 N. W. 820. See also Lumley v. Miller (1909) 23 S. D. 16, 119 N. W. 1014; Redman v. Lasell (1921) — S. D. —, 183 N. W. 996.

Washington. — Knox v. Fuller (1900) 23 Wash. 34, 62 Pac. 131; East-erly v. Mills (1909) 54 Wash. 356, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 952, 103 Pac. 475; Sevier v. Hopkins (1918) 101 Wash. 404, 172 Pac. 550. See also MCCLURE v. WILSON (reported herewith) ante, 1421, where, however, the rule was not applied, as the questions of fact were submitted to the jury after the denial of both motions for a directed verdict.

Wisconsin.—See Jones v. Citizens Sav. & T. Co. (1919) 168 Wis. 646, 171 N. W. 648 (under statute). Compare Thompson v. Brennan (1899) 104 Wis. 564, 80 N. W. 947; National Cash Register Co. v. Bonneville (1903) 119 Wis. 222, 96 N. W. 558; Hite v. Keene (1912) 149 Wis. 207, 134 N. W. 383, 135 N. W. 354, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 251, and Calder v. Crowley (1889) 74 Wis. 157, 42 N. W. 266.

Wyoming. — Sneider v. Big Horn, Mill Co. (1921) — Wyo. —, 200 Pac. 1011.

Where, after all the evidence has been submitted, each party requests the court to direct a verdict in his favor, the requests operate as an affirmation on the part of each that there is no material disagreement as to the facts of the case which will affect the application of the law. Anderson County v. Beal (1885) 113 U. S. 227, 28 L. ed. 966, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 433; Robertson v. Edelhoff (1890) 132 U. S. 614, 33 L. ed. 477, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 186;

Potts v. Wallace (1892) 146 U. S. 689, 36 L. ed. 1135, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 196; Insurance Co. of N. A. v. Wisconsin C. R. Co. (1905) 67 C. C. A. 300, 134 Fed. 794; West v. Roberts (1905) 68 C. C. A. 58, 135 Fed. 350; Love v. Scatcherd (1906) 77 C. C. A. 1, 146 Fed. 1; Fifty Associates Co. v. Quigley (1919) 56 Mont. 348, 185 Pac. 155.

The reason of the general rule and of the contrary view, as well as of the limitation of the rule where a seasonable request is made for a submission of the facts to the jury, was stated in Share v. Coats (1912) 29 S. D. 603, 137 N. W. 402, wherein the court, in holding in accord with the general rule, said: "It has been long settled in this state that when each party, at the close of all the evidence, presents a motion for direction of a verdict, this, in effect, is a submission of questions, both of law and fact, to the court. . . .

The trial court has power, even in cases where a jury trial is a matter of legal right, to direct a verdict, when requested by both parties. . . .

This rule is unquestionably sustained by the weight of authority. . . .

Appellant's contention is that defendant's motion for direction of a verdict challenged only the legal sufficiency of the evidence to sustain a verdict for plaintiff, conceding the testimony of plaintiff's interested witness to be absolutely true; and that the credibility of plaintiff's testimony was not thereby submitted to the trial court, but remained a question upon which defendant was entitled to a verdict of the jury. Appellant's line of reasoning has been adopted in states whose courts have expressly disapproved the New York rule. . . .

The reasoning of these cases, as stated in Stauff v. Bingenheimer (1905) 94 Minn. 309, 102 N. W. 694, is: That 'sanction by either party to an action that a verdict be directed in his favor cannot be construed as a waiver of the right to have the facts passed upon by the jury, or as an agreement to submit them to the trial judge, in case the motion is denied.' The reasoning upon which the New York rule is founded is that parties have the right to by both parties for direction of a verdict are sufficient evidence of an intention to waive that right. The latter rule has been too long acted upon and settled in this state to warrant the adoption of the rule contended for by appellant. It has never been held in this state, however, that motions by both parties constitute a conclusive waiver of the right to demand a submission to the jury of questions of fact which may properly arise upon the evidence, where the contrary intention of the parties not to submit questions of fact to the court may be evidenced by a seasonable request that the facts be submitted to the jury. . . . The reason for the rule giving parties the right to submit questions of fact to the jury upon request, after an adverse ruling upon a motion for a directed verdict, is that every party is entitled to present to the court such legal questions as he thinks arise upon the testimony, without the penalty of losing his right to have the jury pass upon evidence which comes from interested witnesses, or is of such character that honest men might differ in the conclusions to be drawn therefrom. Otherwise, it is said, it would never be safe to ask for direction of a verdict. Switzer v. Norton (1896) 3 App. Div. 173, 38 N. Y. Supp. 350. It is apparent, therefore, that a party desirous of preserving his right to have the jury pass upon the evidence, where it is of such a character as to be properly submitted to a jury, may preserve that right by a seasonable and proper request, after the motions for directed verdicts have been ruled upon by the court. Such request would ordinarily be a conclusive rebuttal of the presumption that, by motions for directed verdicts, the parties intended to submit questions of both law and fact to the court. Under the rule adopted by this court, however, when no such request is made, the presumption that parties intended to submit to the court all questions, both of law and fact, becomes concluhaving moved for the direction of a verdict upon all the testimony introduced at the trial, appellant is not in position to urge that the evidence was conflicting, and ought to have been submitted to the jury. By these motions for a directed verdict, the respective parties tacitly admitted that the evidence was free from conflict, and waived their right to a jury trial, and consented to have both questions of law and fact determined by the court. . . . The submission of no question of fact to the jury being requested and both parties having rested the case on issues of law, the result of the action is sustainable if no reversible errors of law occurred at the trial and the evidence is legally sufficient to justify the judgment." To the same effect, see McComb v. Baskerville (1906) 20 S. D. 353, 106 N. W. 300; Love v. Scatcherd (1906) 77 C. C. A. 1, 146 Fed. 1.

In St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Mulkey (1911) 100 Ark. 71, 139 S. W. 643, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1339, a much cited case in point, which seems to be the basis of most of the decisions in Arkansas, it was said: "It is also true that the parties had the right to waive a jury and submit the matter to the court for trial in the first instance, and, each having requested the court to direct a verdict in his favor and not having requested any other instruction, they in effect agreed that the question at issue should be decided by the court, and waived the right to a decision of a jury, and the court's decision and direction have the same effect as would have been given to the verdict of the jury upon the question at issue, without such direction."

In Deeter v. Burk (1914) 59 Ind. App. 449, 107 N. E. 304, each party having requested that a verdict should be directed in his favor and no demand for the submission of any question to the jury having been made, it was said: "It follows that both parties to the litigation, in effect, placed themselves in the same situation they he court, together with the verdict of he jury returned thereunder, were in ffect the decision of the court, with ll the presumptions in its favor that ould have existed in favor of the verdict returned by the jury in the egular way, or the decision of the court, had the cause been submitted o it for trial in the first instance." it was held that there was no error in he giving of the peremptory instruc- tion unless there was a complete fail- ure of the proof necessary to support the verdict returned.

In Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Osborne-McMillan Elevator Co. (1911) 21 N. D. 835, 131 N. W. 266, motions were made by both parties for a directed verdict. The court said: "Appellant's position is that, by making such motion, it did not waive its right to a jury trial of the issues involved. The identical question has been repeatedly decided in this court adversely to the conten- tion of the appellant. The last pro- nouncement is found, we think, in Duncan v. Great Northern R. Co. (1908) 17 N. D. 610, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 952, 118 N. W. 826, where, in conform- ity with previous decisions of this court, it was held that when both par- ties, after the submission of all their evidence, make motions for a directed verdict, and neither one requests the submission of any fact to the jury, they thereby waive any right they might otherwise have to an undirected verdict, and are estopped from as- signing error for not submitting the facts to the jury. . . . In the in- stant case the motions were made without qualification, and no request was made for the submission of any fact to the jury. Appellant cites Umsted v. Colgate Farmers' Elevator Co. (1909) 18 N. D. 309, 122 N. W. 390, in support of its contention, but such au- thority is not in its favor. In that case one of the motions was qualified, and under the circumstances sur- rounding it the court held that it was insufficient to waive the submission of questions of fact not covered by the motion, to the jury, but expressly rec- ognized the former decisions of this court to the effect that a submission to the jury is waived when nothing equivalent to a request tl or facts be submitted to made." The court likewise a point of practice in t language: "There is, k point of difference betwe of the court in the cas these motions, and those the authorities pointed case at bar the court di jury and took the case u ment, and, in due time, n of fact and conclusions tically as though no ju been impaneled, and enter thereon. It is suggested t being a literal complian motion of either party, in was not permitted to go form of returning a ver cedure was erroneous. material distinction be method and the one follo of the former cases. The parties had a constitution trial by jury in no manne case. Authorities are t that they, by the motions case from the jury, waive jury, and that, not havin requested the submission or questions to the jur estopped from predicating the action of the court in ting the jury to find the is not essential that the turning a written verdic the foreman of the jury, in such case. If the cour to direct the jury, it coul a more direct manner to t by finding the facts its Bank of Park River v. N. 12 N. D. 497, 97 N. W. last-named case the pro identical with that in the except that the trial cou motions were made, asked if they desired to stand up tions, and, upon receivin ative response, the jur charged and the court m This action was sustained no difference whatever in tween the two cases. could waive their right t silence as plainly as by v members of this court think, however, that, while both methods are proper, it is better practice to require the jury to return a formal verdict under the direction of the court."

In Lawton v. Carpenter (1912) 115 C. C. A. 264, 195 Fed. 362, the general rule was applied and the judgment below affirmed where, though there was some conflict in the evidence, yet there was some evidence supporting the judgment below. In that case the earlier Federal decisions on this point were reviewed and explained, the court saying: "There are a number of assignments of error, but it is insisted by the plaintiff that, inasmuch as both parties made motions for the direction of a verdict, they thereby submitted all questions of law and fact to the court, and, having directed a verdict in favor of the plaintiffs, the court is presumed to have found all facts necessary to a judgment for them. This question has been passed upon by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Beuttell v. Magone (1895) 157 U. S. 154, 39 L. ed. 654, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 566. In that case, Mr. Justice White, who delivered the opinion of the court, in discussing this question, said: "The contention is advanced that, as each party below requested the court to instruct the jury to return a verdict in his favor, this was equivalent to a stipulation waiving a jury and submitting the case to decision of the court. From this premise two conclusions are deduced: First, that, there being no written stipulation, the decision below cannot be reviewed upon writ of error; second, that, even if the request in open court, made by both parties, be treated as a written stipulation, the correctness of the decision below cannot be examined, because it is in the form of a general finding on the whole case, and findings of the court upon the evidence are reviewable only when they are special. The request, made to the court by each party to instruct the jury to render a verdict in his favor, was not equivalent to a submission of the case to the court, without the intervention of a jury, within the intendment of

Rev. Stat. §§ 649, 700, Comp. Stat. §§ 1587, 1668, 6 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. pp. 130, 205. As, however, both parties asked the court to instruct a verdict, both affirmed that there was no disputed question of fact which could operate to deflect or control the question of law. This was necessarily a request that the court find the facts, and the parties are, therefore, concluded by the finding made by the court, upon which the resulting instruction of law was given. The facts having been thus submitted to the court, we are limited in reviewing its action to the consideration of the correctness of the finding on the law, and must affirm if there be any evidence in support thereof. Lehnen v. Dickson (1893) 148 U. S. 71, 37 L. ed. 373, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 481; Runkle v. Burnham (1894) 153 U. S. 216, 38 L. ed. 694, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 837. The same question was also passed upon by this court in the case of Charlotte Nat. Bank v. Southern R. Co. (1910) 103 C. C. A. 261, 179 Fed. 769. Goff, J., speaking for the court in this case, said: "We are impelled to the conclusion that the learned judge of the court below was in error when he held that the rule announced by the Supreme Court in Beuttell v. Magone (1895) 157 U. S. 154, 39 L. ed. 654, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 566, was applicable to the conditions shown by the record to have existed in the case at bar at the time he directed the verdict complained of. It appears that not only the plaintiff, but also the defendant below, at the close of the testimony, requested peremptory instructions in their favor, and that they also at the same time asked for special instructions—to be given in the event the peremptory requests were denied—some of them relating to the conflicting evidence from which it was apparent that divergent inferences could be drawn. . . ." In that case it appears that the plaintiff as well as the defendant, at the close of the testimony, requested the court to give peremptory instructions in their favor. However, both plaintiff and defendant at the same time requested that the court give special instructions in the event of the peremptory instructions were denied. Many of these instructions related to conflicting evidence, and it was obvious that more than one inference could be drawn from the same. The request for special instructions, and, in addition thereto, peremptory instructions, clearly distinguishes that case from the case of Beuttell v. Magone (U. S.) supra. The decision in the case of the Charlotte Nat. Bank v. Southern R. Co. (Fed.) supra, is in harmony with the case of Empire State Cattle Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (1908) 210 U. S. 1, 52 L. ed. 931, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 607, 15 Ann. Cas. 70, in which the court, among other things, said: ". . . It was settled in Beuttell v. Magone (U. S.) supra, that where both parties request peremptory instructions and do nothing more, they thereby assume the facts to be undisputed, and in effect submit to the trial judge the determination of the inferences proper to be drawn from the same. But nothing in that ruling sustains the view that a party may not request a peremptory instruction, and yet, upon the refusal of the court to give it, insist, by appropriate requests, upon the submission of the case to the jury, where the evidence is conflicting or the inferences to be drawn from the testimony are divergent. To hold the contrary would unduly extend the doctrine of Beuttell v. Magone, by causing it to embrace a case not within the ruling of that case made. The distinction between a case like the one before us and that which was under consideration in Beuttell v. Magone has been pointed out in several recent decisions of circuit courts of appeals. It was accurately noted in an opinion delivered by Circuit Judge Severens, speaking for the circuit court of appeals for the sixth circuit, in Minahan v. Grand Trunk Western R. Co. (1905) 70 C. C. A. 463, 138 Fed. 37, 41, and was also lucidly stated in the concurring opinion of Shelby, Circuit Judge, in McCormick v. National City Bank (1906) 73 C. C. A. 350, 142 Fed. 132, 6 Ann. Cas. 544. These cases, however, are analogous to the case at bar.

18 A.L.R.—91.

parties requested the court to submit certain instructions to the jury in addition to the peremptory instructions. In this case counsel for the plaintiffs moved for judgment upon the facts, and a similar motion was made by counsel for the defendant. It was evidently the intention of counsel for both parties to have the court pass upon the facts of the case, and consequently all facts were submitted to the court, which clearly brings it within the rule announced in the case of Beuttell v. Magone (U. S.) supra. If the doctrine in Beuttell v. Magone rested on that case alone, we might well restrict the doctrine to cases in which there is no conflict of evidence. But Sena v. American Turquoise Co. (1911) 220 U. S. 497, 501, 55 L. ed. 559, 561, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 488, is a case in which the doctrine of Beuttell v. Magone was held applicable, and in that case there was conflicting testimony on an important point in the case,—the location of plaintiff's southern boundary."

Where, following the request of both parties for peremptory instructions, the court exercises its power to direct a verdict, the fact that the case has been partially argued to the jury has no effect on the power of the court. La Crosse Plow Co. v. Pagenstecher (1918) 165 C. C. A. 644, 253 Fed. 46, writ of certiorari denied in (1918) 248 U. S. 572, 63 L. ed. 427, 39 Sup. Ct. Rep. 11.

In Beuttell v. Magone (U. S.) supra, it was held that while both parties, by requesting that a verdict should be directed, affirmed that there was no question of fact in dispute which would deflect the law of the case, yet the requests did not bring the case within the meaning of the statute (U. S. Rev. Stat. 649, Comp. Stat. § 1587, 6 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 130), providing for the submission of a cause to the court without the intervention of a jury by a stipulation waiving a jury. See to the same effect, Minahan v. Grand Trunk Western R. Co. (1905) 70 C. C. A. 463, 138 Fed. 37; McCormick v. National City Bank (1906) 73 C. C. A. 350, 142 Fed. 132, 6 Ann. Cas. 544.

Not analogous here the

In the absence of a request for a jury it has been held that the action of both parties in moving the court to direct a verdict is virtually an agreement between the parties that the court shall determine the fact in dispute. Mehrhof Bros. Brick Mfg. Co. v. Wood (1891; N. Y. City Ct. Gen. T.) 14 N. Y. Supp. 142; Rogers v. Hardy (1895; Brooklyn City Ct. Gen. T.) 14 Misc. 220, 35 N. Y. Supp. 671, affirmed in (1899) 158 N. Y. 738, 53 N. E. 1131. Conversely an agreement between the parties that the jury be discharged, and that a finding of fact be made by the court, is equivalent to a motion by both parties that the court direct a verdict. Cutler v. Parsons (1897) 13 App. Div. 376, 43 N. Y. Supp. 187.

In Secor v. Ardsley Ice Co. (1909) 133 App. Div. 136, 117 N. Y. Supp. 414, affirmed in (1911) 201 N. Y. 603, 95 N. E. 1139, the general rule was applied. The facts were thus stated by the court: "When defendant rested, defendant's counsel moved for the direction of a verdict, stating various grounds. Plaintiff's counsel likewise moved for the direction of a verdict. With both these motions pending the court said: 'I will direct a verdict and take your briefs as to how the verdict should be directed, whether for the defendant or for the plaintiff. In other words, I will direct a verdict now, but whether it shall be for the plaintiff or for the defendant I will determine after reading your briefs.' The jury was then discharged, and on the 30th of March, subsequent to the end of the term at which the case was tried, the learned trial justice wrote a memorandum and directed a verdict for the plaintiff for the full amount demanded, with an additional allowance of 5 per cent thereon." The court then said: "It is now urged by the defendant that the court could not direct a verdict after the jury had been dismissed and after the close of the term, and this is probably technically correct; but where both parties move for the direction of a verdict, and neither party asks to go to the jury on any question of fact, there is, in effect, an agreement that the court may determine the facts and the law, as though the jury had been waived in the first instance, and the mere form of the verdict, in a case where the plaintiff was either entitled to recover the full amount claimed or nothing, is not important. Both parties acquiesced in the proposition of the court, which, it is claimed and not denied, was at the request of defendant's counsel that he might submit a brief, and it would be a perversion of justice to now permit the result to be disturbed because of any mere irregularity."

In Foote v. L. C. Smith & Bros. Typewriter Co. (1919) 43 N. D. 33, 172 N. W. 833, it was said: "Both parties having made a motion for a directed verdict without reservation, the trial court had the right to determine the facts concerning the damages, as well as the law applicable as the measure thereof. It could do this as well by directing a verdict, pursuant to the motion of one of the parties, as by making findings of fact."

It has been held that where the action of the court in directing a verdict is based on the oral motions of both parties to that effect, the fact that the defeated party's motion is also filed in writing, but not until after the direction of the verdict, is of no consequence or assistance to him. Michigan Copper & Brass Co. v. Chicago Screw Co. (1920) 269 Fed. 502.

In Dilcher v. Nellany (1907) 52 Misc. 364, 102 N. Y. Supp. 264, appeal dismissed for failure to prosecute in (1908) 125 App. Div. 904, 109 N. Y. Supp. 1128, where a third person claiming to be the real party in interest instead of the plaintiff moved the court to direct a verdict in his favor, and the defendant also requested the direction of a verdict, but the plaintiff did not specify that the verdict should be directed in his own favor or in favor of the third person, the court held that it had power to decide the questions of fact as well as those of law.

In Redman v. Lasell (1921) — S. D. —, 183 N. W. 996, the court, in discussing the question whether a certain question of fact had in effect been submitted to the trial court, said:

"The rule is well settled by many decisions of this court that a motion for a directed verdict at the close of plaintiff's evidence is wholly ineffective for the purpose after the receipt of further evidence, unless renewed at the close of all the evidence. Plaintiff's motion was not renewed at the close of defendants' evidence, and was therefore ineffective under the rule that mutual motions at the close of all the evidence constitute a waiver of the right to submit questions of fact to a jury."

In Canton v. Pryke (1916) 5 Ohio App. 364, a variation of the general rule was presented. The defendant moved for a directed verdict immediately after the plaintiff had offered his testimony and rested his case. The plaintiff made a similar motion, and the court below overruled the defendant's motion, granting that of the plaintiff and directing a verdict in his favor. This action of the trial court was held to be error. The appellate court pointed out that the General Code provision for the conduct of the trial of a cause in the court of common pleas specified that "the party who would be defeated, if no evidence were offered on either side, first must produce his evidence, and the adverse party must then produce his evidence," and that the action of the defendant in moving for a directed verdict was in a sense equivalent to a demurrer to the evidence. It was said: "A motion by the defendant to direct a verdict at the close of plaintiff's case is not a submission of the defendant's case, and cannot be made so by the plaintiff's joining in such motion. He had nothing to submit that was not already submitted when he had offered his evidence and rested his case. His joining in defendant's motion does not change the nature of it. It is still a motion testing the sufficiency of the plaintiff's evidence, and is in no wise a submission of defendant's case." The court, however, said that if the defendant had gone on and introduced his evidence, or, refusing to do so, had rested his case, and if at that time both parties had renewed their motions for a directed verdict, it would be a submission of the whole case to the court as a matter of law without the intervention of the jury. Continuing, it was said: "A case cannot be submitted and adjudicated on the submission of one side only. If it is submitted on the evidence, it must be submitted on the whole evidence, and the record must so show." It was further held that none of the defendant's rights were waived by his statement, following the direction of the verdict for the plaintiff: "We object and insist that this is not the correct procedure."

In Germain v. Loud (1915) 189 Mich. 38, 155 N. W. 373, the case for the waiver of submission to the jury was strengthened by the fact that counsel for both parties specifically agreed with the statement of the court that it understood the requests for directed verdicts to mean that both parties considered the question as one of law for the judge. See to much the same effect, Kyselka v. Northern Assur. Co. (1916) 194 Mich. 430, 160 N. W. 559. And in Hatch v. Calhoun County (1912) 170 Mich. 322, 136 N. W. 350, the court said: "The concession of appellant, when he moved the court for a directed verdict at the close of the trial, that there was no dispute upon the evidence in the case, precludes him from claiming before this court that there was a question for the jury."

Wisconsin has been brought into conformity with the general rule by virtue of a statute (Stat. § 2857a, Laws 1915, chap. 219, § 3) which provides as follows: "Whenever in an action tried before a jury all the parties to the action shall, without reservation, move the court to direct a verdict, such motions shall, unless otherwise directed by the court before the discharge of the jury, be considered as equivalent to a stipulation by the parties waiving a jury trial and submitting the entire case to the court for decision of the facts as well as the law." In Jones v. Citizens Sav. & T. Co. (1919) 168 Wis. 646, 171 N. W. 648, the court said: "Both parties having moved for a directed verdict, the court might well have, under § 2857a, Stat., ordered judgment for plaintiff, without submitting to the jury the questions which it did." Prior to this statute, however, the Wisconsin cases which discussed the point had refused to follow the majority rule, which they spoke of as the New York doctrine. Thus it was said in Thompson v. Brennan (1899) 104 Wis. 564, 80 N. W. 947, that "it is certainly a strained construction to hold that an assertion that there is no evidence against one is an admission that there is none in his favor; yet that is the result of the New York doctrine that a motion to direct a verdict is an admission that there is no question of fact for the jury." And after a further repudiation of the New York doctrine it was said: "We adhere to the rule, so often stated, that before directing a verdict the court must look at all the facts in the most favorable light for the other party in which the jury would be at liberty to find them, and then be able to say there is no evidence which would justify a verdict in his favor."

b. Effect of request to go to jury.

No waiver of submission of the case to the jury is presumed from a request for a directed verdict on the part of both parties to an action, where there is coupled with that request a request for other instructions or a petition to go to the jury on a disputed question of fact.

United States.—Empire State Cattle Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (1908) 210 U. S. 1, 52 L. ed. 981, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 607, 15 Ann. Cas. 70, affirming (1906) 77 C. C. A. 601, 147 Fed. 457; Charlotte Nat. Bank v. Southern R. Co. (1910) 103 C. C. A. 261, 179 Fed. 769; Re Iron Clad Mfg. Co. (1910) 116 C. C. A. 642, 197 Fed. 280; Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. McKell (1913) 126 C. C. A. 336, 209 Fed. 514; Breakwater Co. v. Donovan (1914) 134 C. C. A. 148, 218 Fed. 340; Southern P. Co. v. United States (1915) 137 C. C. A. 584, 222 Fed. 46; Sampliner v. Motion Picture Patents Co. (1919) 170 C. C. A. 220, 259 Fed. 152, denying rehearing (1918) 168 C. C. A. 202, 255 Fed. 242, which affirmed (1917) 243

Fed. 277; Michigan Copper & Brass Co. v. Chicago Screw Co. (1920) 269 Fed. 502; Fire Asso. of Phila. v. Mechlowitz (1920) 266 Fed. 322. See also Pensacola State Bank v. Merchants' & Farmers' Bank (1910) 180 Fed. 504, affirmed on other grounds in (1911) 105 C. C. A. 664, 183 Fed. 1022; Farmers' & Merchants' Bank v. Maines (1910) 105 C. C. A. 329, 183 Fed. 37; American Nat. Bank v. Miller (1911) 107 C. C. A. 456, 185 Fed. 338, affirmed on other grounds in (1913) 229 U. S. 517, 57 L. ed. 1310, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 883; Lawton v. Carpenter (1912) 115 C. C. A. 264, 195 Fed. 362.

Arkansas.—Gee v. Hatley (1914) 114 Ark. 376, 170 S. W. 72; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Ingram (1915) 118 Ark. 377, 176 S. W. 692; Interstate Business Men's Acci. Asso. v. Sanderson (1920) 144 Ark. 271, 222 S. W. 51.

Michigan.—Lonier v. Ann Arbor Sav. Bank (1908) 153 Mich. 253, 116 N. W. 1088; Kane v. Detroit L. Ins. Co. (1918) 204 Mich. 357, 170 N. W. 35.

Montana.—Osterholm v. Boston & M. Consol. Copper & S. Min. Co. (1910) 40 Mont. 508, 107 Pac. 499.

New Mexico.—Bank of Commerce v. Broyles (1910) 16 N. M. 414, 120 Pac. 670.

New York.—Switzer v. Norton (1896) 3 App. Div. 173, 38 N. Y. Supp. 350; Campbell v. Prague (1896) 6 App. Div. 554, 39 N. Y. Supp. 558; Bendheim v. Herter (1899) 40 App. Div. 462, 58 N. Y. Supp. 106; German-American Bank v. Cunningham (1904) 97 App. Div. 244, 89 N. Y. Supp. 836; First Nat. Bank v. McConnell (1892) 44 N. Y. S. R. 25, 17 N. Y. Supp. 422; Cravath v. Baylis (1906) 113 App. Div. 666, 99 N. Y. Supp. 973, affirmed in (1908) 192 N. Y. 559, 85 N. E. 1107; Zwecker v. Levine (1909) 135 App. Div. 432, 120 N. Y. Supp. 425; Peniston v. Coleman (1910) 141 App. Div. 676, 126 N. Y. Supp. 736; Strohm v. Zoellner (1908) 61 Misc. 56, 112 N. Y. Supp. 1063; Reid v. America Co. (1912) 136 N. Y. Supp. 75; Mann v. Franklin Trust Co. (1913) 158 App. Div. 491, 143 N. Y. Supp. 660; International Battery Co. v. Westreich (1918)

182 App. Div. 843, 170 N. Y. Supp. 149. See also Kinner v. Whipple (1908) 128 App. Div. 736, 118 N. Y. Supp. 337, reversed in (1910) 198 N. Y. 585, 92 N. E. 1088; White v. Kenny (1911) 146 App. Div. 803, 181 N. Y. Supp. 416, reversing (1910) 69 Misc. 631, 126 N. Y. Supp. 123; A. C. & H. M. Hall Realty Co. v. Eisler (1921) 190 N. Y. Supp. 701. Compare Gitty v. Allen (1901) 62 App. Div. 622, 71 N. Y. Supp. 88.

North Dakota.—Stanford v. McGill (1897) 6 N. D. 536, 38 L.R.A. 760, 72 N. W. 938; Umsted v. Colgate Farmers Elevator Co. (1909) 18 N. D. 309, 122 N. W. 390; Gooler v. Eidsness (1909) 18 N. D. 338, 121 N. W. 88.

Ohio.—Perkins v. Putnam County (1913) 88 Ohio St. 495, 103 N. E. 377; Nead v. Hershman (1921) — Ohio St. —, 132 N. E. 19, reversing 12 Ohio App. 410.

South Dakota.—See Share v. Coats (1912) 29 S. D. 603, 137 N. W. 402.

In Minahan v. Grand Trunk Western R. Co. (1905) 70 C. C. A. 463, 138 Fed. 37, it was held that the rule that a request by both parties to have a verdict directed is tantamount to an affirmation that there are no material facts in dispute, as laid down in Beuttell v. Magone (1895) 157 U. S. 154, 39 L. ed. 654, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 566, does not apply where there is a conflict in the evidence. To deprive a party of a trial by jury because of making the request would amount to a penalty. This is especially true where it appears that the party, when making the request for a verdict, coupled with it requests for other instructions.

In International Battery Co. v. Westreich (1918) 182 App. Div. 843, 170 N. Y. Supp. 149, the court said: "The theory upon which the motion for a directed verdict is deemed a consent to a determination by the court of the questions of fact is that a party, by not asking to go to the jury after making the motion, consents to such determination by the court. But a request to go to the jury after the determination of the motion for a directed verdict negatives that implied assent."

In Empire State Cattle Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (1908) 210 U. S.

1, 52 L. ed. 931, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 607, 15 Ann. Cas. 70, affirming (1906) 77 C. C. A. 601, 147 Fed. 457, it was held that a plaintiff who, after his motion for a direction of a verdict had been denied, requested the trial judge to give the jury certain instructions and took exceptions to the refusal to give them, did not waive his right to go to the jury, and that the question to be reviewed was not whether there was evidence legally sufficient to support the finding of the trial judge, but whether the state of the proof was such as to have made it the duty of the trial court to set aside a verdict of the jury in favor of the plaintiff if the case had been submitted to them. The Supreme Court in that case disapproved the decision of the circuit court of appeals on this question, but affirmed the judgment because the evidence was not sufficient to sustain a verdict in favor of the plaintiff.

In Fire Asso. of Phila. v. Mechlowitz (1920) 266 Fed. 322, an exception taken to the direction of a verdict, followed by a motion for the submission of the case to the jury, was held to preserve the right to go to the jury, the court basing its decision on Empire State Cattle Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (U. S.) supra.

In the case of Re Iron Clad Mfg. Co. (1910) 116 C. C. A. 642, 197 Fed. 280, the court said: "The fact that each party asks for a peremptory instruction to find in his favor does not submit the issues of fact to the court, so as to deprive either party of the right to ask other instructions, and to except to the refusal to give them, or to deprive him of the right to have questions of fact submitted to the jury, where the evidence on the issues joined is conflicting, or divergent inferences can be drawn therefrom. . . . But if the evidence is of such a conclusive character that upon it as a whole the court would feel constrained to set aside a verdict, if one were rendered in favor of one party, it may direct a verdict in favor of the other party, although there be conflicting evidence as to details not essential to a conclusion. Empire State

Cattle Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (U. S.) supra.

In Sampliner v. Motion Picture Patents Co. (1919) 170 C. C. A. 220, 259 Fed. 152, it was declared that counsel, after having taken the position that the question involved was one of law for the court to determine, no question of fact being included, could not thereafter request the submission of the case to the jury, on questions of fact, "if any there be."

In Southern P. Co. v. United States (1915) 137 C. C. A. 584, 222 Fed. 46, both parties having requested a directed verdict, and the defendant having made the further request that, if the motion were denied, leave should be granted to go to the jury, it was said: "The validity of the peremptory instruction in favor of the plaintiff must therefore depend upon whether the evidence was so undisputed, or was of such a conclusive character, as would have made it the duty of the court to set aside the verdict if the case had been given to the jury and a verdict returned in favor of the defendant."

In Bank of Commerce v. Broyles (1910) 16 N. M. 414, 120 Pac. 670, the court said with respect to the holding in the case of Beuttell v. Magone (1895) 157 U. S. 154, 39 L. ed. 654, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 566: "We deem the full import of this holding developed, however, by the recent case of Empire State Cattle Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (U. S.) supra, where it was said: 'It was settled in Beuttell v. Magone (U. S.) supra, that where both parties request a peremptory instruction, and do nothing more, they thereby assume the facts to be undisputed and in fact submit to the trial judge the determination of the inferences proper to be drawn from them; but nothing in that ruling sustains the view that a party may not request a peremptory instruction, and yet, upon the refusal of the court to give it, insist, by appropriate requests, upon the submission of the case to the jury where the evidence is conflicting or the inferences to be drawn from the testimony are divergent.'" And in accordance with that view the court held (syllabus) that "a motion for a peremptory instruction by both parties does not constitute a final waiver by either of jury trial where the evidence is conflicting, and where after adverse ruling upon his request for peremptory instruction such party thereupon insists upon a trial by jury."

In Gooler v. Eidsness (1909) 18 N. D. 338, 121 N. W. 83, the distinction between cases arising under this qualification and those under the general rule is recognized. The court said: "While both parties, when the defendant rested, submitted motions to direct a verdict, the respondent objected to the court finding the facts and insisted that they be submitted to the jury if his motion was overruled. This objection and request take the case out of the rule that where both parties submit motions for a directed verdict, without any request that any question of fact be submitted to the jury, they thereby waive findings by the jury. Hence the court was not justified in directing a verdict if any substantial conflict existed in the evidence on any material issue."

In St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Ingram (1915) 118 Ark. 377, 176 S. W. 692, it appeared that the defendant, following the refusal of the court to grant the peremptory instruction requested by him, asked that certain other instructions not peremptory be given, which was also denied him, a verdict being directed in favor of the plaintiff by request. It was held that other instructions having been asked on the refusal of peremptory instructions, the defendant's right to go to the jury had not been waived. The case was distinguished from St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Mulkey (1911) 100 Ark. 71, 139 S. W. 643, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1839, the court declaring that it would be an extension of the doctrine of that case to apply it to the case under consideration. It was said: "The decision in that case does not go to the extent of holding that a party may not request a peremptory instruction, and, upon the refusal of the court to give it, insist, by appropriate requests, upon the submission of the case to the jury, where the evidence is conflicting or reasonable minds might draw different conclusions from it."

Both plaintiff and defendant having moved for a direction of verdict at the close of the testimony, neither can ask to have the cause sent to the jury generally after he has been ruled against. Either may ask to have a particular fact decided, but they have waived the right to have a general verdict by the jury. Groves v. Acker (1895) 85 Hun, 492, 33 N. Y. Supp. 406; Coleman v. Pickett (1894) 82 Hun, 287, 31 N. Y. Supp. 480; Lagerquist v. United States Industrial Ins. Co. (1895) 89 Hun, 25, 35 N. Y. Supp. 38; Flandreau v. Elsworth (1897) 151 N. Y. 473, 45 N. E. 853; Mayer v. Dean (1889) 115 N. Y. 556, 5 L.R.A. 540, 22 N. E. 261; Maxwell v. Martin (1909) 130 App. Div. 80, 114 N. Y. Supp. 349. In Bowers v. Ocean Acci. & Guarantee Corp. (1906) 110 App. Div. 691, 97 N. Y. Supp. 485, affirmed in (1902) 187 N. Y. 561, 80 N. E. 1105, the court said: "Where, at the close of the evidence on the trial of an action in which more than one question of fact is involved, each party asks that a verdict be directed in his favor, and, after the decision thereon, the unsuccessful party asks that the case be sent to the jury, without stating any question of fact he desires submitted, a denial of the motion is not error."

If a party wishes have a particular fact decided by the jury he must request it. A request for a general verdict by the jury will not avail him. Thus it has been held that it is not error to refuse to submit the question of the amount of the damages to the jury under a general request. W. P. Fuller & Co. v. Schrenk (1901) 58 App. Div. 222, 68 N. Y. Supp. 781, affirmed in (1902) 171 N. Y. 671, 64 N. E. 1126.

But where both parties have requested that a verdict shall be directed, and both motions have been denied, there remain two things which must be done. A juror may be withdrawn, or the case may be submitted to the jury. Under such circumstances it is error for the court to direct the jury to bring in a finding on a single question over the objection of a party, and announce that it will then find a verdict. The usual practice requires the jury to find a general verdict on all the evidence, and the court cannot withdraw any disputed fact from their consideration without depriving the parties of their right to have the facts on a disputed issue heard before a jury. Both motions having been denied, there is no assumption that a jury has been waived. Sigua Iron Co. v. Greene (1898) 31 C. C. A. 477, 59 U. S. App. 555, 88 Fed. 207.

Applying the same principle, the jury should be left to determine every question of fact not included among those expressly left to the court. Thus, where it appeared that in an action on a promissory note in which the question of notice of dishonor had been raised, the court remarked that if both the parties would move to have a verdict directed it would "look at the question of notice," it was held to be prejudicial error under such a motion for the court to pass on other questions, such as one of diligence, as to which there was conflicting evidence. All questions of fact are not necessarily submitted to the court under a motion for direction. University Press v. Williams (1900) 48 App. Div. 188, 62 N. Y. Supp. 986.

In Peniston v. Coleman (1910) 141 App. Div. 676, 126 N. Y. Supp. 736, it was held that a party has a right to have a ruling on his motion to direct a verdict, so that he may have an opportunity to request a submission to the jury. The court said: "A party who requests a direction of a verdict is not thereby precluded from a request for submission of a question of fact to the jury." In White v. Kenny (1911) 146 App. Div. 803, 131 N. Y. Supp. 416, reversing (1910) 69 Misc. 631, 126 N. Y. Supp. 123, the court said: "The judgment was reversed by the appellate term (69 Misc. 631) upon the ground of error claimed to have been committed by the trial court in submitting questions of fact to the jury after both sides had rested and had moved for the direction of a verdict in their favor. It is well settled that, even after the making of a motion for the direction of a verdict, the party so moving may, at any time before the rendition of the directed verdict, withdraw his motion and request that he be allowed to go to the jury upon specific questions of fact. Maxwell v. Martin (1909) 130 App. Div. 80, 114 N. Y. Supp. 349; Cullinan v. Furthmann (1902) 70 App. Div. 110, 75 N. Y. Supp. 90; Eldredge v. Mathews (1904) 93 App. Div. 356, 87 N. Y. Supp. 652. In this case, while the defendant withdrew his request for a direction of a verdict, he did not ask to be allowed to go to the jury upon any specific question of fact, and therefore the case does not come within the rule just quoted. But the court is not bound by the views of counsel upon the trial as to whether or not an issue of fact exists, and may of its own motion submit the entire issue, or such issues as he deems to exist, to the jury for their determination. In the case at bar it is clear that issues of fact had been raised by the testimony, and the court was clearly right in so submitting them."

A request to go to the jury on "the question raised by the evidence" has been held not to be too general, and it is not necessary to specify the particular questions desired to be submitted, in Charles H. Brown Paint Co. v. Reinhart (1918) 210 N. Y. 162, 104 N. E. 124.

In Stevens v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. (1918) 183 App. Div. 629, 171 N. Y. Supp. 296, reversed on other grounds in (1920) 227 N. Y. 524, ante, 1141, 125 N. E. 682, both parties asked for a direction of verdict, the defendant's counsel in connection therewith stating that he reserved the right to go to the jury on any question of fact. This, it was said, was not a request to go to the jury, and since at no time was a request for submission of fact to the jury made, it was held that consent was given that the facts should be passed on by the court.

Whether an exception to a motion to direct a verdict made by the opposite party is available as an objection to a decision on the facts by the court has been decided both ways in New York. The later ruling is that the exception will not take the place of a request for a jury. Young v. Roberts (1898) 31 App. Div. 615, 52 N. Y. Supp. 279. Compare Wombough v. Cooper (1874) 2 Hun (N. Y.) 428.

However, where a verdict was directed in favor of a party, following requests from both parties for a directed verdict, and an exception taken to such direction, not followed by a request to go to the jury, it was held that the determination of all issues of fact was left to the trial judge. United States v. Two Baskets (1913) 123 C. C. A. 310, 205 Fed. 37.

In Interstate Business Men's Assn. v. Sanderson (1920) 114 Ark. 271, 222 S. W. 51, wherein it was held that the appellant had saved his right to go to the jury by asking an instruction submitting the issues, although both sides had requested peremptory instructions, it was contended that, since the additional instruction was not correct, it could be of no avail to the appellant. The court, however, seemed to consider the instruction to be correct.

In Lonier v. Ann Arbor Sav. Bank (1908) 153 Mich. 253, 116 N. W. 1088, wherein the testimony drawn out on the cross-examination of a witness on whose direct testimony the plaintiff's case rested was inconsistent with that given on his direct examination, it was held that notwithstanding the fact that both sides moved for the direction of a verdict, the judge should have submitted the issue to the jury.

In Kane v. Detroit L. Ins. Co. (1918) 204 Mich. 357, 170 N. W. 35, after a colloquy between the court and counsel wherein the latter apparently agreed that the case should be taken from the jury, the defendant's counsel presented a request for a charge on certain facts, which was held to have negated any express or implied consent to waive submission to the jury.

The power of the court to send a disputed question of fact to the jury is not limited by the fact that both parties have moved for the direction of a verdict. When the court is in doubt it may send a point to the jury for a finding although not asked by either party, and in such a case the finding of the jury is not merely advisory, but is conclusive as to the facts found. Bank of State v. Southern Nat. Bank (1902) 170 N. Y. 1, 62 N. E. 677, reversing (1900) 54 App. Div. 99, 66 N. Y. Supp. 349; Page v. Shainwald (1900) 52 App. Div. 349, 65 N. Y. Supp. 174, reversed on other grounds in (1901) 169 N. Y. 246, 57 L.R.A. 173, 62 N. E. 356. But neither party, after having requested a verdict, has any right to have an undisputed fact sent to the jury. Stephens v. Meriden Britannia Co. (1897) 13 App. Div. 268, 43 N. Y. Supp. 226, reversed on other grounds in (1899) 160 N. Y. 178, 73 Am. St. Rep. 678, 54 N. E. 781. It is not error for the court to deny both motions for a verdict where there is a disputed question of fact. Lake Superior Iron Co. v. Drexel (1882) 90 N. Y. 87. Thus it has been held that where there is a question as to the existence of probable cause, the court may properly deny both motions and send the question to the jury. There is no error in sending it to the jury as long as the facts admit of opposing inferences. Rawson v. Leggett (1904) 97 App. Div. 416, 90 N. Y. Supp. 5, reversed on other grounds in (1906) 184 N. Y. 504, 77 N. E. 662.

Where, after the parties have once rested, a witness is recalled by consent of the court, a request to go to the jury cannot be denied on the ground that the parties had admitted that there was no question of fact by having both moved for a direction of verdict. Beiermeister v. City of London F. Ins. Co. (1891; Sup. Ct. Gen. T.) 39 N. Y. S. R. 741, 15 N. Y. Supp. 133, affirmed in (1892) 133 N. Y. 564, 30 N. E. 1149. Nor can the court withdraw the case from the jury over the objection of a party where both motions have been denied and the parties are proceeding to address the jury. The making of the motion is not of itself a waiver of a jury. Blair v. Hagemeyer (1898) 26 App. Div.

219, 49
tion to abandon subsequ directed, submit Winter
(1902) 1
Supp. 14
consister granted, to direct (1889) 1
646.

c. Time

A motion made after a verdict is made has not been held to be a waiver of a party. S. N. Y. 70
O'Brien
N. Y. S.
(1895) 9
294; Her
Ct. App.
Supp. 4
(1895; C.
N. Y. Su (1898; Su
50 N. Y. S.
(1909) 13
Supp. 349
135 App.
425; Str
Misc. 56,
v. Frankli
Div. 491,
H. Brown
(1913) 21
See also J
Westreich
170 N. Y. nam Coun
103 N. E.
(1921) —
But see
Brass Bed
St. 121, 91

Thus, in 180 App. I at the close plaintiff for a dir court anno

a verdict, but before it had announced in whose favor the verdict would be directed, the defendant asked leave to withdraw his motion and to go to the jury on two specific questions of fact. The court refused to permit the defendant to withdraw his motion and gave him an exception to such refusal, and directed a verdict for the plaintiff, to which direction the defendant excepted. The appellate court said: "The plaintiff's counsel insists that the defendant was too late in his request to go to the jury, and that there was no exception to the court's refusal to permit him so to do. While in specific words there was no exception to the refusal of defendant's request to go to the jury, the fair construction of what took place is that one was granted. Defendant's request to go to the jury was coupled with his request to withdraw his motion for direction of verdict, and both motions were properly treated as one, to a denial of which the learned court itself announced an exception should be noted. The defendant's request to go to the jury was clearly in time. Where both parties move for a direction of verdict the announcement by the court that it will direct a verdict in favor of the one or the other is not the final determination of the motion. The motion culminates in the rendition of the verdict by the jury at the direction of the court. Each party in moving for a verdict assumes from his point of view that he is entitled to a verdict. When the court decides that one party is entitled to a direction of verdict, the other is not foreclosed from asking to go to the jury upon any specific question of fact which he points out to the court, notwithstanding the motion which he has made. Under such circumstances he cannot ask to go to the jury generally upon all the facts in the case, but he can ask to go to the jury upon any particular question of fact which he points out to the court. . . . Where at the close of the evidence both parties move for a direction of verdict the rule is that the defeated party may ask to go to the jury upon any specific question of fact at any time before the directed verdict is actually rendered by the jury."

In Charles H. Brown Paint Co. v. Reinhardt (1913) 210 N. Y. 162, 104 N. E. 124, the defendant's motion to dismiss was followed by the plaintiff's motion for the direction of a verdict in his favor, which was granted, the defendant directly thereafter saving an exception and requesting leave to go to the jury on questions raised by the evidence and the court. On appeal it was held that the request to go to the jury was not made too late.

To same effect is Walters v. Wise (1921) 190 N. Y. Supp. 639.

The International Battery Co. v. Westreich (1918) 182 App. Div. 843, 170 N. Y. Supp. 149, wherein the plaintiff asked to go to the jury after the court had indicated an intention to direct a verdict in favor of the defendant, it was said: "A party has a right to an explicit determination of his motion, and an opportunity, after such determination, to make his request to go to the jury; and this right cannot be defeated by any quick action of the court in the direction of a verdict."

It has been held that a request to go to the jury, when made immediately after the refusal of a motion for a directed verdict, both parties having moved to that effect at the end of all the testimony, was made in due time. Perkins v. Putnam County (1913) 88 Ohio St. 495, 103 N. E. 377.

In Nead v. Hershman (1921) — Ohio St. —, 132 N. E. 19, it was shown that the defendant had moved for a directed verdict at the close of the plaintiff's testimony. The motion being overruled, it was renewed at the close of all the testimony, the plaintiff following with a similar motion, which latter was sustained. The court then proceeded to overrule the defendant's motion, whereupon the defendant's counsel requested to be allowed to withdraw his motion and to submit his case to the jury. It was held that the motion to go to the jury was made at the earliest possible moment, since the court had not passed on the motions in the order presented, and that the defendant was entitled to have his case submitted to the jury.

In Strangward v. American Brass Bedstead Co. (1910) 82 Ohio St. 121, 91 N. E. 988, each party moved for a directed verdict on the pleadings, before the introduction of any evidence. One party, on his motion being overruled, offered to introduce evidence which the court below refused. The court on appeal said: "The offer came too late, the cause having already been submitted to the court, and the court having rendered its judgment on the motions. To allow or refuse the application was within the discretion of the court, and no statement having been made to the court of what the defendant expected to prove, it cannot be claimed that there was an abuse of discretion."

It has been held to be sufficient that counsel, at the time the oral motions for directed verdicts were argued, called the attention of the court to the issues of fact which he desired to have submitted to the jury in case his request for peremptory instructions on particular questions was not sustained, no necessity existing on the part of counsel to interrupt the court during the delivery of its opinion and repeat his prior statements. Michigan Copper & Brass Co. v. Chicago Screw Co. (1920) 269 Fed. 502.

A request to go to the jury is not too late if made before the verdict is entered by the clerk. Bernheimer v. Adams (1902) 70 App. Div. 114, 75 N. Y. Supp. 93, affirmed in (1903) 175 N. Y. 472, 67 N. E. 1080; Zajic v. Elian (1906; Sup. Ct. App. T.) 50 Misc. 289, 98 N. Y. Supp. 652; Landau v. Veith (1917) 164 N. Y. Supp. 230.

In Landau v. Veith (N. Y.) supra, the court directed a verdict in favor of the defendants, the jury answering, "Yes" to the words of the court, "So say you all?" The plaintiff immediately asked to go to the jury on a certain question of fact, but was refused on the ground that his request came too late. It was held that a new trial was properly granted, the higher court pointing out that a request to go to the jury would be too late when made after the directed verdict of the jury had been actually entered, but apparently considering that the plaintiff was saved by the fact that the proceedings had not reached that stage at the time of his request.

But in New York v. Thirty-fourth Street Crosstown R. Co. (1910) 137 App. Div. 644, 122 N. Y. Supp. 344, it was held that after the jury had been discharged by consent, motions for a directed verdict having been made, it was too late to make a motion to go to the jury on a question of fact.

d. Questions presented for review.

As to the questions to be considered by the reviewing court in cases involving a verdict directed by the lower court following requests therefor by both parties, the decisions and statements, while more or less of the same general tenor, are so various and of such different phrasing that it is almost impossible to construct any general rule. However, it may be said that a verdict directed by the court has the same conclusive effect and is governed by the same rules as is one rendered by a jury. If neither party has asked to have a jury the court is clothed with the function of deciding the facts.

United States.—Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Kerr (1904) 64 C. C. A. 251, 66 L.R.A. 569, 129 Fed. 723; United States v. Two Baskets (1913) 123 C. C. A. 310, 205 Fed. 37; Reis v. Rosenfeld (1913) 122 C. C. A. 480, 204 Fed. 282; Wilson v. Knowles (1914) 180 C. C. A. 440, 213 Fed. 782; Harriman Nat. Bank v. Seldomridge (1917) 153 C. C. A. 147, 240 Fed. 111; American Mercantile Corp. v. Spielberg (1919) 262 Fed. 492; Cuyamel Fruit Co. v. Johnson Iron Works (1920) 262 Fed. 387, certiorari denied in (1919) 253 U. S. 485, 64 L. ed. 1025, 40 Sup. Ct. Rep. 481; Tanner v. Ballard & B. Co. (1921) 278 Fed. 671.

Arkansas.—Supreme Tribe, B. H. v. Gailey (1915) 117 Ark. 145, 173 S. W. 838; Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Hodges (1920) 142 Ark. 577, 219 S. W.

13; Strange v. Planter's Gin Co. (1920) 142 Ark. 100, 218 S. W. 188.

Colorado.—O'Brien v. Galley-Stockton Shoe Co. (1918) 65 Colo. 70, 173 Pac. 544.

Nebraska.—Segear v. Westcott (1909) 83 Neb. 515, 120 N. W. 170; Henton v. Sovereign Camp, W. W. (1910) 87 Neb. 552, 138 Am. St. Rep. 500, 127 N. W. 869; Kreck v. Supreme Lodge, F. U. (1914) 95 Neb. 428, 145 N. W. 859; Hamilton v. North American Acci. Ins. Co. (1916) 99 Neb. 579, 157 N. W. 111, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 409; Modern Woodmen v. Berry (1916) 100 Neb. 820, 161 N. W. 534, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 302; Bank of Benson v. Gordon (1919) 103 Neb. 508, 172 N. W. 367; Merchants-Mechanics First Nat. Bank v. Cavers Elevator Co. (1920) 105 Neb. 321, 180 N. W. 588.

New York.—Fogarty v. Hook (1895) 84 Hun, 165, 32 N. Y. Supp. 555; Kennedy v. New York (1904) 99 App. Div. 588, 91 N. Y. Supp. 252; Baker v. Appleton (1905) 107 App. Div. 358, 95 N. Y. Supp. 125, affirmed without opinion in (1907) 187 N. Y. 548, 80 N. E. 1104; Collins v. Burns (1875) 63 N. Y. 1; Thompson v. Simpson (1891) 128 N. Y. 270, 28 N. E. 627; Meruk v. New York (1918) 223 N. Y. 271, 119 N. E. 571, modifying (1917) 177 App. Div. 900, 163 N. Y. Supp. 1123; Ontario Industrial Co. v. New York Air Brake Co. (1920) 190 App. Div. 894, 179 N. Y. Supp. 940; Durham v. Stuyvesant Ins. Co. (1920) 112 Misc. 440, 182 N. Y. Supp. 887.

South Dakota.—Rice v. Bennett (1912) 29 S. D. 341, 137 N. W. 359.

In Harriman Nat. Bank v. Seldomridge (1917) 153 C. C. A. 147, 240 Fed. 111, reversed on other grounds in (1919) 249 U. S. 1, 63 L. ed. 443, 39 Sup. Ct. Rep. 244, it was said: "As both parties hereto moved for the direction of a verdict, there was no substantial question of fact to be decided."

In United States v. Two Baskets (1913) 123 C. C. A. 310, 205 Fed. 37, it was held that questions left for the determination of the trial judge by virtue of both parties moving for directed verdicts were not brought before the appellate court, which was bound to accept the findings of the trial court in the matter.

In Rice v. Bennett (1912) 29 S. D. 341, 137 N. W. 359, it was said: "Where both parties have asked for a directed verdict, the verdict stands precisely as would a verdict returned by a jury upon the same evidence, and, unless the verdict of a jury would be set aside, the verdict directed by the court must stand."

In Phenix Ins. Co. v. Kerr (1904) 66 L.R.A. 569, 64 C. C. A. 251, 129 Fed. 723, the court said: "Where each of the parties to a trial by jury requests the court to charge them to return a verdict in his favor, he waives his right to any finding or trial of the issues by the jury, and consents that the court shall find the facts and declare the law. An acceptance of these waivers and a peremptory instruction by the court in favor of either party constitute a general finding by the court of every material issue of fact and of law in favor of the successful party. The case is then in the same situation in which it would have been if both parties had filed a written waiver of a jury and it had been tried by the court. Each party is estopped by his request from reviewing every issue of fact upon which there is any substantial conflict in the evidence, and the only questions which the instruction presents to an appellate court are, Was the court's finding of fact without substantial evidence to sustain it? and, Was there error in its declaration or application of the law?"

Evidence sufficient to support the verdict of a jury is sufficient to support a directed verdict. Supreme Tribe, B. H. v. Galley (1915) 117 Ark. 145, 173 S. W. 838.

On review of a verdict rendered by the court after a request by both parties, two proper questions are presented to the court: First, whether there was any substantial evidence to sustain the finding of the court; and second, whether there was any error in the declaration or application of the law. United States v. Bishop (1903) 60 C. C. A. 123, 125 Fed. 181; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Kerr (1904) 66 L.R.A. 569, 64 C. C. A. 251, 129 Fed. 723; Insurance Co. of N. A. v. Wisconsin C. R. Co. (1905) 67 C. C. A. 300, 134 Fed. 794; Western Exp. Co. v. United States (1905) 72 C. C. A. 516, 141 Fed. 28; McCormick v. National City Bank (1906) 73 C. C. A. 350, 142 Fed. 132, 6 Ann. Cas. 544.

In De Burg v. Armenta (1917) 22 N. M. 443, 164 Pac. 838, it was said: "The only questions open on appeal are: First, Was there substantial evidence supporting the conclusion of the court? and, second, Did any error of law occur during the trial?"

The rule as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict has been differently stated, but it is generally said that if there is not an entire want of evidence the verdict will not be disturbed on review. Indianapolis Traction & Terminal Co. v. Vaughn (1917) 65 Ind. App. 581, 117 N. E. 673; Stearns v. Farrand (1899; Sup. Ct. App. T.) 29 Misc. 292, 60 N. Y. Supp. 501; Davies v. New York Concert Co. (1891; Sup. Ct. Gen. T.) 13 N. Y. Supp. 739, affirmed in (1891) 128 N. Y. 635, 29 N. E. 147; Rugh v. Soleim (1919) 92 Or. 329, 180 Pac. 930.

In Hall v. Harrel (1918) 136 Ark. 329, 206 S. W. 435, the court said: "Both sides having asked a peremptory instruction, without asking for a submission of the issue to the jury, the only question is whether the evidence is legally sufficient to sustain the finding in favor of appellees."

Nor will a verdict be reviewed where there was conflicting evidence as long as it appears that there was some evidence to sustain it as found. The reviewing court will not inquire into the reasoning of the trial court as to its finding of facts. Ropes v. Arnold (1894) 81 Hun. 476, 30 N. Y. Supp. 997; Seidenspinner v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. (1902) 70 App. Div. 476, 74 N. Y. Supp. 1108, reversed on other grounds in (1903) 175 N. Y. 95, 67 N. E. 123; Church v. Foley (1897) 10 S. D. 74, 71 N. W. 759.

In J. R. Watkins Medical Co. v. Miller (1918) 40 S. D. 505, 168 N. W. 373, it was said: "The findings of the trial court upon such motion are conclusive of the facts, regardless of the weight of contradictory evidence, if such finding is supported by substantial evidence which would sustain a similar verdict by a jury. . . . Nor is this rule affected by the fact that the evidence is conflicting."

A judgment based on a directed verdict following a request therefor from both parties will not be disturbed if there is evidence to support it; a conflict in evidence becoming immaterial. Lockhart v. Tri-State Loan & T. Co. (1920) 268 Fed. 523.

Where there has been a directed verdict at the request of both parties the reviewing court will not disturb the verdict where there is sufficient evidence to sustain it, although there is some conflict in the evidence. Lawton v. Carpenter (1912) 115 C. C. A. 264, 195 Fed. 362, supra, certiorari denied (1911) 225 U. S. 710, 56 L. ed. 1267, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 840; McHenry v. Old Citizens' Nat. Bank (1911) 85 Ohio St. 203, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1111, 97 N. E. 395; Share v. Coats (1912) 29 S. D. 603, 137 N. W. 402. See also Patty v. Salem Flouring Mills Co. (1909) 53 Or. 350, 96 Pac. 1106, 98 Pac. 521, 100 Pac. 298. In Share v. Coats (S. D.) supra, it was said: "An exception to an order directing a verdict presents no question for review, except the legal sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict directed. Questions of credibility of witnesses, and of inferences to be drawn from evidence, are deemed submitted to the court by motions of both parties; and the directed verdict has like effect as does a verdict returned by the jury."

In Buffalo Glass Co. v. Assets Realization Co. (1909) 133 App. Div. 775, 117 N. Y. Supp. 1087, it was said: "Both parties have moved for a direction of a verdict, and neither having asked that any issue of fact be submitted to the jury, it is practically a concession that none of the essential facts are controverted."

The question for the court to determine on appeal is simply whether there was substantial evidence to support the finding made. Moore v. Lee Tire & Rubber Co. (1921) 273 Fed. 465; Kansas City Soap Co. v. Illinois Cudahy Packing Co. (1920) 265 Fed. 108, affirming (1918; D. C.) 247 Fed. 556.

In O'Brien v. Galley-Stockton Shoe Co. (1918) 65 Colo. 70, 173 Pac. 544, the court said: "In such case the appellate court does not consider the weight of the evidence. If no reversible error was committed in the admission or rejection of evidence, the directed verdict will be upheld if there is any substantial evidence to support it."

In La Crosse Plow Co. v. Pagenstecher (1918) 165 C. C. A. 644, 253 Fed. 46, writ of certiorari denied in (1918) 248 U. S. 572, 63 L. ed. 427, 39 Sup. Ct. Rep. 11, it was said that a direction for verdict having been given for the plaintiff after requests therefor from both parties unaccompanied by any demand for the submission of any question to the jury, the only question before the court on appeal was whether there was any evidence to support the verdict.

In Williams v. Vreeland (1919) 250 U. S. 295, 63 L. ed. 989, 3 A.L.R. 1038, 39 Sup. Ct. Rep. 438, affirming (1917) 156 C. C. A. 632, 244 Fed. 346, it was held that a finding of fact by the trial court must stand if substantial evidence is disclosed to support it.

The sole question on appeal is that of the legal sufficiency of the evidence. Bankers' Surety Co. v. William Miller & Sons Co. (1912) 105 Ark. 697, 150 S. W. 570; Sims v. Everett (1914) 113 Ark. 198, L.R.A. 1918C, 7, 168 S. W. 559, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 629. And see Segear v. Westcott (1909) 83 Neb. 515, 120 N. W. 170.

In McCaull-Dinsmore Co. v. Stevens (1921) 59 Mont. 206, 194 Pac. 213, it appeared that, following motions by both parties for a directed verdict, the court denied the defendant's motion and then struck out the defendant's evidence, after which it directed a verdict for the plaintiff. The court on appeal, while recognizing the rule that, following requests from both parties for a directed verdict, each is bound by the court's finding, providing there is any substantial evidence in support thereof, held it to be inapplicable in the case at bar, since the motion made by the plaintiff was granted on a record altogether different from the one on which each of the motions was based.

Another statement of the law is that the verdict will not be disturbed unless clearly against the weight of the evidence. Fifty Associates Co. v. Quigley (1919) 56 Mont. 348, 185 Pac. 155; Gilligan v. Supreme Council, R. A. (1904) 26 Ohio C. C. 43; Schenck v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. (1919) 11 Ohio App. 164; Deadwood v. Hursh (1912) 30 S. D. 450, 138 N. W. 1122.

The question presented to the reviewing court is not whether there is any evidence to support the verdict as directed, but whether, on the evidence adduced, the verdict was for the right party. The finding of the court as to the facts of the case is not to be considered on review, because the party waived his right to have a jury decide the facts by not requiring it after the court had directed a verdict against him. A verdict so directed will not be set aside unless clearly against the weight of the evidence. First Nat. Bank v. Hayes (1901) 64 Ohio St. 100, 59 N. E. 893.

But it has been held on appeal that where the plaintiff's request to go to the jury was denied, the defendant, in whose favor judgment was given, must sustain his contention that there was no question of fact for submission to the jury. International Battery Co. v. Westreich (1918) 182 App. Div. 843, 170 N. Y. Supp. 149.

The reviewing court will determine the case on the theory that the trial court found every disputed fact in favor of the party in whose behalf the verdict was rendered. Raegener v. Hubbard (1899) 40 App. Div. 359, 57 N. Y. Supp. 1018, affirmed in (1901) 167 N. Y. 301, 60 N. E. 633; Northam v. International Ins. Co. (1899) 45 App. Div. 177, 61 N. Y. Supp. 45, affirmed in (1901) 165 N. Y. 666, 59 N. E. 1127; Mann v. National Linseed Oil Co. (1895) 87 Hun, 558, 34 N. Y.

Supp. 481; Birnstein v. Stuyvesant Ins. Co. (1903; Sup. Ct. App. T.) 39 Misc. 808, 81 N. Y. Supp. 306, reversed on other grounds in (1903) 83 App. Div. 436, 82 N. Y. Supp. 140; Reed v. Spear (1905) 107 App. Div. 144, 94 N. Y. Supp. 1007; Zirinsky v. Post (1906) 112 App. Div. 74, 98 N. Y. Supp. 132; Sutter v. Vanderveer (1890) 122 N. Y. 652, 25 N. E. 907; A. E. McBee Co. v. Shoemaker (1916) 174 App. Div. 291, 160 N. Y. Supp. 251, affirmed on other grounds in (1919) 225 N. Y. 621, 121 N. E. 852.

In Fairbanks v. Nichols (1909) 135 App. Div. 298, 119 N. Y. Supp. 752, the court said: "At the close of the evidence both parties moved for a direction of a verdict, and thereby all questions of fact were submitted to the court for determination. It must be presumed, therefore, in support of the judgment, that the court found all controverted questions in favor of the defendants."

It has been said that the question on appeal is whether the testimony, viewed in the light most favorable to the appellee, is legally sufficient to support the finding made in his favor. Gibson v. Allen-West Commission Co. (1919) 138 Ark. 172, 211 S. W. 142.

On appeal from a directed verdict, both parties having made requests to that effect, the evidence is to be given "its highest probative value in support of appellee's theory of the case." Home F. Ins. Co. v. Wilson (1913) 109 Ark. 324, 159 S. W. 1113; Bankers' Surety Co. v. William Miller & Sons Co. (1912) 105 Ark. 697, 150 S. W. 570.

In Bennett v. Thompson (1916) 126 Ark. 61, L.R.A.1917B, 919, 189 S. W. 363, it was said: "The court gave the appellee's requested instruction, so the question presented to us on this appeal is whether or not the testimony, viewing it in its strongest light in appellee's favor, is sufficient to sustain the verdict."

The facts having been determined, the duty devolves on the court to apply the law to the facts as found. A court of errors may reverse the verdict of the trial court on the ground that the law was not correctly applied and a wrong conclusion was reached. Beuttell v. Magone (1895) 157 U. S. 154, 39 L. ed. 654, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 566; Podmore v. Dime Sav. Bank (1900) 55 App. Div. 624, 66 N. Y. Supp. 1071; Schram v. Werner (1894) 81 Hun, 561, 31 N. Y. Supp. 47; Anderson v. First Nat. Bank (1894) 4 N. D. 182, 59 N. W. 1029; Brady v. Kreuger (1896) 8 S. D. 464, 59 Am. St. Rep. 771, 66 N. W. 1083.

In New England Mortg. Secur. Co. v. Great Western Elevator Co. (1897) 6 N. D. 407, 71 N. W. 130, the court said that the question for the reviewing court was whether the trial court "erred in its conclusions of law in directing a verdict. In other words, Did the court, in directing a verdict, put a proper legal construction upon the undisputed facts?"

II. Minority rule.

a. Rule stated.

The majority rule, that requests for a directed verdict from both parties effect a waiver of submission of the case to the jury, has been expressly disapproved in several jurisdictions.

Illinois.—Wolf v. Chicago Sign Printing Co. (1908) 233 Ill. 501, 84 N. E. 614, 13 Ann. Cas. 369.

Iowa.—German Sav. Bank v. Bates Addition Improv. Co. (1900) 111 Iowa, 432, 82 N. W. 1005; M. M. Walker Co. v. Dubuque Fruit & Produce Co. (1901) 113 Iowa, 428, 53 L.R.A. 775, 85 N. W. 614; Teeple v. Hawkeye Gold Dredging Co. (1908) 137 Iowa, 206, 114 N. W. 906; Hammill v. Joseph Schlitz Brewing Co. (1913) 165 Iowa, 266, 143 N. W. 110, 145 N. W. 511; New England Equitable Ins. Co. v. Boldrick (1921) — Iowa, —, 185 N. W. 468. And see MANSKA v. SAN BENITO LAND Co. (reported herewith) ante, 1430.

Minnesota.—Stauff v. Bingenheimer (1905) 94 Minn. 309, 102 N. W. 694. See also Poppitz v. German Ins. Co. (1901) 85 Minn. 118, 88 N. W. 438.

New Jersey.—Hayes v. Kluge (1914) 86 N. J. L. 657, 92 Atl. 358; Second Nat. Bank v. Smith (1918) 91 N. J. L. 531, 1 A.L.R. 470, 103 Atl. 862.

Oklahoma.—Farmers' Nat. Bank v. McCall (1910) 25 Okla. 600, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 217, 106 Pac. 866; Taylor v. Wooden (1911) 30 Okla. 6, 36 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1018, 118 Pac. 372; Midland Valley R. Co. v. Lynn (1913) 38 Okla. 695, 135 Pac. 370; Hogan v. Milburn (1915) 44 Okla. 641, 146 Pac. 5.

Tennessee.—King v. Cox (1912) 126 Tenn. 553, 151 S. W. 58; Virginia-Tennessee Hardware Co. v. Hodges (1912) 126 Tenn. 370, 149 S. W. 1056. See also Brackin v. McGannon (1916) 137 Tenn. 207, 192 S. W. 922. Compare Southern R. Co. v. Crutcher (1910) 1 Tenn. C. C. A. 231; Aizenstatt v. Jackson (1911) 1 Tenn. C. C. A. 805.

Vermont.—Fitzsimmons v. Richardson (1912) 86 Vt. 229, 84 Atl. 811; Seaver v. Lang (1918) 92 Vt. 501, 104 Atl. 877; MASON v. SAULT (reported herewith) ante, 1426.

In German Sav. Bank v. Bates Addition Improv. Co. (Iowa) supra, it was pointed out that although both parties had requested directed verdicts, neither was really willing, as against the motion of the other, to waive a jury, but each was impliedly asking as against the other that the point in conflict should be submitted to the jury.

In MANSKA v. SAN BENITO LAND CO. (reported herewith) ante, 1430, the court discusses the present state of the law in Iowa, reviewing the authorities, and flatly repudiating the rule adopted in the majority of jurisdictions. Regarding the mutual requests for a directed verdict it is said: "Such motions do not indicate any agreement or mutual concession by the parties, but rather an irreconcilable difference. Neither is willing, as against the motion of the other, to waive a jury; and there is no implication of such waiver from the mere fact that each thinks he has ground for asking a peremptory instruction."

In Wolf v. Chicago Sign Printing Co. (Ill.) supra, it was said: "When one party asks the court to direct a verdict in his favor, the fact that the other party makes a similar motion cannot in any way affect the rights of the first party. If that were true, no party could make a motion for a directed verdict without waiving his right to trial by jury if his opponent chose to make the same motion. The decisions relied upon to establish the doctrine that if both parties ask the court to decide a question of law they each waive the right to trial by jury of controverted questions of fact are inapplicable to the practice in this state, and the fact that each party in this case asked the court to direct a verdict did not amount to a submission of controverted questions of fact to the court."

In Hayes v. Kluge (1914) 86 N. J. L. 657, 92 Atl. 358, wherein it appeared that the court sent the case to the jury although each side had moved for a directed verdict, the court said: "The fact that both parties moved for a directed verdict did not require the trial court to direct a verdict, the motions not amounting to a consent that the case be taken from the jury." See also Second Nat. Bank v. Smith (1918) 91 N. J. L. 531, 1 A.L.R. 470, 103 Atl. 862, following Hayes v. Kluge (N. J.) supra.

In Oklahoma it has been held that where both parties verbally move for peremptory instructions, such fact does not constitute a waiver of the right to a jury trial. Farmers' Nat. Bank v. McCall (1910) 25 Okla. 600, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 217, 106 Pac. 866. In that case the court in discussing the point said: "Counsel for defendant in error in his brief insists that, each party having asked for a peremptory instruction, it had the effect of taking the case out of the hands of the jury and leaving it to the court, and in that event, if it became necessary for the court to weigh conflicting evidence, that then the giving of the peremptory instruction in favor of the defendant in error was without error, and, in any event, the evidence was conflicting, and that this court will not disturb the finding of the court where there is conflict in the evidence. There are some authorities that support this contention, but we decline to follow the same. Further, § 20 of article 7 of the Constitution of Oklahoma provides that 'in all issues of fact joined in any court, all parties may waive the right to have the same determined by jury, in which case the finding of the judge upon the facts shall have the force and effect of a verdict by jury.' In order to agree with the contention of the defendant in error, it would be necessary to conclude that the verbal moving by each side for a peremptory instruction was tantamount to a waiving of the right by a jury. Section 20, supra, is identical with § 13 of article 4 of the Constitution of North Carolina. . . . The supreme court of North Carolina has never held, under such provisions of the Constitution and the enforcing statutes thereto, that a jury might be waived dehors the record. In the case of Johnston v. Haynes (1873). 68 N. C. 509, where neither the written consent was filed nor any oral consent entered of record, it was held that it was too late to object in the supreme court that such consent had not been made, or did not appear of record. In numerous North Carolina cases it has been held that, where any paper or order of record reasonably showed consent either express or implied to waive a jury, the jury would be considered as waived. In this case there appears nothing of the kind. Section 5808, Okla. Comp. Laws 1909, provides that 'the trial by jury may be waived by the parties, in actions arising on contract, and with the assent of the court in other actions, in the following manner: By the consent of the party appearing when the other party fails to appear at the trial by himself or attorney. By written consent, in person or by attorney, filed with the clerk. By oral consent, in open court, entered on the journal.' The moving for peremptory instruction by each side in this case cannot be fairly inferred to come within such rule. There is nothing of record in any way to show that it was the intention of the parties thereby to waive a jury." The McCall Case was followed in Taylor v. Wooden (1911) 30 Okla. 6, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1018, 118 Pac. 372. In Midland Valley R. Co. v. Lynn (1913) 88 Okla. 695, 18 A.L.R.—92.

185 Pac. 370, the court, discussing the contention of the defendant that the case was not in point because the motions for peremptory instructions therein were oral, said: "It is true that in the opinion the motions were referred to throughout as verbal, meaning thereby that they were made orally; but we do not understand that the conclusion was based upon so limited a reason."

In Tennessee a distinction is drawn between a motion for peremptory instructions and a demurrer to the evidence, and it has been held that concurring motions for peremptory instructions made by both parties do not have the effect of an agreement by the parties that the whole controversy shall be determined by the trial judge. Virginia-Tennessee Hardware Co. v. Hodges (1912) 126 Tenn. 370, 149 S. W. 1056. In that case the supreme court considered the case as one of first impression in Tennessee, and after an extended argument disapproved the view adopted in the majority of jurisdictions, stating its conclusion on the subject as follows: "We are of the opinion that, under the true practice, the motion of each party should be treated for what it is, a matter wholly distinct from and adverse to that of his adversary; that neither is put in a worse position, so far as concerns his ultimate right of review, by his adversary's making a similar motion; that such motion should stand as if made and remaining alone, and should be disposed of on its own merits; that the only question submitted to the trial judge is the question of law above indicated; that, as a necessary preliminary to responding to this question, he must determine whether there is any substantial conflict in the evidence; that if he finds such conflict, or undisputed evidence from which conflicting inferences may reasonably be drawn, on material points, he should submit the case to the jury; that if he is of opinion there is no such conflict, he should sustain the motion of one party or of the other, according to his view of the facts and the law; that the party whose motion has been overruled may have the action of the trial judge reviewed on appeal, without the necessity of asking the submission of any special question or questions to the jury; that on such appeal he may attack the action of the trial judge, in overruling his motion and in sustaining that of his adversary, and may put forward his contention of the facts and assail that of his adversary; and the appellate court will for itself ascertain the facts, and will determine whether the trial judge should have sustained the one motion or the other, or should have submitted the case to the jury." The view adopted in the Hodges Case, supra, was approved in King v. Cox (1912) 126 Tenn. 553, 151 S. W. 58, wherein the court explained in detail the difference between a motion for peremptory instructions and a demurrer to the evidence. The court held that "a party, by making a motion for peremptory instructions, does not waive any exceptions he may have reserved against the action of the trial judge in his rulings against him on questions of evidence; and that he, on his motion for new trial, may assign such errors, along with the action of the trial judge in granting to his adversary or in refusing to himself a motion for peremptory instructions."

In Vermont it has been held that the mere fact that each party moves for a directed verdict does not amount to a consent that the case shall be taken from the jury. Fitzsimmons v. Richardson (1912) 86 Vt. 229, 84 Atl. 811, wherein the court said: "At the close of the evidence, each party claimed that a verdict should be directed in his favor, and filed a motion to that end. The court made a pro forma order directing a verdict for the defendants, and, such verdict being returned, entered a pro forma judgment thereon. To the direction of the verdict and to the judgment thereon the plaintiff accepted. The exception raises the question of whether there was evidence fairly and reasonably tending to sustain the plaintiff's claim." The court then continued: "The defendants' claim that, because of the two motions, it was the duty of the court to direct a verdict one way or the other. But this claim is unsound. Where it affirmatively appears that neither party wishes to go to the jury, it is for the court to direct such a verdict as in its judgment the evidence requires. . . . There is nothing novel about this practice, for the parties in civil cases can always by agreement substitute the court for the jury. But the mere fact that each party to a cause moves for a verdict in his favor does not amount to a consent that the case shall be taken from the jury. One who claims that the evidence is all his way does not waive the right to claim that, at least, some of it is his way, and that right is not affected by the fact that the other party moves that a verdict be directed in his favor." See also Woodsville Guaranty Sav. Bank v. Rogers (1909) 82 Vt. 468, 74 Atl. 85. But where there was no conflict in the evidence or facts, and so nothing to go to the jury, the defendant having offered no evidence, it was held that a verdict was properly directed by the court following a request therefor by both parties. MASON v. SAULT (reported herewith) ante, 1426.

b. Exception to rule.

However, even in jurisdictions repudiating the majority rule it has been held that requests for directed verdicts from both parties, together with an express or implied consent to allow the court to dispose of the case, will effect a waiver of submission of the case to the jury. Wells v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (1909) 144 Iowa, 605, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1045, 138 Am. St. Rep. 317, 123 N. W. 371; Murray v. Brotherhood of American Yeomen (1917) 180 Iowa, 626, 163 N. W. 421; Conkling v. Knights & Ladies of Security (1918) 183 Iowa, 665, 166 N. W. 384; Clay County v. Olson (1913) 123 Minn. 437, 143 N. W. 970; Philadelphia Brewing Co. v. McOwen (1909) 76 N. J. L. 636, 131 Am. St. Rep. 664, 73 Atl. 518, 16 Ann. Cas. 648; Lowe v. Vermont Sav. Bank (1916) 90 Vt. 532, 98 Atl. 1023;

Brightlook Hospital Asso. v. Garfield (1918) 92 Vt. 353, 104 Atl. 99; Buckley v. Jennings (1921) — Vt. —, 114 Atl. 40.

In Wells v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (Iowa) supra, the court justified a verdict directed for the plaintiff, following requests for a directed verdict by both parties, on the ground that, in addition thereto, counsel for the defendant had expressly agreed with the court that there were no disputed facts in the case and nothing for the jury to determine.

So, in Murray v. Brotherhood of American Yeomen (1917) 180 Iowa, 626, 163 N. W. 421, the court seemed to think that the Iowa rule on the question was contrary to the majority rule set out above, with exceptions, however, of which the instant case was one, where both sides consented to the disposition of the case by the court.

In Conkling v. Knights & Ladies of Security (1918) 183 Iowa, 665, 166 N. W. 384, both parties having requested the direction of a verdict, the trial court remarked that the jury was waived thereby. No objection was made by either party, no exception was taken, and, the case having been argued in the absence of a jury, it was held that the effect thereof was to waive the determination of any fact by a jury, and to submit all questions for the court's determination.

The court in Clay County v. Olson (1913) 123 Minn. 437, 143 N. W. 970, said: "There was no conflict in the evidence, and each party requested a directed verdict. It was practically conceded that there was no question for a jury. Under these circumstances, not having asked to have this question submitted to the jury, defendants cannot now complain because it was not submitted."

Both parties having conceded that the evidence presented no question for the jury, it was held in Lowe v. Vermont Sav. Bank (1916) 90 Vt. 532, 98 Atl. 1023, that the court properly directed a verdict, following requests by both parties to that effect.

In Buckley v. Jennings (1921) — Vt. —, 114 Atl. 40, following requests from both parties for a directed verdict, the court addressed the jury as follows: "Matters have arisen . . . which are going to relieve you of some of your trouble. There has been a motion for a verdict on each side, and the matter shaped itself so that it has become the duty of the court, on the evidence . . . to rule as a matter of law, it being conceded by both sides that the uncontradicted testimony in the case is determinative of the outcome, and in that case it is the burden for the court, and not for the jury, there being no conflict." A verdict was then directed for the plaintiff, and the defendant took an exception to the directing of a verdict and the refusal of the defendant's motion, but none was taken to the statement of the court. The court on appeal said: "That statement to the jury showed what the court understood the position of the parties to be, and if defendant understood or claimed it to be otherwise, fairness to the court required him to make it known then and there, so that the court might correct itself if in error. This was not done, and the court acted according to the statement it so made. It would be unjust to that court to permit the defendant now to take a different position, thereby putting the court in error."

However, where a motion of one of the parties for a directed verdict is sustained, both parties having moved to that effect, the consent of the other party to the formal act of calling a juror from the box to sign the verdict should be waived has been held not to constitute a consent to the act of the court in refusing to submit the case to the jury. Hammill v. Joseph Schlitz Brewing Co. (1913) 165 Iowa, 266, 143 N. W. 110, 145 N. W. 511, supra.

And submission to a jury is not waived by counsel's assenting that there was no question for a jury, where such assent was conditional; as, e. g., where, when asked what question there was for the jury, the defendant's counsel said: "I don't think there is any, if the court takes the view of the law as we do,"— which was followed by a fuller statement of his position. Seaver v. Lang (1918) 92 Vt. 501, 104 Atl. 877.

III. Rule in Georgia.

The state of the law in Georgia, on the point under discussion, does not apparently lend itself to formulation, as the cases do not seem to be in entire agreement.

In Mims v. Johnson (1911) 8 Ga. App. 850, 70 S. E. 139, the holding of the court is well stated in the first paragraph of the syllabus as follows: "Where both parties to a cause consent that the court direct a verdict though each moves that it be directed in his own favor, neither party can complain that the court erred in directing a verdict, though the losing party may except upon the ground that the verdict directed is erroneous."

The syllabus just quoted was made the holding of the court in Sovereign Camp, W. W. v. Beard (1921) 26 Ga. App. 130, 105 S. E. 629. See to the same effect Lydia Pinkham Medicine Co. v. Gibbs (1899) 108 Ga. 138, 33 S. E. 945. And another syllabus paragraph in Sovereign Camp, W. W. v. Beard, supra, pointed out that the verdict would not be disturbed, since there was sufficient evidence to support the finding.

In Broadhurst v. Hill (1912) 137 Ga. 833, 74 S. E. 422, it was argued that, both parties having requested the direction of a verdict, the question whether the case should be submitted to a jury had been waived thereby; and that, on overruling the motion of one of the parties, a verdict might be granted in favor of the other. It was held that the result of requests from both parties for a directed verdict was to waive submission

jury, and to authorize the direction of a verdict for one of the parties where the evidence considered most favorable as to him did not demand such a verdict.

And in Elder v. Woodruff Hardware & Mfg. Co. (1915) 16 Ga. App. 255, 85 S. E. 268, the court said: "It appears to be settled in Georgia that, where both parties move the direction of a verdict, the party against whom the verdict is directed is not estopped, because of his motion, from excepting to the direction of the verdict against him." The case of Mims v. Johnson, supra, was distinguished on the ground that it was agreed by counsel on both sides therein that it was a proper case for the direction of a verdict.

IV. Rule in Kansas.

The two Kansas cases in point do not seem to be exactly in accord in principle, although the same result was attained in each instance. In Dannefer v. Aurand (1920) 106 Kan. 605, 189 Pac. 371, it was held that the plaintiff should have been allowed to go to the jury although both parties had asked for directed verdicts, the court apparently basing its decision on the fact that the plaintiff's right to a jury trial was saved by asking for the submission to the jury of certain questions and by the existence of conflicting testimony. The court otherwise seemed to approve the majority rule as heretofore stated.

But in Smith v. Hutchinson Box Board & Paper Co. (1917) 101 Kan. 274, 166 Pac. 484, the court said: "Neither party, by requesting a peremptory instruction in its favor, consented that the court might withdraw the case from the jury or give a UNITED STATES, Appt.,

v.
STANLEY FIELD, Exr., etc., of Kate Field, Deceased.

United States Supreme Court—February 23, 1921.

(255 U. S. 257, 65 L. ed. 617, 41 Sup. Ct. Rep. 256.)

Internal revenue — estate tax — power of appointment — testamentary execution.

1. Property passing under a testamentary execution of a general power of appointment was not subject to the estate tax imposed by the Revenue Act of September 8, 1916, title II., by the provisions of § 202 that the value of the taxable estate of a decedent shall include the interest of the decedent at the time of his death, which, after his death, is subject to the payment of the charges against his estate and the expenses of his administration, and is subject to distribution as part of his estate, and any interest of which the decedent has at any time made a transfer, or with respect to which he has created a trust in contemplation of, or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after, his death, except in case of a bona fide sale for a fair consideration.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1470.]

Statutes — construction — levying of tax.

2. The provisions of statutes levying taxes are not to be extended by implication.

[See 25 R. C. L. 1092, 1093; note in 17 A.L.R. 1029.]

Internal revenue — estate tax — conditions.

3. The conditions expressed conjunctively in the Revenue Act of September 8, 1916, title II. § 202 (a), levying an estate tax, cannot be read as if prescribed disjunctively; and unless the interest sought to be taxed fulfils all the conditions, it is not taxable.

Powers — estate of donee.

4. The existence of a power of appointment does not, in itself, vest any estate in the donee.

[See 21 R. C. L. 773.]

— appointed property as assets of donee's estate.

5. Where the donee of a power of appointment dies indebted, having executed the power in favor of volunteers, the appointed property is treated as equitable, not legal, assets of his estate, and, in the absence of statute, if it passes to the executor at all, it does so, not by virtue of his office, but as a matter of convenience, and because he represents the rights of creditors.

— rights of creditors of donee.

6. Creditors of the donee of a power of appointment can lay claim to the appointed estate, where the power is executed, only to the extent that the donee's own estate is insufficient to satisfy their demands.

[See 21 R. C. L. 785, 786.]

— effect of failure to execute power.

7. In the absence of statute, creditors of the donee of a power of appointment have no redress in case of a failure to execute the power.

— distribution of property as part of donee's estate.

8. Whether a power of appointment be or be not exercised, the property that was subject to appointment is not subject to distribution as part of the estate of the donee. If there be no appointment, it goes according to the disposition of the donor. If there be an appointment to volunteers, then, subject to whatever charge creditors may have against it, it goes not to the next of kin or the legatees of the donee, but to his appointees under the power.

APPEAL by the United States from a judgment of the Court of Claims (Hay, J.) sustaining a claim for refund of an estate tax. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Frank Davis, Jr., Assistant Attorney General, William L. Frierson, Solicitor General, and Thomas K. Schmuck, Special Assistant to the Attorney General, for the United States:

Contemporaneous construction of the law by the executive department called upon to carry it into effect is, of itself, entitled to great respect.

United States v. Pugh, 99 U. S. 265, 269, 25 L. ed. 322, 323; United States v. Johnston, 124 U. S. 236, 253, 31 L. ed. 389, 396, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 446.

The testamentary execution by a donee of a general power of appointment effects a transfer of the appointed estate within the meaning of § 202, ¶ (b), of the act.

Chanler v. Kelsey, 205 U. S. 466, 51 L. ed. 882, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 550; Luques's Appeal, 114 Me. 235, 95 Atl. 1021; McFall v. Kirkpatrick, 236 Ill. 281, 86 N. E. 139.

An appointed estate is subject to the payment of debts of a deceased appointor.

2 Sugden, Powers, chap. 8, ¶ 7, p. 29; Brandies v. Cochrane, 112 U. S. 344-352, 28 L. ed. 760-763, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 194; Knowles v. Dodge, 1 Mackey, 66; Duncanson v. Manson, 3 App. D. C. 260; Clapp v. Ingraham, 126 Mass. 200; Johnson v. Cushing, 15 N. H. 298, 41 Am. Dec. 694; Tallmadge v. Sill, 21 Barb. 34; Rogers v. Hinton, 62 N. C. (Phill. Eq.) 101; 4 Kent, Com. §§ 339, 340; 22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 1147.

A general power of appointment is one which the donee of the power can exercise in favor of such person or persons as he pleases.

Farwell, Powers, 2d ed. 7.

For purposes of taxation, appointment of property under the power is a distribution of such property as part of the appointor's estate.

Chanler v. Kesley, 205 U. S. 466, 51 L. ed. 882, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 556, 10 Ann. Cas. 689; 26 Am. & Eng. Enc. Laws, 605; Minot v. Treasurer (Minot v. Stevens) 207 Mass. 588, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 236, 93 N. E. 973; Brandies v. Cochrane, 112 U. S. 344, 352, 28 L. ed. 760, 763, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 194; McFall v. Kirkpatrick, 236 Ill. 281, 86 N. E. 139; 4 Kent. Com. 339; Tallmadge v. Sill, 21 Barb. 34; Duncanson v. Manson, 3 App. D. C. 260; Olney v. Balch, 154 Mass. 318, 28 N. E. 258; Scrafton v. Quincey, 2 Ves. Sr. 413, 28 Eng. Reprint, 264; 2 Sugden, Powers, 3d ed. § 19; Johnson v. Cushing, 15 N. H. 298, 41 Am. Dec. 694;

Atty. Gen. v. Upton, L. R. 1 Exch. 224, 4 Hurlst. & C. 336, 35 L. J. Exch. N. S. 138, 12 Jur. N. S. 489, 14 L. T. N. S. 334, 14 Week. Rep. 732.

Messrs. John P. Wilson, William B. Hale, and Walter Bruce Howe, for appellee:

Unless the tax collected in this case is imposed by clear and express words in the statute, it cannot be sustained.

Gould v. Gould, 245 U. S. 151, 62 L. ed. 211, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 53; Treat v. White, 181 U. S. 264, 45 L. ed. 853, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 611; Eidman v. Martinez, 184 U. S. 578, 46 L. ed. 697, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 515; Hartranft v. Wiegmann, 121 U. S. 609, 30 L. ed. 1012, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1240; Thompson v. United States, 246 U. S. 547-551, 62 L. ed. 876-879, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 349; Caminetti v. United States, 242 U. S. 470, 490, 61 L. ed. 442, 455, L.R.A.1917F, 502, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 192, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 1168; Re Harbeck, 161 N. Y. 211, 55 N. E. 850; United States v. Bashaw, 1 C. C. A. 653, 4 U. S. App. 360, 50 Fed. 749.

The Revenue Act of 1916, as construed by the government, does not tax appointed property in all of the states, and therefore cannot be held to tax such property in any of the states, as excise taxes are required by art. 1, § 8, of the Constitution to be uniform throughout the United States.

Lederer v. Pearce, 266 Fed. 497; Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 41, 86, 44 L. ed. 969, 987, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 747.

The Revenue Act of 1916 does not contain clear and express words imposing an estate tax upon an interest in property never owned by appellee, but over which she had only a power of appointment.

McFall v. Kirkpatrick, 236 Ill. 281, 86 N. E. 139; Keays v. Blinn, 234 Ill. 121, 84 N. E. 628, 14 Ann. Cas. 37; Walker v. Treasurer, 221 Mass. 600, 109 N. E. 647; Shattuck v. Burrage, 229 Mass. 448, 118 N. E. 889; Sifford v. Cutler, 244 Ill. 234, 135 Am. St. Rep. 326, 91 N. E. 428, 18 Ann. Cas. 36; Hallbeck v. Stewart, 69 Ill. App. 225; Hill v. Treasurer, 229 Mass. 474, L.R.A.1918D, 337, 118 N. E. 891; O'Grady v. Wilmot [1916] 2 A. C. 231, 85 L. J. Ch. N. S. 386, 114 L. T. N. S. 1097, 32 Times L. R. 456, 60 Sol. Jo. 456.

Mr. Justice Pitney delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from a judgment of the court of claims, sustaining a claim for refund of an estate tax exacted under title II. of the Revenue Act of September 8, 1916, as amended by Act of March 3, 1917 (chap. 463, 39 Stat. at L. 756, 777, chap. 159, 39 Stat. at L. 1000, 1002, Comp. Stat. § 6336½b, Fed. Stat. Anno. Supp. 1918, p. 305). It presents the question whether the act taxed a certain interest that passed under testamentary execution of a general power of appointment created prior, but executed subsequent, to its passage.

The facts are as follows: Joseph N. Field, a citizen and resident of Illinois, died April 29, 1914, leaving a will which was duly admitted to probate in that state, and by which he gave the residue of his estate, after payment of certain legacies, to trustees, with provision that one third of it should be set apart and held as a separate trust fund for the benefit of his wife, Kate Field, the net income to be paid to her during life, and from and after her death the net income of one half of said share of the trust estate to be paid to such persons and in such shares as she should appoint by last will and testament. The trust was to continue until the death of the last surviving grandchild of the testator, who was living at the time of his death, and, at its termination, the undistributed estate was to be divided among named beneficiaries or their issue, per stirpes, in proportions specified. Kate Field died April 29, 1917, a resident of Illinois, leaving a will which was duly probated in that state, by which she executed the power of appointment, directing that the income to which the power related should be paid in equal shares to her children surviving the date of the respective payments, the issue of any deceased child to stand in the place of such deceased child. The collector of internal revenue, assuming to act under the Revenue Act of 1916, as amended, and regulations issued by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue included as a part of the gross estate of Kate Field the estate passing under her of the power; and proceeded to assess and collect an estate tax based upon the net value thereof, and amounting to $121,059.60. Her executor, having paid the tax under protest, and having made a claim for refund which was considered and rejected by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, brought this suit and recovered judgment, from which the United States appeals.

The Revenue Act of 1916, in § 201 (39 Stat. at L. 777, chap. 463), imposes a tax equal to specified percentages of the value of the net estate "upon the transfer of the net estate of every decedent dying after the passage of this act." By § 203 (p. 778) the value of the net estate is to be determined by subtracting from the value of the gross estate certain specified deductions. The gross estate is to be valued as follows:

"Sec. 202. That the value of the gross estate of the decedent shall be determined by including the value at the time of his death of all property, real or personal, tangible or intangible, wherever situated:

"(a) To the extent of the interest therein of the decedent at the time of his death which after his death is subject to the payment of the charges against his estate and the expenses of its administration and is subject to distribution as part of his estate.

"(b) To the extent of any interest therein of which the decedent has at any time made a transfer, or with respect to which he has created a trust, in contemplation of or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after his death, except in case of a bona fide sale for a fair consideration in money or money's worth. Any transfer of a material part of his property in the nature of a final disposition or distribution thereof, made by the decedent within two years prior to his death without such a consideration, shall, unless shown to the contrary, be deemed to have been made in contemplation of death within the meaning of this title; . . ."

the gross estate passing under her appointment executed

The amendment of March 3, 1917 (39 Stat. at L. 1002, chap. 159, Comp. Stat. § 6336½b, Fed. Stat. Anno. Supp. 1918, p. 305), pertains merely to the rates, and need not be further considered.¹

The provision quoted from § 202 was construed by the Treasury Department, in U. S. Internal Revenue Regulations No. 37, relating to estate taxes, revised May, 1917, art. XI., as follows: "Property passing under a general power of appointment is to be included as a portion of the gross estate of a decedent appointer."

No question being suggested as to the power of Congress to impose a tax upon the passing of property under testamentary execution of a power of appointment created before, but executed after, the passage of the taxing act (see Chanler v. Kelsey, 205 U. S. 466, 473, 478, 479, 51 L. ed. 882, 886, 888, 889, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 550; Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 41, 56-61, 44 L. ed. 969, 975-977, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 747), the case involves merely a question of the construction of the act. Applying the accepted canon that the provisions of such acts are not to be

Statutes—
construction—
levying of tax.

extended by implication (Gould v. Gould, 245 U. S. 151, 153, 62 L. ed. 211, 213, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 53), we are constrained to the view—notwithstanding the administrative construction adopted by the Treasury Department—that the Revenue Act of 1916 did not impose an estate tax upon property passing under a testamentary execution of a general power of appointment.

The government seeks to sustain the tax under both clauses above quoted from § 202.

¹ The act was further amended October 3, 1917 (chap. 63, 40 Stat. at L. 300, 324, Comp. Stat. § 6336aa, Fed. Stat. Anno. Supp. 1918, p. 336); superseded and repealed by Act of February 24, 1919 (chap. 18, 40 Stat. at L. 1057, 1096, 1149).

The conditions expressed in clause (a) are to the effect that the taxable estate must be (1) an interest of the decedent at the time of his death, (2) which, after his death, is subject to the payment of the charges against his estate and the expenses of its administration, and (3) is subject to distribution as part of his estate.

These conditions are —estate tax— conditions. expressed conjunctively; and it would be inadmissible, in construing a taxing act, to read them as if prescribed disjunctively. Hence, unless the appointed interest fulfilled all three conditions, it was not taxable under this clause.

The chief reliance of the government is upon the rule, well established in England and followed generally, but not universally, in this country, that where one has a general power of appointment, either by deed or by will, and executes the power, equity will regard the property appointed as part of his assets for the payment of his creditors, in preference to the claims of his voluntary appointees. See Brandies v. Cochrane, 112 U. S. 344, 352, 28 L. ed. 760, 763, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 194.

The English cases are fully reviewed by the House of Lords in O'Grady v. Wilmot [1916] 2 A. C. 231, 246, et seq., 85 L. J. Ch. N. S. 386, 114 L. T. N. S. 1097, 32 Times L. R. 456, 60 Sol. Jo. 456. Illustrative cases in the American courts are Johnson v. Cushing, 15 N. H. 298, 307, 41 Am. Dec. 694; Rogers v. Hinton, 62 N. C. (Phill. Eq.) 101, 105; Clapp v. Ingraham, 126 Mass. 200, 202; Knowles v. Dodge, 1 Mackey, 66, 72; Freeman v. Butters, 94 Va. 406, 411, 26 S. E. 845; Tallmadge v. Sill, 21 Barb. 34, 51, et seq.; contra, per Gibson, Ch. J., in Com. v. Duffield, 12 Pa. 277, 279-281; Pearce v. Lederer, 262 Fed. 993, affirmed in Lederer v. Pearce, 266 Fed. 497.

It is tacitly admitted that the rule obtains in Illinois, and we shall so assume.

But the existence of the power does not of itself vest any estate in the donee. Collins v. Wickwire, 162 Mass. 143, 144, 38 N. E. 365; Keays v. Blinn, 234 Ill. 121, 124, 84 N. E. 628, 14 Ann. Cas. 37; Walker v. Treasurer, 221 Mass. 600, 602, 603, 109 N. E. 647; Shattuck v. Burrage, 229 Mass. 448, 451, 118 N. E. 889. See Carver v. Jackson, 4 Pet. 1, 93, 7 L. ed. 761, 793.

Where the donee dies indebted, having executed the power in favor of volunteers, the appointed property is treated as equitable, not legal, assets of his estate (Clapp v. Ingraham, 126 Mass. 200, 208; Patterson v. Lawrence, 83 Ga. 703, 707, 7 L.R.A. 143, 10 S. E. 355); and (in the absence of statute), if it passes to the executor at all, it does so not by virtue of his office, but as a matter of convenience, and because he represents the rights of creditors (O'Grady v. Wilmot [1916] 2 A. C. 231, 248-257, 85 L. J. Ch. N. S. 386, 114 L. T. N. S. 1097, 32 Times L. R. 456, 60 Sol. Jo. 456; Smith v. Garvey, 22 N. C. (2 Dev. & B. Eq.) 42, 49; Olney v. Balch, 154 Mass. 318, 322, 28 N. E. 258; Emmons v. Shaw, 171 Mass. 410, 411, 50 N. E. 1033; Hill v. Treasurer, 229 Mass. 474, 477, L.R.A.1918D, 337, 118 N. E. 891).

Where the power is executed, creditors of the donee can lay claim to the appointed estate only to the extent that the donee's own estate is insufficient to satisfy their demands. Patterson v. Lawrence, 83 Ga. 703, 708, 7 L.R.A. 143, 10 S. E. 355; Walker v. Treasurer, 221 Mass. 600, 602, 603, 109 N. E. 647; Shattuck v. Burrage, 229 Mass. 448, 452, 118 N. E. 889.

It is settled that (in the absence of statute) creditors have no redress in case of a failure to execute the power. Holmes v. Coghill, 7 Ves. Jr. 499, 507, 32 Eng. Reprint, 201, 6 Revised Rep. 166, affirmed in 12 Ves. Jr. 206, 214, 215, 33 Eng. Reprint, 79, 8 Revised Rep. 323, 21 Eng. Rul. Cas. 577; Gilman v. Bell, 99 Ill. 144, 150; Duncanson v. Manson, 3 App. D. C. 260, 273.

And, whether the power be or be not exercised, the property that was subject to appointment is not subject to distribution as part of the estate of the donee. If there be no appointment, it goes according to the disposition of the donor. If there be an appointment to volunteers, then, subject to whatever charge creditors may have against it, it goes not to the next of kin or the legatees of the donee, but to his appointees under the power.

It follows that the interest in question, not having been property of Mrs. Field at the time of her death, nor subject to distribution as part of her estate, was not taxable under clause (a).

We deem it equally clear that it was not within clause (b). That clause is the complement of (a), and is aptly descriptive of a transfer of an interest in decedent's own property in his lifetime, intended to take effect at or after his death. It cannot, without undue laxity of construction, be made to cover a transfer resulting from a testamentary execution by decedent of a power of appointment over property not his own.

It would have been easy for Congress to express a purpose to tax property passing under a general power of appointment exercised by a decedent had such a purpose existed; and none was expressed in the act under consideration. In that of February 24, 1919, which took its place, the section providing how the value of the gross estate of the decedent shall be determined contains a clause precisely to the point (§ 402 (e), 40 Stat. at L. 1097, chap. 18, Comp. Stat. § 6336½ c): "To the extent of any property passing under a general power of appointment exercised by the decedent (1) by will, or (2) by deed of donee.

Powers—estate

—appointed property as assets of donee's estate.

—distribution of property as part of donee's estate.

—rights of creditors of donee.

—effect of failure to execute power.

executed in contemplation of, or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after, his death, except," etc. Its insertion indicates that Congress at least was doubtful whether the previous act included property passing by appointment. See Re Miller, 110 N. Y. 216, 222, 18 N. E. 139; Re Harbeck, 161 N. Y. 211, 217, 218, 55 N. E. 850; United States v. Bashaw, 1 C. C. A. 653, 4 U. S. App. 360, 50 Fed. 749, 754. The government contends that the amendment was made for the purpose of clarifying rather than extending the law as it stood, and cites a statement to that effect in the Report of the House Committee on Ways and Means (House Doc. No. 1267, p. 101, 65th Cong. 2d Sess.). It is evident, however, that this statement was based upon the interpretation of the Act of 1916, adopted by the Treasury Department; the same report proceeded to declare (p. 102) that "the absence of a provision including property transferred by power of appointment makes it possible, by resorting to the creation of such a power, to effect two transfers of an estate with the payment of only one tax;" and this, together with the fact that the committee proposed that the law be amended, shows that the Treasury construction was not treated as a safe reliance.

The tax in question being unsupported by the taxing act, the Court of Claims was right in awarding reimbursement.

Judgment affirmed.

NOTE

The decision in the reported case (UNITED STATES v. FIELD) ante, 1461, settles the construction of the statute there involved. Before the decision had been rendered, however, the statute had been amended by the Act of February 24, 1919 (chap. 18, § 402), which provides that "the value of the gross estate of the decedent shall be determined by including the value at the time of his death of all property, real or personal, tangible or intangible, wherever situated . . . (e) To the extent of any property passing under a general power of appointment exercised by the decedent (1) by will, or (2) by deed executed in contemplation of, or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after, his death, except in case of a bona fide sale for a fair consideration in money or money's worth." 40 Stat. at L. 1097, Comp. Stat. § 6336½c.

The general question of succession tax on property passing under power of appointment is discussed in note, post, 1470.

EPHRAIM LEDERER, Collector of Internal Revenue for the First District of Pennsylvania, Plff. in Err.,

v.

JOHN W. PEARCE, Exr., etc., of Alfred Pearce, Deceased.

United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Third Circuit — June 14, 1920.

(266 Fed. 497.)

Tax — estate — property passing under power of appointment.

Property passing under the exercise of a power of appointment by one having a life use of it, with power of appointment, is not subject to the Federal estate tax which is imposed upon the transfer of property in which decedent has an interest which is subject to distribution as part of his estate, where, by the law of the state of his domicil, the donee of a power is vested with no interest in its subject-matter, and therefore conveys none by its exercise, and it is immaterial that the donee attempts to blend the property covered by the power with his own and make it answerable for his debts if it is not necessary for that purpose.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1470.]

ERROR to the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania (Dickinson, Dist. J.) to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in a suit brought to recover an amount alleged to have been unlawfully exacted as an inheritance tax on the estate of plaintiff's testator. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Argued before Buffington, Woolley, and Haight, Circuit Judges.

Messrs. Robert J. Sterrett and Charles D. McAvoy, for plaintiff in error:

The estate over which the testator had a general power of appointment under his mother's will is so blended by the terms of the testator's will that it becomes subject to the estate tax imposed by the Act of September 8, 1916, chap. 463; 2 Sugden, Powers, 6th ed. chap. 8, § 3, ¶ 6, p. 29; Powell, Powers, 2d ed. 1799, p. 366; Stokes's Estate, 3 Pa. Co. Ct. 194; Horner's Estate, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. 189; Fell's Estate, 14 Pa. Dist. R. 327; Huey's Estate, 17 Pa. Dist. R. 1030; Huddy's Estate, 236 Pa. 276, 84 Atl. 909.

Mr. A. U. Bannard, for defendant in error:

The property in question was not subject to the estate tax.

Com. v. Duffield, 12 Pa. 277; Com. v. Williams, 13 Pa. 29; Pennsylvania Co. v. McClain, 105 Fed. 367, 47 C. C. A. 529, 108 Fed. 618; Fidelity Trust Co. v. McClain, 118 Fed. 152, 57 C. C. A. 679, 122 Fed. 1020; Olney v. Balch, 154 Mass. 318, 28 N. E. 258; Emmons v. Shaw, 171 Mass. 410, 50 N. E. 1033; Re Stewart, 131 N. Y. 274, 14 L.R.A. 836, 30 N. E. 184.

Messrs. E. Bartram Richards and Thomas Raeburn White amici curiæ.

Woolley, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a suit brought against a collector of internal revenue to recover taxes assessed and collected on the theory that property passing under a general power of appointment, exercised by a testator, constituted a part of his estate and was, as such, liable for an estate tax under the Act of September 8, 1916, chap. 463, 39 Stat. at L. 777, as amended by the Act of March 3, 1917, chap. 159, 39

Stat. at L. 1002, and the Act of October 3, 1917, chap. 63, 40 Stat. at L. 324, Comp. Stat. §§ 6336½b, 6336½bbb, Fed. Stat. Anno. Supp. 1918, pp. 305, 311.

Elizabeth Pearce, dying before the passage of the act, bequeathed certain of her property to trustees, with direction that they divide it into equal parts and pay the income therefrom, under spendthrift trusts, to her several children for the terms of their respective lives; and, in the event of the decease of any one of her children, she (further disposing of her property by the same will) gave, devised, and bequeathed the principal of that part of her estate to the income of which the child so dying had been entitled while living, "unto such person or persons for such uses and purposes . . . as may be set forth and declared in any last will and testament" that such child might make.

Alfred Pearce, a son of Elizabeth Pearce, dying after the passage of the act, seised of an estate of his own and possessed of the recited power of appointment, left a will whereby he provided for the payment of his debts and also for the payment of sundry legacies in excess of his own estate, and exercised the power of appointment by including "in the dispositions" of his will the share of the principal of the mother's estate to which the power related.

From John W. Pearce, executor of the will of Alfred Pearce, the collector of internal revenue demanded payment of an estate tax assessed on property which included that which was the testator's own and that with reference to which he had as donee of the power made appointments. John W. Pearce, being also trustee under the will of Elizabeth Pearce, the donor of the power, resisted payment of part of the taxes on the contention that the property which passed under the power to the appointees of Alfred Pearce, the donee, was the property of Elizabeth Pearce, the donor; that it passed not under his will, but under hers; and that, not being "subject to distribution as part of his estate," his estate was not liable for the tax. Failing to impress the collector with this position, the executor of Alfred Pearce paid the tax under protest, and, after the usual formalities, brought this action to recover the same. Judgment was rendered for the executor, and the collector sued out this writ of error. 262 Fed. 993.

There is but one question in this case, and this question, when considered with reference to the facts out of which it arises, is fraught with little difficulty. It is: Whose property passed under the power, property of the donor or of the donee? Upon the answer to this question the law acts with no uncertainty.

By § 201 of the applicable act (39 Stat. at L. 777), a tax, equal to given percentages of the value of the net estate, is "imposed upon the transfer of the net estate of every decedent dying after the passage of this act."

In order to obtain a net estate of a decedent as a basis for taxation, § 202 directs how his gross estate shall first be determined, by providing that it shall include the value of all property, "(a) to the extent of the interest therein of the decedent at the time of his death which, after his death, is subject to the payment of the charges against his estate and the expenses of its administration, and is subject to distribution as part of his estate."

The gross estate of a decedent being thus ascertained, § 203 provides, by allowing sundry deductions therefrom, how the net or taxable estate shall be determined. Lederer v. Northern Trust Co. 262 Fed. 52 (C. C. A. 3d).

As the tax is imposed upon the transfer of property in which a decedent dying after the passage of the act has an interest which is subject to distribution as part of his estate, it is clear that if the property which passed under the exercise of the power of appointment in this case was the property of Elizabeth Pearce, the donor of the power, and as such was subject to distribution as part of her estate, her estate is not liable for the tax, because she died before the passage of the act; and, although Alfred Pearce died

Tax—estate—property passing under power of appointment.

after the passage of the act, neither, in such event, is his estate liable, because "at the time of his death" he had no "interest" in the property "which, after his death," was "subject to the payment of the charges against his estate and the expenses of its administration and [was] subject to distribution as part of his estate," unless he made it such, within the Pennsylvania law, when, upon exercising the power of appointment, he included the property of the power in his testamentary dispositions.

From the form of the Federal Estate Tax Act, it is evident the Congress intended that the act should operate not in opposition to, but in harmony with, the many different state acts with which, because of its very terms, it would come into contact. Lederer v. Northern Trust Co. supra. Therefore, in creating an estate tax, the Congress very wisely leveled the tax at that property of decedents which is subject to distribution as part of their estates according to the laws of different states (§ 202), after deducting therefrom such expenses, claims, and charges against estates as are allowed by the laws of the states under which they are administered (§ 203). Thus it appears that the Federal estate tax may reach property in one state when it would fail to reach like property in another, according as the laws of distribution and administration vary in different states. The law of the state being the test of the valid assessment of the tax against given property, our inquiry is, therefore, directed to the law of Pennsylvania to determine whose property passed on the exercise of the power of appointment in this case, and under whose estate was the property distributed.

The rule in England is that a donee of a power takes a beneficial interest in the property of the power, and, upon the exercise of the power, the property becomes a part of his estate, subject to his debts like his other property, in preference to the claims of legatees or appointees. 2 Sugden, Powers, 6th ed. chap. 8, § 3, ¶¶ 6 & 7; Powell, Powers, 2d ed. 366; Lassells v. Cornwallis, 2 Vern. 465, 23 Eng. Reprint, 393; Thompson v. Town, 2 Vern. 319, 23 Eng. Reprint, 806; Hinton v. Toye, 1 Atk. 465, 26 Eng. Reprint, 296; Shirley v. Ferrers, cited in 2 Atk. 172, 26 Eng. Reprint, 508; Townshend v. Windham, 2 Ves. Sr. 2, 28 Eng. Reprint, 2; Holmes v. Coghill, 7 Ves. Jr. 503, 32 Eng. Reprint, 203; Jenney v. Andrews, 6 Madd. Ch. 264, 56 Eng. Reprint, 1091. The English doctrine is rejected in Pennsylvania by the supreme court in Com. v. Duffield, 12 Pa. 277, and, upon an opinion by Chief Justice Gibson, a new rule was established to the effect that a donee of the power is vested with no interest in its subject-matter, and therefore conveys none by the exercise of the power; that on the exercise of a power by the donee property passes by the will of the donor as part of his estate, not as part of the estate of the donee; and that the appointees of the donee of the power derive title immediately from the donor.

The plaintiff does not challenge his rule. Indeed, he admits that by his rule, if applicable, the property in question passed under the will of Elizabeth Pearce, the donor of the power, and was not liable for the Federal estate tax. But he contends that because, in this particular case, the donee in exercising the power included the property of the power in his will and made it liable for the payment of his debts, he thereby "blended" the property of the power with property of his own and made it "part of his estate," and, accordingly, made it liable for the Federal estate tax.

The doctrine of "blending," upon which alone the plaintiff relies in this case, has not, so far as we have been informed, been directly passed upon by the supreme court of Pennsylvania, but it has been considered (though diversely regarded) by the orphans' courts of different counties in that commonwealth. The learned trial judge has discussed this doctrine at length (262 Fed. 993) giving to the Pennsylvania cases, so far as they have arisen, an analysis in which we discern no weakness. He held in effect that the Pennsylvania rule as announced by Chief Justice Gibson prevails even against the doctrine of blending, where the donee of a power, in its exercise, makes provision for the payment of his debts out of the property of the power, on the principle that under such an exercise of a power by a testator the appointment is to creditors, not to the estate, and that creditors take not qua creditors, but qua appointees; and that the property passes to creditor appointees, not from the donee through his estate, but from the donor through his estate; just as under the general rule it passes to appointees designated by name, though described here by class.

We have been much impressed by the reasoning of the learned trial judge upon the application of this rule of Pennsylvania law to the facts of this case; yet, as it involves an interpretation of a rule of state law, we hesitate, as a Federal court (in the absence of pronouncement by the state supreme court), to express an opinion either approving or disapproving the opposite views of county courts,—the only state courts that have expressed themselves,— when there is in the case one fact which, standing apart and alone, determines the case.

The orphans' court of Philadelphia follows a rule—with which, apparently, the doctrine of blending had its rise—that the mere direction by a testamentary donee of a power to pay his debts with the property of the power is sufficient to blend the estates and cause property under a general power of appointment to become part of and to pass through the estate of the donee (Stokes's Estate, 3 Pa. Co. Ct. 193; Horner's Estate, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. 189), though in the absence of such direction the property of the power would not so pass. Regarding this rule as applicable to this case, the orphans' court first awarded the property of the power here in question to John W. Pearce, executor of the will of Alfred Pearce, the donee, for administration under his estate. By later and final adjudication, the orphans' court, on being presented by the executor of Alfred Pearce with an account which did not include any portion of the property of the power, and on being shown that Alfred Pearce's own estate was more than sufficient to pay his debts, amended the previous adjudication and awarded the property of the power not to the executor of the will of Alfred Pearce for distribution, but directly to his appointees.

As to facts, this was a holding that the property which passed under the exercise of the power was not property in which the donee testator had an "interest," and was therefore not property "subject to distribution as part of his estate," but was the property of the donor of the power and as such was subject to distribution as part of her estate. As to the law, it was a holding (upon an interpretation of its own doctrine of blending) that the doctrine did not apply in a case where, like this one, the donee's own estate is sufficient to pay his debts. As this decision of the orphans' court—a court of competent jurisdiction whose judgment we regard as binding upon us—put out of the case the doctrine of blended estates, the general rule of law as pronounced by the supreme court of Pennsylvania through Chief Justice Gibson returns to control our decision. We think the collector was entirely correct in admitting that under this rule, if applicable, the property in question was not liable to an estate tax. We find the rule applicable.

The judgment below is affirmed.

Petition for rehearing denied June 23, 1920.

ANNOTATION.

Inheritance or succession tax on property covered by power of appointment.

I. Taxability under donee's will:

a. Under statutes not expressly covering powers:

1. Where power is not exercised, 1470.

2. Where power is exercised:

(a) Generally, 1471.

(b) Statute enacted after creation of power, 1472.

(c) In cases of nonresidents, 1474.

b. Under statutes expressly covering powers:

I. Taxability under donee's will.

a. Under statutes not expressly covering powers.

1. Where power is not exercised.

The New York court has held that

L b.—continued.

1. Powers not exercised, 1475.

2. Powers exercised:

(a) Generally, 1475.

(b) Statute enacted after creation of power, 1479.

(c) In case of nonresidents, 1487.

II. Present taxability under donor's will, 1489.

III. Power of appointment reserved by grantor, 1491.

IV. Miscellaneous cases, 1491.

the transfer effected by an instrument in which the grantor conveyed property in trust, to pay the income to himself during his life and upon his death to give the remainder to his daughter, if she should be living, or, if she should be dead, then to such persons as she should by will appoint, or, in default of appointment, then to such persons as would be entitled to the same if she had died intestate and in possession of the property,—is, the power not having been exercised, embraced within the meaning of the Act of 1892, enacted before the execution of the instrument by the grantor, and providing that a tax shall be imposed when the transfer is of property by deed, grant, bargain, sale, or gift made in contemplation of death of the grantor, or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after such death. Re Cruger (1900) 54 App. Div. 405, 66 N. Y. Supp. 636, affirmed without opinion in (1901) 166 N. Y. 602, 59 N. E. 1121. The court pointed out that the donee took a vested remainder subject to be defeated by her death before that of the grantor, and that her next of kin took a contingent remainder dependent upon her death within the lifetime of the donor, unmarried, without issue, and without having exercised the power of appointment. The court also said that, although the remainders must be held to have vested, subject to be defeated by certain contingencies, yet the remaindermen could not have had actual possession and enjoyment or right of possession until the death of the grantor.

But a widow who, by her husband's will, is given property during her natural life, "to be retained or disposed of as she may think proper," takes an absolute estate under the New York Real Property Statute, providing that where a power of disposition is given and no remainder is limited on the estate of the grantee of the power, such grantee is entitled to an absolute fee; and therefore the failure of the widow to exercise the power of appointment does not cause her property to descend to the testator's heirs at law, so as to warrant the assessment of a transfer tax against them. Re Lynn (1901) 34 Misc. 681, 70 N. Y. Supp. 730.

Those who take, upon failure of a donee of a power of appointment to exercise the power, were held to take under the instrument creating the power, in Re Murphy (1920) 182 Cal. 740, 190 Pac. 46, a holding which in this case rendered the transfer subject to the tax.

See also Re Langdon (N. Y.) infra, I. a, 2 (b).

2. Where power is exercised.

(a) Generally.

It is a theory of some courts that those who take through the exercise of a power of appointment take from the donor of the power, and not by virtue of its exercise, hence the transfer is not subject to the inheritance or succession tax as a transfer from the donee. Com. v. Williams (1850) 13 Pa. 29; Com. v. Sharpless (1884) 2 Chester Co. Rep. (Pa.) 246. The application of this rule in Com. v. Williams (Pa.) supra, led to the result that where a testator gave his daughter a life estate in property, and provided that upon her death it should pass to such persons as she should by will appoint, and she exercised the power by appointing her brothers and sisters, the lineal descendants of the original testator, the interest of such descendants was not taxable under a statute imposing a collateral inheritance tax upon estates passing by will to any person except lineal descendants, for the reason that such persons took lineally under the will of the original testator, and not collaterally under the will of the donee of the power. So, where a power of appointment created by a testator in favor of his daughter was exercised by her in favor of her brother and stepmother, the son and wife of the testator, it was held that their estate was derived from the testator's will, and was not subject to the collateral inheritance tax. Com. v. Sharpless (Pa.) supra.

In Lisle's Estate (1903) 22 Pa. Super. Ct. 262, it appeared that a testatrix devised property to her four children in fee, share and share alike, but requested them in making their wills to give the property so received, "unless the strongest reasons should urge them to the contrary," to the direct heirs of the testatrix and her husband; that three of the children died, and their shares became vested in the fourth, under wills complying with the request of the testatrix; and that upon the death of the survivor, after having made a will disposing of all of the property so transferred by the testatrix, to the survivor's nephews and nieces, a collateral inheritance tax was sought to be imposed upon the interest passing to the latter. Applying the doctrine that an absolute estate given by will is reduced to a life estate with remainder in trust, by succeeding words of desire, expectation, or confidence, the court held that the children took life estates with remainder to the "direct heirs," subject to the power of appointment, and that therefore the nieces and nephews took to the extent of the three portions which the donee acquired under the wills of her sisters, by virtue of her absolute ownership, subject to the payment of the collateral inheritance tax, but that the other portion, passing under her power of appointment to them as lineal descendants of the original testatrix, was not liable to such tax. Of course, so far as the interest which vested absolutely in the donee is concerned, no question of power of appointment was involved, and the case throws little light upon the question here considered. See also Re Lynn (N. Y.) supra, I. a, 1.

So, in Com. v. Sharpless (Pa.) supra, the share of a granddaughter which, under the grandfather's will, was subject to her father's power to appoint such uses in respect thereof for the benefit of herself and "issue" as he should see fit, and which she willed to her brother, was held subject to a collateral inheritance tax as part of her estate, notwithstanding the father's attempt to declare a trust for her life with absolute testamentary power of disposal in her. The decision was upon the ground that the father's power did not extend to conferring an absolute power of disposal upon her; and therefore she took an absolute estate, subject only to the trust declared by the father for her lifetime.

And a somewhat analogous case is Com. v. Stoll (1909) 132 Ky. 237, 114

S. W. 279, 116 S. W. 687, holding that where a testator devised property to his wife in fee, with absolute power to dispose of the same by will or otherwise, but attempted to dispose of any remainder that should not be disposed of by the wife, the devise over was void, and therefore persons entitled to the property upon the death of the wife intestate took it from her by descent, and not under the will of the testator, and the property was therefore subject to an inheritance tax, under a statute enacted subsequently to the death of the testator.

In Re Murphy (1920) 182 Cal. 740, 190 Pac. 46, it was held that, where those who would take in default of the exercise of a power of appointment took the same estate under its exercise as they would have taken upon default, they held under the original instrument creating the power, although in this case the effect of the holding was to render the transfer subject to a tax.

By the decision in LEDERER v. PEARCE (reported herewith) ante, 1466, and that of the United States Supreme Court in UNITED STATES v. FIELD (reported herewith) ante, 1461, it is now settled that property passing by virtue of the exercise of a power of appointment is not subject to a tax under the Federal statute involved in those cases. Ebersole v. McGrath (1920) 271 Fed. 995, appeal dismissed in (1921) 272 Fed. 1022, is to the same effect.

(b) Statute enacted after creation of power.

The theory that the appointee takes by virtue of the original grant precludes the exaction of a tax under a statute enacted after the death of the donor of the power; and so it has been held. Fidelity Trust Co. v. McClain (1902) 113 Fed. 152, affirmed in (1903) 57 C. C. A. 679, 122 Fed. 1020; State v. United States Trust Co. (1917) 99 Kan. 841, L.R.A.1917C, 975, 163 Pac. 156; Emmons v. Shaw (1898) 171 Mass. 410, 50 N. E. 1033; Re Harbeck (1899) 161 N. Y. 211, 55 N. E. 850; Atty. Gen. v. Parker (1898) 31 N. S. 202.

Various statements and applications to this rule appear. Corporate stock belonging to a testator and directed in his last will and testament to be given for life to his wife, and the remainder thereof to such persons as she shall appoint, is held in State v. United States Trust Co. (1917) 99 Kan. 841, L.R.A.1917C, 975, 163 Pac. 156, to belong to the estate of the testator, and therefore not to be within the operation of an inheritance tax law which excepted therefrom estates of persons deceased prior to the taking effect thereof. And this is true although the widow exercised the power of appointment given her in the will after the enactment of the statute. Since an estate created by the execution of a power of appointment takes effect in the same manner as if it had been created by the instrument which raised the power, the estate is not taxable where the power is created by will before the enactment of the statute imposing the tax, even though the power is exercised afterwards. Re Harbeck (1899) 161 N. Y. 211, 55 N. E. 850. So, it has been held that, under an act imposing a tax in respect of property or any interest therein or income therefrom passing by will, no tax is enforceable when property passes to a person by virtue of the exercise, even after the passage of the act, of a power of appointment created before the passage of the act, for the appointee does not take from the donee of the power, but takes in the same manner as if his name had been inserted in the power, or as if the power and the instrument executing it had been expressed in that creating it. Atty. Gen. v. Parker (1898) 31 N. S. 202. And it was held in Emmons v. Shaw (1898) 171 Mass. 410, 50 N. E. 1033, that the donor, and not the donee, of an absolute power of disposition, was the "decendent," within the meaning of an act imposing a tax upon the property of a decedent which should pass by will or other instrument intended to take effect on his death, to persons who did not sustain to him the relation described in the act, and therefore that a remainder which went to the appointee after the death of the donee was not subject to the tax, where the statute was enacted subsequently to the death of the donor. The court pointed out that the statute did not provide for a tax on all property transmitted by will, but only on the property passing by will to persons who did not sustain to the decedent the relation described in the act, and that therefore any argument that the tax was in the nature of a duty or excise on the privilege of transmitting property by will was of no assistance in determining whether the donor or the donee was to be regarded as the decedent. So, where the testator gives the donee a life estate, and the remainder to certain named persons, and the power of appointment in the donee is confined to prescribing the manner and proportion in which the remaindermen shall take, the latter take under the will of the testator, and not under the will of the donee, and are, therefore, not subject to United States Revenue Act of 1898, which was enacted before the power of appointment was exercised, but after the death of the donor, and which purports to subject to the tax any person having in charge or trust as administrators, executors, or trustees, any legacies or distributive shares passing after the passage of the act from any person possessed of such property, either by will or by the intestate laws. The court said that the donee was not "the person possessed," within the meaning of the statute, for the reason that the appointees took nothing from the donee, but simply took after her, and that although the corpus of the estate was passed on to them from her after she was through with it, it passed in continuation of its original passage from the testator, who was clearly the person possessed, within the meaning of the statute. The precise ground of this decision, it seems, is that the persons who occupy the position of appointees in this case were really named by the testator himself, the donee of the power being authorized only to specify the proportion which they should take. Fidelity Trust Co. v. McClain (1902) 113 Fed. 152, affirmed without additional opinion in (1903) 57 C. C. A. 679, 122 Fed. 1020.

18 A.L.R.—93.

A fortiori, no tax is enforceable under a statute enacted subsequently to the testator's death, upon property covered by his will, by which he gave another a life estate with power of disposition, and provided that, if any residue should remain undisposed of, it should pass to two named persons, where the donee of the life estate and power provided in his will that his executors should distribute the property according to the provisions of the former will, for in such circumstances the property is deemed to have passed directly to the remainderman under the first will. Re Langdon (1897) 153 N. Y. 6, 46 N. E. 1034. In this case the court regarded the provision in the donee's will as a failure to exercise, rather than an exercise of, the power. And where one devises land to another by a will giving the latter a privilege to use therefrom during her life, and simultaneously makes a contract with her that she will always keep on hand a will devising a half of the property to a third person, the latter takes under the will of the original testator, and is, therefore, not subject to an inheritance tax under a statute passed subsequently to the death of the first testator, but before that of the second. Winn v. Schenck (1908) 33 Ky. L. Rep. 615, 110 S. W. 827.

But the New York Transfer Tax Law of 1892, providing that such a tax shall be imposed when any person becomes beneficially entitled, in possession of expectancy, to any property or the income thereof by any transfer, whether made before or after the passage of the act, was held to embrace and render taxable the interest of an appointee who had no previous existence as beneficiary until the exercise, after the enactment of the statute, of a power of appointment created by a will which became effective before the passage of the statute, such appointee being a person who has become beneficially entitled in possession to property after the passage of the act, by a transfer previously made. Re Brooks (1894) 65 N. Y. S. R. 255, 32 N. Y. Supp. 176.

In Re Luques (1915) 114 Me. 235, 95 Atl. 1021, holding that the widow of testator took an absolute estate under testator's will and that therefore a transfer to a legatee under the widow's will was a taxable transfer, although the testator's will had been probated prior to the enactment of the Collateral Inheritance Tax Law, no transfer under a power of appointment was involved; but in answer to argument the court seemingly approves of the theory that it is a transfer by virtue of the exercise of a power of appointment that is taxable, hence the time of the creation of the power is unimportant. The provisions of the taxing statute with reference to powers of appointment are not set out.

(c) In cases of nonresidents.

Upon the theory that an appointee deprives title immediately from the donor of the power, it was held in Com. v. Duffield (1849) 12 Pa. 277, that no collateral inheritance tax was enforceable against either the appointee or the executrix of the donee, where the power related to a certain amount of money, and was created by the foreign will of a nonresident, although the donee's will was probated in Pennsylvania.

So, the doctrine that the title derived from the exercise of the power relates back to the instrument creating it has been applied so as to vest the title in a nonresident appointee prior to her death, and thus subject the property to an inheritance tax as a part of her estate, under the Laws of 1887 as amended by the Laws of 1891, providing that all property which shall pass by the will of a nonresident shall, if located in New York, be subject to a tax, notwithstanding the property was removed from the state before the appointee's will was administered, and although, if the property were to be regarded as passing under the residuary clause of the donee's will, it would not have been subject to the tax under the appointee's will for the reason that she died before the former will was probated. Re Lord (1906) 111 App. Div. 152, 97 N.

Y. Supp. 553, affirmed without opinion in (1906) 186 N. Y. 549, 79 N. E. 1110. See Bullen v. Wisconsin (U. S.) infra, III.

b. Under statutes expressly covering powers.

1. Powers not exercised.

The Massachusetts Statute of 1909, chap. 527, § 8, providing that whenever any person possessing a power of appointment derived from any disposition of property made prior to September 1, 1907, shall omit or fail to exercise the same within the time provided therefor, in whole or in part, a disposition of property taxable under the provisions of chap. 563 of the Act of 1907, and all acts and amendments thereto and in addition thereto, shall be deemed to take place to the extent of such omission or failure, in the same manner as though the persons or corporation thereby becoming entitled to the possession or enjoyment of the property to which such power related had succeeded thereto by a will of the donee of the power failing to exercise such power, taking effect at the time of such omission or failure, is held to impose a succession tax upon persons taking upon the omission of the donee of the power to exercise the same, although the power was a limited one, merely conferring upon the donee power to appoint a trust estate among certain members of a class. Burnham v. Treasurer (1912) 212 Mass. 165, 98 N. E. 603. It is stated that until the death of the donee, and his exercise or failure to exercise the power of appointment, it could not be known in what proportion the members of the class would take; until that event happened the estate in the members of the class did not become complete, and the succession was not fully determined. It cannot be said, therefore, that the estate had so vested in the members of the class as to render the imposition of a tax under the statute above referred to unconstitutional.

Similarly it was held in Minot v. Treasurer (Minot v. Stevens) (1911) 207 Mass. 588, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 236, 93 N. E. 973, that the interest of those who will take under a will or deed, upon failure of a donee of a power of appointment therein to exercise it, is not so far vested that the imposition of a succession tax upon the passing to them of the estate in case of such failure can be considered as a taking of property without due process of law.

A provision that a transfer resulting from the failure of the donee of the power to appoint shall be deemed to constitute a taxable transfer is also held valid in Montague v. State (1916) 163 Wis. 58, 157 N. W. 508, the court stating that until such failure to act is complete the succession is not fully determined. In this case, also, the power of appointment was limited to the members of a class.

The interest which a child takes after the failure by his mother to exercise a power of appointment created in a deed conveying property to trustees to pay the income to the mother during her life, and remainder to such of her children as she should by will appoint, and in case of her failure to make appointment, to her lawful issue, is taxable under the provision of the New York Amendatory Act of 1897, providing that when any person possessing a power of appointment derived from any disposition of property made before the passage of the act shall omit or fail to exercise the same within the time provided, a taxable transfer shall be deemed to take place to the extent of such omission or failure, in the same manner as though the person thereby becoming entitled to the possession or enjoyment of the property to which such power related had succeeded thereto by a will of the donee of the power failing to exercise such power, taking effect at the time of such omission or failure. Re Bartow (1899) 30 Misc. 27, 62 N. Y. Supp. 1000.

See Re Duff (1921) 114 Misc. 309, 186 N. Y. Supp. 259, affirmed on opinion below in (1921) 196 App. Div. 969, 188 N. Y. Supp. 918.

2. Powers exercised.

(a) Generally.

In the English Case of Platt v.

print, 100, 19 L. J. Ch. N. S. 181, the testator gave his residuary personal estate upon trust to pay the interest thereon to his daughter for life, and after her death upon trust for such persons, excepting the members of three families, and in such manner, as she should by will appoint, and the testator further provided that if his daughter should intermarry with a certain member of one of the families or his relations, or should reside with or receive visits from him or them, the bequest in her favor with power of appointment given to her should be absolutely void. The daughter exercised the power of appointing the residuary estate among various persons. Three questions were presented in the case: First, whether the daughter or her estate was liable to pay any legacy duty beyond that which was payable on the life interest given to her for her own benefit; second, whether any probate duty was payable on the probate of her will in respect of her father's residuary estate thereby appointed; and third, what, if any, legacy duty was payable upon the sum appointed by her will. The first and third questions were held to be dependent upon whether the power of appointment given to the daughter was general and absolute, and the court having held that, notwithstanding the exception of the members of three families in the grant of a power of appointment otherwise general, and notwithstanding that the daughter was forbidden to intermarry or to have social intercourse with any of the members of one of the families, the power of appointment was general and absolute, and that therefore a legacy duty was payable on the residue under the first will, by virtue of the provision of § 18 of the Statute of 36 Geo. III. chap. 52, providing that where any property should be given for a limited interest, and a general and absolute power of appointment should also be given to any person, to

if the same property had been immediately given to the person having and executing the power, after allowing any duty before paid in respect thereof. It was also held with respect to the third question that, since the power of appointment was general and absolute, a legacy duty was payable on the same residue as appointed under the will of the daughter, by virtue of the 7th section of the same act, defining legacies which are subject to duty to be any gift by will or testamentary instrument which shall, by virtue of such instrument, have effect or be satisfied out of the personal estate of the person dying, or out of any personal estate which such person shall have power to dispose of as he or she shall think fit. In reaching this conclusion, the court stopped to point out that its opinion was not founded upon the notion that the residue of the original testator's estate had become the property of the daughter, but upon the notion that the property, in the circumstances of this case, was specifically charged by the act. But the court expressly held that the residue over which the daughter had the power of appointment was not her property, and could not be recovered by her executors by virtue of the probate; and that the second question should be answered in the negative; for in such circumstances the property was not "the estate and effects of the deceased, for or in respect of which the probate" should be granted, within the meaning of the Statute of 55 Geo. III. chap. 184, imposing probate duties. This decision was affirmed in (1843) 10 Clark & F. 257, 8 Eng. Reprint, 739. In Re Lovelace (1859) 4 DeG. & J. 340, 45 Eng. Reprint, 131, 28 L. J. Ch. N. S. 489, 5 Jur. N. S. 694, 7 Week. Rep. 575, a duty was sought to be imposed upon appointees in respect of the execution in their favor of a power of appointment by the will of one who died subsequently to the passage of the Succession Duty Act of 16 and 17 hand, that the appointees were subject to the duty by virtue of the provision of § 2 of this statute, declaring that every past or future disposition of property by reason whereof any person had or should become beneficially entitled to any property upon the death of any person dying after the time appointed for the commencement of the act, either immediately or after any interval, either certainly or contingently, and either originally or by way of substituted limitation, should be deemed to have conferred, or to confer, a succession on the person entitled by reason of such disposition. It was contended, on the other hand, in effect at least, that § 4 of the act relating to powers of appointment must be deemed to constitute an exclusive legislative declaration in respect of the taxation of powers of appointment, and since such section, which provided that where any person should have a general power of appointment, under any disposition of property taking effect upon the death of any person dying after the time appointed for the commencement of the act, over property, he should, in the event of his making any appointment, be deemed to be entitled, at the time of exercising such power, to the property or interest thereby appointed, as a succession derived from the donor of the power, and that where any person should have a limited power of appointment under a disposition taking effect upon any such death, over property, any person taking any property by the exercise of such power should be deemed to take the same as a succession derived from the person creating the power as predecessor,—since such section did not embrace the situation in controversy, which involved a general power of appointment; in which case, under § 4, the donee should be deemed the successor of the donor, no duty was enforceable. The court, however, held that the appointees were subject to the tax under § 2, which expressly embraced the situation, and that the mere fact that a power of appointment was involved, not included within § 4, did not operate to exclude it from the provisions of § 2. It was further held in this case that § 2 was applicable notwithstanding the appointee and the donee of the power were domiciled outside of the British Empire, and in this respect the case was followed in Re Wallop (1864) 1 DeG. J. & S; 656, 46 Eng. Reprint, 259, 5 New Reports, 679, 33 L. J. Ch. N. S. 351, 10 Jur. N. S. 328, 10 L. T. N. S. 174, 12 Week. Rep. 587, which involved a general power of appointment, and in which the court on another point followed Platt v. Routh, as affirmed in Drake v. Atty. Gen. and regarded such case as having settled the rule of § 18 of the Act of 36 Geo. III. chap. 52, so far as it related to general powers of appointment, applied to the duties payable by the donees of the powers, and not to the duties payable by the appointees, leaving the latter to depend upon the 7th section. In construing the latter section, the court alluded to the fact that it is held not to apply to legacies given by wills of persons domiciled outside of Great Britain, and to be paid out of their personal estates, and stated that usually such construction is based upon the doctrine that the personal estate follows the person, but held that this doctrine could have no application to the present case, where the legacies were given by the exercise of a power; there being no property in the donee of the power. The court observed, however, that the real question was as to what the legislature intended by the language of § 7, in terms applying to legacies given by wills of persons to be satisfied out of their personal estate, or out of any personal estate of which they might have had power to dispose, and held that it must have been intended that the same rule should apply to different members of the same class,—that is, that since no duties were payable by legatees under the wills of persons domiciled outside of Great Britain, none should be chargeable against appointees under the wills of nonresident donees, and that therefore no legacy duty was payable in the case.

It was admitted in O'Grady v. Wilmot [1916; H. L.] 2 A. C. (Eng.) 231, 85 L. J. Ch. N. S. 386, 114 L. T. N. S. 1097, 32 Times L. R. 456, 60 Sol. Jo. 456, that property passing by virtue of a power of appointment was subject to the estate tax, the question there being whether the property should bear the tax or whether it should be paid out of the general assets of the estate.

Considerable litigation has arisen in New York under the Amendatory Act of 1897, providing that whenever any person shall exercise a power of appointment, such appointment, when made, shall be deemed a transfer, taxable in the same manner as though the property to which the appointment related belonged absolutely to the donee of such power, and had been bequeathed or devised by him by will. As will be seen, the constitutionality of this act is upheld in cases cited infra, I. b, 2 (b).

In Re Walworth (1901) 66 App. Div. 171, 72 N. Y. Supp. 984, the court held that the Amendatory Act of 1897 was intended to change the rule that the appointees under the power take by virtue of the will creating the power, and not by virtue of the will by which the power is exercised, with the result that the tax should be fixed "as though the property to which such appointment related belonged absolutely to the donee of such power, and had been bequeathed or devised by such donee by will," and held that where a testator gave his son a life estate with power of appointment limited so that the same should be exercised only in favor of descendants of the testator, and the donee exercised the power in favor of his own nephews, who were lineal descendants of the testator, the tax was assessable at the general rate, and not at the rate provided for lineal descendants. The court said that since the enactment of the Amendatory Statute of 1897, the word "decendent" in the Act of 1892 must be held to refer to the deceased person who should exercise the power, and not the deceased person who should create it. Under the Amendatory Act of 1897, the value of the estate of appointees, who were named by one who was given a life estate in property, with power to dispose of the remainder, was held to be the value of the property passing under the power of appointment, and not merely the value of the remainder upon the death of the donor of the power. Re Tucker (1899) 27 Misc. 616, 59 N. Y. Supp. 699. In Re Bucki (1916) 172 App. Div. 455, 158 N. Y. Supp. 657, the value of a remainder estate devised by virtue of the power of appointment was fixed at its value as of the time it came into the beneficial enjoyment or possession of the appointee; and an order of the surrogate court at the time the estate went into the possession of the donee of the power, when the only question before the court was as to the value of the estate of the donee, was held not conclusive so as to prevent a subsequent estimate of the value.

And by virtue of the Act of 1897, it has been held that property passing under a power of appointment, the donee and appointee both being residents, comes within the principle that the inheritance tax is a tax on the right or privilege of disposing of property by will, so that the tax is payable in respect of the property, whether it is located within the state or not. Re Hull (1906) 111 App. Div. 322, 97 N. Y. Supp. 701, affirmed without opinion in (1906) 186 N. Y. 586, 79 N. E. 1107.

It was held in Re Rogers (1902) 71 App. Div. 461, 75 N. Y. Supp. 835, affirmed without opinion in (1902) 172 N. Y. 617, 64 N. E. 1125, that property passing by virtue of the exercise of a power of appointment is taxable under the Amendatory Act of 1897, notwithstanding the appointee is a creditor of the donee, in satisfaction of whose debt the appointment is made. The court said that the creditor was not obliged to accept such provision in the instrument exercising the power, apparently upon the theory that he could refuse the provision and prove his debt against the estate, but that if he did accept it, he was subject to the tax.

The fact that property subject to a power of appointment is taxed as part of the estate of the donor does not prevent its taxation as part of the estate of the donee of the power, under a statute providing that whenever a person shall exercise a power of appointment such appointment shall be deemed a transfer taxable in the same manner as though the property belonged absolutely to the donee of the power. Re Tillinghast (1916) 94 Misc. 50, 157 N. Y. Supp. 382, affirmed without opinion in (1918) 184 App. Div. 886, 170 N. Y. Supp. 1116. The remedy in such a case has been held to be by application to the surrogate court to modify the original order taxing the property covered by the power of appointment as part of the estate of the donor. Re Tillinghast (1916) 94 Misc. 76, 157 N. Y. Supp. 379, affirmed without opinion in (1918) 184 App. Div. 886, 170 N. Y. Supp. 1116. In such a case, where the donee of the power has a life estate in the property, the value of that life estate is taxable under the donor's will; only the value of the remainder estate can be relieved from taxation. Re Tillinghast (1916) 94 Misc. 76, 157 N. Y. Supp. 379, affirmed without opinion in (1918) 184 App. Div. 886, 170 N. Y. Supp. 1116.

It was held in Hill v. Treasurer (1918) 229 Mass. 474, L.R.A.1918D, 337, 118 N. E. 891, that the tax upon property passing under a power of appointment should be assessed on the basis of relationship of the appointee to the donor of the power, not to the donees.

It was also held in this case that in assessing the succession tax on property appointed by will under a power of appointment, the sum appropriated by equity to satisfy the debts of the donee of the power should be deducted.

(b) Statute enacted after creation of power.

Real property subject to a power of appointment, which before the exercise of the power has been converted by the trustees into personalty, will be subject to the transfer tax provided for the exercise of such power upon personalty, although, at the time of the execution of the will creating the power, the tax was not applicable to the transfer of real property. Re Dows (1901) 167 N. Y. 227, 52 L.R.A. 433, 88 Am. St. Rep. 509, 60 N. E. 439, affirmed in (1901) 183 U. S. 278, 46 L. ed. 196, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 213. In this case it was sought, under the New York Statute of 1897, which is set out in the preceding subdivision, to enforce a transfer tax upon the exercise of a power of appointment by one in favor of his children, created by the will of his father, giving to the son a life estate in the property, and providing that, upon the latter's death, the property should vest in such of his surviving children as he should by his last will appoint, and that if he should die intestate, then the property should vest absolutely and at once in his surviving children, share and share alike. The court of appeals, applying the doctrine that the right to take property by devise is not an inherent or natural right, but a privilege accorded by the state, which it may tax or charge for, and that therefore the right of a testator to make a will or testamentary instrument is equally a privilege, and equally subject to the taxing power of the state, held that when the original testator devised his property to the appointees under the will of his son, he necessarily subjected it to the charge that the state might impose upon the privilege accorded to the son of making a will; and that the title of the appointees must be considered as derived from the exercise of the power, and not from the original will. In the United States Supreme Court it was insisted, among other things, that upon the death of the original testator, who at that time had a legal right to transfer by will his property or any interest therein to his grandchildren, without any diminution or impairment then imposed by the law of the state upon the exercise of that right, the grandchildren acquired a vested right in the property transferred, and that the subsequent law operated to diminish and impair such vested right. But the Supreme Court adopted the construction placed upon the statute by the New York court of appeals, and violated none of the provisions of the 14th Amendment of the United States Constitution. In Montague v. State (1916) 163 Wis. 58, 157 N. W. 508, it is held that an inheritance tax, being a tax upon the transfer or devolution of property, or the right of succession thereto, and not a tax upon the property itself, may be properly levied upon transfer which becomes effective by appointment after the passage of the law, under a power previously created, for the reason that the transfer does not become complete until the appointment is made, and at that time the law is in effect. This principle is held to apply where the appointment must be made from a class as well as to a case where the power is a general one.

A transfer by a deed given by the donee and effective in his lifetime, in pursuance of a power of appointment created by a testator prior to the enactment of the Transfer Tax Statute, was held a taxable transfer in Re Wendel (1918) 223 N. Y. 433, 5 A.L.R. 177, 119 N. E. 879. In this case the testator devised to his son certain lots and authorized him to appoint said real estate to and amongst his lawful issue, or to his sisters or their issue, as he might think fit, by deed or will, and provided that in default of appointment the lots should go to the son's lawful issue and, if he should leave no issue, then to the sisters, their heirs and assigns. The transfer was made to the sisters. See note to this case in 5 A.L.R. 183, on "Succession tax on property appointed by deed under power of appointment."

See also Re Lovelace (Eng.) supra, I. b, 2 (a), and Re Luques (Me.) supra, I. a, 2 (b).

Where a power of appointment is created in a will or other instrument effective before the enactment of an inheritance tax statute, it is apparent that any rights that have become vested thereunder are not subject to who would have taken under the original instrument had the power of appointment not been exercised.

In Re Vanderbilt (1900) 50 App. Div. 246, 63 N. Y. Supp. 1079, affirmed without opinion in (1900) 163 N. Y. 597, 57 N. E. 1127, a testator who died after the enactment of the Inheritance Tax Law of 1885, but before the amendment of 1897, bequeathed property in trust to pay the income thereof to his son for life, and upon his death, to his issue in such shares or proportions as he might by his last will appoint, and in default of such appointment, the gift was made directly to the issue. It does not appear from the case whether, in the latter alternative provision, any particular proportion in which the donee's children should take was specified. The donee, who died subsequently to the enactment of the amendment of 1897, had exercised the power by a will giving one of his children a specified portion of the property, and the balance to his other children equally. It was contended in this case, for the purpose of defeating the tax, that the amendment, if held applicable in this case, would be an unconstitutional deprivation of property without due process of law, as interfering with vested rights, as well as an impairment of the obligation of a contract of the state. The court held that there was no complete vesting of the estate in the children of the donee or life tenant until the power was exercised, and that while appointees take by relation back, so as to derive their title under the donor, they must take their specific shares from the time of the execution of the power, and that the authority of the state to impose the tax on the right of succession continued until the time at which the extent of that right was finally fixed by the exercise of the power of appointment. On the point relating to obligation of contracts, it was insisted that the donor, that if he should die while such statute was in full operation and unchanged, his estate might be disposed of without the imposition of any further tax, which contract was unconstitutionally impaired by the amendment of 1897, making the appointment a taxable transfer; but the court held that by passing the Act of 1885, the state had not disposed of its power to tax the right of succession to property, and that such right was properly exercised by the enactment of the amendment. Substantially the same question was presented in Re Delano (1903) 176 N. Y. 486, 64 L.R.A. 279, 68 N. E. 871, petition for rehearing denied in (1903) 177 N. Y. 540, 69 N. E. 1122, which involved a conveyance by deed, before the Act of 1897 was passed, of property to the grantor's daughter for life, with remainder to her brothers and sisters, or their issue per stirpes, the deed further providing that the daughter might by will appoint the property among the persons named, in such shares as she chose. She died without issue after the passage of the Act of 1897, and after having appointed her nephew beneficiary. The court said that it did not regard the question as open since the decision in the Vanderbilt and Dows Cases, but went on to say that it was quite immaterial that there was no statute imposing a succession tax of any kind in force when the original disposition of the property was made, and the power was created, for the reason that it is the practical transfer through the exercise of the power by will that is taxed, and nothing else, and that the right of the legislature to impose a tax on the privilege of exercising a power by will is not affected by the fact that no such tax was imposed when the power was created. It was also pointed out that while the lower court gave no consideration to the Dows Case, it attempted to distinguish the Vanderbilt Case upon the ground that there the power of appointment was created by will, whereas in the then-present (Delano) case, the power was created by a deed, and also upon the ground that the will by which the power was created in the Vanderbilt Case was made after the enactment of the inheritance tax law. The latter distinction was disposed of by the remarks of the court to which reference has just been made, and the former distinction was repudiated with the statement that the effective agency of the power of appointment to produce the result intended is neither strengthened nor weakened by the nature of the instrument used by the donor of the power to create it, and that the power, however or whenever created, authorized the donee by her will to divest certain defeasible estates, and to vest them absolutely in one person, and that therefore the statute applied to all powers alike, without distinction on account of the method of creation, since it provided that the exercise of the power should be deemed a taxable transfer of the property, the same as if it had belonged absolutely to the donee of the power, and had been bequeathed or devised by such donee. This case also went to the United States Supreme Court, and is reported in Chanler v. Kelsey (1907) 205 U. S. 466, 51 L. ed. 882, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 550, where it was held that the statute as so construed did not take property without due process of law, and that the fact of the reduction of the estate resulting from the imposition of the tax did not render the statute repugnant to the United States Constitution as impairing contract obligation. From the decision of the majority of the latter court, Justice Holmes dissented upon the ground that in this case there was no succession. His idea seemed to be that the means of executing the power depended in the first place upon the deed creating it, and that if the creative instrument had permitted the execution of the power by deed rather than by will, then there would have been no question but that the inheritance tax law had no application; and that since the required method of executing the power could be ascertained only by an inspection of the deed creating the power itself, it was the latter instrument that determined ultimately to whom and how the property should pass, and, such tamentary character, no question of succession could arise. From this, the conclusion was that, since in such circumstances there is no succession, a statute purporting to impose a tax only upon successions, but construed or expressly declared to be applicable in this case, was void.

In Re Lansing (1905) 182 N. Y. 238, 74 N. E. 882, the testator devised property in trust to pay the income to his daughter for life, and after her death to pay the remainder to her heirs at law, subject, however, to a power given to the daughter to dispose by will of the remainder in fee after the termination of the trust estate by her death, "among her heirs at law and her collateral relatives in such proportion and manner and with such limitations as she may desire." The daughter exercised the power by devising and bequeathing the property to her only daughter in fee simple, and the question before the court was whether the appointee took by virtue of the power of appointment, in which case the property was subject to an inheritance tax, or whether she took under the will of the donor, who died before the enactment of the statute, in which case no tax could be enforced. The appointee insisted that since the exercise of the appointment gave her nothing to which she would not have been entitled under the will in case the power had not been exercised, the property passed to her directly from the donor, it appearing that she rejected the title from the appointment, and elected to take under the former instrument. The court adopted this view, holding that, since the exercise of the power was made in such a manner as not to alter the destination of the property, such attempted exercise was a mere formality, and of no effect, and that, upon the death be noted that while it has just been said that the court held that she took a vested remainder, this statement may perhaps be regarded as more of a recital, than as a decision, for, at another point in the opinion, the court said that it was not at all necessary to determine whether the remainder was vested or contingent, for the reason that if it was merely contingent, it was acquired under the donor's will at the instant of his death, and that while it was true that her estate was subject to be defeated by her death before that of the donee, or by diminution if the donee should leave other children, her right to the estate was indefeasible if she survived the donee. The court distinguishes the Delano Case upon the ground that there the appointee could have taken an undivided fourth through the deed of the donor, and could have thus escaped the transfer tax, but that he was entitled to the entire estate under the exercise of the power of appointment by the donee, and that when he claimed the entire property, he necessarily elected to take under the power of appointment. In the Lansing Case, the court also distinguished Re Cooksey (1905) 182 N. Y. 92, 74 N. E. 880, where, notwithstanding the death of the donor before the enactment of the Inheritance Tax Law of 1896, and its amendment of 1897, it was held that the property was taxable as it passed under the exercise of the power which was effected subsequently to the enactment of the statute, where the donor devised and bequeathed his residuary estate to trustees to pay his daughter the income during her life, and upon her death to such of her children as she should by will designate and appoint, and in such manner and upon such terms as she might impose, and provided that in case she five, a further sum not to exceed a certain amount; and as each should attain the age of thirty years, the remainder. The donee exercised the power by appointing her children to receive the estate share and share alike, but she provided in her will that as each should attain the age prescribed in the donor's will, he or she should be paid precisely the maximum amount specified in the donor's will. The court held that the property was taxable under the statute for the reason that it vested under the exercise of the power, and this was put upon the ground that, although the share received by each appointee would have been the same whether it vested under the power of appointment or under the will of the donor, the latter instrument left it within the discretion of the trustees as to whether the maximum amount be paid, whereas, by the exercise of the power, the donee fixed definitely such maximum amount as the sum to be paid to the children, and without qualification, leaving no discretion in the trustees, and that therefore the exercise of the power could not be treated as a nullity. The variation effected by the exercise of the power in this case should be compared with that in the Ripley Case following, where an apparently greater change in the destination of the property was regarded as insufficient to make the property pass under the exercise of the power. Whereas in the Lansing Case some importance was attached to the fact that the will of the donor provided that the remainder should pass to the children, and that it was only in case of the exercise of the power in favor of other persons that the operation of the original will would be defeated, the court in Re Lowndes (1908) 60 Misc. 506, 113 N. Y. Supp. 1114, relies upon such circumstance absolutely, for the purpose of distinguishing the Lansing Case and following the Cooksey Case. In the Lowndes Case, it appeared that the donor provided that her property should vest in trustees, and that the income should be paid to her daughter during life, and that upon the death of the daughter the property should pass according to the will of the daughter, and in default of a will, to the issue of the daughter, and the daughter exercised the power by giving her husband a life estate, and providing that upon his death the property should pass to the children.

The settled rule under the Act of 1897 seems to be that, where the persons named as appointees take under the exercise of the power just exactly what they would have taken under the original will if the power of appointment had not been exercised, their interest vests upon the death of the original testator, subject, of course, to be defeated by their death before that of the donee, and by the exercise of the power adversely to their interest; and their interests are not taxable, where the original testator died before the enactment of any inheritance or transfer tax law. Re Chapman (1909) 133 App. Div. 337, 117 N. Y. Supp. 679, appeal dismissed without opinion in (1909) 196 N. Y. 561, 90 N. E. 1157. The Lansing Case was expressly followed in Re Spencer (1907) 119 App. Div. 883, 107 N. Y. Supp. 543, appeal dismissed (1907) 190 N. Y. 517, 83 N. E. 1132, where about the only allusion to the state of facts is the remark of the court that the conditions were substantially the same as in the Lansing Case; and the court lays great stress upon the fact that the will of the donee of the power neither added to nor took from any of the final beneficiaries the benefits which the will of the donor of the power expressly conferred upon them. So, following the Lansing Case, it was held in Re Haggerty (1908) 128 App. Div. 479, 112 N. Y. Supp. 1017, affirmed without opinion in (1909) 194 N. Y. 550, 87 N. E. 1120, that where the donee of the power exercised it by naming the person who was entitled to take under the will of the donor in case the donee failed to exercise the power, the interest of such donee or beneficiary was not taxable, the will of the original testator having become effective in 1875. In Re Lewis (1908) 129 App. Div. 905, 113 N. Y. Supp. 1136, affirmed without opinion in (1909) 194 N. Y. 550, 88 N. E. 1124, the court, upon the authority of the Lansing and Haggerty Cases, reversed without opinion the decision of the surrogate (1908) 60 Misc. 643, 113 N. Y. Supp. 1112, holding the transfer taxable where it appeared that the donee exercised the power in favor of her children, who by the will of the donor were made the beneficiaries in case the donee should fail to exercise the power. So, without any discussion whatever, but citing Re Lansing as authority, the New York court in Re Backhouse (1906) 110 App. Div. 787, 96 N. Y. Supp. 466, affirmed without opinion in (1906) 185 N. Y. 544, 77 N. E. 1181, held that where a testator gave his son a life estate with remainder to his heirs, or to such person or persons as the son should appoint by will, and the son in his will appointed his children, the latter took under the will of the first testator, and were vested with the estate when such will became effective, and that therefore the transfer was not subject to tax, for the reason that the Transfer Tax Law was not enacted until after the will of the first testator became effective. And where the testator gives a life estate to his daughter with remainder to such persons as she should by will appoint, and in case of her failure to exercise the power, to her lawful issue in the same manner as if she should die intestate, and she appoints her lawful issue, the latter's interests vest under the will of the original testator, and are therefore not taxable under the Act of 1897, where the original testator died before the enactment of an inheritance or transfer tax law. Re Chapman (1917) 117 N. Y. Sup. 561, 90 N. E. 164, 164 A. Supp. 1022, affirmed (1915) 215 N. Y. 544, 77 N. E. 1181, where the power of appointment was exercised as those designating the power in default of appointment took the same as they would have taken if the power had been exercised, the held not taxable. The same was held with reference to an estate taken by virtue of a deed of trust under which the cestui que trust had power of appointment.

The principle of the foregoing cases has been extended in other cases so as to free from the tax, transfers to appointees who would have taken in default of appointment although not precisely what they did take under the appointment. Quoting the Lansing Case, the New York court held in Re Ripley (1907) 122 App. Div. 419, 106 N. Y. Supp. 844, affirmed in (1908) 192 N. Y. 536, 84 N. E. 574, that where the will gave a life estate, and provided that upon the death of the life tenant the property should, "unless otherwise disposed of" by the life tenant, pass to the issue of the life tenant, share and share alike, and the life tenant by his will provided that the property should be divided equally between his wife and children,—the children took under the will of the first testator directly, and that their interest therefore was not subject to taxation, such testator having died before the enactment of the Laws of 1897. The court points out that the first testator did not say that the children should take in case the life tenant failed to exercise any power of disposition or appointment, but that they should take unless the trust fund was otherwise disposed of, and it is this feature of the case which leads the court to the conclusion that the property passed under the will of the first testator, and not under the exercise of the power of appointment. It was regarded as of the power of appointment. (See, however, the Cooksey Case (N. Y.) supra.) The affirmance of this case by the court of appeals was per curiam, the court merely pointing out that the power of appointment was limited, and could be exercised only in favor of persons who did not take under the will creating it, and that the children took directly under the original will, except as their interest might have been divested or cut down by a valid exercise of the power. In Re Slosson (1915) 216 N. Y. 79, 110 N. E. 166, the testator, by a will probated before the enactment of an inheritance or transfer tax statute, created a trust, estate and gave the beneficiary the power to dispose of the trust estate by her will, and provided that in default of such disposition by the last will and testament of the beneficiary the trustees should pay the trust estate to those who would receive it had the beneficiary died intestate and its owner. The beneficiary disposed of about two thirds of the estate in equal shares to her children, who would have taken it under the will of the testator in default of the disposition of it by the will of the beneficiary, and of about one third to persons who would not have so taken. The children elected to take the two thirds under the will of the testator and not under that of the beneficiary, and it was held that they had such right, so as to relieve the transfer of the tax. The valid disposition of a part of the estate by the donee of the power to persons entitled solely through such disposition does not destroy the right of the children to elect to take under the testator's will. In another case in which a testator, who left a widow and two daughters, gave his residuary estate to his widow for life, and expressly authorized and empowered her by last will and testament to give, dispose of, and divide the said estate and property to and among his children and descendants in such proportions and shares as in her judgment might seem best, regard being had to the independent property they might have respectively acquired; he then provided that on the death of his widow, in the event that she should not exercise this power of disposition, the residue and remainder should go to his children absolutely; and it was further provided that, in the event of the death of all his children and descendants in the lifetime of his wife, all his property should go to his wife, her heirs and assigns forever. One of the daughters of the testator who survived him died before the death of his widow, unmarried and without issue. The testator's widow by her will, executed before the death of this daughter, first gave, bequeathed, and appointed to the daughter who subsequently survived the sum of $125,000 out of the remainder of the estate of the testator, and then gave, devised and bequeathed, and appointed the rest, residue, and remainder of her own estate and of the estate of the testator to her two daughters, share and share alike, and to their descendants in the event of their death, or of the death of either of them, leaving descendants; and in the event that either daughter should predecease her mother without issue living at the time of the death of the mother, then the surviving daughter was to take all of the remainder. Upon the death of the testatrix the surviving daughter was held to take by virtue of the will of her father, and not by the power of appointment exercised by her mother, and therefore the transfer to her was held not to be subject to the tax. Laughlin, J., in Re Hoffman (1914) 161 App. Div. 836, 146 N. Y. Supp. 898, on which opinion this decision was affirmed by the court of appeals in (1914) 212 N. Y. 604, 106 N. E. 1034.

It has been held that where the person to whom the estate is appointed by the donee takes no more under the exercise of the power than under the original instrument creating the power, such person takes under the original instrument, and where that was executed and effective before the enactment of the statute the transfer to him is not taxable; there need be no election to take under the original instrument. Re Chauncey (1918) 102 Misc. 878, 168 N. Y. Supp. 1019, affirmed without opinion in (1919) 187

App. Div. 952, 175 N. Y. Supp. 897. But if the person in whose favor the power is exercised by the donee takes more than he would have taken under the instrument creating the power, then the transfer is subject to the tax, if such person takes under the power. Ibid.

On the other hand, where the donee, in exercising the power, makes a disposition of the property substantially different from the alternative provision by the donor, to be effective if the donee fails to act, the property is deemed to pass by the exercise of the power, and the Act of 1897 is held applicable. Thus, where the testator gives his daughter a life estate with remainder to her issue, share and share alike, and his will further provides that the daughter shall have power to appoint the remainder by will among the testator's descendants living at her death, in such proportions as she shall think proper, and the daughter dies leaving four daughters and two sons, after having exercised the power by providing that the property shall be divided in equal proportion among her daughters, the latter take under the power of appointment, and not under the will of the testator, and their interest is subject to taxation under the Amending Act of 1897, the daughter having died after the enactment of such statute, although the testator died before its enactment. Re Potter (1900) 51 App. Div. 212, 64 N. Y. Supp. 1013. And where the donor, who died in 1879, provided that upon the termination of the life estate of the donee, the property should pass to such persons and in such proportions as the donee should by will appoint, and upon failure to appoint, to the heirs of the donee as if the donee had died seised and possessed thereof, and the donee gave his wife a life estate with remainder to three of his four children, it was held that the children did not take under the original will, but that their rights and estates were created and fixed by the exercise of the power, and that therefore they were required to pay a transfer tax under the Amending Act of 1897, the court pointing out that the power of appointment was exercised so that instead of an equal and immediate division of the estate among the four children upon the death of the donee, which would have occurred if the latter had not exercised the power, the division was postponed during the life of the donee's wife, and the absolute estate was given to only three of the four children. Re Warren (1909) 62 Misc. 444, 116 N. Y. Supp. 1034. And it was held in Re Seaver (1901) 63 App. Div. 283, 71 N. Y. Supp. 544, that under the Amending Act of 1897, the interest of an appointee acquired under his mother's will, which became effective after the passage of the act, in property devised to the mother by one who gave her a life estate with absolute power of disposition of the same by will, was subject to taxation. The court took pains to say that it did not mean to intimate that the actual title to the property for other than taxing purposes was derived from the mother; but that its conclusion was based upon the fact that the statute explicitly declared that it is the exercise, and not the creation, of a power of appointment which effects the transfer upon which the tax is enforced. So, where a testator gives a life estate to his widow, and authorizes her to dispose of the remainder by will, and provides that in case of her failure to do so, a life estate shall be given to her brother with remainders over at his death to the widow's heirs at law, next of kin according to the New York law in cases of intestacy, and the widow exercises the power by giving her brother the property absolutely, the property passes by virtue of the exercise of power, and the transfer thereby effected is taxable under the Act of 1897. Re Rogers (1902) 71 App. Div. 461, 75 N. Y. Supp. 835, affirmed without opinion in (1902) 172 N. Y. 617, 64 N. E. 1125.

Upon the ground that, under the Amending Act of 1897, the tax is imposed upon the transfer effected by the exercise of the power of appointment, it was held in Re Buckingham (1905) 106 App. Div. 13, 94 N. Y. Supp. 130, that where a testator whose will became effective in 1888 transferred property in trust in favor of his nephew for life with the remainder of the nephew's children, or in default of issue, to such persons as the nephew should appoint, the interest of the person who took as appointee under the exercise of the power by the nephew was subject to taxation under the Amendatory Act of 1897, notwithstanding the transfer to the life tenant and donee had previously been excessively taxed under the inheritance tax law in force at the time of the death of the original testator, by computing the tax upon the basis of the value of the principal fund, rather than upon the value of the life estate in the donee. The court pointed out that it is not the property that is taxed, but it is the interest taken by the respective beneficiaries, and that the fact that the life tenant was excessively taxed did not operate to prevent an enforcement of the Amendatory Act of 1897 as against another person, the appointee, whose claim was based upon the exercise of the power, which was distinctive from the transfer under which the person already taxed claimed.

In order that there may be an election so as to free the transfer from the tax it has been held that it must clearly appear that those parties making the election had a perfect title to the estate from the original testator, without the power of appointment exercised by the donee thereof. In Re King (1916) 217 N. Y. 358, 111 N. E. 1060, the testator in a will probated before the enactment of the inheritance tax statute left a trust fund with power of appointment in the beneficiary in favor of her children and their issue, or, in case she had not child or issue, as she might direct; and provided that in default of such appointment the fund was to go to "her children and their issue," or in case she left no "child or issue," or husband, to revert to the estate of Charles King (the testator), "and be divided between and among all my (his) other surviving children, share and share alike in equal proportions." The beneficiary exercised the power of appointment in a will in favor of her nephews who, at the death of the beneficiary, were the only surviving heirs at law and next of kin of their grandfather, the testator. The court held that they did not so clearly take under the designation "children" in the will of the original testator as not to have received something additional by the power of appointment. The court states: "Their title was perfected to the extent that it was not left to depend upon the correct application of shifting rules of interpretation which sometimes include grandchildren in and sometimes exclude them from the term 'children.' The only 'reason of the thing' which demands that the word 'children' should include 'grandchildren' in this case is that if respondents are so included by a strained application of the law of wills, the transfer to them may escape taxation. The reason is not convincing." The transfer was accordingly held subject to taxation.

(c) In case of nonresidents.

Stocks and bonds belonging to a trust estate and situated in a foreign state, but in which a resident is a cestui que trust with power of appointment, have been held to pass under the donee's will on the exercise of the power, and such transfer is taxable under a statute providing that whenever any persons shall exercise a power of appointment derived from any disposition of property made either before or after the passage of this act, such appointment, when made, shall be deemed a transfer taxable under the provisions of this act in the same manner as though the property to which such appointment relates belonged absolutely to the donee of such power, and had been bequeathed or devised by such donee by will. State ex rel. Smith v. Probate Ct. (1914) 124 Minn. 508, 50 L.R.A. (N.S.) 262, 145 N. W. 390, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 861. Similar decisions on similar facts appear in Re Frazier (1912) 188 N. Y. Supp. 189, and Re Seaman (1913) 187 N. Y. Supp. 254. But see Re Canda (N. Y.) infra.

On the contrary, under a similar statute, in Walker v. Treasurer (1915)

221 Mass. 600, 109 N. E. 647, personal property bequeathed to a nonresident trustee by a nonresident decedent, and always situated in a foreign state, was held not subject to a transfer tax, although the donee of the power of appointment was a resident of the state of Massachusetts, and there exercised the power in a will probated in that state. The court states that "no privilege by which the property passes, whether by exercise of the power or by failure to exercise it, is conferred by the law of this commonwealth. Hence, no commodity exists here on which the tax can be levied. By resort to the courts of Maryland [the state where the trust existed] all questions as to the succession of this trust estate will be determined without invoking the law of Massachusetts. . . . There is nothing in this commonwealth upon which [the Inheritance Tax Act] can operate."

And in Re Canda (1921) 197 App. Div. 597, 189 N. Y. Supp. 917, there was held to be no taxable transfer where a resident exercised a power of appointment over property which had always been located in another state, the state of donor's residence, and where the will was there probated, never having been probated in the state of donee's residence.

In Re Thomas (1902) 89 Misc. 136, 78 N. Y. Supp. 981, the court held that since, in the Vanderbilt and Dows Cases, the constitutionality of the Amendatory Act of 1897 had been upheld upon the ground that the tax is not upon property, but upon transfers of property made by will or descent, where the right to make or receive such transfers is accorded by the laws of the state, and which right the sovereign power of the state lawfully exercises by imposing the tax,—the interest of an appointee was not taxable under such statute where the will creating the power of appointment was executed by a nonresident, and disposed of property having its situs in the foreign state, until paid over in due course, and after the exercise of the power by the donee became effective, the court saying that while it was true that the will exercising the power was that of a resident, its legal effect depended entirely upon the law of the foreign state, and that if its probate in New York was necessary or useful for any purpose, it was only because the law of the foreign state so declared.

Declaring in favor of the doctrine that, irrespective of the time when the instrument creating the power was executed, it was the actual transfer effected by the exercise of the power which was to be taxed under the amendment of 1897, the New York court in Re Fearing (1910) 200 N. Y. 340, 93 N. E. 956, held that where a resident testator who died before the enactment of any transfer tax law devised his property in trust for the life of his daughter, and gave her the power to appoint by will the person to whom the trustee should set over the remainder upon her death, and the daughter, a nonresident, exercised the power of appointment by a will made under and by virtue of the laws of her domicil, no tax was enforceable against the property included within the power, notwithstanding a part of it consisted of bonds secured by mortgages of real estate situated in New York. One apparent ground of this decision is that since, by the amendment of 1897, the tax is upon the transfer affected by the appointment,—that is, is exacted by the state in return for its indulgence in permitting property to be transferred by will,—there is no ground for upholding the tax where the power is exercised by a will the existence and validity of which depend upon the laws of another state.

And where a nonresident donee exercised a power of appointment over property having its situs in a foreign state, in favor of beneficiaries of the class limited by the will creating the power, executed by a resident at such an early date that the transfer, if effected by it, was not subject to an inheritance or transfer tax, and the will exercising the power was executed in the foreign state, and was probated under the laws thereof, it was held that the property was not subject to taxation under the Amendatory Act of 1897, the court invoking the doctrine that the tax is upon the privilege of transferring property by will, and that, since the privilege of exercising the power was granted by the foreign state, the state of New York could impose no tax upon the transfer so effected. Re Kissel (1909) 65 Misc. 448, 121 N. Y. Supp. 1088, affirmed in (1911) 142 App. Div. 984, 127 N. Y. Supp. 1127.

But in Re Warden (1916) 94 Misc. 563, 157 N. Y. Supp. 1111, a transfer of property consisting of bonds and mortgages on real estate in New York, by virtue of the exercise of a power of appointment under the will of a non-resident donor by a nonresident donee, was held subject to the transfer tax where the bonds were physically located within the state of New York.

A transfer of shares of stock in a domestic corporation by virtue of a power of appointment exercised by a non-resident donee under the will of a resident testator has been held subject to an inheritance tax, even though the certificates of stock or shares were in the possession of trustees domiciled in a foreign state, and although the shares of stock were held by a corporation which was created by the trustees in a foreign state for the purpose of avoiding double taxation. Gardiner v. Treasurer (1916) 225 Mass. 355, 114 N. E. 617.

See also Re Lovelace and Re Wallop (Eng.) supra, I. b, 2 (a); Bullen v. Wisconsin (U. S.) infra, III.

II. Present taxability under donor's will.

A succession tax cannot be assessed at the death of the testator upon the corpus of the estate, when property is devised in trust for a period of twenty years, during which time annuities shall be paid to certain persons named, among whom the estate shall be distributed at the expiration of that period if they are alive at that time, and if they are not alive, among persons whom they shall appoint, and certain persons named by the testator, under a statute authorizing a tax against a person who "shall become beneficially entitled, in possession or income expectation, to any property or income thereof," where the tax rate differs according to 18 A.L.R.—94.

the relationship of the testator and the person who ultimately becomes entitled to the property. People v. McCormick (1904) 208 Ill. 437, 64 L.R.A. 775, 70 N. E. 350.

Money received under a power given by will to a trustee, to appoint the residuary estate to any of certain persons, was held in Re Stewart (1892) 131 N. Y. 274, 14 L.R.A. 886, 30 N. E. 184, to pass "by will," within the meaning of the New York Inheritance Tax Law of 1885, imposing a tax upon all property which should pass by will or by the intestate law from any person who might die seised or possessed of the same, to all but certain excepted persons, in trust or otherwise, or by reason whereof any but the excepted persons should become beneficially entitled, in possession or expectancy, to any property or the income thereof. The court applied the doctrine that when the donee of a power has the right of selection, the interest appointed vests in the appointee at the time of the appointment, but that his title relates to and is acquired under the instrument creating the power. It was insisted that the legislature had failed to provide any method for valuing or taxing contingent or uncertain interests, not capable of valuation and assessment immediately upon the death of the decedent; but the court held that although the interest was contingent, and therefore not capable of valuation at the testator's death, it could, after it became vested and ascertained by the appointment, be appraised, by virtue of a provision of such inheritance tax law, authorizing the appointment of an appraiser "as often and whenever occasion requires." The decision in this case was adopted in Hoyt v. Hancock (1904) 65 N. J. Eq. 688, 55 Atl. 1004, the court remarking that the statute involved in the latter case was substantially identical with the New York statute.

In Howe v. Howe (1901) 179 Mass. 546, 55 L.R.A. 626, 61 N. E. 225, it was held that an interest in property passes by will within the meaning of an inheritance tax act, although its destination is by the will made subject to the appointment of a third person, it being pointed out that the statute specified as subject to the tax any form of interest in property whatsoever. The question before the court was as to the present taxability of property which was subject to the power of appointment.

No present tax is assessable upon the death of a testator who transferred property to trustees to divide it into equal shares for his children, and to pay the income and so much of the principal of any share as the trustee should deem advisable to each child, and upon the death of any child, to give so much of his share as remained in such manner as he should designate in his will, or if he should make no such designation, then to his issue, if any, and if there should be no such issue then to the survivors or survivor of the testator's children, under the Amendatory Statute of 1899, providing that when property is transferred in trust or otherwise, and the rights, interests, or estates of the transferees are dependent upon contingencies or conditions whereby they may be created, defeated, etc., a tax shall be imposed upon the transfer at the highest rate which, on the happening of any of the contingencies or conditions, would be possible under the provisions of the act, and that the tax so imposed should be due and payable forthwith out of the property transferred. Re Howell (1901) 34 Misc. 432, 69 N. Y. Supp. 1016.

Upon the theory that under the provision of the Amendatory Act of 1897, it is the exercise of the power of appointment, and not the creation of that power, which effects the transfer which the statute makes taxable, it was held in Re Howe (1903) 86 App. Div. 286, 83 N. Y. Supp. 825, affirmed without opinion in (1903) 176 N. Y. 570, 68 N. E. 1118, that the remainder is not taxable until the time comes for the exercise of the testamentary power of appointment conferred upon the life beneficiary, and by this the court obviously meant until the death of the life beneficiary, after having made, or having failed to make, a will exercising the power. It was insisted in this case that the amendment of 1897, relating to powers of appointment, was impliedly repealed by an amendment enacted in 1899, providing that when property is transferred in trust or otherwise, and the rights of the transferees are dependent upon contingencies or conditions whereby they may be wholly or in part created, defeated, etc., a tax shall be imposed upon said transfer at the highest rate which, on the happening of the said contingencies or conditions, would be possible under the provisions of the act, and such tax so imposed shall be due and payable forthwith out of the property transferred. The court denied this contention, saying, in effect, that there is nothing in the amendment of 1899 making a general provision in respect of the manner of taxation of contingent and conditional estates, which must necessarily be regarded as repealing a former amendment to the same statute, making specific provision for the taxation for such conditional or contingent estates as shall arise from the creation of a power of appointment. And the court further said that while the donee might be regarded as the original transferee of the property devised in trust for his benefit, it could not fairly be said that his right or estate was dependent upon contingencies or conditions whereby they might be wholly or in part created, defeated, etc.

It was held in Re Field (1901) 36 Misc. 279, 73 N. Y. Supp. 512, that no present tax could be assessed upon the death of the testator upon so much of the property covered by the will as had been subjected to a power of appointment in a donee, the will transferring the property in trust to pay the income to the testator's wife for life, the remainder to his nephew, and a codicil having been made giving the wife power to appoint a certain specified portion of the value of the estate to any descendants of the testator's father in such proportions as she might see fit.

On the other hand, by a surrogate's decision in Re Le Brun (1902) 39 Misc. 516, 80 N. Y. Supp. 486, decided before the Howe Case (N. Y.) supra, that a present tax was enforceable upon the death of a testator who transferred his property in trust to pay an income to his daughter for life, with power given to her thereafter to dispose by will of a certain percentage of the estate to and among such persons who might be living at her death, and as she should think proper, and the balance of the remainder to and among any of the testator's descendants, notwithstanding such remainders were not ascertainable until after the death of the life beneficiary, and the persons to take it should be disclosed by her will. The court said that in reaching this conclusion it did not overlook the Laws of 1896 as amended by the Laws of 1897, and that when the donee of the power should have exercised it, the question might then arise whether the payment of the tax presently to be imposed would or would not relieve the remainderman of the payment of any new tax because of the transfer affected by the exercise of the power, but that it was sufficient for the then-present purposes that, within the meaning of the Amendatory Act of 1899, transfers from the estate of the decedent had been made upon which it was the court's duty to impose a tax.

In Re Dimock (1918) 168 N. Y. Supp. 584, it is held that where a power of appointment has been exercised by the donee thereof, the property subject to its exercise is no longer, for transfer tax purposes, a part of the estate of the donor of the power, and cannot be the subject of adjudication in a transfer tax proceeding upon his estate.

See Re Tillinghast (N. Y.) supra, I. b, 2 (a).

III. Power of appointment reserved by grantor.

Of course, where a person reserves to himself a power of appointment in a deed by which he transfers property to a trustee to pay the income to the grantor during his life, and after his death to such persons as he shall by will appoint, or, in default of appointment, to his next of kin, etc., although the legal title passes to the trustee, the property and all interest therein really remains in the grantor; and where he, by will, appoints the persons to whom the trust company shall convey after his death, the property passing to the appointees is taxable under the Act of 1885 as amended by the Act of 1887, providing that any property which shall be transferred by deed, grant, etc., made or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment after the death of the grantor, shall be subject to a tax. Re Ogsbury (1896) 7 App. Div. 71, 39 N. Y. Supp. 978.

And where one deeds property in trust for the purpose of paying the income to the grantor during her life, and of conveying it after her death to such persons as she shall by will appoint, the property is within the meaning of the Collateral Inheritance Statute imposing a tax upon property passing by deed, grant, sale, or gift made or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment after the death of the grantor; and the property is taxable thereunder, and the statute is constitutional, and it is immaterial if the deed of trust was executed before the statute went into effect. Crocker v. Shaw (1899) 174 Mass. 266, 54 N. E. 549.

In Bullen v. Wisconsin (1916) 240 U. S. 625, 60 L. ed. 830, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 473, it was held that a fund represented by stocks, bonds, and notes kept in a state other than that where the decedent resided, which he conveyed upon certain trusts to a trust company of such other state, reserving to himself an absolute power of control which he exercised during his life by a revocation (followed by a second conveyance to the trust company upon the same terms), and by taking the whole income for himself, may be subjected to an inheritance tax in the state of his domicile without violating the 14th Amendment or the contract clause of the Federal Constitution.

IV. Miscellaneous cases.

Dispositions by a testatrix in pursuance of a general power of appointment, by a will in which she also disposed of her personal estate, are legacies, within the meaning of a provision of the will directing her executors "to and all transfer or inheritance taxes that may be imposed or become due upon any of the legacies hereinbefore made," and are such as are entitled to have the taxes paid out of her residuary estate. Isham v. New York Asso. (1904) 177 N. Y. 218, 69 N. E. 867.

The fact that one who had an absolute title under an unrecorded deed, and who was given a life estate therein with power of testamentary disposition, under the will of the grantor of the deed, ignored his absolute title and submitted to a transfer tax upon his life estate, and thereby precluded his administrator, upon his death intestate, from vacating the assessment upon the ground that the unrecorded deed was found among the intestate's effects after his death, does not prevent the intestate's next of kin and heirs at law, who were made residuary legatees and devisees in case the in-power of disposition, from relying upon the deed of the ancestor, rather than upon his will, and therefore from taking the remainder free from the imposition of a transfer or inheritance tax. Re Mather (1904) 90 App. Div. 382, 85 N. Y. Supp. 657, affirmed without opinion in (1904) 179 N. Y. 526, 71 N. E. 1134.

Under a statute imposing a tax upon all estates passing from any person who may die seised and possessed thereof, transferred by deed, will, grant, etc., made or intended to take effect in possession after the death of the grantor, deviser, etc., the value at the death of the donee of the power of appointment, who has exercised the power, and not the value at the time of the death of her husband, by whose will the power was created, is to be taken for the purpose of computing the tax. Fisher v. State (1907) 106 Md. 104, 66 Atl. 661. W. A. E.

THEODORE ENDERS

v.

RUTH ENDERS.

Idaho Supreme Court—October 24, 1921.

(— Idaho, —, 201 Pac. 714.)

Divorce — allowance for appeal.

1. Where an action for divorce is brought by the husband, the wife is entitled to be provided with means at the expense of the husband for an efficient preparation of her case on appeal, where it appears that she is without means, and that all the property of the parties was awarded to the husband by the decree of the lower court.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1494.]

Courts — supreme — jurisdiction — attorneys' fees.

2. Under article 5, § 9, of the Constitution of this state, the supreme court has jurisdiction to entertain an original application for attorneys'

Divorce — right of wife to representation.

3. In an action for divorce, considerations of justice and public policy require that the wife be afforded an opportunity to be properly represented actions is vested in the district court, and such relief is granted by the appellate court only where it is necessary to a complete exercise of its appellate jurisdiction.

[See 1 R. C. L. 917, 918.]

MOTION by defendant for an order directing plaintiff to pay a certain sum of money to her for attorneys' fees in the prosecution of her appeal from a decree of the District Court for Bannock County (Baum, J.) in a divorce action, and for temporary alimony. Attorneys' fees allowed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Peterson & Coffin and H. E. Ray for appellant.

Messrs. D. W. Standrod, C. D. Smith, and C. M. Booth, for respondent.

Budge, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an original application in this court for an order directing respondent to pay a certain sum of money to appellant for attorney fees in the prosecution of her appeal, and for temporary alimony.

An application for the payment of costs, expenses, and attorney fees was made to the trial judge, whereupon an order was made directing that respondent pay the clerk of the court an amount necessary to cover the transcript on appeal, the filing fee in the supreme court, and the sum of $30 to cover the cost of printing briefs, but denying the application for attorney fees.

A motion has been made by respondent to dismiss appellant's application in this court, upon the ground that no appeal was taken from the order made by the district judge disallowing the attorney fees, and that, therefore, this court is without jurisdiction to entertain appellant's application. With this contention we are not in accord.

Article 5, § 9, of the Constitution, provides that "the supreme court shall . . . have . . . jurisdiction to issue . . . all writs necessary or proper to the complete exercise of its appellate jurisdiction."

See Roby v. Roby, 9 Idaho, 371, 74 Pac. 957, 3 Ann. Cas. 50; Stoneburner v. Stoneburner, 11 Idaho, 603, 83 Pac. 938; Day v. Day, 12 Idaho, 556, 86 Pac. 531, 10 Ann. Cas. 260; Spofford v. Spofford, 18 Idaho, 115, 108 Pac. 1054; Callahan v. Dunn, 30 Idaho, 225, 164 Pac.

356; Callahan v. Callahan, 33 Idaho, 241, 192 Pac. 660; 14 Cyc. 745.

As will be observed from the foregoing authorities, this court has jurisdiction to entertain appellant's application upon a proper showing that the granting of such relief is necessary to a complete exercise of its appellate jurisdiction. Callahan v. Dunn, 30 Idaho, 225, at 231, 164 Pac. 356.

From the record on appeal in this case it appears that respondent's complaint was dismissed and a decree of divorce granted to appellant upon her cross complaint, and that all of the property owned or possessed by appellant and respondent was awarded to the latter. Whether this property is the separate property of respondent, or community property, is a question to be determined when the cause is submitted upon the merits.

Appellant's application is supported by the affidavit of one of her attorneys, who upon information and belief alleges that appellant is now, and since the rendition of the decree of divorce has been, compelled to seek aid from friends and relatives for her support; that she is in indigent circumstances and unable to pay counsel to prosecute her appeal; and that she has agreed to pay a reasonable attorney fee; and prays that this court make an order allowing her the sum of $1,000 for prosecuting her appeal.

Respondent, in resisting appellant's application, filed an affidavit setting out his resources and liabilities, and alleging that he is unable to procure and advance any further sums for attorney fees or alimony.

Courts—
supreme—jurisdiction—attorneys' fees.

Where it appears that all of the property of the husband and wife has been awarded to the husband, and the wife is without means to employ counsel to properly protect her interests on appeal, we do not think a showing of property by the husband should defeat her application, particularly

Divorce—allowance for appeal.

where the action for divorce was brought by the husband; since he should not be permitted to maintain an action against his wife for divorce if he cannot furnish sufficient means to the wife to enable her to make her defense. A wife is entitled to be provided with means at the expense of the husband for an efficient preparation of her case on appeal, where it appears that she is without means, and all of the property of the parties was awarded to the husband. Considerations of justice

—right of wife to representation.

and public policy demand an opportunity for the wife to be represented, before her property and other rights are passed upon by the appellate court.

While respondent in his affidavit does not challenge the reasonableness of the amount of attorney fees prayed for by appellant, yet we think that $250 is a reasonable amount to be allowed appellant for that purpose at this time, reserving the right, however, to determine upon the final submission of the cause whether any additional amount should be allowed for services rendered, or to be rendered, upon the prosecution of her appeal.

In passing, we feel constrained to say that we do not wish to be understood as encouraging original applications to this court for attorney ^{Courts—juris-} fees, alimony, or ^{diction—alimony.} suit money. Application should be made to the trial court. As was said by this court in the case of Callahan v. Dunn, 30 Idaho, at page 231, 164 Pac. 357: "An examination of §§ 2662 and 2673, Rev. Codes, clearly shows that original jurisdiction in the matter of granting alimony and suit money, in connection with divorce actions, is vested in the district courts and the judges thereof at chambers. It is clear that this court does not have original jurisdiction in such matters. Such orders are made by this court only where it is necessary to a complete exercise of its appellate jurisdiction."

This court will review upon appeal an order of the district court allowing or disallowing alimony, suit money, or attorney fees.

In view of the foregoing, it is ordered that respondent be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to the clerk of this court, for the benefit of appellant, the sum of $250 for the purpose stated, within thirty days after the filing of this opinion. The application for temporary alimony will be denied.

Rice, Ch. J., and McCarthy, Dunn, and Lee, JJ., concur.

ANNOTATION.

Right of wife to allowance of counsel fees to prosecute or defend appeal in matrimonial action.

I. Introductory, 1494.

I II]

sel fees for the purpose of prosecuting or defending an appeal in a matrimonial action. No discussion of an allowance of alimony pending appeal is intended, but it is to be noted that in many jurisdictions the courts make no distinction between the latter question and the allowance of counsel fees incident to the appeal. Hence, cases are cited wherein it is apparent that an allowance of alimony pending appeal included an allowance of counsel fees to prosecute or defend the appeal.

II. General rule.

It is generally held that the court in a matrimonial action will allow counsel fees to the wife to enable her properly to prepare and present her case in prosecuting or defending an appeal.

California.—Reilly v. Reilly (1882) 60 Cal. 624; Ex parte Winter (1886) 70 Cal. 291, 11 Pac. 630; Larkin v. Larkin (1886) 71 Cal. 330, 12 Pac. 227; Bohnert v. Bohnert (1891) 91 Cal. 428, 27 Pac. 732; Grannis v. Superior Ct. (1904) 143 Cal. 630, 77 Pac. 647; Bruce v. Bruce (1911) 160 Cal. 28, 116 Pac. 66; Dunphy v. Dunphy (1911) 161 Cal. 87, 118 Pac. 445; Coleman v. Coleman (1913) 23 Cal. App. 423, 138 Pac. 362; McCahan v. McCahan (1920) — Cal. App. —, 190 Pac. 458.

Colorado. — See Pleyte v. Pleyte (1890) 15 Colo. 125, 25 Pac. 25.

District of Columbia. — Sparks v. Sparks (1905) 25 App. D. C. 856; Morgan v. Morgan (1905) 25 App. D. C. 389; Bernsdorff v. Bernsdorff (1905) 26 App. D. C. 228; Lane v. Lane (1905) 26 App. D. C. 235, 6 Ann. Cas. 683.

Florida.—Prine v. Prine (1895) 36 Fla. 676, 84 L.R.A. 87, 18 So. 781.

Idaho. — Roby v. Roby (1903) 9 Idaho, 371, 74 Pac. 957, 3 Ann. Cas. 50; ENDERS v. ENDERS (reported herewith) ante, 1492.

Illinois.—Jenkins v. Jenkins (1878) 91 Ill. 167; Earle v. Earle (1898) 75 Ill. App. 351; Miles v. Miles (1902) 102 Ill. App. 130; Harding v. Harding (1903) 205 Ill. 105, 68 N. E. 754, affirming 105 Ill. App. 363. See also Blake v. Blake (1875) 80 Ill. 523.

Compare Seeger v. Seeger (1910) 154 Ill. App. 38; Balswic v. Balswic (1912) 179 Ill. App. 118.

Iowa. — Vanduzer v. Vanduzer (1887) 70 Iowa, 614, 31 N. W. 956; Doolittle v. Doolittle (1889) 78 Iowa, 695, 6 L.R.A. 187, 43 N. W. 616; Simpson v. Simpson (1894) 91 Iowa, 235, 59 N. W. 22; Parsons v. Parsons (1911) 152 Iowa, 68, 131 N. W. 17; Mengel v. Mengel (1912) 157 Iowa, 630, 138 N. W. 495.

Kansas.—Kjellander v. Kjellander (1913) 90 Kan. 112, 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 943, 132 Pac. 1170, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 1246.

Kentucky.—Compare Elliott v. Elliott (1910) 138 Ky. 309, 127 S. W. 478, 1008.

Maryland.—Rohrback v. Rohrback (1892) 75 Md. 317, 23 Atl. 610; Buckner v. Buckner (1912) 118 Md. 263, 84 Atl. 471; Mulhall v. Mulhall (1913) 120 Md. 22, 87 Atl. 490; Outlaw v. Outlaw (1914) 122 Md. 695, 91 Atl. 1067; Crane v. Crane (1916) 128 Md. 214, 97 Atl. 535. See also Dicus v. Dicus (1917) 131 Md. 87, 101 Atl. 697.

Michigan. — Chaffee v. Chaffee (1866) 14 Mich. 463; Nichols v. Nichols (1910) 163 Mich. 107, 127 N. W. 1042; Bloss v. Bloss (1915) 187 Mich. 425, 153 N. W. 666.

Minnesota. — Eberhart v. Eberhart (1921) — Minn. —, 183 N. W. 140.

Mississippi. — Hall v. Hall (1900) 77 Miss. 741, 27 So. 636; Franklin v. Franklin (1915) 109 Miss. 163, 68 So. 74; Brown v. Brown (1920) 123 Miss. 125, 85 So. 180.

Missouri.—Rosenfeld v. Rosenfeld (1895) 63 Mo. App. 411; Creasey v. Creasey (1913) 175 Mo. App. 237, 157 S. W. 862; Dowling v. Dowling (1914) 181 Mo. App. 675, 164 S. W. 643; McCain v. McCain (1920) — Mo. App. —, 218 S. W. 949.

Montana. — Bordeaux v. Bordeaux (1904) 29 Mont. 478, 75 Pac. 359. See also Bordeaux v. Bordeaux (1902) 26 Mont. 533, 69 Pac. 103.

Nebraska.—Willits v. Willits (1906) 76 Neb. 228, 107 N. W. 379, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 767, 14 Ann. Cas. 883; Wyrick v. Wyrick (1910) 88 Neb. 12, 128 N. W. 662.

New Jersey. — Disborough v. Dis-

Atl. 8.

New Mexico. — Taylor v. Taylor (1914) 19 N. M. 383, L.R.A.1915A, 1044, 142 Pac. 1129.

New York. — McBride v. McBride (1890) 55 Hun, 401, 8 N. Y. Supp. 448, affirmed in (1890) 119 N. Y. 519, 23 N. E. 1065; Halsted v. Halsted (1895) 11 Misc. 592, 32 N. Y. Supp. 1080; Haddock v. Haddock (1902) 75 App. Div. 565, 78 N. Y. Supp. 304; Haddock v. Haddock (1905) 109 App. Div. 502, 96 N. Y. Supp. 522; Greenberg v. Greenberg (1909) 134 App. Div. 419, 119 N. Y. Supp. 227; Miller v. Miller (1913) 158 App. Div. 766, 144 N. Y. Supp. 278.

Nevada.—Lake v. Lake (1882) 16 Nev. 363; Buehler v. Buehler (1915) 38 Nev. 500, 151 Pac. 44.

Oklahoma. — Hunt v. Hunt (1909) 23 Okla. 490, 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1202, 100 Pac. 541; Kostachek v. Kostachek (1912) 40 Okla. 744, 124 Pac. 761; Hartshorn v. Hartshorn (1916) — Okla. —, 155 Pac. 508; Spradling v. Spradling (1916) — Okla. —, 158 Pac. 900.

Oregon.—O'Brien v. O'Brien (1899) 36 Or. 92, 57 Pac. 374, 58 Pac. 892.

South Dakota. — Drake v. Drake (1907) 21 S. D. 182, 110 N. W. 270; Tuttle v. Tuttle (1910) 26 S. D. 95, 127 N. W. 637; Wells v. Wells (1910) 26 S. D. 70, 127 N. W. 636; Cameron v. Cameron (1913) 30 S. D. 634, 139 N. W. 329.

Tennessee. — Shy v. Shy (1872) 7 Heisk. 125; Taylor v. Taylor (1921) — Tenn. —, 232 S. W. 445.

Utah. — See Cast v. Cast (1873) 1

Utr

(18

als

764

v

(19

Sul

508 lag

4;

124

71

636

671

v. i

Wash. —, 203 Pac. 2.

West Virginia. — Wass v. Wass (1896) 42 W. Va. 460, 26 S. E. 440.

Wisconsin. — Freeman v. Freeman (1872) 31 Wis. 235. See also Krause v. Krause (1868) 23 Wis. 354; Coad v. Coad (1876) 40 Wis. 392; Friend v. Friend (1886) 65 Wis. 412, 27 N. W. 84.

Wyoming. — Duxstad v. Duxstad (1908) 16 Wyo. 396, 94 Pac. 463, 15 Ann. Cas. 228; Brown v. Brown (1913) 22 Wyo. 92, 135 Pac. 801.

"The husband is regarded as the head of the family and the holder of the purse strings. Before trial temporary alimony . . . is awarded as a matter of course. After an adverse decision against the wife, and an appeal by her, the same considerations would require the making of additional allowances for the purpose of enabling her to present her case to the appellate court, unless it is manifest that her appeal is without merit." Rosenfeld v. Rosenfeld (1895) 63 Mo. App. 411.

So, in the leading case of Lake v. Lake (1882) 17 Nev. 230, 30 Pac. 878, it was said: "The law gives appellant . . . the right to appeal from that part of the judgment disposing of the property, and accords to her every privilege granted to other litigants in this court. Upon her rests the burden of showing error in the court below. Among all the rights to which she is entitled, there is no one more important to her and the court than that of having the aid of counsel learned in of the court would be disturbed, and it would be deprived of one of the usual, proper, and necessary means of exercising its appellate jurisdiction."

III. Requisites to allowance.

a. Existence of marital relation.

The view that, where the wife appeals from a decree of absolute divorce, the matrimonial status essential to an allowance of counsel fees on appeal no longer exists, is supported by Elliott v. Elliott (1910) 138 Ky. 309, 127 S. W. 1008, wherein the court said: "In the opinion rendered on the appeal, we said that the lower court should render a judgment against appellee for the costs of the action, and for a reasonable attorney's fee in favor of counsel representing appellant 'in that court.' The judgment appealed from granted appellee a divorce from the bonds of matrimony, and appellant was not the wife of appellee when the appeal was pending in this court. Therefore, the statute requiring the husband in suits for alimony and divorce to pay the cost of each party, unless it should be made to appear in the case that the wife is in fault and has ample estate to pay the same, cannot apply. The statute was not intended to embrace the attorney fees of a divorced wife."

A different view was taken in Tuttle v. Tuttle (1910) 26 S. D. 95, 127 N. W. 637, wherein the court, apparently including counsel fees in its reference to alimony and suit money, said: "It is the marriage relation that is the basis or foundation of an action for divorce, and alimony and suit money are but necessary incidents to a suit based upon such relation. It is only by virtue of such relation that the wife has any claim upon the husband for support, or payment of the expenses of her suit or defense, and certainly no court would be justified in requiring a man to advance moneys to a person upon the ground that she is his wife, without some showing that she is such. The relief asked for here is not based upon the ground that the appellant is the wife of respondent, but upon the ground that when this action was brought she was the wife of respondent,—that the marriage relation had existed,—and this fact of marriage stands conceded. It would certainly be an anomalous situation if a wife seeking a divorce and alimony should procure the decree of divorce sought, and with it an unsatisfactory allowance as permanent alimony, and, desiring to have a review of the allowance for alimony, being without means to conduct such appeal, should be compelled either to abandon her appeal, or else, in order to continue the marriage relation and through it hold her husband for the means with which to maintain her appeal, be compelled to appeal from that part of the decree granting the divorce, and then be entitled to alimony only by being reversed upon her appeal from the divorce part of the decree."

But where the husband obtains a judgment of divorce, and dies pending an appeal by the wife, no allowance of counsel fees for services in prosecuting the appeal will be made, as the proceeding is no longer a suit for divorce, but a review for the purpose of ascertaining property rights. Strickland v. Strickland (1906) 80 Ark. 451, 97 S. W. 659.

Similarly, in Seibert v. Seibert (1912) — N. J. —, 86 Atl. 535, it was held that, an action for divorce having abated by the death of the wife before the hearing of her appeal, the court could not make an order for an allowance of counsel fees for services in preparation of the appeal.

b. Good faith of wife.

Where the wife is the appellant it must appear that she is acting in good faith, and has reasonable grounds to believe that the appeal will be successful. Bohnert v. Bohnert (1891) 91 Cal. 428, 27 Pac. 732; Halsted v. Halsted (1895) 11 Misc. 592, 32 N. Y. Supp. 1080; Gansz v. Gansz (1899) 59 N. Y. Supp. 955; Greenberg v. Greenberg (1909) 134 App. Div. 419, 119 N. Y. Supp. 227; Berger v. Berger (1910) 141 App. Div. 455, 126 N. Y. Supp. 284; Disborough v. Disborough (1893) 51 N. J. Eq. 306, 28 Atl. 3; who is the appellee, has no assets on which to raise money to employ counsel to enable her to conduct her case on appeal, and the appellant husband is a man of ample means, whose property is all without the state, and he himself is also without the jurisdiction, the court may allow as counsel fees a sum sufficient to compensate the wife's attorney for appearing in her behalf on the appeal. Buehler v. Buehler (1915) 38 Nev. 500, 151 Pac. 44.

Likewise, where it is shown that the husband has twice removed his property from the state in which the wife was domiciled, in violation of an order of the trial court allowing alimony and support money for minor children, a peculiarly appropriate case is made for the exercise of the court's power to make an allowance to the wife of funds with which to prepare and present her defense on appeal. Spradling v. Spradling (1916) — Okla. —, 158 Pac. 900.

In Buckner v. Buckner (1912) 118 Md. 263, 84 Atl. 471, it appearing that the wife was without means to employ counsel to present her case to the appellate court, it was held that she had an undoubted right to an allowance of counsel fees.

So, in Sullivan v. Sullivan (1908) 49 Wash. 508, 95 Pac. 1095, the court said: "Where the wife prevails in the trial court, and there is belonging to the parties a substantial amount of community property which is in the possession and under the control of the husband, and the disposition thereof made by the trial court is superseded by the husband's stay bond on appeal, and the wife has no means . . . for legal services and charges incidental to properly preparing and presenting her case upon appeal, we think a sufficient showing is made for an allowance for these purposes by this court."

In Ex parte Winter (1886) 70 Cal. 291, 11 Pac. 630, the court in applying the rule said: "To us it appears that the learned judge below was by law vested with the power, within the bounds of a proper discretion, to make the order for the payment by the defendant of the sum of $250 counsel fees, to enable his wife, who was without any means or property otherwise than as obtained from him, to prosecute her action then on appeal."

In the reported case (ENDERS v. ENDERS, ante, 1492), it appearing that all of the property of the husband and wife had been awarded to the husband, and that the wife was without means to employ counsel properly to protect her interests on appeal, it is held that a showing of poverty by the husband could not defeat her right to an allowance, particularly where the action for divorce was brought by the husband.

IV. Jurisdiction of trial court.

It has been held, without reference to any statute, that the trial court may exercise jurisdiction to allow counsel fees incident to an appeal in a matrimonial action. Pleyte v. Pleyte (1890) 15 Colo. 125, 25 Pac. 25; Rohrback v. Rohrback (1892) 75 Md. 318, 23 Atl. 610; Buckner v. Buckner (1912) 118 Md. 263, 84 Atl. 471; Mulhall v. Mulhall (1913) 120 Md. 22, 87 Atl. 490; Outlaw v. Outlaw (1914) 122 Md. 695, 91 Atl. 1067; Crane v. Crane (1916) 128 Md. 214, 97 Atl. 535; Dicus v. Dicus (1917) 131 Md. 87, 101 Atl. 697; Craig v. Craig (1914) 115 Va. 764, 80 S. E. 507; Griffith v. Griffith (1912) 71 Wash. 56, 127 Pac. 585, 128 Pac. 636; Lewis v. Lewis (1915) 83 Wash. 671, 145 Pac. 980; State ex rel. Clark v. Superior Ct. (1916) 90 Wash. 80, 155 Pac. 398. See also Engleman v. Engleman (1899) 97 Va. 487, 34 S. E. 50.

In Rohrback v. Rohrback (1892) 75 Md. 318, 23 Atl. 610, supra, the power of the trial court, after an appeal had been taken, to allow to the wife counsel fees incident to the appeal, was expressly recognized as follows: "The right of a wife to a reasonable allowance for counsel fees . . . in proceedings of this kind is well settled in this state. This, indeed, was not and could not be disputed. . . . The wife could not, in fact, make application for counsel fees and expenses incident to the appeal, until after the appeal had been taken, because she the husband intended to appeal from the decree of the court below, dismissing his bill. And although the appeal was taken, the court still had jurisdiction of the parties, and, having jurisdiction, it had the power to determine the question as to the right of the wife to an allowance for counsel fees."

So, in Dicus v. Dicus (1917) 131 Md. 87, 101 Atl. 697, the court of appeals said: "Application has been made to this court for an order requiring the appellee to pay the plaintiff a sufficient sum for her . . . counsel fee in the prosecution of the appeal. This was a question over which the court below had jurisdiction after the appeal was entered. . . . The application should have been made to the trial court, and, if it had been presented there, we have no reason to doubt that it would have been given due consideration."

Likewise, in Crane v. Crane (1916) 128 Md. 214, 97 Atl. 535, the court, in referring to one of its recent decisions, said: "In Outlaw v. Outlaw (1914) (appeal by the wife) 122 Md. 695, 91 Atl. 1067 [syllabus decision], this court said. 'It is well established by the decisions of this court that the trial court had jurisdiction to hear and pass upon the petition of the plaintiff in which she asked for counsel fees . . . incident to her appeal to this court.'"

In Craig v. Craig (1914) 115 Va. 764, 80 S. E. 507, the appellate court said that the trial court was in a better position than the appellate court to allow counsel fees pending an appeal.

The California statute provides that "when an action for divorce is pending the court may, in its discretion, require the husband to pay, as alimony, any money necessary to enable the wife to support herself or her children, or to prosecute or defend the action." It is also provided by statute that an action is deemed to be pending "from the time of its commencement until its final determination upon appeal or until the time for provisions it has been held that the trial court has power, after an appeal has been taken, and at any time during the pendency of the appeal, to order the husband to pay the wife a reasonable sum as counsel fees for defending or prosecuting the appeal. Bohnert v. Bohnert (1891) 91 Cal. 428, 27 Pac. 732; Grannis v. Superior Ct. (1904) 143 Cal. 630, 77 Pac. 647; Bruce v. Bruce (1911) 160 Cal. 28, 116 Pac. 66; McCahan v. McCahan (1920) — Cal. App. —, 190 Pac. 458. In Grannis v. Superior Ct. (1904) 143 Cal. 630, 77 Pac. 647, supra, the court said: "The power of the court to compel the husband to pay the wife counsel fees for services of her attorney in an action for divorce, where she is without means to pay them, is not exhausted by the granting of a final judgment." A like result was reached in several earlier cases wherein no reference was made to any statute. Reilly v. Reilly (1882) 60 Cal. 624; Ex parte Winter (1886) 70 Cal. 291, 11 Pac. 630; Larkin v. Larkin (1886) 71 Cal. 330, 12 Pac. 227. The trial court has the same power to allow counsel fees pending an appeal in an action for annulment of marriage. Dunphy v. Dunphy (1911) 161 Cal. 87, 118 Pac. 445, wherein the court said: "The same considerations which make such power, pending appeal from the judgment of the trial court, essential to the adequate protection of the wife in an ordinary action for divorce, are present in an action by the husband for annulment of the marriage, and the reasons given by the courts for holding that the power exists in the annulment action, independent of express statutory provision, warrant the exercise of the power, as long as it is essential to enable the wife to make such defense in the annulment action as she may have, including necessarily such rights as are given her by the law to have the action of the trial court reviewed on appeal."

An Idaho statute, providing that, "while an action for divorce is pending the court may, in its discretion any money necessary to enable the wife to support herself or her children, or to prosecute or defend the action," has been construed to give the trial court jurisdiction to allow counsel fees on appeal. Roby v. Roby (1903) 9 Idaho, 371, 74 Pac. 957, 3 Ann. Cas. 50, wherein the court said: "We think the 'court' referred to in § 2472, supra, is the district court, in which such actions are originally commenced, and that it is the intention of our statute to give to the trial court the jurisdiction to grant alimony and suit money so long as the action is pending, whether in the trial court or upon appeal. The trial judge is in a better position than this court to know the amount of money necessary for the payment of costs and disbursements in the prosecution of an appeal, and the ability of the husband to meet such requirements. He knows all the facts in the case and the situation and condition of the parties. If we should hold that, so soon as a notice of appeal is filed and served in such cases, application for suit money and attorneys' fees must thereafter be originally made in this court, it would result in turning the supreme court into a trial court in such matters; for the reason the record in such case would not be before the appellate court, and in order to apprise it of the facts in the case, and the condition of the parties, and the ability of the husband to comply with such order as might be made, it would be necessary to have affidavits from both of the respective parties made and filed in this court, and such investigation and determination made here as would be originally made by the trial judge." The court added, however: "We do not want to be understood as denying the jurisdiction of this court to allow either attorneys' fees . . . after the case has been filed in this court upon appeal, when the same is proper or necessary to the complete exercise of its appellate jurisdiction. Under § 9 of article 5 of the Constitution, this court has jurisdiction to review upon appeal any decision of the district courts, and may issue 'all writs necessary or proper to the complete exercise of its appellate jurisdiction.' " So, under the constitutional provision referred to in the case last cited, it is held in the reported case (ENDERS v. ENDERS, ante, 1492) that while the supreme court may consider a motion for counsel fees on appeal, where it is shown that the granting of such relief is necessary to a complete exercise of its appellate jurisdiction, the motion should, in the first instance, be made to the trial court, which is vested with original jurisdiction in the matter.

An Illinois statute provides as follows: "In all cases of divorce the court may require the husband to pay to the wife, or pay into court for her use during the pendency of the suit, such sum or sums of money as may enable her to maintain or defend the suit; and, in every suit for a divorce, the wife, when it is just and equitable, shall be entitled to alimony during the pendency of the suit. And in case of appeal or writ of error by the husband, the court in which the decree or order is rendered may grant and enforce the payment of such money for her defense, and such equitable alimony during the pendency of the appeal or writ of error, as to such court shall seem reasonable and proper." In Jenkins v. Jenkins (1878) 91 Ill. 167, it was held that this statute gives the trial court power to order an allowance of solicitors' fees for conducting the wife's case in the supreme court, after an appeal from a decree of divorce in her favor in the trial court is perfected by the husband. Similarly, in Earle v. Earle (1898) 75 Ill. App. 351, the court, in affirming an order of the trial court allowing counsel fees to the wife with which to defend her case on appeal, said: "We are unable to see how any question can arise as to the power of the court to thus provide the wife with means necessary to prosecute her cause. . . . Rev. Stat. § 15, chap. 40." See also Blake v. Blake (1875) 80 Ill. 523. In Miles v. Miles (1902) 102 Ill. App. 130, it was held that an allowance by the trial court of counsel fees, under the statute, to enable the wife to make her defense on appeal, was not premature. The court said: "The chancellor, having heard the case, has a sufficient general knowledge of the issues presented, the situation and ability of the appellant, the expenses and the labor necessary to be performed in a court of review, to enable him to fix a reasonable amount in most cases. In the nature of things, under the statute, no certain basis is attainable for such allowances, and they must, in the main, be made in advance of the expenses incurred and the rendition of services by a solicitor." In Harding v. Harding (1903) 205 Ill. 105, 68 N. E. 754, affirming (1903) 105 Ill. App. 363, an allowance of counsel fees by the trial court, pending appeals by the husband from a decree awarding separate maintenance and in a proceeding for contempt arising therefrom, was affirmed without reference to any statute. The statute, however, has been held not to authorize the trial court to make an allowance of counsel fees to enable the wife to prosecute an appeal from a decree of divorce against her for adultery. Balswic v. Balswic (1912) 179 Ill. App. 118. And in Seeger v. Seeger (1910) 154 Ill. App. 38, it was said: "The court allowed to appellant two sums of $50 each, at different times, for her solicitors' fees. After the divorce had been granted, she asked for solicitors' fees and money with which to prosecute an appeal. This the court denied, and it is argued that it should have been granted. Where a divorce case is decided in favor of the wife, and the husband takes an appeal, it is highly proper that the wife should be granted the means wherewith to defend the decree; at least, unless she has sufficient means of her own. But where the wife is defeated, we do not recognize the duty of the court to award her further suit money. In this case the wife had property of her own, and the parties had an antenuptial contract, and we think the court properly refused to award her further suit money after the divorce was granted."

In Missouri the trial court alone has jurisdiction to grant counsel fees pending an appeal, and the allowance must be made in connection with the granting of the appeal. The statute relating to alimony and maintenance, among other things, provides as follows: "The court may decree alimony pending the suit for divorce in all cases where the same would be just, whether the wife be plaintiff or defendant, and enforce such order in the same manner provided by law in other cases." In State ex rel. Kranke v. Calhoun (1921) 206 Mo. App. 298, 227 S. W. 1080, affirmed on opinion below in (1921) — Mo. —, 232 S. W. 1038, wherein the relief asked was for an allowance of alimony and suit money, to defray, among other things, the expense of employing counsel on appeal, the court construed this statute as follows: "The fundamental object, as we interpret the language of § 2375, Revised Statutes of Missouri 1909, is to provide the wife, at all times while the suit for divorce is pending, a forum in which she may make her application for alimony and suit money, and have the same determined upon hearing upon its merits, thus assuring the wife, where need and the circumstances require, the necessary funds with which to conduct her case, whether she be plaintiff or defendant, appellant or respondent. In other words, the legislature evidently intended that the wife should at all times, so long as a suit for divorce is pending, be assured of an opportunity to prosecute or defend her case until final judgment in the matter is entered. It has long since been definitely settled that the circuit court is the only court which can make an order allowing alimony pending the suit. . . . Can it be said that, when an appeal has been taken from the judgment of the circuit court upon the merits of the controversy involved in a divorce proceeding, the case is no longer pending? We think not. And when we consider the fact that an appeal from a decree in a divorce suit invests the appellate court solely with jurisdiction to hear and determine the cause upon the record as made up in the circuit court, and that such appeal does not carry with it for review the action of the circuit court upon the allowance or disallowance of a motion for alimony and suit money pending an appeal, it seems plain to us that there remains in the circuit court jurisdiction to entertain a motion for allowance of alimony and suit money pending the appeal, after the appeal has been taken from the judgment on the merits." The foregoing decision was followed in Welday v. Welday (1921) — Mo. App. —, 232 S. W. 1045. In several other cases the trial court has been held, without reference to any statute, to have jurisdiction to allow counsel fees pending appeal. State ex rel. Gercke v. Seddon (1887) 93 Mo. 520, 6 S. W. 342; Rosenfeld v. Rosenfeld (1895) 63 Mo. App. 411; Lawlor v. Lawlor (1898) 76 Mo. App. 293; Libbe v. Libbe (1911) 157 Mo. App. 701, 138 S. W. 685; Creasey v. Creasey (1913) 175 Mo. App. 237, 157 S. W. 863; Dowling v. Dowling (1914) 181 Mo. App. 675, 164 S. W. 643; Arndt v. Arndt (1914) 177 Mo. App. 420, 163 S. W. 282. In Dowling v. Dowling (1914) 181 Mo. App. 675, 164 S. W. 643, the court said: "The matter of the allowance in favor of the wife pending an appeal, the appeal being taken either by her or by her husband, has been before our court and the supreme court a number of times, and it has been decided that the trial court is the only court that can make such allowance, and that it must be made, if made at all, at, or in connection with, granting the appeal in the main case." Likewise, in Creasey v. Creasey (1913) 175 Mo. App. 237, 157 S. W. 863, it was said: "It is . . . within the power of the trial court, in and by the final decree, in case of an appeal, to provide for the payment of . . . counsel fees pending and covering the appeal. But this must be done in and by the final decree, or along with the granting of an appeal, if an appeal is taken. That it is within the power of the circuit court, and solely within its power, so to do, is clearly settled by the decisions of our supreme court and of the courts of appeals." See also State ex rel. Clarkson v. St. Louis Ct. of Appeals (1885) 88 Mo. 135. The principal reason for the appellate court's refusal to allow counsel fees is that it cannot exercise both original and appellate jurisdiction over the same subject-matter, in the same suit. As was said in State ex rel. Clarkson v. St. Louis Ct. of Appeals, supra: "The only question before this court is whether the St. Louis court of appeals has jurisdiction to make an order on the husband in a divorce suit, pending an appeal in that court, to pay the wife the . . . counsel fees necessary for the prosecution of her appeal, in a case where the husband was awarded a decree of divorce in the court below. The St. Louis court of appeals has original jurisdiction to issue writs of habeas corpus, quo warranto, mandamus, certiorari, and other original remedial writs, and to hear and determine the same, and also has a superintending control over all inferior courts of record in the counties embraced within its territorial jurisdiction. Const. § 2, art. 6. Besides the original jurisdiction thus conferred, its jurisdiction is appellate only. It is clear that the power to make such an order as we are asked to prohibit the court from making and enforcing is not included in the exercise of its original jurisdiction, and we think it is equally clear that it is not included in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction. The appeal from the decree in the divorce suit invested the St. Louis court of appeals with jurisdiction to hear and determine the cause solely upon the record as made up in the circuit court, and to affirm, or modify, or reverse the judgment and remand the cause, or to render such judgment as in its opinion the circuit court ought to have rendered. By § 2179 the circuit court was fully empowered 'to decree alimony pending the suit for divorce . . . and enforce such order in the manner provided by law in other cases;' and we doubt not but that the circuit court, in granting an appeal to defendant in the divorce suit, could, upon a proper showing, have made an order requiring the husband to pay her such reasonable sum as in the judgment of the court would enable her to prosecute her appeal. We have in several instances, when the circuit court had failed to allow the wife temporary alimony to prosecute her appeal, refused to entertain motions asking us to make such allowance, holding that to do so would be exercising power not possessed by us, either by virtue of our original or appellate jurisdiction." See also State ex rel. Dawson v. St. Louis Ct. of Appeals (1889) 99 Mo. 216, 12 S. W. 661; Lawlor v. Lawlor (1898) 76 Mo. App. 298, overruling Clarkson v. Clarkson (1885) 20 Mo. App. 94. The trial court has jurisdiction to make an allowance of alimony for counsel fees after application for an appeal has been made, and before the application has been granted. Watkins v. Watkins (1896) 66 Mo. App. 468. See also State ex rel. Gercke v. Seddon (1887) 93 Mo. 520, 6 S. W. 342.

Under a New York statute providing that the court may, during the pendency of an action for divorce, "from time to time, make and modify an order or orders requiring the husband to pay any sum or sums necessary to enable the wife to carry on or defend the action," it has been held that the trial court, at special term, may decree an allowance of counsel fees pending appeal. McBride v. McBride (1890) 55 Hun, 401, 8 N. Y. Supp. 448, affirmed in (1890) 119 N. Y. 519, 23 N. E. 1065; Halsted v. Halsted (1895) 11 Misc. 592, 32 N. Y. Supp. 1080; Greenberg v. Greenberg (1909) 134 App. Div. 419, 119 N. Y. Supp. 227; Berger v. Berger (1910) 141 App. Div. 455, 126 N. Y. Supp. 284; Miller v. Miller (1913) 158 App. Div. 766, 144 N. Y. Supp. 278. In Halsted v. Halsted (1895) 11 Misc. 592, 32 N. Y. Supp. 1080, supra, the court said: "It is the settled law of this state that the power of the court to grant . . . counsel fees in matrimonial actions during their pendency is not limited to applications made before the entry of the final judgment, but may be exercised during the pendency of an appeal, and until the final determination of the action, and that although judgment finally, for the purposes of an appeal, is entered, the action is still pending; in other words, an action, within the purview of § 1769 of the Code, is pending as long as the appeal is undetermined." Similarly, in McBride v. McBride (1890) 55 Hun, 401, 8 N. Y. Supp. 448, it was said: "An action is pending as long as an appeal is undetermined; and the right given by § 1769 to make these allowances during the pendency of the action clearly contemplated the fact that, as long as the litigation continued so that the wife could not reap the results of a judgment in her favor, the court should have the right to protect her interests." The motion for counsel fees, however, should be made on a case, and the court at special term should not attempt to determine the merits of the appeal on affidavits. Gansz v. Gansz (1899) 59 N. Y. Supp. 955; Greenberg v. Greenberg (1909) 134 App. Div. 419, 119 N. Y. Supp. 227. In at least one case the right of the court to make an allowance of counsel fees, pending appeal, was denied. In Winton v. Winton (1883) 31 Hun, 290, it was held that, after a decree of divorce in favor of the wife, the court had no authority to order the husband to pay counsel fees for services which the wife's counsel had previously rendered, or might subsequently render in the action, although the husband had appealed to the court of appeals from an order of the general term affirming the decree of the court below. The court said: "By no provision in the law has the power been conferred upon the court to impose any additional conditions or restrictions upon the party appealing. The right, on the contrary, is absolutely given to either party to appeal, upon giving notice and the security which has been prescribed. And on complying with the law in these particulars, a positive and unqualified right of review has been provided for the defeated party. If the authority to direct allowances of this nature should be held to continue during the pendency of an appeal from the judgment, it might be exercised in such a manner as altogether to defeat that right, and the law has, in no form, committed its exercise to the court. It has, on the other hand, as plainly as that could be done, declared what shall be required from the party to entitle him to appeal and to have his appeal heard. And the payment of an allowance of this nature has, in no form, been by any possibility required for that purpose." See, however, McCarthy v. McCarthy (1893) 137 N. Y. 500, 33 N. E. 550, wherein the court said: "If . . . the judgment of divorce should be appealed from, then, upon an application wherefrom that fact should appear, and it should also appear that in order to maintain and defend her rights an allowance ought to be made, the court would be justified in granting one."

Under the West Virginia statute allowing the court in term, or the judge in vacation, during the pendency of a suit for divorce, to make any proper order to compel the husband to pay any sum necessary for the maintenance of the wife, and to enable her to carry on her suit, the trial court has power to allow counsel fees on appeal. Wass v. Wass (1896) 42 W. Va. 460, 26 S. E. 440, wherein the court said: "Nothing is said about the appellate court in said statute, and we must regard it as a matter submitted to the sound discretion of the circuit court under all of the circumstances, including the condition of the parties. The discretion has been exercised in this case by allowing $120 for counsel fees, in addition to what had already been allowed at different times; and we think the legislature intended that this discretion should be exercised by the circuit court, being nearer to and more in touch with the parties and their circumstances and surroundings."

V. Jurisdiction of appellate court.

a. View that court has jurisdiction.

The rule that an appellate court has implied or inherent jurisdiction to allow counsel fees on an appeal before it in a matrimonial case, as an incident of its appellate jurisdiction, is sustained in several jurisdictions.

District of Columbia. — Lane v.
18 A.L.R.—95.

Lane (1905) 26 App. D. C. 235, 6 Ann. Cas. 683.

Florida. — Prime v. Prime (1895) 36 Fla. 676, 34 L.R.A. 88, 18 So. 78.

Kansas. — Kjellander v. Kjellander (1913) 90 Kan. 112, 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 943, 132 Pac. 1170, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 1246.

Michigan. — Nichols v. Nichols (1910) 163 Mich. 107, 127 N. W. 1042. See also Bloss v. Bloss (1915) 187 Mich. 425, 153 N. W. 566.

Mississippi. — Hall v. Hall (1900) 77 Miss. 741, 27 So. 636; Franklin v. Franklin (1915) 109 Miss. 163, 68 So. 74.

Missouri. — McCoin v. McCoin (1920) — Mo. App. —, 218 S. W. 949.

Nevada. — Lake v. Lake (1882) 16 Nev. 363, affirmed in (1882) 17 Nev. 230, 30 Pac. 878; Buehler v. Buehler (1915) 38 Nev. 500, 151 Pac. 44.

New Mexico. — Taylor v. Taylor (1914) 19 N. M. 383, L.R.A.1915A, 1044, 142 Pac. 1129.

Oklahoma. — Kostachek v. Kostachek (1912) 40 Okla. 744, 124 Pac. 761; Hartshorn v. Hartshorn (1916) — Okla. —, 155 Pac. 508; Spradling v. Spradling (1916) — Okla. —, 158 Pac. 900. See also Hunt v. Hunt (1909) 23 Okla. 490, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1202, 100 Pac. 541.

In Taylor v. Taylor (N. M.) supra, the court said: "It is to be conceded that this court is without statutory authority to make the allowance prayed for, and unless the power so to do is an inherent one this court must reject the application. We believe that the weight of authority supports the view that appellate courts possess inherent power to allow . . . attorney fees pending an appeal, and may make such allowance as the circumstances warrant. . . . The opposing view as to the power of appellate courts in this respect is, generally speaking, based upon the ground that the exercise of such power is the assumption of original jurisdiction usually withheld by constitutional and statutory provisions. Our view of the matter being that the power is inherent in the appellate court, and necessary, by reason of the nature of the case, might otherwise find it impossible to be represented before this court, we cannot agree with the minority rule."

Similarly, in Kjellander v. Kjellander (Kan.) supra, the court expressed a like view, saying: "The power to require the payment of counsel fees, or suit money and temporary alimony, pending an appeal, has not been expressly given, and the question is whether there is implied power to make such allowances in the exercise of our appellate jurisdiction. The appellate jurisdiction conferred carries with it, by implication, the power to protect that jurisdiction, and to make the decisions of the court thereunder effective."

"The exercise of such authority by an appellate court is based on the theory that the jurisdiction to review decrees in divorce cases carries with it, by implication, the incidental power to make such allowances; such authority being indispensable to the proper exercise of proper appellate jurisdiction. The object of the law is to afford a wife without means the funds necessary, . . . pending the final determination of a divorce proceeding, . . . to prosecute or defend such action. This object would be defeated if, after a decree in such action, courts withheld from her . . . the means necessary for a reasonable review, in case of an adverse decree by the chancellor. She is entitled to a proper allowance so long as the cause is pending, and until it is finally determined." Kostachek v. Kostachek (Okla.) supra.

And in Lane v. Lane (1905) 26 App. D. C. 235, 6 Ann. Cas. 683, the appellate court of the District of Columbia was held to have jurisdiction, the court saying: "We have, in former cases, intimated that this court has the power to entertain a motion of this kind, pending an appeal in a divorce proceeding, though it was not then necessary to actually decide the question. . . . Now this court. . . . This power is one, however, that will not be exercised unless the application for the order is supported by proofs tending to show that the applicant is in a destitute or needy condition, and that there exists a good reason why the relief could not be obtained in the trial court." See also Morgan v. Morgan (1905) 25 App. D. C. 389. Compare Sparks v. Sparks (1905) 25 App. D. C. 356; Bernsdorff v. Bernsdorff (1905) 26 App. D. C. 228.

The appellate court has the power, even though the appeal was granted by the lower court with supersedeas. Brown v. Brown (1920) 123 Miss. 125, 85 So. 180.

In Iowa, the appellate court has exclusive jurisdiction to allow counsel fees pending an appeal. Mengel v. Mengel (1912) 157 Iowa, 630, 138 N. W. 495, wherein the court said: "According to our more recent holdings, the appellate tribunal is the only one to make such an allowance." See to the same effect, Parsons v. Parsons (1911) 152 Iowa, 68, 131 N. W. 17; Simpson v. Simpson (1894) 91 Iowa, 235, 59 N. W. 22; Doolittle v. Doolittle (1889) 78 Iowa, 695, 6 L.R.A. 187, 43 N. W. 616.

In Idaho, the Constitution (art. 5, § 9) provides that "the supreme court shall . . . have . . . jurisdiction to issue . . . all writs necessary or proper to the complete exercise of its appellate jurisdiction." Under that provision it has been held that the supreme court may entertain an application for counsel fees on appeal, when the granting of such relief is necessary to a complete exercise of its appellate jurisdiction. See the reported case (ENDERS v. ENDERS, ante, 1492). See also Roby v. Roby (1903) 9 Idaho, 371, 74 Pac. 957, 3 Ann. Cas. 50.

In Nebraska, it has been held that where the trial court fails to provide a sufficient amount to cover the costs of the wife's action, and she appeals for that reason, the supreme also been held in that state, without regard to a failure on the part of the trial court to allow attorneys' fees, that the appellate court may award a reasonable sum for such purpose. Willits v. Willits (1906) 76 Neb. 228, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 767, 107 N. W. 379, 14 Ann. Cas. 883.

In New York the appellate court has jurisdiction to allow counsel fees on appeal, in the event of a wrongful refusal by the court at special term to make the order. Haddock v. Haddock (1902) 75 App. Div. 565, 78 N. Y. Supp. 304. See also Haddock v. Haddock (1905) 109 App. Div. 502, 96 N. Y. Supp. 522.

In South Dakota the appellate court has been held to have original jurisdiction to grant counsel fees on appeal, although the trial court, under the Code, has concurrent jurisdiction over the same matter. Wells v. Wells (1910) 26 S. D. 70, 127 N. W. 636. See also Drake v. Drake (1907) 21 S. D. 182, 110 N. W. 270; Tuttle v. Tuttle (1910) 26 S. D. 95, 127 N. W. 637; Cameron v. Cameron (1913) 30 S. D. 634, 139 N. W. 329.

In Tennessee the appellate court may either allow counsel fees on appeal, or remand the case for the purpose of having such fees determined by the trial court. Shy v. Shy (1872) 7 Heisk. 125; Taylor v. Taylor (1921) — Tenn. —, 232 S. W. 445.

In Wyoming the right of the supreme court to allow counsel fees pending appeal is held to be given by the Constitution (art. 5, § 2), providing that such court shall have general superintending control over inferior courts, and (§ 3 of the same article) that the court shall have power to issue writs of review, and other writs necessary and proper to the complete exercise of its appellate and revisory jurisdiction. Duxstad v. Duxstad (1908) 16 Wyo. 396, 94 Pac. 463, 15 Ann. Cas. 228; Brown v. Brown (1913) 22 Wyo. 92, 135 Pac. 801. In the latter case the court said: "It was held by this court in an action for divorce, upon an original application of the wife for an allowance to enable her to further prosecute the proceedings in error (Duxstad v. Duxstad, supra), that, 'by the great weight of authority, this court, in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction, may consider the motion and make such order in the premises as may be deemed advisable.' . . . The only difference between the Duxstad Case and the one here is that the former was an action for divorce, and the latter is for separate maintenance."

b. View that court has not jurisdiction.

The appellate courts of some jurisdictions refuse to allow counsel fees pending an appeal, on the ground that they are without jurisdiction. State ex rel. Clarkson v. St. Louis Ct. of Appeals (1885) 88 Mo. 135; Bordeaux v. Bordeaux (1902) 26 Mont. 533, 69 Pac. 103; Tonn v. Tonn (1907) 16 N. D. 17, 111 N. W. 609; O'Brien v. O'Brien (1899) 36 Or. 92, 57 Pac. 374, 58 Pac. 892; Griffith v. Griffith (1912) 71 Wash. 59, 127 Pac. 585, 128 Pac. 636; Lewis v. Lewis (1915) 83 Wash. 671, 145 Pac. 980; State ex rel. Clarkson Superior Ct. (1916) 90 Wash. 80, 155 Pac. 398.

In Bordeaux v. Bordeaux (1902) 26 Mont. 533, 69 Pac. 1035, the appellate court held that it had neither constitutional nor inherent power to allow counsel fees in a matrimonial action, saying: "In Montana an action of divorce is a suit in equity. According to the equity practice, an appeal removed the whole case—all questions of law and of fact—to the higher court, where it was tried anew upon the depositions presented to the chancellor a quo, or upon such depositions and further evidence reduced to writing, and a decree entered upon the merits. During the pendency of the appeal the suit so transferred was in the higher court, and hence it might, in general, make such orders as the court or chancellor of first instance could have made. Such, as we understand, is the procedure still in vogue in certain of the states. In Montana, however, the contrary practice prevails. The action—the entire case—is not transferred by appeal. Questions of law only are presented on appeal, even are filed here in support of the application. In order to allow applications of this character we must determine facts which, in most cases, will be disputed by original evidence. In other words, this court must exercise original jurisdiction. . . . No jurisdiction is conferred by the Constitution, and even if the legislature has authority to confer it upon this court, which is subject to much doubt, it has not done so or attempted to do so." In Lewis v. Lewis (1915) 83 Wash. 671, 145 Pac. 980, following the Griffith Case, the court said: "Our attention has not been called to the decision of any court holding that the trial court does not have jurisdiction, after the appeal has been perfected in a divorce action, to make an allowance for . . . attorneys' fees . . . pending the appeal, where the reviewing court is without jurisdiction, as in this state, to determine such matters." See to the same effect, State ex rel. Clark v. Superior Ct. (1916) 90 Wash. 80, 155 Pac. 398. L. F. C.

VISIT DATA TO THE PEPPERVINE HOSPITAL

MRS. F. D. POOLE, Plff. in Err.,

v.

MARVIN PERKINS.

Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals—November 20, 1919.

(126 Va. 331, 101 S. E. 240.)

Conflict of laws — note executed in one state payable in another — what law governs.

1. A note executed by a married woman at her domicile in a state where she is under disability of coverture is valid if made payable in another state where such disability does not exist.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1516.]

—law of coverture — effect in other states.

2. The disability of coverture arising from the laws of a married woman's domicile does not follow her into other states.

[See 5 R. C. L. 950.]

—presumption as to intention of parties.

3. When parties make contracts which upon their face are to be discharged in a state other than that in which they are executed, they are presumed, in the absence of anything to the contrary, to have intended the law of the state of performance, the lex loci solutionis, to control.

[See 5 R. C. L. 940.]

—effect of intention of parties.

4. The capacity of parties to contract depends upon their intention as to place of performance, contracts being valid if authorized by the law of the place where they intended the contract to be performed.

[See 5 R. C. L. 950; 1 R. C. L. Supp. 1560.]

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Wythe County (Campbell, J.) to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in a proceeding by notice of motion brought to recover judgment on a certain promissory note. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. W. B. Kegley, for plaintiff in error:

The trial court erred in overruling petitioner's defense of coverture, and in rendering judgment on the note sued upon against petitioner.

Burr v. Beckler, 264 Ill. 230, L.R.A. 1916A, 1049, 103 N. E. 206, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 1132; Story, Conf. L. § 10; Minor, Conf. L. § 72; Campbell v. Crampton, 18 Blatchf. 150, 2 Fed. 417; Union Nat. Bank v. Chapman, 169

N. Y. 538, 57 L.R.A. 513, 88 Am. St. Rep. 614, 62 N. E. 672; Mayer v. Roche, 77 N. J. L. 681, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 764, 75 Atl. 235; Young v. Hart, 101 Va. 480, 44 S. E. 703.

Messrs. S. B. Campbell and Robert Sayers, for defendant in error.

The note expressly provides that it shall be payable in Virginia.

National Mut. Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Ashworth, 91 Va. 712, 22 S. E. 521; Nickels v. People's Bldg. Loan & Sav. Asso. 93 Va. 387, 25 S. E. 8; Ware v. Bankers' Loan & Invest. Co. 95 Va. 685, 64 Am. St. Rep. 826, 29 S. E. 744; People's Bldg. Loan & Sav. Asso. v. Tinsley, 96 Va. 325, 31 S. E. 508; Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. v. Pollard, 94 Va. 146, 36 L.R.A. 271, 64 Am. St. Rep. 715, 26 S. E. 421; Middle States Loan Bldg. & Constr. Co. v. Miller, 104 Va. 464, 51 S. E. 846; R. S. Oglesby Co. v. Bank of New York, 114 Va. 668, 77 S. E. 468; Freeman's Bank v. Ruckman, 16 Gratt. 126; 1 Minor's Inst. 3d ed. p. 148; Story, Conf. L. § 301a; 1 Rob. Pr. pp. 77, 78; Kent. Com. 2d ed. p. 459; Baum v. Birchall, 150 Pa. 164, 30 Am. St. Rep. 797, 24 Atl. 620; 2 Parsons, Contr. p. 324; 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. p. 658, § 865.

The parties to a contract may adopt the law of the place of performance to govern all matters connected with a merely personal contract.

Story, Conf. L. § 280; 5 R. C. L. § 27, p. 940; Wick v. Dawson, 42 W. Va. 43, 24 S. E. 587; Mayer v. Roche, 77 N. J. L. 681, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 763, 75 Atl. 235; Thompson v. Taylor, 66 N. J. L. 253, 55 L.R.A. 585, 88 Am. St. Rep. 485, 49 Atl. 544; Nickels v. People's Bldg. Loan & Sav. Asso. 93 Va. 387, 25 S. E. 8.

The law of Virginia should be held to apply from the standpoint of public policy.

Bell v. Packard, 69 Me. 105, 31 Am. Rep. 252; Locke v. McPherson, 163 Mo. 493, 52 L.R.A. 420, 85 Am. St. Rep. 567, 63 S. W. 726.

Virginia is the "locus contractus," as regards the note in question.

McGarry v. Nicklin, 110 Ala. 559, 55 Am. St. Rep. 48, 17 So. 726; International Harvester Co. v. McAdam, 142 Wis. 114, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 776, 124 N. W. 1042, 20 Ann. Cas. 614.

to the order of Marvin Perkins, Poole and wife and Perkins at that time resided and were domiciled in the city of Bristol, Tennessee. More than a year after the execution of the note, but prior to the institution of this suit, all of the parties, makers and payee, became and have since remained residents of and domiciled in Virginia. The note was dated, signed, and delivered in Tennessee, but upon its face was payable at a bank in the city of Bristol, Virginia.

According to the laws of the state of Tennessee, in force at the time of the execution and delivery of the note and for some time thereafter, the contracts of a married woman were voidable, and could not be enforced against her where there was a plea of coverture; but at the time of the institution of this suit the disability of coverture had been removed by statute in Tennessee, so far as concerns the contracts of married women subsequent to the passage of the statute.

This is a proceeding by notice of motion brought by Perkins against Mrs. F. D. Poole in the circuit court of Wythe county, to recover judgment on the note. All matters of law and fact having been submitted to the court without the intervention of a jury, a judgment was rendered against her, and she thereupon obtained this writ of error.

There were other issues in the lower court, but the sole question before us is whether Mrs. Poole's common-law disability of coverture at the time of the execution of the note can be successfully relied upon by her as a defense.

If the note had been made payable in Tennessee, it is clear that her plea of coverture would have been good. The reason and authority for this proposition are perfectly familiar, and require no elaboration.

capacity to make the contract? If so, it is conceded that she was liable, and that the judgment complained of is right.

It would be idle to say that the question is free from difficulty. There are substantial reasons for a difference of legal opinion, and the authorities upon the subject are by no means in harmony. The exact question has never been decided in this state. It would be impossible in an opinion of reasonable length to review all of the authorities bearing upon the subject, and it would perhaps be unprofitable to do so, if such a thing were feasible.

In the case of Freeman's Bank v. Ruckman, 16 Gratt. 126, Judge Moncure announced the following general rule, upon which there is practically no conflict of opinion: "It is a general rule that every contract, as to its validity, nature, interpretation, and effect, or, as they may be called, the right, in contradistinction to the remedy, is governed by the law of the place where it is made, unless it is to be performed in another place; and then it is governed by the law of the place where it is to be performed."

This familiar and well-settled rule, however, cannot be said to be conclusive of the instant case, because, as the same was applied by Judge Moncure, and as most commonly illustrated by decided cases, it does not relate specifically to the capacity of the parties to make a contract, but to the validity and effect of a contract made by concededly competent parties.

Professor Raleigh C. Minor, in his excellent "Conflict of Laws," says at page 410: "The only law that can operate to create a contract is the law of the place where the contract is entered into (lex celebrationis). If the parties enter into an agreement in a particular state, the law of that state alone can determine whether a contract has been made. If by the law of that state no contract has been made, there is no contract. Hence, if by the lex celebrationis the parties are incapable of making a binding contract, there is no contract upon which the law of any other state can operate. It is void ab initio."

And the author, in support of the text, quotes from the opinion in Campbell v. Crampton, 18 Blatchf. 150, 2 Fed. 423, as follows: "Upon principle no reason can be alleged why a contract, void for want of capacity of the party at the place where it is made, should be held good because it provides that it shall be performed elsewhere, and nothing can be found in any adjudication or textbook to support such a conclusion. It is a solecism to speak of that transaction as a contract, which cannot be a contract because of the inability of the persons to make it such."

Strong support for the opinion thus advanced is also found in the case of Union Nat. Bank v. Chapman, 169 N. Y. 538, 57 L.R.A. 513, 88 Am. St. Rep. 614, 62 N. E. 672, in the Illinois case of Burr v. Beckler, 264 Ill. 230, L.R.A. 1916A, 1049, 106 N. E. 206, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 1132, and in some of the comments and citations contained in the annotations to these cases, as well as in the note to Mayer v. Roche, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 763, hereinafter mentioned.

In opposition to the above view is the following pronouncement by one of the most eminent of Virginia law writers, Professor John B. Minor: "The law which is to govern in relation to the capacity of parties to enter into a contract is much disputed by the continental jurists of Europe. In general, however, they hold that the law of the party's domicile ought to govern. Story, Conf. Laws, §§ 51 et seq. But the doctrine of the common law is well established, both in England and America, that the capacity of parties to contract is, with some few exceptions, determined by the lex loci contractus; that is, the law of the place with reference to which the contract is made, which is usually the place where it is made, unless it is to be performed in another place or country, and then the law of that country." 3 Minor, Inst. p. 143.

We are disposed to accept the latter as the rule applicable to the instant case, for reasons which we shall now point out.

Conflict of laws—note executed in one state payable in another—what law governs.

It is to be observed, in the outset, that with practical unanimity the authorities, even those relied upon —law of coverage—effect in other states.

by the plaintiff in error, hold that the disability of coverage arising from the law of the married woman's domicil does not follow her into other states, and that if she goes into another state than that of her domicil, and makes a contract valid by and to be performed in accordance with the laws of such other state, she will be bound thereby, even though she would not have been competent to make the contract according to the laws of her own state. In such a case the law of the place where the contract is made will be enforced wherever the suit is brought, even in the state of her domicil, subject only to the exception that, if the suit is brought in a jurisdiction whose law imposes upon married women a total incapacity to bind themselves by any contract whatever, then, perhaps, for reasons of public policy, the contract will not be enforced. Minor, Conf. L. § 72; Young v. Hart, 101 Va. 480, 484, 44 S. E. 703; Armstrong v. Best, 112 N. C. 59, 25 L.R.A. 188, 34 Am. St. Rep. 473, 17 S. E. 14; Milliken v. Pratt, 125 Mass. 374, 28 Am. Rep. 241; Bell v. Packard, 69 Me. 105, 31 Am. Rep. 251; Robinson v. Queen, 87 Tenn. 445, 3 L.R.A. 214, 10 Am. St. Rep. 690, 11 S. W. 38; 57 L.R.A. 513, note; L.R.A.1916A, 1055, note. It follows, therefore, beyond question, that if Mrs. Poole had merely stepped across the state line between Bristol, Tennessee, and Bristol, Virginia, and signed the note in the latter state, she would be held liable thereon in a suit brought in any state where a married woman can contract, including now the state of Tennessee.

It will be found, too, from an examination of the authorities last above cited, to which many others of like tenor and effect might be added, that most of them concede that the actual bodily presence of the contracting party is not necessary to make the contract valid according to the laws of some other state than that of the domicil. If, for example, in the instant case, Mrs. Poole had delivered the note to Perkins by mailing or sending it to him in Virginia, then by the clear weight of authority she would have bound herself in accordance with the laws of the state of Virginia as fully as if she had actually crossed the state line, and signed and delivered the note in that jurisdiction. This is unmistakably implied, even in the New York case of Union Nat. Bank v. Chapman, supra, so strongly relied upon by the plaintiff in error.

We are brought, therefore, to this question: If Mrs. Poole had actually come into Virginia and signed the note, or had sent it here for delivery and acceptance, would there have been any substantial legal difference between the case as thus supposed, and the case as it actually exists? We think not. It may be stated as settled —presumption as to intention of parties.

law that, when parties make contracts which upon their face are to be discharged in a state other than that in which they are executed, they are presumed, in the absence of anything to the contrary, to have intended the law of the state of performance, the lex loci solutionis, to control, and thus, if intention can do so, to have voluntarily constituted the law of that state the law of the contract; or, as often otherwise expressed, the proper law or the governing law. So unanimous are the authorities on this proposition that those advocating the actual situs of the parties as the test of contractual capacity concede that, if the intent in such cases is effective, then they are in error, and the lex loci solutionis must be regarded as the governing law.

The adoption of the intention of the parties to the contract as the true criterion is consistent with the reason which Professor Minor assigns for his opinion that the proper law is the law of the place where the contract is actually signed. He says: "It may be regarded as certain that if the party enters into a contract in the state of his domicil, though the contract is to be performed elsewhere, the proper law governing his capacity to enter into the contract is the lex domicilii, no matter where the suit may be brought. But if the contract is entered into in a state other than the party's domicil, he has not the same right to claim the protection of his domiciliary law. He has voluntarily entered into another state, and has there made an agreement with persons who are relying upon the law under which he is acting. To that law he has submitted himself when he makes the contract there, and a just comity will ordinarily demand that the sovereignty of that state over all acts done there should be respected in other states." Conf. L. p. 145.

If the parties, by the mere act of signing in a state other than their domicil, can give validity to a contract which would not be valid in their own state, and if the reason for this is that they are presumed to contract with reference to the law of such other state, it would seem to follow that the actual situs of the parties is only important as a factor in determining the law with reference to which they intended to contract. In this view, all that is needed to divest a married woman of her domiciliary incapacity is an intention, sufficiently evidenced or expressed, to contract with reference to the laws of a state in which the contract is valid, and, as we have just seen, where the contract, like the one involved in the instant case, provides upon its face for performance in a state whose laws will uphold it, such provision is, alone, sufficient to evidence an intention to bring the contract within the influence of the laws of the latter state. National Mut. Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Ashworth, 91 Va. 706, 712, 22 S. E. 521; Nickels v. People's Bldg. & L. Asso. 93 Va. 387, 25 S. E. 8; Ware v. Bankers Loan & Invest. Co. 95 Va. 680, 684, 64 Am. St. Rep. 826, 29 S. E. 744. These cases did not involve the question of contractual capacity; but, granting that the intention of the parties determines the proper law, the decisions here cited are conclusive of the proposition that the note in litigation, by providing for payment in Virginia, sufficiently expressed such intention. Citations to the same effect might be multiplied indefinitely.

In the elaborate note, cited supra from L.R.A.1916A, 1055, the learned author shows that, if the true criterion as to the proper or governing law is to be found in the intention of the parties, then the law of the place of performance controls, and accordingly determines the question of the capacity to make a contract.

The case to which —effect of intention of parties. that note is appended (Burr v. Beckler, 264 Ill. 230, L.R.A.1916A, 1049, 106 N. E. 206, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 1132), and some decisions cited therein and in the note, as well as the discussion by the author, vigorously challenge the correctness of this test. In our opinion, however, it furnishes the most satisfactory and consistent solution of the question. It affords a simple and uniform rule, fair to both parties, and applicable alike to all contracts, regardless of whether the parties reside in the same or different states; and it gives due recognition to the sovereignty of the state whose laws are thus invoked. As to precedent and authority for the adoption of this test, it would require some boldness, in the face of the multitude of apparently conflicting decisions and textbook discussions bearing more or less directly on the question, to undertake to affirm that the decided weight of authority is either for or against it. We content ourselves with the statement that it appears to us as being supported by the better reason and by entirely sufficient authority.

In 3 Minor, Inst. 145, cited supra, Professor John B. Minor employs the phrase "lex loci contractus" to indicate the law of the place with reference to which the contract is made, and says that such place is usually the place where it is made, unless it is to be performed in another place or country. In other words, according to his view, the place of the contract, in legal contemplation, depends upon the presumed intention of the parties. This definition or understanding of the lex loci contractus, or law of the place of the contract, is not by any means universally approved, but it has been very extensively employed by high authority. The fact that it is not universally approved, of course, accounts for the conflict of authority upon the question at issue in this case. The authorities which are at variance with the conclusion we have reached are so because of the intrinsic effect accorded by them to the local situs of the contracting parties in determining what is legally the place of the contract. The following authorities, in addition to those already cited, support Professor Minor's view: "It will be presumed that the contract is to be performed at the place where it is made, and is to be governed by its laws, if there is nothing in the terms of the contract or in the explanatory circumstances of its execution inconsistent with that intention. But, if by the terms of the contract it is to be performed in a place other than the place of execution, the place of performance will ordinarily be deemed the place of contract; . . . at least, unless the parties otherwise intended." 22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 1325.

In Robinson v. Queen, 87 Tenn. 445, 446, 3 L.R.A. 214, 215, 10 Am. St. Rep. 690, 691, 11 S. W. 38, the supreme court of Tennessee said: "Though some authorities may be found to the contrary, it may now be said to be well-settled law that the validity of a contract, the obligation thereof, and capacity of the parties thereto, are to be determined by the lex loci contractus (in the sense of the place of performance), unless there be something in the contract which is deemed hurtful to the good morals, or injurious to the rights, of its own citizens, by the laws of the state or country whose courts are called upon to enforce the contract made in a foreign state or country."

In that case the court was dealing with a contract made in Kentucky, to be performed in Kentucky, by a married woman domiciled in Kentucky; but the language quoted shows that the Tennessee court intended the phrase "lex loci contractus," in the sense of the place of performance, to refer to the legal seat or place of the contract.

Mr. Freeman, in a note to McGarry v. Nicklin, 55 Am. St. Rep. 48, says: "Where the parties to a contract reside in different states or countries, unless they take the trouble to both go to the same place, one of them must manifest his assent in one state or country, and the other in another. We think it absurd, for the purpose of determining the place of the contract, and by what laws it shall be construed and its validity adjudged, to inquire which of the parties happened to manifest his assent last, or what was the mode or place of delivery. From the contract, or from it and other competent evidence, the place where it was intended to be executed or enforced can be made evident. The performance of the contract is the essential thing, and, in our judgment, should control, and the place where that performance is to take place should be deemed, for all substantial purposes, the place of the contract."

In Story on Conflict of Laws, § 301a, it is said: "But several, and indeed most of them [judicial decisions under discussion by the author], do expressly and directly recognize the rule that, where the contract is made in one place and is to be performed in another, not only may the law of the latter be properly called the 'locus contractus,' but that it ought in all respects, except as to the formalities and solemnities and modes of execution, to be deemed the rule to govern such cases."

See also Pritchard v. Norton, 106 U. S. 124, 134, 27 L. ed. 104, 108, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 102; Minor, Conf. L. pp. 362, 363, and numerous cases cited in note 3 thereto; Freeman's note in 55 Am. St. Rep. 778.

The definition of the "lex loci contractus" as above expressed or implied, has been the subject of criticism from eminently respectable writers; but it must be conceded that, however plausible the objection to this use of the phrase may be, the authorities thus using it are themselves of very high rank, and are more numerous than those holding the opposite view.

It may be remarked, in passing, that no question arises in this case as to the formalities attending the execution of the note sued on.

We will conclude this discussion by a reference to a few cases dealing concretely with the question at issue, and in which the law of the place of performance, instead of the place of execution and delivery, has been held to be the proper law in determining the capacity of married women to make a contract.

The case of Baum v. Birchall, 150 Pa. 164, 30 Am. St. Rep. 797, 24 Atl. 620, involved the validity of a bond and mortgage executed by a married woman in Pennsylvania, in consummation of a purchase by her of real estate in Delaware. According to the laws of Pennsylvania, a married woman could not bind herself personally by such a bond, but she could do so by the laws of Delaware. The question was whether her rights and obligations under the bond were to be determined by the laws of Delaware or by those of Pennsylvania. The suit was brought in Pennsylvania, and she was held liable on the ground that the contract was a Delaware contract, and therefore controlled as to its validity by the laws of that state. It is true that the court found that the contract, though actually signed in Pennsylvania, was delivered and became binding in Delaware, and seems to have finally rested the decision on that ground; but the case nevertheless distinctly holds that the capacity of a married woman to contract is an element to be determined by the place of performance. The opinion says: "If it be conceded that the bond and mortgage were executed in this state [Pennsylvania], yet it appears upon their face that they were to be performed in the state of Delaware, and the general rule is that in such cases the instrument is governed as to its validity, nature, obligation, and interpretation by the laws of the place where it is to be performed"—citing Story, Conf. L. § 280; 2 Kent, Com. 449.

Mayer v. Roche, 77 N. J. L. 681, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 763, 75 Atl. 235, is a strong case and is much in point. The action there was on a promissory note, in which a married woman appeared as a joint maker. It appeared that the note was signed by Mrs. Roche in New Jersey, where she resided, but was dated and payable in New York. By the New Jersey law it was void, but by the New York law it was valid. The court in New Jersey, in Thompson v. Taylor, 66 N. J. L. 253, 54 L.R.A. 585, 88 Am. St. Rep. 485, 49 Atl. 544, had previously held that the law of the place of contract was decisive on the question of the competency of a married woman to make a contract. The question in the Roche Case, therefore, was, as stated in the opinion, whether "the place of contract was New York or New Jersey." The court, adopting the intention of the parties as the true criterion, said: "What, then, must be presumed to have been the intention of the parties to the note in suit as to the law by which their contract was to be governed? We think the fact that it was dated in New York indicates that the parties meant to be bound by New York law. It has been so held in our supreme court in Hoppins v. Miller, 17 N. J. L. 185. In addition, the fact that the note was payable in New York is sufficient, of itself, to justify the conclusion that New York law was the law contemplated. It has been so held in this state in cases involving the question of usury. Ball v. Consolidated Frank-linite Co. 32 N. J. L. 102; Freese v. Brownell, 35 N. J. L. 285, 10 Am. Rep. 239. Authority in other jurisdictions is ample. Andrews v. Pond, 13 Pet. 65, 10 L. ed. 61; Pritchard v. Norton, 106 U. S. 124, 27 L. ed. 104, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 102; London Assur. Co. v. Companhia de Moagens, 167 U. S. 149, 42 L. ed. 113, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 785; Shoe & Leather Nat. Bank v. Wood, 142 Mass. 563, 8 N. E. 753. This view of the presumed intention of the parties, based upon the well-settled rules as to the effect of the place where the contract is made and the place where it is to be performed, is in accord, also, with the general principle, which would lead us to hold that the parties meant to make a binding contract, and that neither meant to mislead the other."

See also Basilea v. Spagnuolo, 80 N. J. L. 88, 77 Atl. 531; Fiske Rubber Co. v. Muller, 42 App. D. C. 49; Hammerstein v. Sylvia, 66 Misc. 550, 124 N. Y. Supp. 535.

We conclude, therefore, that the note sued on in this case must be construed as having been executed with reference to the laws of the state of Virginia; that it became to all legal intents and purposes, so far as its validity is concerned, as truly a Virginia note as if it had been signed and delivered here; that by the laws of this state Mrs. Poole could have legally executed the same; and that, therefore, the lower court was right in holding her liable.

The judgment is accordingly af-

ANNOTATION.

Conflict of laws as to capacity of married women to contract.

I. In general, 1516.

II. Personal contracts:

- a. As between lex loci contractus (or lex loci solutionis) and lex domicilii, 1518.
- b. As between lex loci contractus and lex loci solutionis, 1525.
- c. As between lex loci contractus (or lex loci solutionis or lex domicilii) and lex situs, 1541.

I. In general.

The governing law as regards capacity to marry, or to enter into ante-nuptial contracts, is beyond the scope of the annotation.

In this annotation, unless otherwise stated, the term "lex loci contractus" is used in the sense of the law of the place where the contract is made, and the term "lex loci solutionis" in the sense of the law of the place of performance, although the former term is II.—continued.

- d. As between lex loci contractus (or lex loci solutionis or lex domicilii) and lex fori:

1. In general, 1543.
2. Public policy or forum, 1543.
3. Matters relating to remedy, 1550.

III. Contracts relating to real property or immovables, 1555.

sometimes used by the courts in the sense of the law of the place of performance. See Robinson v. Queen (1889) 87 Tenn. 445, 3 L.R.A. 214, 10 Am. St. Rep. 690, 11 S. W. 38.

The question under consideration, like most other questions as to conflict of laws, is confused by the common practice of the courts to describe the governing law in terms that import a choice as between the situs of different factors which were in fact coincident, so that there was no occasion, or intention, perhaps, to choose between them. For example, it frequently happens that a contract of a married woman is made and performable in the same state, and the court is only called upon to decide between the law of that state and the law of the state in which she was domiciled or in which the action is brought. Though the choice of the law of the first state does not call for any expression of preference as between the law of the place where the contract is made, and the law of the place where it is performable, the courts frequently designate it as the law of the place where the contract is made, or lex loci contractus,—usually, though not always, employed as the equivalent of the law of the place of making,—or as the law of place where it is performable (lex loci solutionis). In subsequent cases, when the contract is made in one state and performable in another, and the laws of the two differ as regards the capacity of a married woman to contract, the court is confronted with precedents which apparently favor one or the other, but which, apart from the cumulative effect of the constant use of a particular phrase or term to describe the governing law, have no value as precedents as between the place where the contract is made and the place where it is performable. If the court, when that question is presented, decides in favor of the law of the place of performance, it sometimes undertakes to reconcile the result with previous declarations that the lex loci contractus governs, by a statement to the effect that when the contract is made in one state and performable in another, the law of the latter is lex loci contractus; or even that a contract will be deemed to have been made in the state where it is performable, although in fact it had its legal inception in another state. It is therefore unsafe to accept without question general statements to the effect that the lex loci contractus governs as authority for the view that the place where the contract was in fact made—i. e., had its legal inception—will prevail over the lex loci solutionis, since there may have been no conflict between the two, or the court may even have employed the term "lex loci contractus" to describe the law of the place of performance.

A similar difficulty is experienced in treating individual cases as authority for the lex loci contractus as against the lex domicilii when, as frequently happens, the contract was made in the state where the married woman was domiciled, and the conflict is between the law of that state and the law of some other state where the action is brought, or perhaps where the contract is performable.

Another source of difficulty is the common failure of the courts to consider the possibility of a distinction as regards the governing law between the different elements or questions concerning a contract, and the tendency to refer the decision to a general principle of undoubted applicability to some questions in relation to contracts, but of doubtful application to the particular question under consideration. This tendency is further discussed in subd. II. b.

In determining the governing law of a married woman's contract it is sometimes necessary to observe a distinction between an original and independent contract and one which rests upon an earlier contract. For example, in Robison v. Pease (1902) 28 Ind. App. 610, 63 N. E. 479, a note having been given by a married woman to make good the default of the principal in a bond executed and performable in Ohio, by the law of which she was capable of binding herself as surety, it was held that the note could be enforced against her in Indiana, by the law of which a married woman was incapable of binding herself as surety, although it was made and performable in that state, and she was domiciled there. This was upon the ground that the bond was an Ohio contract, and was governed by the law of that state. It will be observed that the only ground upon which this result could have been avoided would have been to have taken the position that it would be contrary to the public policy of Indiana to enforce the contract against a married woman domiciled in that state. The result in this case is reducible to terms of the law of Indiana; that is, the decision may be expressed in the form that the note in question is valid by the law of Indiana, since it is in discharge of a liability accruing under a contract of another state which was valid by the law of that state, notwithstanding that, if the original contract had been an Indiana contract, it would have been invalid, and would have created no personal liability upon the part of the married woman, and would, therefore, have furnished no consideration for a new contract.

So, in Young v. Hart (1903) 101 Va. 480, 44 S. E. 703, the court observed that, even upon the assumption that the original consideration for a note given by a married woman in Pennsylvania, and payable in Kentucky, was an obligation of the husband, and by the law of either of those states she was incapable of binding herself by such an agreement as an original agreement, nevertheless, as the note was given in renewal of a previous note executed by her in Illinois, by the law of which state she was capable of so binding herself, she was liable on the note in suit, as she could have been sued upon the original note either in Pennsylvania or Kentucky, and a personal judgment recovered against her there, and the renewal of the note in Pennsylvania did not release her or lessen her liability.

These are merely illustrations of a not uncommon class of cases in which the result of the application of the proper law of the contract immediately before the court is affected by the character previously impressed upon one of the elements of that contract by the law of another state or country where it had its origin, and whence it came to the contract in suit. As shown in subd. III., the point is of especial importance in dealing with contracts in relation to real property.

The question as to where, under various circumstances, a contract will be deemed to have been made, depends upon considerations equally applicable to a large class of cases not coming within the subject of this note, and is therefore not discussed, although the decision on the point is incidentally indicated in connection with some of the cases.

The proper course to be pursued, including the presumptions to be indulged, when it is decided or assumed that the question of the married woman's capacity is governed by the law of a state or country other than that in which the court is sitting, but the content of that law is not proved or conceded, is also beyond the scope of the annotation, and is only referred to incidentally in connection with some of the cases. The point, of course, is not distinctive to the question under consideration.

II. Personal contracts.

a. As between lex loci contractus (or lex loci solutionis) and lex domicilii.

The distinction between applying lex domicilii as the general criterion of the contractual capacity of a married woman, and refusing upon the ground of public policy of the forum to enforce, against a married woman domiciled at the forum, a contract she was incapable of making according to the law of the forum, although capable by the law of the place where the contract was made, is discussed at the beginning of subd. II. d, 2, infra.

As shown infra, II. b, there is some difference of opinion as to whether the capacity of a married woman to contract is governed by the law of the place where the contract is made, or by the law of the place where it is performable, in the event of a conflict between the two. With the exception of Louisiana, however, the cases in this country are practically agreed that her capacity to make a personal contract is governed by the lex loci contractus (or possibly the lex loci solutionis), and not by the lex domicilii as such, whether she was capable or incapable by the former law. (As subsequently pointed out, in many cases cited in support of this statement the lex loci contractus and lex domicilii were the same; but it is apparent that the controlling feature was the place where the contract was made, or, at least, where it was performable, and not the domicil of the married woman.)

United States.—Bowles v. Field (1897) 78 Fed. 742; First Nat. Bank v. Mitchell (1899) 34 C. C. A. 542, 92 Fed. 565, reversing (1898) 84 Fed. 90.

Alabama.—Union Nat. Bank v. Hartwell (1887) 84 Ala. 379, 4 So. 156.

Connecticut.—Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Westervelt (1884) 52 Conn. 592.

Illinois.—Nixon v. Halley (1875) 78 Ill. 611; Forsyth v. Barnes (1907) 228 Ill. 326, 81 N. E. 1028, 10 Ann. Cas. 710.

Indiana.—Robison v. Pease (1902) 28 Ind. App. 610, 63 N. E. 479.

Iowa.—Nichols & S. Co. v. Marshall (1899) 108 Iowa, 518, 79 N. W. 282.

Kentucky.—Young v. Bullen (1897) 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1561, 43 S. W. 687.

Maine.—Bell v. Packard (1879) 69 Me. 105, 31 Am. Rep. 251; Bond v. Cummings (1879) 70 Me. 125.

Maryland.—Union Trust Co. v. Knabe (1914) 122 Md. 584, 89 Atl. 1106, 1116.

Massachusetts.—Milliken v. Pratt (1878) 125 Mass. 374, 28 Am. Rep. 241; Hill v. Chase (1886) 143 Mass. 129, 9 N. E. 30; Walling v. Cushman (1921) — Mass. —, 130 N. E. 175.

Mississippi.—Partee v. Silliman (1870) 44 Miss. 272; Bank of Louisiana v. Williams (1872) 46 Miss. 618, 12 Am. Rep. 319.

Missouri.—Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Simons (1893) 52 Mo. App. 357; F. B. Hauck Clothing Co. v. Sharpe (1900) 83 Mo. App. 385.

New Hampshire.—Hill v. Pine River Bank (1864) 45 N. H. 300; Brigham v. Gilmartin (1878) 58 N. H. 346.

New Jersey.—Thompson v. Taylor (1901) 66 N. J. L. 253, 54 L.R.A. 585, 88 Am. St. Rep. 485, 49 Atl. 544; Mayer v. Roche (1909) 77 N. J. L. 681, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 763, 75 Atl. 235.

New York.—Graham v. First Nat. Bank (1881) 84 N. Y. 393, 38 Am. Rep. 528; Miller v. Campbell (1893) 140 N. Y. 457, 35 N. E. 651; Union Nat. Bank v. Chapman (1902) 169 N. Y. 538, 57 L.R.A. 513, 88 Am. St. Rep. 614, 62 N. E. 672.

North Carolina.—Taylor v. Sharp

(1891) 108 N. C. 377, 13 S. E. 138; Armstrong v. Best (1893) 112 N. C. 59, 25 L.R.A. 188, 34 Am. St. Rep. 473, 17 S. E. 14 (applying exception).

Ohio.—Smith v. Frame (1889) 3 Ohio C. C. 587.

Pennsylvania.—Evans v. Cleary (1889) 125 Pa. 204, 11 Am. St. Rep. 886, 17 Atl. 440.

Tennessee.—Pearl v. Hansborough (1848) 9 Humph. 433; Robinson v. Queen (1889) 87 Tenn. 445, 3 L.R.A. 214, 10 Am. St. Rep. 690, 11 S. W. 38.

West Virginia.—Dulin v. McCaw (1894) 39 W. Va. 721, 20 S. E. 681.

In the following cases the contract was made at the domicil, so that there was no conflict between the lex loci contractus and the lex domicilii, the only conflict being between the lex loci contractus et domicilii, on the one side, and the lex fori, on the other; but the decisions are expressly put upon the ground that the lex loci contractus governs, and, so, may be regarded as some support for the principle that, as between the lex loci contractus and lex domicilii, the former governs,—at least, when the domicil is not at the forum. Nixon v. Halley (1875) 78 Ill. 611; Bond v. Cummings (1879) 70 Me. 125; Partee v. Silliman (1870) 44 Miss. 272; F. B. Hauck Clothing Co. v. Sharpe (1900) 83 Mo. App. 385; Hill v. Pine River Bank (1864) 45 N. H. 300; Thompson v. Taylor (1901) 66 N. J. L. 253, 54 L.R.A. 585, 88 Am. St. Rep. 485, 49 Atl. 544, reversing (1900) 65 N. J. L. 107, 46 Atl. 567; Evans v. Cleary (1889) 125 Pa. 204, 11 Am. St. Rep. 886, 17 Atl. 440.

In Dulin v. McCaw (1894) 39 W. Va. 721, 20 S. E. 681, where the place of the contract and of the domicil were the same, it was held that the coincidence was an additional reason for applying the lex loci contractus.

In the following cases, in accordance with the principle above stated, the law of the place (other than that of the domicil) where the contract had its legal inception was held to govern, notwithstanding that the contract was signed or assented to by the married woman at the domicil, and there left her hands, being delivered to the other contracting party through the mails, or by some third person:

United States. — First Nat. Bank v. Mitchell (1899) 34 C. C. A. 542, 92 Fed. 565, reversing (1898) 84 Fed. 90.

Indiana.—Robison v. Pease (1902) 28 Ind. App. 610, 63 N. E. 479.

Kentucky.—Young v. Bullen (1897) 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1561, 43 S. W. 687.

Massachusetts. — Milliken v. Pratt (1878) 125 Mass. 374, 28 Am. Rep. 241.

Maine.—Bell v. Packard (1879) 69 Me. 105, 31 Am. Rep. 251.

Missouri.—Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Simons (1893) 52 Mo. App. 357.

Ohio. — Smith v. Frame (1889) 3 Ohio C. C. 587.

New Hampshire.—Brigham v. Gilmartin (1878) 58 N. H. 346.

In Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Westervelt (1884) 52 Conn. 592, while there was no decision as between the law of the place where the contract had its legal inception by delivery, and the law of the place of performance, it was held that the law of one or the other of those places governed, and not the law of the domicil, although the completed contract was handed by the wife to her husband at the domicil, it being delivered by the husband to the other contracting party in another state.

In Freeman's Appeal (1897) 68 Conn. 533, 37 L.R.A. 452, 57 Am. St. Rep. 112, 37 Atl. 420, however, it was held that the validity of a guaranty of the payment of her husband's debt, performable in Illinois, executed by a married woman in Connecticut, and there delivered to her husband and mailed by him to Illinois to the other party, was governed by the law of Connecticut rather than that of Illinois, and was therefore invalid. The decision is upon the ground that, though whatever delivery there was took place in Illinois when the guaranty was there received, yet the effectiveness of that delivery depended upon the validity of the wife's act in constituting her husband agent for the purposes of the delivery, and that her attempt to confer such authority upon him in Connecticut was invalid. The court said that if the wife had been within the state of Illinois when she signed the guaranty, it might be that her personal presence would have so far made her a resident of that state as to subject her to its laws in respect to acts done within its jurisdiction. The decision in this case was disapproved by the circuit court of appeals in First Nat. Bank v. Mitchell (1899) 34 C. C. A. 542, 92 Fed. 565, supra.

In Union Nat. Bank v. Hartwell (1887) 84 Ala. 379, 4 So. 156, the court said that the general rule as to the capacity of a married woman to make contracts in respect to her separate personal property, when situated in a country other than that of the domicil of her husband, is that the law of the domicil of the husband governs unless the property, from its peculiar nature, necessarily has an implied locality, or unless the contract is made in the country where the property is situated. (Italics ours.) It will be observed that this case impliedly supports the lex loci contractus, as against the lex domicilii, when the two are opposed.

In Taylor v. Sharp (1891) 108 N. C. 377, 13 S. E. 138, in which the presumption was indulged that the married woman was domiciled in the state where the contract was made, the contrary not appearing, the court approved of the position taken in Milliken v. Pratt (1878) 125 Mass. 374, 28 Am. Rep. 241; that a contract which, by the law of the place, is recognized as lawfully made by a capable person, is valid everywhere, although the person would not, under the law of the domicil, be deemed capable of making it.

In Armstrong v. Best (1893) 112 N. C. 59, 25 L.R.A. 188, 34 Am. St. Rep. 473, 17 S. E. 14, it was also held that the lex loci contractus, rather than the lex domicilii, in general, furnishes the test of capacity, though, as subsequently shown (infra, II. d. 2), the circumstances of the case were held to bring it within an exception to that general principle. In Graham v. First Nat. Bank (1881) 84 N. Y. 393, 38 Am. Rep. 528, the court said, obiter, that the disability of coverture is to be determined by the rule of the place of the contract and performance.

As between the law of the place where a note and warrant of attorney are executed by a married woman, and the law of her domicile, the former governs as to her capacity to bind herself by such a contract. Forsyth v. Barnes (1907) 228 Ill. 326, 81 N. E. 1028, 10 Ann. Cas. 710. It was so held in this case, notwithstanding that the result was that the contract was held invalid, it being presumed, in the absence of proof of the law of Ohio, where the contract was made, that the common law, by which all contracts of a married woman are absolutely void, prevailed there. As already stated, the course to be followed or presumption to be indulged when proper foreign law is not proved is beyond the scope of the annotation.

In Nichols & S. Co. v. Marshall (1899) 108 Iowa, 518, 79 N. W. 282, the rule that the law of the place of the contract, rather than the law of the domicile, governs with respect to the capacity of a married woman to contract as surety, was applied so as to hold unenforceable in Iowa a contract of suretyship, made and to be performed in Indiana, by a married woman domiciled in Iowa, because she was incapable of contracting by the law of Indiana, notwithstanding that she was capable according to the law of Iowa.

In Pearl v. Hansborough (1848) 9 Humph. (Tenn.) 433, the principle was also applied so as to hold invalid a contract which, though valid by the lex domicilii, was invalid by the lex loci contractus, because of the married woman's lack of capacity. In this case, however, the domicile was not at the forum, as it was in the preceding case.

It is thus apparent that when, by the lex loci contractus, the contract would be invalid, the principle applies, and the contract is condemned without reference to whether the domicile is at the forum or not. As subsequently shown (II. d, 2), the fact, in that respect, may be important when it is sought to apply the principle to a contract, valid by the lex loci contractus, but invalid by the lex domicilii.

The status obtained by a married woman, while domiciled in Alabama, 18 A.L.R.—96.

by a decree of a chancery court in that state, relieving her of the disability of coverture as to her statutory, or other, separate estate, so far as to invest her with the right to buy, sell, hold, convey, and mortgage real and personal property, and to sue and be sued as a feme sole,—cannot be insisted on in Florida, after the removal of her domicile to that state, as to transactions had in Florida. Walling v. Christian & C. Grocery Co. (1899) 41 Fla. 479, 47 L.R.A. 608, 27 So. 46.

There are occasional expressions, even in cases not decided in England or Louisiana, that may seem to favor the lex domicilii over the lex loci contractus, or at least to intimate a doubt as to which is to prevail; but it will generally be found that no decision was made as to the point.

In Union Trust Co. v. Grosman (1917) 245 U. S. 412, 62 L. ed. 368, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 147, where a contract was made in Illinois by a married woman domiciled in Texas, the opinion by Mr. Justice Holmes suggests the possibility that even a court of Illinois might decide that a married woman could not lay hold of a temporary absence from her domicile to create remedies against her in that domicile that the law did not allow her to create, and therefore hold the contract was void, although it would not have been so if executed in Illinois by a married woman domiciled there. The decision, however, was upon the ground that it would be contrary to the public policy of Texas to enforce the contract, and that that public policy should be recognized by the Federal courts in a case brought in the Federal district court, sitting in Texas.

And in Hager v. National German-American Bank (1898) 105 Ga. 116, 31 S. E. 141, holding that a married woman, incapacitated by the law of her domicile from binding herself by a note, cannot be made liable on such a note because, though executed at the place of her residence, it is made payable in another state, by the law of which she is authorized to make such a contract, it will be observed that there was no conflict between the law of the place where the contract was made and that where the married woman was domiciled.

And the reason for applying the law of Alabama in Union Nat. Bank v. Chapman (1902) 169 N. Y. 538, 57 L.R.A. 513, 88 Am. St. Rep. 614, 62 N. E. 672, was not that the married woman was domiciled there, but that the note was an Alabama contract, it having been signed and delivered there, although payable in Illinois.

In Waldron v. Ritching (1870) 3 Daly (N. Y.) 288, the opinion was expressed that the New York statute permitting married women to carry on trade or business did not extend to contracts made in New York by married women domiciled in another state, where, presumptively, the common-law rule was in force. In this case, however, it was held that the contract was not made in New York, so that the question did not actually arise.

In Voight v. Brown (1886) 42 Hun (N. Y.) 394, the contract was made and the married woman was domiciled in New York, so that, as the court said, it was not necessary to decide whether the place of domicile or the place of contract should prevail.

In Wheeler v. Constantine (1878) 39 Mich. 62, 33 Am. Rep. 355, the decision was that a court of Michigan could not presume, in the absence of evidence to that effect, that there was anything in the law of Indiana, the domicile of a married woman, which would render void notes made by her and which were authorized by the law of Michigan; but the court said that it did not wish to be understood as intimating that the laws of Michigan would not govern the notes of a married woman made in that state, though she were domiciled in another state.

In Ritch v. Hyatt (1879) 3 Mac-Arth. (D. C.) 536, it is expressly held that a married woman's capacity to contract is to be determined by the lex domicilii rather than by the lex loci contractus. In this case the court applied the law of the District of Columbia (D. C.) 220, an action of replevin by the purchaser, it was held that the validity of a purchase of goods on credit by a married woman domiciled at Washington, from a merchant domiciled at New York, and her title to the goods purchased, depended upon the law of the District of Columbia. The court said that it was immaterial whether the transaction was in New York (where a married woman was enabled by statute to carry on business as a sole trader, and for that purpose to make contracts to a limited amount), or at Washington (where a married woman was incapable of purchasing goods on credit), since the New York statute related only to married women acting as sole traders in that state. There is an apparent inconsistency between the decision in this case, which applies the law of the District of Columbia to determine the capacity of the married woman, and the implication that the New York statute would have been applied if it had, in terms, covered a contract made in New York by a married woman domiciled elsewhere. Even if the New York statute had expressly covered such a case, its application by a court of the District must have proceeded on the principle that the capacity of a married woman is to be determined by the law of the place of the contract, rather than the law of the place of her domicile; and if so, it would seem that the law of New York must govern, whether there was a statute expressly applicable or not. There being no statute of New York applicable, it would seem that resort should have been had to the common-law rule in New York on the subject; and, as a matter of fact, the contract seems to have been held invalid upon common-law principles, though it was apparent that it would have been upheld if the enabling statute of the District had been held to cover such a case.

For reasons stated infra 11 2 6 and forum, she would be incapable of making, although she was capable by the law of the place where the contract was made and performable, are not authority for the lex domicilii as the general test, as against the lex loci contractus or lex loci solutionis.

Rule in Louisiana.

In Louisiana, contrary to the rule elsewhere in this country, the lex domicilii is held to prevail over the lex loci contractus (or lex loci solutionis) as regards the capacity of a married woman to contract. Le Breton v. Nouchet (1813) 3 Mart. (La.) 60, 5 Am. Dec. 736; Roberts v. Wilkinson (1850) 5 La. Ann. 369; Hyman v. Schlenker (1892) 44 La. Ann. 108, 10 So. 623; Baer Bros. v. Terry (1901) 105 La. 479, 29 So. 886; Garnier v. Poydras (1839) 13 La. 177; Marks v. Germania Sav. Bank (1903) 110 La. 659, 34 So. 725; Freret v. Taylor (1907) 119 La. 307, 121 Am. St. Rep. 522, 44 So. 26; First Nat. Bank v. Hinton (1909) 123 La. 1018, 49 So. 692; National City Bank v. Barringer (1918) 143 La. 14, 78 So. 134; Marks v. Loewenburg (1918) 143 La. 196, 78 So. 444; Lorio v. Gladney (1920) 147 La. 930, 86 So. 365.

In LeBreton v. Nouchet (1813) 3 Mart. La. 60, 5 Am. Dec. 736, the court said that according to the principles of the law of nations, "personal incapacities communicated by the laws of any particular place, accompany the person wherever he goes. Thus, he who is excused the consequences of contracts for want of age in his country cannot make binding contracts in another." This was said in discussing the question whether the property rights, as affected by the marriage in Mississippi of a minor domiciled in Louisiana, were to be determined by reference to the law of Louisiana or of Mississippi.

In Roberts v. Wilkinson (1850) 5 La. Ann. 369, the court seems to have been of the opinion that notes made and payable in Mississippi, by a married woman domiciled in Louisiana, would be held valid against her in Louisiana, notwithstanding that they would be invalid by the law of Mis-issippi. This position is referable only to the doctrine that the lex domicilii furnishes the test of capacity, and cannot be referred to the public policy doctrine, since, as subsequently shown (II. d) that doctrine only operates to invalidate contracts valid by the lex loci, but invalid by the lex fori; never to validate contracts invalid by the lex loci, but valid by the lex fori.

And it has been expressly declared that the capacity of a married woman domiciled in Louisiana to bind herself or her property by contract is determined by the law of her domicil. National City Bank v. Barringer (1918) 143 La. 14, 78 So. 134; Marks v. Loewenburg (1918) 143 La. 196, 78 So. 444; Lorio v. Gladney (La.), supra.

And the principle that the lex domicilii governs has been applied where the domicil was not in Louisiana.

Thus, in Garnier v. Poydras (1839) 13 La. 177, it was held that the capacity of a married woman to contract in Louisiana, without the assent of her husband, was to be determined by the law of France, their domicil, rather than the law of Louisiana, the lex loci contractus.

The statutes regulating the privileges and disabilities attaching to married women are purely domiciliary in their character, and, unless otherwise expressly declared, do not affect married women domiciled in another state. Hyman v. Schlenker (1892) 44 La. Ann. 108, 10 So. 623.

In Baer Bros. v. Terry (1901) 105 La. 479, 29 So. 886, the court, referring to the capacity of a married woman, said that the capacity to contract is tested by the law of the domicil. The note in question, in this case, was executed in Missouri by a woman domiciled in that state, but was payable in Louisiana. The court rejected the contention of counsel that, because the note was payable in Louisiana, the capacity of defendant to make it must be tested by the law of Louisiana, holding, as already stated, that the capacity must be tested by the law of Missouri, the domicil at the time the note was given, notwithstanding the fact that she subsequently became

It will be observed that the law of the place where the note was made and the law of the domicile were the same; but the decision is squarely put on the ground that the law of the domicile governs. The court cites, in support of this position, Rorer, Interstate Law, p. 263, but that author takes exactly the contrary position, holding that the capacity to contract as to all personal matters depends upon the law of the state or country where the transaction takes place, whether the subject-matter contracted about or involved be within the state or without. The decision, moreover, is obiter, since the action was not on the notes, but was to recover the purchase price of the property for which the notes were given.

In Marks v. Germania Sav. Bank (1903) 110 La. 659, 34 So. 725, declaring it to be settled in Louisiana that the laws of that state regarding the privileges and prescribing the disabilities of married women are "personal" statutes, purely domiciliary in character, and do not operate to the benefit of married women domiciled elsewhere than in Louisiana, it does not appear whether the contract in question was made in New York or Mississippi, in one or the other of which states the married woman was domiciled, or in Louisiana.

In Freret v. Taylor (1907) 119 La. 307, 121 Am. St. Rep. 522, 44 So. 26, an action against a married woman domiciled in Missouri, upon a lease of real property in New Orleans, it was held that, she having the right, under the law of her domicile, to enter into the contract as if a feme sole, her capacity to do so accompanies her wherever she may go, and her liability on such a contract is not extinguished by the fact that she may have exercised her legal right in another state. The court said: "Laws enacted by certain states for the protection of married women, by requiring the authorization of their husbands to their contracts, are personal statutes, and if, in the state where the parties have their domicile, such protective laws are not deemed necessary, but really more should be, it is not the duty of the states in which those parties may chance to temporarily sojourn to safeguard their rights or restrict their actions in a manner or to an extent other and different from what is provided for in the state of their domicile."

In First Nat. Bank v. Hinton (1909) 123 La. 1018, 49 So. 692, also declaring that the Louisiana statute imposing disabilities upon married women with respect to incurring obligations has no application to a married woman domiciled elsewhere, and entering into a contract to be executed in the state of her domicile, the court said that the contract sued on having been entered into in Mississippi, to be executed there by parties who were subject to the laws of that state, their rights were to be determined and enforced in accordance with the lex loci contractus. In this case, however, Mississippi was both the lex loci contractus and the lex domicilii.

Rule in England.

There is some doubt as to whether the English courts would refer the capacity of a married woman to enter into an ordinary mercantile contract of a personal nature to the lex domicilii or lex loci contractus. Dicey, in his "Conflict of Laws," p. 534, and Halsbury, in "Laws of England," vol. 6, p. 233 (under topic, "Conflict of Laws," 348), declaring that the general rule in England is that capacity to make a personal contract is governed by the law of the domicile (lex domicilii) of the contracting party; but state, though tentatively and doubtfully, and by way of exception, that one's capacity to bind one's self by an ordinary mercantile contract of a personal nature is probably governed by the law of the place where the contract is made (lex loci contractus) (Dicey, p. 538; Halsbury, pp. 233, 234), such a contract being distinguished from a contract of marriage or a marriage settlement (Halsbury, p. 238). There is in fact but little specific authority in the English cases as to the capacity of a married woman to bind herself by an ordinary mercantile contract of a personal nature. The conclusion of the text-writers on the subject is drawn mainly from cases not involving the capacity of a married woman to enter into a mercantile contract. In a footnote at page 534, Dicey observes that the authority of the dicta in favor of the lex domicilii had been a good deal shaken, not by the judgment, but by the dicta of the court of appeal in Ogden v. Ogden, L. R. [1908; C. A.] Prob. 46, 77 L. J. Prob. N. S. 34, 97 L. T. N. S. 827, 24 Times L. R. 94,—a case involving capacity to marry, and so not within the scope of the present annotation.

In Guepratte v. Young (1851) 4 DeG. & S. 217, 64 Eng. Reprint, 804, 5 Eng. Rul. Cas. 848, it was held that while the law of England, where a contract by a married woman was made, determined the form, the law of France, where she was domiciled, determined her capacity, and the contract was upheld in accordance with the law of France, as to capacity, although by the law of England she would be incapable of making such a contract.

b. As between lex loci contractus and lex loci solutionis.

As is shown by the opinion in the reported case (POOLE v. PERKINS, ante, 1509), there is a difference of opinion on the question whether the law of the place where the contract is made (lex loci contractus), or the law of the place where it is performable (lex loci solutionis), governs as to the capacity of a married woman to make a personal contract. The decision in that case that, conformably to the presumed intention of the parties, the question as to the capacity of the married woman was to be referred to the law of the place where the contract was performable (lex loci solutionis) rather than to the law of the place where the contract was made (lex loci contractus), she being capable by the former but incapable by the latter law, is, as shown in the opinion, supported by the decision in Mayer v. Roche (1909) 77 N. J. L. 681, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 763, 75 Atl. 235, upon a very similar state of facts. (The court in Union Trust Co. v. Knabe (1914) 122 Md. 584, 89 Atl. 1106, 1116, which is subsequently set out in this subdivision, questions the authority of the Mayer Case for this position, because the evidence in that case did not show where the note in question was delivered; but it seems clear that the court meant to apply the law of New York as the law of the place of performance, even upon the assumption that the note was delivered in New Jersey.)

Even if it had affirmatively appeared in Mayer v. Roche that the note in question, which was signed by a married woman in New Jersey, where she resided, was delivered in that state, and had its inception there as a binding contract, the law of New York as to the capacity of married women might, perhaps, have been properly applied, upon the ground that, defendant would be estopped to deny that the note was a New York contract, it being dated and payable in New York (see, on this point, Chemical Nat. Bank v. Kellogg, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 299, infra). It may be, however, that the other facts essential to the doctrine of estoppel did not appear. At all events, the decision applying the law of New York (it not appearing whether in fact the note was delivered in New York or New Jersey) was expressly put upon the ground that the intention of the parties as to the governing law controls, and that the presumption in that case was that the parties intended to contract with reference to the law of New York, by which a married woman is capable of making such a contract, rather than the law of New Jersey, by which she would be incapable. The presumption was undoubtedly properly indulged, if it be assumed that the intention of the parties, expressed or presumed, is the criterion of the governing law with respect to the capacity to contract. The correctness of that assumption, however, is open to grave doubt. There are but few cases which have directly involved and adjudicated the specific question.

The position of the reported case

POOLE v. PERKINS, ante, 1509), and Mayer v. Roche (N. J.) supra, is supported by two later decisions in New Jersey,—Basilea v. Spagnuolo (1910) 80 N. J. L. 88, 77 Atl. 531, and Basilea v. Spagnuolo (1910) 80 N. J. L. 92, 77 Atl. 532,—and by Fisk Rubber Co. v. Muller (1914) 42 App. D. C. 49, and Hammerstein v. Sylva (1910) 66 Misc. 550, 124 N. Y. Supp. 535, reversed on another point in (1910) 137 App. Div. 580, 122 N. Y. Supp. 276.

The principle which refers the question of the governing law to the presumed intention of the parties was applied in Basilea v. Spagnuolo (1910) 80 N. J. L. 88, 77 Atl. 531, by holding that a note dated and made payable in New Jersey, signed by the husband, payable to the order of his wife, a resident of New Jersey, and indorsed by her for his accommodation, and delivered by him to his creditors in New York, was presumably a New Jersey contract and governed by the law of that state, by which a married woman is incapable of becoming surety for her husband, in the absence of any evidence showing that the husband was authorized by the wife expressly or impliedly to pass away the note elsewhere than in New Jersey. In the companion case of Basilea v. Spagnuolo (1910) 80 N. J. L. 92, 77 Atl. 532, the law of New Jersey was applied to a note given under the same circumstances, except that it appeared in this case that the husband mailed the note in New Jersey, addressed to the plaintiffs in New York. It will be observed that in these cases the fact that the notes were dated and were payable in New Jersey, where the married woman resided, was deemed more persuasive of an intention to contract with reference to the law of New Jersey, than the fact that, by the law of New Jersey, the note was invalid, whereas, by the law of New York, it was valid, was persuasive of an intention to contract with reference to the law of New York.

Again in Fisk Rubber Co. v. Muller (1914) 42 App. D. C. 49, the law of the District of Columbia, by which a married woman is incapable of binding herself as surety, was applied to the contract in question, upon the ground that, in the circumstances, it was to be presumed that the parties intended to contract with reference to the law of the District where the contract was to be performed. It appeared in this case that one of the papers constituting the contract was signed by the sureties and their principal in the district, and that the other paper was signed by the obligee in Massachusetts. The court, however, did not undertake to decide whether the contract had its legal inception in the District or in Massachusetts, but, as already stated, referred the question of the governing law to the intention of the parties, notwithstanding that the question related to the capacity of the parties. The court invoked "the general principle that a contract is to be governed by the law with a view to which it is made; and this is a question of intention, to be deduced, when not expressly declared, from the place, terms, character, and purposes of the transaction;" and applied it without any consideration, or at least discussion, of the propriety of applying the principle to a matter like that in respect to the capacity of a married woman to contract, that goes to the question whether any contractual relation at all has been created. And it may be observed that none of the cases which it cites in support of the principle (Pritchard v. Norton (1882) 106 U. S. 124, 27 L. ed. 104, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 102; Hall v. Cordell (1891) 142 U. S. 116, 35 L. ed. 956, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 154; Coghlan v. South Carolina R. Co. (1891) 142 U. S. 101, 35 L. ed. 951, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 150; Croissant v. Empire State Realty Co. (1907) 29 App. D. C. 538) involved any question as to capacity of parties.

In Hammerstein v. Sylva (1910) 66 Misc. 550, 124 N. Y. Supp. 535, reversed on another point in (1910) 137 App. Div. 580, 122 N. Y. Supp. 276, the court was of the opinion that the contract of a married woman domiciled in the United States, to perform as an opera singer in the United States, was not governed by the law of France, where the contract was made, by which a married woman is incapable of binding herself by a contract without the consent of her husband. The court discussed at some length the question as to the governing law. While the fact that a married woman was domiciled in the United States seems to have had some influence, the court was apparently of the opinion that the law of the place of performance prevails over the law of the place where the contract is made, even in relation to the capacity to contract; especially where the contract is valid by the former law, but would be invalid by the latter law.

In Shacklett v. Polk (1875) 51 Miss. 378, a married woman residing in Tennessee, and owning separate estates, real and personal, both in Tennessee and Mississippi, executed in Tennessee a note to one whom she had appointed her agent to take charge of her cotton crop for the year on her plantation in Mississippi, in order to secure him for his services as such agent, and for advances and expenditures he might make in respect of the crop, pursuant to an agreement in that regard. It was held that, notwithstanding that, by the law of Tennessee, she was incapable of binding herself or her property in that state, the payee of the note was entitled to be reimbursed for so much of the amount thereof as was expended under the contract upon the property in Mississippi, and that such property was liable for its payment. The court declared that while the law of the place where the contract is made furnishes the rule for validity or invalidity, the rule is not inflexible, and if performance is to be made in another jurisdiction the parties may justly be presumed as referring to its law as the standard both of validity and construction. So far as appears, the note itself was payable in Tennessee, where it was made,—at least, it does not appear that it was payable in Mississippi; but it was given as a part of an agreement in respect of the property in Mississippi, and the court apparently regarded Mississippi as the place of performance of the contract as a whole.

Upon the other hand, the doctrine that the lex loci contractus prevails over the lex loci solutionis as to the capacity of a married woman to enter into a personal contract, or a contract in relation to personal property, irrespective of the intention of the parties, express or presumed, receives strong support from the decision of the Illinois supreme court in Burr v. Beckler (1914) 264 Ill. 230, L.R.A. 1916A, 1049, 106 N. E. 206, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 1132, reversing (1913) 182 Ill. App. 231, under title Burr v. Tobey. In that case the law of Florida was applied notwithstanding that, by that law, the married woman was incapable of binding herself by the contract, merely because the court deemed that her contract had its legal inception when she mailed the note and deed of trust in that state. Clearly the facts would have presented a very strong case for the application of the law of Illinois if, as in the reported case (POOLE v. PERKINS, ante, 1509), and Mayer v. Roche (1909) 77 N. J. L. 681, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 763, 75 Pac. 235, supra, the presumed intention of the parties had been regarded as the criterion, since the note was dated in that state, purported to be payable there [that the note was by its terms payable in Illinois appears from the report of the case in the appellate court, 182 Ill. App. 231], the parties were domiciled there, and the note was secured by a deed of trust upon real property there, and it was only by somewhat technical reasoning that the conclusion was reached that her contract was made in Florida rather than in Illinois. And again, if the presumed intention of the parties were to be regarded as the criterion of the governing law, the fact that the contract was invalid, tested by the law of Florida (lex loci contractus), but valid, tested by the law of Illinois (lex domicilii and lex solutionis), would be a very strong circumstance indicating an intention to contract with reference to the law of Illinois. At the close of the opinion the court said: "The law of the state of performance will govern in determining the rights of the parties and the effect of the contract, but if a party is not competent to make a contract, the contract is not valid and will not be enforced anywhere."

Burr v. Becker is, both as to its facts and its decision, very much like the case of Union Nat. Bank v. Chapman (1902) 169 N. Y. 538, 57 L.R.A. 513, 88 Am. St. Rep. 614, 62 N. E. 672, which is subsequently set out in this subdivision. As there suggested, it may be questioned whether, on the facts of the Chapman Case, it could not have properly been held that the married woman's contract was made in Illinois, where the note was first delivered, so as to be binding upon her. Possibly there may also be a similar question in the Burr Case. But, of course, this possibility merely strengthens the authority of these cases for the position that the law of the place where the contract is made governs, as against the law of the place where it is performable.

It will be observed that the decision in Chemical Nat. Bank v. Kellogg (1905) 183 N. Y. 92, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 299, 111 Am. St. Rep. 717, 75 N. E. 1103, 5 Ann. Cas. 158, that the law of New York governed an accommodation indorsement by a married woman, although the note left her hands in New Jersey, was not upon the ground that the question depended upon the intention of the parties, or that the lex loci solutionis prevails over the lex loci contractus, but upon the ground that the note being dated and payable in New York, by the law of which the indorsement was valid, and the note having been negotiated in that state, she was estopped, as against a bona fide purchaser, to show that her contract was made in New Jersey.

The view that the law of the place where the contract is made rather than the law of the place where the contract is performable governs as to the capacity of a married woman is also supported by Union Trust Co. v. Knabe (1914) 122 Md. 584, 89 Atl. 1106, where the law of New Jersey, by which a married woman is incapable of binding herself as surety or guarantor, was applied to a guaranty indorsed by a married woman, a resident of Maryland, upon the obligation of her husband to a trust company in New Jersey, delivered to her husband in Maryland, and taken by him to New Jersey, and there delivered to the trust company. While the question as to the governing law was thus made to turn upon the place where the contract was completed, notwithstanding that, by the law of that place, it was not binding, whereas it would have been, according to the law of Maryland, the court does not appear to have entirely repudiated the idea that the intention of the parties may, in some circumstances, affect the question of the governing law, even with respect to the capacity of the parties. A witness for the trust company testified that he wrote the note and indorsement, that the place of payment was not inserted in the note, and that the note was dated in Maryland for the purpose of making it payable in that state, and that the husband and his attorney agreed that the note and indorsement should be treated as a Maryland contract, and be delivered to him in Maryland for the purpose of avoiding the provision of the New Jersey law. This testimony, however, was not considered, for the reason that it appeared that the counsel for the husband did not represent the wife, and that he never saw her in regard to the matter. It would seem, however, even apart from this testimony, that if the presumed intention of the parties were to be regarded as the criterion, a strong case was made for the application of the law of Maryland, in view of the fact that the note appeared on its face to be dated there, and was actually delivered by the wife to her husband there, and was valid by the law of Maryland, but invalid by the law of New Jersey. This case, therefore, seems to lend considerable strength to the view that the intention of the parties—at least, the presumed intention—is not the criterion of the governing law in relation to the capacity of the parties, and that that question is to be determined by the law of the place where the married woman's contract is made; that is, the state in which it is finally delivered, so as to become binding upon her, if binding at all. It is to be conceded, however, that the effect, as support for this view, of the declaration of the court in that case that the law of the state in which the contract is made determines the capacity of the parties and the validity of the contract, is somewhat weakened by the fact that the court apparently does not differentiate the element of capacity from the elements which affect the essential validity and construction of the contract; as to which it must be admitted that the rule is subject to exception. The decision in Union Trust Co. v. Knabe (Md.) supra, was followed without discussion in Union Trust Co. v. Schlens (1914) 122 Md. 611, 89 Atl. 1116.

The soundness or unsoundness of the position taken in the reported case (POOLE v. PERKINS, ante, 1509), Mayer v. Roche (1909) 77 N. J. L. 681, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 763, 75 Pac. 235, supra, and the other cases cited above, that the capacity of a married woman to make a personal contract is, conformably to the presumed intention of the parties, to be referred to the law of the place where the contract is performable (lex loci solutionis), rather than to the law of the place where it is made (lex loci contractus), especially if she is capable by the former law, but incapable by the latter law, depends upon the broader question whether the principle which refers the governing law to the presumed intention of the parties is to be applied indiscriminately to all the elements of, or questions concerning, the contract, including those which, like that in regard to contractual capacity and that in regard to formal validity, go to the point whether any contractual relation in a legal sense has been created; or, on the other hand, is to be confined to those elements or questions which presuppose the existence of a contract in a legal sense, and are concerned with its essential validity, construction, or effect.

Although the judicial authority on the specific question now under annotation as to the contractual capacity of a married woman is about equally divided, if regard is had only to those cases which necessarily called for a choice between lex loci contractus, as such, and lex loci solutionis, as such, the doctrine of the reported case (POOLE v. PERKINS, ante, 1509), and Mayer v. Roche appears to be opposed to the view of most of the text-writers and to the assumption of the majority of the cases, at least, of those which discriminate between questions which, like that as to capacity to contract, go to the existence of a legal contract as distinguished from the construction, legal effect, or content of the obligation of a contract assumed to have a legal existence.

The court in the reported case (POOLE v. PERKINS), though repudiating the view which limits the scope of the principle that accepts the presumed intention of the parties as the criterion of the governing law, recognizes that some courts and text-writers have, in effect, placed such a limitation upon the principle by drawing a distinction in this regard between the different elements of or questions concerning the contract. In that respect the case differs from Mayer v. Roche (N. J.) supra, the decision in which it follows, as the opinion in the latter case merely invokes and applies the general principle, without apparently considering the possibility of a limitation or a distinction which would exclude from its operation, and refer to the lex loci contractus as a positive and fixed rule, a question like that in regard to contractual capacity, which goes to the point whether the act or transaction (e. g., the signing and delivery of a note) relied upon as creating a contract did, in a legal sense, have that effect. The principle invoked and applied by those cases is supported and exemplified by a multitude of cases. An examination of these cases, however, will disclose that in most of them the question involved did not relate to the capacity of the parties, or to any other matter touching the preliminary question of the existence of a contract, but involved either the obligation or interpretation of the contract, or the essential validity of particular provisions measuring the rights and duties of the parties, as distinguished from matters affecting the question whether the parties had been brought into contractual relations at all. One of the most prolific sources of confusion in the subject of the conflict of laws is the tendency of the courts, as well as text-writers, to state too broadly principles which they properly apply to a particular state of facts before them, and their failure to distinguish between the different elements or incidents of the contract. This is well illustrated by a comparison of the case of Scudder v. Union Nat. Bank (1876) 91 U. S. 406, 23 L. ed. 245, with the case of Liverpool & G. W. Steam Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co. (The Montana) (1889) 129 U. S. 397, 32 L. ed. 788, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 469. In the Scudder Case the question related to the formal validity of the contract, and the court declares, without any reference whatever to the intention of the parties, expressed or implied, the general rule that matters bearing upon the execution, the interpretation, and the validity of a contract, are determined by the law of the place where the contract was made, and that matters connected with its performance are regulated by the law prevailing at the place of performance. In the Montana Case the question related to the validity of a stipulation limiting the liability of a carrier, and the court declared generally, without expressly recognizing any distinction between the different elements of the contract, the general proposition that the nature, the obligation, and interpretation of a contract, are to be governed by the law of the place where it is made, unless the parties, at the time of making it, have some other law in view, thus apparently making the intention of the parties the criterion of the governing law as to all matters affecting its validity. A similar inconsistency, or at least ambiguity, is to be observed in Judge Story's treatment of the subject.

At § 280 (8th ed. p. 376) of Story on Conflict of Laws, he remarked that the rules already considered by him (referring apparently to chapter VIII., of which that section is a part) presuppose that the performance of the contract is to be in the place where it is made, either expressly or by tacit implication, and that where the contract is either expressly or tacitly to be performed in any other place, there the general rule is in conformity to the presumed intention of the parties that the contract, as to its validity, nature, obligation, and interpretation, is to be governed by the law of the place of performance. At § 102, page 170 (an earlier chapter), however, he declares, without making any reference to the general proposition just stated, that the law of the place where a contract is made will generally govern in respect to the capacity, state, and condition of persons. It is true, however, that in this connection he was discussing the question whether the lex domicilii or lex loci contractus governed, and, perhaps, did not have in mind any question as to conflict between lex loci contractus and lex loci solutionis, and it may be that his reference in § 280 to the rules already considered by him was intended to embrace the rule declared by him in § 102, so as to bring the question of capacity to contract, as well as matters relating to the nature and extent of the obligation or the essential validity of particular provisions, within the exception declared by him, when the contract is to be performed at some place other than that at which it was made. It may be noticed in this connection, however, that the only case (Andrews v. Pond (1839) 13 Pet. (U. S.) 65, 10 L. ed. 61) which Judge Story cited in support of the proposition laid down by him in § 280 involved a question of essential validity,—namely, the question of usury. The editor of the 8th edition cites a long list of cases in support of that general proposition, but in nearly, if not quite all, of them, the question before the court related either to the nature and extent of the obligation, or the essential validity of some particular stipulation.

The principle that accepts the intention of the parties, expressed or presumed, as the criterion of the governing law of the personal contract,—in some of its aspects, at least,—was originally incorporated into the common law by Lord Mansfield (opinion in Robinson v. Bland (1761) 1 W. Bl. 234, 96 Eng. Reprint, 129, 2 Burr. 1077, 97 Eng. Reprint, 717) and he apparently borrowed it from the civil law. The entire principle, at least in its relation to the question of validity, formal or essential, has been frequently attacked by writers upon this subject. The principle, however, is so well established, both in England and in this country,—as applied, at least, to the nature, extent, and content of the obligation of the parties, assuming the existence and formal validity of the contract, and also as to the essential validity of particular stipulations or provisions of the contract, measuring the extent of the reciprocal rights and duties of the parties, e. g., stipulations limiting the common-law liability of carriers and usury,—that, to this extent at least, it will probably survive the assaults upon it. Indeed, it may be doubted whether the criticisms of the principle are not in a large part based upon the assumption that the principle is applicable to the question of capacity of parties, formal validity, and other matters going to the very existence of a contract. At all events, those criticisms lose much of their force when the principle is confined within the limits just suggested, and matters like formal validity and capacity to contract, which relate to the existence of the contract in a legal sense, are excluded from its operation.

Dicey, who lends his full approval to the general principle that accepts the intention of the parties, expressed or presumed, as the criterion of the governing law with respect to the essential validity and the interpretation and obligation of the contract, declares generally that the formal validity of a contract is governed by the law of the place where it is made (lex loci contractus) (Dicey, Conf. L. p. 549), though he suggests tentatively the possibility that a contract made in one country, but intended to operate wholly in, and to be subject to the laws of, another, may be valid, even though not made in accordance with the local form, if it be made in accordance with the form required or allowed by the laws of the country where the contract is to operate, and subject to the law whereof it is made. As has been seen supra, I. a, he declares that the general rule in England refers the question of capacity to lex domicilii, but that, probably, capacity to bind one's self by an ordinary mercantile contract is governed by the law of the place where the contract is made. He does not, in this connection, suggest in either case that the rule is qualified by, or dependent upon, the intention expressed or presumed.

Minor (Conf. L. § 171) declares that it is apparent that the capacity of the parties to contract relates to the making of the contract, and that hence the lex celebrationis, which he here employs as a substitute for lex loci contractus, as meaning the law of the place where the contract is made, necessarily governs. He says: "The only law that can operate to create a contract is the law of the place where the contract is entered into (lex celebrationis). If the parties enter into an agreement in a particular state, the law of that state alone can determine whether a contract has been made. If, by the law of that state, no contract has been made, there is no contract. Hence, if, by the lex celebrationis, the parties are incapable of making a binding contract, there is no contract upon which the law of any other state can operate. It is void ab initio."

Wharton (Whart. Conf. L. § 401) apparently assumed that the principle that a contract made in one place, to be performed in another, is to be governed by the law of the place of performance, applies only to matters third edition of the last-mentioned work (Whart. Conf. L. § 427e), the writer of this note suggested that when the cases are scrutinized with reference to the particular matter or element of the contract involved, they seem to warrant the conclusion that matters that relate to the preliminary question whether a contract has been made, including the capacity of the party to contract and the formal validity of the contract, are governed by a fixed law which is independent of, and cannot be varied by, the intention of the parties; and that the intention, expressed or presumed, can be accepted as the criterion of the governing law only with respect to the reciprocal rights and duties of the parties thereunder, assuming the existence and formal validity of the contract. At §§ 427h and 427i he cites authority to support the conclusion that the general question as to the capacity, and the specific question as to the capacity, of a married woman, depend upon the law of the place where the contract is made, rather than upon the law of the place of performance. In this connection, however, he calls attention to the distinction between the capacity of a married woman to make a contract and her capacity to perform, and suggests that the law of the place of performance ought to prevail if it renders her incapable of doing the acts essential to the performance of a contract which she was capable of making according to the lex loci contractus.

It will be observed that the conclusions of these text-writers are opposed to the position taken in the reported case (POOLE v. PERKINS, ante, 1509), Mayer v. Roche (N. J.) supra, and the other cases above cited, that the principle which accepts the intention of the parties as the criterion of the governing law applies to the capacity of the parties to contract. That assumption is also opposed in an able opinion of Wallace, J., in Campbell v. Crampton (1880) 18 Blatchf. 150, 2 Fed. 417, which, although not on its facts within the only because the question was discussed upon the assumption, for the purposes of the point, at least, of a conflict between the lex loci contractus and lex loci solutionis, but also because of the clear distinction which the opinion makes with respect to the different elements or incidents of the contract as affecting the governing law. After alluding to the conflicting rules on the subject, mentioning specifically the rule that, in conformity with the presumed intention of the parties, the contract, as to its validity, nature, obligation, and interpretation, is to be governed by the law of the place of performance, if that differs from the law of the place where the contract is made, and the rules of the Scudder Case (1876) 91 U. S. 406, 23 L. ed. 245 (already alluded to), the opinion declares that, as to the capacity of parties to enter into a contract, it must be accepted as the general rule that the law of the place where the contract is made must be the test. He says: "Upon principle no reason can be alleged why a contract void for want of capacity of the party at the place where it is made should be held good because it provides that it shall be performed elsewhere, and nothing can be found in any adjudication or textbook to support such a conclusion. It is a solecism to speak of that transaction as a contract which cannot be a contract because of the inability of the persons to make it such. When the authorities which declare that the obligation, interpretation, nature, and validity of a contract made in one place, which is to be performed in another, are to be determined by the law of the place of performance, are examined, it will be found that the term 'validity' refers to the conditions of the contract, and the extent and nature of its obligation, as to which the agreement will be upheld or defeated, according to the sanctions or the prohibitions of the law of the place where the parties have located the transaction." It was accordingly held in this case that the capacity of a nephew and an engagement to marry was to be determined by the law of Alabama, where the contract was made, by which such a marriage would be incestuous and absolutely void, and by which, therefore, the parties had no capacity to enter into an agreement to contract such a marriage, even assuming that the contract to marry was to be performed in New York, and that by the law of New York such a marriage would not be void or voidable. The court was also of the opinion that Alabama was the place of performance as well as of the making of the contract, since, though they contemplated that the marriage should be performed in New York, they intended to live in Alabama; and further, that, apart from any other consideration, it would be contrary to the public policy of the forum to enforce such an agreement. Notwithstanding these alternative grounds for the decision, however, the case is valuable on the subject under annotation, because the court recognizes the vital point that the principle which refers contracts to the law of the place of performance, in conformity to the presumed intention of the parties, does not apply to all of the elements of the contract, and, specifically, does not apply to the formal validity of the contract, or to the capacity of the parties thereto. It will be observed that the court in this case holds that the law of the place where the contract is made governs as to the capacity, even if, according to that law, the parties are incapable, and according to the law of the place where the contract is to be performed, they would be capable. It is clear, therefore, that the court rejects altogether the intention of the parties as the criterion of the governing law in respect of capacity to contract.

The doctrine of the last case, that the question of contractual capacity is governed by the lex loci contractus, and is not affected by the presumed intention of the parties in that regard, is supported by Voigt v. Brown (1886) 42 Hun (N. Y.) 394, holding that the law of New York governed as to the capacity of a married woman domiciled in that state, to become a party to an accommodation note for her husband, it being found that the note was first delivered in New York, although signed in Connecticut, notwithstanding that the note by its terms was payable in Connecticut to the order of a firm of which her husband was a partner, and that, by the law of Connecticut, she would not be authorized to make such a contract. The court said: "We do not see how the place of performance in any way affects the capacity to contract. The law of the place of performance does not forbid her to perform, and, even if it did, that might not affect her capacity. Certainly when the law of this state says that a married woman may make a contract, neither her privilege to contract nor the rights of those with whom she contracts are to be taken away by the law of another state." The decision upon the facts in this case might be reconciled with the theory that the intention of the parties is the criterion even with respect to capacity, and therefore with Mayer v. Roche and POOLE v. PERKINS (reported herewith), since in this case the law of the place where the contract was made, which was applied, rendered the married woman capable of making the contract, and therefore, if the court had accepted the intention as the criterion, it might have indulged the presumption that she intended to contract with reference to that law rather than to the law of the place of performance, by which she would be incapable. As shown, however, the opinion clearly refers the result to the lex loci contractus as such, and by clear implication altogether excludes the intention of the parties as the criterion.

In United States v. Garlinghouse (1870) 4 Ben. 194, Fed. Cas. No. 15, 189, the married woman's contract was both made and performable in New York, but the doctrine that the lex loci contractus governs was laid down, and the court expressly said that the question of capacity depended upon the law of the place where the contract was made rather than upon the law of the place where it is, by its terms, to be performed; and further remarked that, in most of the cases that favor the lex loci solutionis, the obligation or legal effect of the engagement, rather than the capacity of the parties, was in controversy.

Again, in Pickering v. Fisk (1834) 6 Vt. 102, the court said that "the capacity or legal competency of the parties to contract is governed by the law of the place where the contract is made. To this there may be an exception in the case of two citizens of the same community who may be transiently in a foreign country, contracting there with each other, and seeking to enforce the contract in their domestic courts." The court refers to Thompson v. Ketcham (1809) 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 285, and states that the decision was afterwards overruled in (1811) 8 Johns. 189, 5 Am. Dec. 332, and adds again: "It is difficult to perceive how the competency of a party to enter into a contract can be made to depend upon the particular place where it is to be performed." Although the question of contractual capacity was not involved in this case, the opinion is especially valuable for the reason that it recognizes the distinctions between the various parts and elements of the contract, and refers the capacity and formal validity to the lex loci contractus, and interpretation, requirements, and effect of the contract, as well as the time, mode and manner of performance, and its validity, so far as the validity depends upon the legality of performance, to the lex loci solutionis. It may be noted in this connection, however, that the reversal in 8 Johns. 189, of the decision in Thompson v. Ketcham (1809) 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 285 (referred to in the last case), can hardly be said to detract from the effect of the first decision as authority for referring the question of capacity to the law of the place of performance, since the reversal was for error in the admission of parol testimony to show that the note, which was made in Jamaica, was payable in New York; and Kent, Ch. J., who wrote the opinion upon the second appeal, seems to have assumed that the law of New York would have governed if the note had been made expressly payable there, for he said: "The lex loci is to govern unless the parties had in view a different place by the terms of the contract." In that case, however, the defense was infancy, and it would seem that there might very well be a distinction between the defense of coverture and the defense of infancy, as bearing on the governing law, since coverture, if it affects the contract at all, ordinarily renders it void, so that in effect no contractual relation at all is created, whereas an infant's contract is at most only voidable, and not void. The defense of infancy, therefore, seems to relate to the question of the obligation or essential validity of a contract assumed to have a legal existence, rather than to the preliminary question whether any contract has in a legal sense been brought into existence. This, however, is only referred to incidentally, and for the purpose of calling attention to the possibility of a distinction, and the question as to the governing law as to infancy is not intended to be covered herein.

The doctrine of the reported case (POOLE v. PERKINS, ante, 1509) and Mayer v. Roche (1909) 77 N. J. L. 681, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 763, 75 Pac. 235, is also directly opposed by Hager v. National German American Bank (1898) 105 Ga. 116, 31 S. E. 141, holding that a married woman who executed a note at her place of residence, in Tennessee, by the law of which she was incapable of contracting, could not be held liable thereon, even if it were to be assumed that by the law of Minnesota, where the note was expressly made payable, she would be capable. As a matter of fact, there being no proof of the law of Minnesota, it was presumed that the common law, by which she would be incapable, also prevailed in that state. It is clear, however, that the decision would have been the same even if it had been proved that the disability of coverture had been removed by statute in that state. The court said: "If a person, having capacity to contract under the laws of the state of his domicil, there executes a contract to be performed elsewhere, its validity and effect would generally be governed by the law of the place where the contract was to be performed. We do not think, however, that the laws of the place of performance of a contract can be called to the aid of a person who is seeking to enforce as a contract something which is absolutely void at the place where it was executed. If the instrument was void as a contract in Tennessee, it is void everywhere."

In Union Nat. Bank v. Chapman (1902) 169 N. Y. 538, 57 L.R.A. 513, 88 Am. St. Rep. 614, 62 N. E. 672, the law of Alabama, by which a married woman is incapable of becoming a surety for her husband, was applied to a note which she signed as such surety and delivered to the payee in that state, although, as against the other makers, the note had no inception until its negotiation in Illinois, where, by its terms, it was payable, and by the law of which she would have been bound. The decision is upon the ground that the contract of the surety was completed as soon as her signature was affixed and the instrument delivered to the payee, she not having authorized it to be discounted in Illinois, or known that it was the intention to negotiate it there, and it not appearing that she clearly understood and intended that her contract should be governed by the law of Illinois. The correctness of this decision, so far as it holds that her contract was to be deemed to have been made in Alabama, where the instrument was signed by her and delivered to the payee, rather than by the law of Illinois, where it had its inception as a binding obligation, may, perhaps, be doubted, but that question is, of course, not within the scope of this note. It will be observed, however, that the court applied the law of the state in which it held that her contract was made, as against the law of the place where the contract was by its terms performable, notwithstanding that the former law rendered the contract void, whereas by the latter it would have been valid. The opinion, however, as already indicated, does apparently recognize that the result might have been otherwise if it could be fairly said that she intended her contract to be governed by the laws of Illinois; but apparently the real significance of the intention, in the mind of the court was in its bearing on the question as to the place where her contract was to be deemed to have been made, the idea apparently being that her contract would be regarded as made in Illinois if she had known that the paper was to be discounted there. The opinion expressly refers the decision to the first rule of the Scudder Case, namely, that "all matters bearing upon the execution, the interpretation, and the validity of contracts, including the capacity of the parties to contract, are determined by the law of the place where the contract is made."

In Taylor v. Sharp (1891) 108 N. C. 377, 13 S. E. 138, the court applied the law of New York, by which the married woman was capable of contracting, to a note made in that state, without making any reference to the law of Maryland on the point, although the note was payable in that state. It does not appear from the opinion, however, whether she would have been capable by the law of Maryland or not; so that it is not clear that the court had in mind the case of a conflict between the lex loci contractus and lex loci solutionis. The court, however, said that if a contract is valid by the law of the place where it is made, it is valid everywhere.

In First Nat. Bank v. Shaw (1902) 109 Tenn. 237, 59 L.R.A. 498, 97 Am. St. Rep. 840, 70 S. W. 807, where a note was signed by a married woman in Tennessee, payable in Ohio, the court said the first question to be determined was whether, upon the facts found, it was a Tennessee or an Ohio contract, and held that it was an Ohio contract, apparently because, bring the case within the exception, with reference to contracts contrary to the public policy of the forum, to the rule that the lex loci contractus, rather than the lex domicilii, furnishes the test of capacity. The court said in this connection: "It is possible, also, that, in a state where the common law prevails in full force, by which a married woman was deemed incapable of binding herself by any contract whatever, it might be inferred that such an utter incapacity, lasting throughout the joint lives of husband and wife, must be considered as so fixed by the settled policy of the state for the protection of its own citizens that it could not be held by the courts of that state to yield to the law of another state in which she might undertake to contract." The court held, however, under the circumstances, that there was no reason of public policy which should prevent the maintenance of the action, because, although at the time the guaranty was made the law of Massachusetts did not authorize a married woman to make contracts of that kind, yet even then she had a very extensive power to bind herself by contract, and that power had been extended at the time of the commencement of the action so as to cover guaranty contracts.

In Thompson v. Taylor (1900) 65 N. J. L. 107, 46 Atl. 567, the New Jersey supreme court held that it was contrary to the public policy of New Jersey to enforce a contract of suretyship by a married woman domiciled in New Jersey, although the contract was made in another state, by the law of which it was valid. But when the same case afterwards came before the court of errors and appeals (1901) 66 N. J. L. 253, 54 L.R.A. 585, 88 Am. St. Rep. 485, 49 Atl. 544), the latter court took the contrary position, and declared that the New Jersey statute regulating the right of married women to make contracts of suretyship was not the declaration of public policy that closes the courts of New Jersey to rights of action arising in other jurisdictions where the law is different. This is doubtless in accordance with the trend of the cases, although the question as to when, upon principles of comity, a court of one jurisdiction will enforce a contract which, so far as the substantive rights of the parties are concerned, is properly governed by the law of another jurisdiction, is peculiarly one for the courts of the forum, and the decisions of the courts of other jurisdictions on this point have rather less than the ordinary value of foreign decisions as precedents.

In Law v. Smith (1904) 68 N. J. Eq. 81, 59 Atl. 327, the court, on the authority of Thompson v. Taylor (1901) 66 N. J. L. 253, 54 L.R.A. 585, 88 Am. St. Rep. 485, 49 Atl. 544, held that a contract made in New York by a married woman domiciled in New Jersey was enforceable in a court of the latter state, notwithstanding that, by the law of that state, she would be incapable of making the contract.

In Brigham v. Gilmartin (1878) 58 N. H. 346, where a contract, made in Massachusetts, was held to be enforceable in New Hampshire, the domicil of the married woman, the court said that the Massachusetts liability of the defendant to pay for the property she bought there is not in conflict with the New Hampshire law of married women, or hostile to New Hampshire interests, or contrary to good morals.

In Case v. Dodge (1894) 18 R. L. 661, 29 Atl. 785, it was held that a purchase of goods by a married woman in Massachusetts, being valid according to the law of that state, was enforceable in Rhode Island, although, at the time it was made, it would not be valid according to the law of the latter state. It does not appear in this case whether the married woman was domiciled in Rhode Island or Massachusetts. At the time the action was brought, such a contract would have been valid even according to the law of Rhode Island. The court takes the general position that if a contract is valid by the law of the place where it was made, an action upon it in another forum will be sustained, unless the contract contravenes the law or policy of that forum. It is obvious that the court here distinguishes between a contract which is contrary to by the lex loci solutionis, is persuasive of an intention to contract with reference to the former. It is, therefore, difficult to say what the result would have been if the circumstances had been reversed, and the contract had been invalid by the law of Illinois, where it was made, and valid by the law of the place where it was payable.

That ordinarily the capacity of a married woman is to be determined by the law of the place where her contract was deemed to have been made, rather than by the law of the place of performance, seems to be assumed both in Freeman's Appeal (1897) 68 Conn. 533, 37 L.R.A. 452, 57 Am. St. Rep. 112, 37 Atl. 420, and in First Nat. Bank v. Mitchell (1899) 34 C. C. A. 542, 92 Fed. 565, though they reached contrary results on the same state of facts. In those cases it appeared that a guaranty signed by a married woman in Connecticut, by the law of which she was incapable of executing it, was delivered in Connecticut to her husband, and through his agency was delivered to the other party in Illinois, which, in the Federal case, was stated to be the place of payment, and in the state court was assumed, for the purposes of this point, at least, to be the place of performance. It was assumed or found in both cases that the contract was made in Illinois, where it was delivered to the other party; but the state court was of the opinion that the contract was invalid, because the agency of the husband to deliver it was attempted to be created in Connecticut, and that, by the law of that state, the wife had no capacity to create such an agency. The Federal circuit court took a contrary position, holding that the law of Illinois, where the contract was made, i. e., was delivered, governed the same as if it had been personally delivered by her in that state. (Though not material for the purposes of this discussion; it may be remarked that the decision of the Federal court was reversed in (1901) 180 U. S. 471, 45 L. ed. 627, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 418, on the ground that the decision of the state court was res judicata. The Supreme Court, however, was not called upon to pass upon the question as to the governing law, as an independent question.)

When the case of Wood v. Wheeler was first before the North Carolina supreme court ((1890) 106 N. C. 512, 11 S. E. 590), a note executed by a married woman was held void, in accordance with the law of North Carolina, upon the assumption that the note was executed in that state; but when the case again came before the court ((1892) 111 N. C. 231, 16 S. E. 418) it appeared that the note was executed in South Carolina, and it was held valid, in accordance with the law of that state. It will thus be observed that the result varied with the finding as to the place where the contract was made, and there is no mention of the law of the place of performance. Still, as no place of payment was expressly named, the place of payment would be presumably determined by the place where the contract was made, so that, upon either assumption as to the place where the contract was made, there would perhaps be no conflict between the lex loci contractus and lex loci solutionis. (Although the point is not within the scope of this note, it may be observed, by way of explanation of the result in this case, that the married woman was domiciled in South Carolina at the time of the contract, and apparently for that reason did not come within the doctrine of the other North Carolina cases, referred to, refusing, on the ground of public policy, to enforce such a contract against a married woman domiciled in North Carolina, even though valid by the law of the place where it was made. The court, however, did not discuss the question of public policy in the Wood Case.)

In Huey's Appeal (1853) 1 Grant, Cas. (Pa.) 51, involving the law governing defense of infancy, the court said that the general rule is that, in regard to questions of minority or majority, or incapacities incident to coverture and other personal qualities and disabilities, the law of the place where the contract is made or the act done furnishes the rule. The good morals? We can give no answer to that consistent with respondent's position. It is considered there is none, and that the proposition under consideration must be answered in the affirmative. The decision appealed from is erroneous. The contract of respondent must be held as valid and enforceable here as in the place where it was made."

But in Union Trust Co. v. Grosman (1917) 245 U. S. 412, 62 L. ed. 368, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 147, the court, upon general principles, took the view that it would be contrary to public policy to enforce in Texas a guaranty by a married woman, void according to the law of that state, although it was made while she was temporarily in Illinois, by the law of which state it was valid; and that a Federal court sitting in Texas should enforce that public policy by refusing to render a judgment to enforce the guaranty.

It is a prerogative of the sovereignty of every country to define the conditions of its members, not merely its resident inhabitants, but others temporarily there, as to capacity and incapacity. But capacity and incapacity as to acts done in a foreign country, where the person may be temporarily, will be recognized as valid, or not, in the forum of his domicile, as they may infringe, or not, its interests, laws, and policies. Bank of Louisiana v. Williams (1872) 46 Miss. 618, 12 Am. Rep. 319.

And in Hanover Nat. Bank v. Howell (1896) 118 N. C. 271, 23 S. E. 1005, it was held, following the decision in Armstrong v. Best (1893) 112 N. C. 59, 25 L.R.A. 188, 34 Am. St. Rep. 473, 17 S. E. 14, that a married woman, domiciled in North Carolina, could not be held liable on a note signed as surety for her husband in North Carolina, although it was payable in New York, according to the law of which she was capable of making such a contract. This decision was on the ground that it would be contrary to the public policy of North Carolina to enforce such a contract against one of its own citizens. In this case it is true that the lex loci contractus and domicil had not been at the forum, the court would, perhaps, have applied the law of the place of performance, upon the ground that, as between the law of the place where a contract is made and that where it is to be performed, the latter should govern, if it does not violate the public policy of the forum.

So, in Hayden v. Stone (1880) 13 R. I. 106, holding that an action could not be maintained in Rhode Island upon a note made in Massachusetts by a married woman then domiciled there, the court said: "And a contract valid by the laws of one state cannot be enforced in another, unless such a contract, made between its own citizens, could be enforced there; or, in other words, it depends on the lex fori." It was said in the subsequent case of Brown v. Browning (1886) 15 R. I. 422, 2 Am. St. Rep. 908, 7 Atl. 403, however, that the court did not, in the former case, mean to make a rule as broad as the language above quoted might imply, and that the reasoning of the court in the former case did not go to the validity of the contract, but to the remedy sought, which is always subject to the lex fori. In Brown v. Browning a contract made in Connecticut after sunset on Sunday, being valid according to the law of that state, was held to be enforceable in Rhode Island, notwithstanding that it would have been invalid if made in the latter state. The case is distinguished from Hayden v. Stone on the ground that the enforcement of the contract violated no law of remedy in force in Rhode Island.

In Robinson v. Queen (1889) 87 Tenn. 445, 3 L.R.A. 214, 10 Am. St. Rep. 690, 11 S. W. 38, holding that a note executed by a married woman as surety in a state where she resides and the note is payable, if valid in that state, may be enforced in Tennessee, the court said that if the suit were against a married woman, a citizen of Tennessee, on a contract made out of the state, there would be much force in the insistence of counsel that, inasmuch as it was the fixed policy of Tennessee to throw around married between the lex loci contractus and the lex loci solutionis, the conflict being between the lex loci contractus on one side, and the lex domicilii or lex fori, on the other. As these cases, however, describe the governing law so far as the substantive rights of the parties are concerned (aside from any question of public policy of the forum) in terms of the law of the place where the contract is made, without referring to the intention of the parties, they carry, perhaps, by their cumulative effect, some implication in favor of the lex loci contractus as against the lex loci solutionis, in case of a conflict between the two, although they cannot, of course, be regarded as full authority on the point:

United States. — Bowles v. Field (1897) 78 Fed. 742, (1897) 83 Fed. 886.

Arkansas. — Lawler v. Lawler (1913) 107 Ark. 70, 153 S. W. 1113; Shane v. Dickson (1914) 111 Ark. 353, 163 S. W. 1140.

Connecticut. — Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Westervelt (1884) 52 Conn. 592.

Illinois. — Nixon v. Halley (1875) 78 Ill. 611; Burchard v. Dunbar (1876) 82 Ill. 450, 25 Am. Rep. 334.

Indiana. — Robinson v. Pease (1902) 28 Ind. App. 610, 63 N. E. 479.

Iowa. — Nichols & S. Co. v. Marshall (1899) 108 Iowa, 518, 79 N. W. 282.

Kentucky. — Gibson v. Sublett (1885) 82 Ky. 596.

Maine. — Bell v. Packard (1879) 69 Me. 105, 31 Am. Rep. 251; Bond v. Cummings (1879) 70 Me. 125.

Massachusetts. — Milliken v. Pratt (1878) 125 Mass. 374, 28 Am. Rep. 241; Hill v. Chase (1883) 143 Mass. 129, 9 N. E. 30.

Missouri. — Ruhe v. Buck (1894) 124 Mo. 178, 25 L.R.A. 178, 46 Am. St. Rep. 439, 27 S. W. 412.

New Jersey. — Bradley v. Johnson (1884) 46 N. J. L. 271.

Pennsylvania. — Evans v. Cleary (1889) 125 Pa. 204, 11 Am. St. Rep. 886, 17 Atl. 440.

Rhode Island. — Case v. Dodge (1894) 18 R. I. 661, 29 Atl. 785.

Tennessee. — Pearl v. Hansborough (1848) 9 Humph. 433.

Texas. — Merrielles v. State Bank (1893) 5 Tex. Civ. App. 483, 24 S. W. 564.

Vermont. — Holmes v. Reynolds (1883) 55 Vt. 39.

West Virginia. — Wick v. Dawson (1896) 42 W. Va. 43, 24 S. E. 587. (The statement in the headnote of the last case, intimating that the lex loci solutionis might govern, does not appear in the opinion itself.)

In some instances even such an intimation as may be gathered from the terms in which the governing law is identified is lacking, and the decision is simply referred, as in Young v. Hart (1903) 101 Va. 480, 44 S. E. 703, to the general proposition that the contract of a married woman, valid where made and to be performed, is valid everywhere, subject to the public policy of the forum; or the governing law is described by the name of the state which was in fact both the locus contractus and locus solutionis (see Walker v. Arkansas Nat. Bank (1919) 167 C. C. A. 273, 256 Fed. 1; Young v. Bullen (1897) 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1561, 43 S. W. 687; Law v. Smith (1904) 68 N. J. Eq. 81, 59 Atl. 327; Benton v. German-American Nat. Bank (1895) 45 Neb. 850, 64 N. W. 227; Adams v. Honness (1872) 62 Barb. (N. Y.) 326); or, as in Farmers State Bank v. Butler (1917) 101 Neb. 635, 164 N. W. 563, the contract is merely described as a contract of a certain state ("Minnesota contract" in that instance), and so governed by the law of that state.

In Barbee v. Bevins (1917) 176 Ky. 113, 195 S. W. 154, where a married woman residing in Kentucky indorsed notes in that state, and gave the same to her husband, who delivered them to the plaintiff in West Virginia, they being also by their terms payable in the latter state, the decision, referring the question of her capacity to the law of West Virginia, by which she was bound, rather than to the law of Kentucky, by which she would not be bound, was upon the ground that the contract was not consummated until the note was delivered in West Virginia, where it was also payable, and the contract was both made and to be performed in that state. There was in this case no necessity for choosing between the lex loci contractus and the lex loci solutionis, and no intimation as to which would prevail in case of a conflict.

Upon the other hand, there are some cases involving the capacity of a married woman to contract, but not involving any actual conflict between the lex loci contractus and lex loci solutionis, which contain general statements implying that the intention of the parties is the criterion, or that the lex loci solutionis is the governing law, apart from objections based on public policy of forum. See Griswold v. Golding (1887) 8 Ky. L. Rep. 777, 3 S. W. 535; Bank of Louisiana v. Williams (1872) 46 Miss. 618, 12 Am. Rep. 319; Partee v. Silliman (1870) 44 Miss. 272; Thompson v. Taylor (1901) 66 N. J. L. 253, 54 L.R.A. 585, 88 Am. St. Rep. 485, 49 Atl. 544; and International Harvester Co. v. McAdam (1910) 142 Wis. 114, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 774, 124 N. W. 1042, 20 Ann. Cas. 614.

And in Dalton v. Murphy (1855) 30 Miss. 59, a deed of trust executed by a married woman in Alabama, of slaves, who, at the time, were in Mississippi, was held invalid, because not executed in the manner prescribed by the law of the latter state with reference to the execution of contracts by married women, the decision apparently being on the ground that Mississippi was the place of performance, or the situs of the property.

In Robinson v. Queen (1889) 87 Tenn. 445, 3 L.R.A. 214, 10 Am. St. Rep. 690, 11 S. W. 38, involving the capacity of a married woman, the court said that it is well settled that the validity of a contract, the obligation thereof, and the capacity of the parties thereto, is to be determined by the lex loci contractus (in the sense of the place of performance), with the exception as to the public policy of the forum; but in this case also the contract was made and performable in the same state, so that there was no conflict between the law of the place where it was made and that of the place where it was performable.

In Baum v. Birchall (1892) 150 Pa. 164, 30 Am. St. Rep. 797, 24 Atl. 620, involving the capacity of a married woman to execute a bond secured by a mortgage on land in Delaware, the court said that, if it were to be conceded that the bond and mortgage were executed in Pennsylvania, yet it appears on their face that they were to be performed in Delaware, where the land was located, and the general rule in such cases is that the instrument is governed, as to its nature, obligation, and interpretation, by the laws of the place where it is to be performed. In this case, however, it was found that the bond was delivered in Delaware, so that there was no conflict between the lex loci contractus and lex loci solutionis; and, besides, the court was of the opinion that, in any event, the law of Delaware, as the lex rei sitæ would govern. See infra, III.

In Dulin v. McCaw (1894) 39 W. Va. 721, 20 S. E. 681, the court states that, where there are conflicting laws, more or less favorable, respecting capacity, that law may be preferred by which the capacity is enlarged. Here again, however, there was no conflict between the lex loci contractus and lex loci solutionis.

The decision in Walling v. Cushman (1921) 238 Mass. 62, 130 N. E. 175, referring the capacity of a married woman to indorse notes which were dated at Denver, Colorado, and by their terms were payable there, to the law of Colorado, by which she was capable of making the indorsements, rather than to the law of Michigan (her domicile), by which she was incapable,—was on the alternative grounds, first, that there was a presumption, both at common law and under the Negotiable Instruments Law, that the indorsement was made in Colorado, where the notes were dated; and, second, that apart from such presumption, she would be estopped to set up the claim that it was made in Michigan. (citing in this connection Chemical Nat. Bank v. Kellogg (1905) 183 N. Y. 92, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 299, 111 Am. St. Rep. 717, 75 N. E. 1103, 5 Ann. Cas. 158). It may be noted that although the opinion states that the notes were "discounted" in Michigan, it also states that it did not clearly appear that the obligation of the intestate (married woman) first became complete by the delivery of the notes in Michigan. The court, in the course of its opinion, stated that, as a general rule, the contract of indorsement, being a new and separate one, is determined by the law of the place where the contract of indorsement is made; that is, where it takes effect by delivery; but that this general rule is not applicable when it appears from the special circumstances that the parties intended otherwise. It did not specifically apply that qualification to the question of capacity, although that was the question involved. As has been shown, however, the decision was upon another ground.

While there are almost numberless cases which state, with slight variations, Story's general proposition that, where the contract is either expressly or tacitly to be performed in some place other than that where it is made, the general rule is, in conformity to the presumed intention of the parties, that the contract, as to its validity, nature, obligation, and interpretation, is to be governed by the law of the place of performance, none of them can be regarded as express authority for the application of that rule to the question of the capacity of a married woman to contract. Few of them can be relied upon for the application of that rule to any question relating to the existence of a contract as distinguished from its interpretation, or obligation, or essential validity. See, however, Brown v. Gates (1903) 120 Wis. 349, 97 N. W. 221, 98 N. W. 205, 1 Ann. Cas. 85, holding that the validity of a note (made in New York and payable in Massachusetts), as affected by the fact that it was made on Sunday, was to be determined not by the law of the place where the note was made and delivered (New York), but by the law of the place where it was payable (Massachusetts), notwithstanding that, by that law, the note was rendered void, whereas, so far as the contrary appears, it would not have been void by the law of the place where it was made.

This case is, of course, beyond the scope of the annotation, and is referred to here merely as an illustration of what seems to the annotator the obvious fallacy of applying the general principle which accepts the intention of the parties as the criterion of the governing law, without regard to the nature of the particular question involved, or recognition of the essential differences in the nature of the various questions as regards the governing law. In this case the result was to refer the effect of an act done on Sunday to the law of the place of performance, rather than to the law of the place where the act itself was done. In Mayer v. Roche (1909) 77 N. J. L. 681, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 763, 75 Pac. 235, supra, the result was to refer to the law of the place of performance the effect of an act done by a married woman, which, by the law of the place where it was done, had no legal effect. The failure of the courts in such cases to consider the possibility of a distinction in this regard detracts seriously from their value as precedents.

c. As between lex loci contractus (or lex loci solutionis or lex domicilii) and lex situs.

This subdivision is, of course, concerned only with the distinctive question of capacity to contract in respect of personal property, as affected by the fact that one is a married woman; and the choice as between lex loci contractus (or the possible alternatives, lex loci solutionis or lex domicilii) and lex situs as regards other questions common to contracts by married women and other persons—e. g., validity and effect as against creditors—is beyond its scope.

Subject to the exception that a court of a state in which personal property is found may refuse to enforce or give effect to a contract of a married woman which, by the lex loci contractus (or lex loci solutionis or lex domicilii) she was capable of making, upon the ground that it would be contrary to the public policy of the former state (see infra, H. d, 2), the lex loci contractus (or lex loci solutionis or lex domicilii) will prevail over the lex situs as to the capacity of a married woman to contract in relation to personal property.

In Union Nat. Bank v. Hartwell (1887) 84 Ala. 379, 4 So. 156, the court said that the general rule is that the capacity of a married woman to make contracts in respect to her separate personal property, when it is situated in a country other than that of the domicil of her husband, is that the law of the domicil of the husband governs unless the property, from its peculiar nature, necessarily has an implied locality, or unless the contract is made in the country where the property was situated. In this case it was held that the capacity of a woman to give her husband a power of attorney to pledge stock in an Alabama corporation was to be governed by the law of Louisiana, where the woman was domiciled and the transaction took place, rather than by the law of Alabama, where the stock had its situs, there being no rights of creditors involved.

The court, in Kerr v. Urie (1897) 86 Md. 72, 38 L.R.A. 119, 63 Am. St. Rep. 493, 37 Atl. 789, while conceding, for the purposes of the argument, that a subscription made in one state to capital stock of a corporation which exists in and carries on its business in another, is a contract to be performed in the latter state, and is governed by the laws of that state, nevertheless held that a transfer of stock in a national bank in another state, made in Maryland to a married woman, who was competent by the law of that state to be a stockholder, is valid, irrespective of the law of the state in which the bank is situated.

The liability of a married woman under an agreement executed in New Jersey, where the parties resided, to repay her husband for advances made by him in New Jersey for the support of the family, out of her interest in an estate which was being administered in New York, is determined by the law of New Jersey, rather than by the law of New York. Hendricks v. Isaacs (1887) 46 Hun (N. Y.) 239. In this case it was held that, as no statute of New Jersey had been proved, the general principles of equity which have been applied to the solution of controversies arising between husband and wife must govern the right of the husband in a proceeding for the enforcement against the estate, as they would a formal action.

As a general rule, the general rights, capacities, and disabilities of a married woman, in regard to her personal property, are governed by the law of her domicil, rather than by the law of the place where the property is situated. Loftus v. Farmers' & M. Nat. Bank (1890) 133 Pa. 97, 7 L.R.A. 313, 19 Atl. 347. The point involved was as to the validity of a transfer, by a married woman domiciled in Great Britain, of certificates of loan issued by the city of Philadelphia. The court said that the question how far the lex loci contractus might affect the rights of property arising therefrom was not necessary to consider. In this case, however, it was held, by way of exception to the general rule, that the mode of transfer was to be governed by the law of Pennsylvania, it being held that the act regulating the mode of transfer applied to foreign, or non-resident, married women owning such securities. The court said: "But while the general rule, as above stated, is entirely settled, not only in this state, but in every jurisprudence founded on the common law, yet it is subject always to the power of the state to declare otherwise as to any property having an actual or legal situs within its borders. The title and mode of transfer of land are always governed by the lex loci rei sitæ; and personal property may be assimilated to land, in these respects, whenever the law of any state so determines."

In Dalton v. Murphy (1855) 30 Miss. 59, a deed of trust of slaves, who were in Mississippi, executed by a married woman domiciled in Mississippi, was held invalid, though valid by the law of Alabama, where it was executed. The decision, however, is not upon the ground of her lack of capacity to contract, but upon the ground that the deed was not executed by her in the manner prescribed by the law of Mississippi, where the performance of the contract was contemplated.

In Miller v. Campbell (1893) 140 N. Y. 457, 35 N. E. 651, the court said that while the policy of insurance upon the life of a husband, for the benefit of his wife, was a Massachusetts contract, and, as between the insurance company and the assured, would be governed by the laws of that state, the agreement involved in the case was that of the married woman to assign the policy, and its validity was dependent upon her capacity under the law of New York to make it. Although it is not expressly so stated in the opinion, the married woman was probably domiciled in New York, and the agreement to assign made in that state.

d. As between lex loci contractus (or lex loci solutionis or lex domicilii) and lex fori.

1. In general.

Assuming that a married woman is capable of contracting personally or in regard to personal property, according to the law of the place where the contract is made,—or, if the lex loci solutionis or lex domicilii is favored over the lex loci contractus, according to one or the other of those laws,—there are two possible reasons which may prevent its enforcement in another state or country in which the action is brought: (1) The courts of that state or country may deem it contrary to its public policy to enforce such a contract, even assuming that it was valid by the law of the place where it was made or performable, especially if the married woman in question was domiciled at the forum, though her contract was made and performable elsewhere; or (2) even though there is no objection based on public policy to the enforcement of such a contract, there may be no remedy available at the forum for the enforcement of such a contract, and it is, of course, a well-settled principle that the lex fori governs as to the remedy.

2. Public policy of forum.

While, as already shown, supra, the weight of authority establishes the lex loci contractus, rather than the lex domicilii, as the general test of the capacity of a married woman to make a personal contract, this principle, like all other principles of private international law, is subject to the qualification that the law of another state or country will not be enforced if contrary to the public policy of the forum. It is conceivable, at least, that a court might take the view that it would be contrary to the public policy of the forum to enforce the contract of a married woman, valid according to the lex loci contractus, but invalid according to the lex fori, although she was not domiciled at the forum. But when the married woman was domiciled at the forum at the time the contract was made, and would have been incapable by the law of the forum, there is so much greater reason for holding that the contract, though valid according to the lex loci contractus, is contrary to the public policy of the forum, and therefore will not be enforced. If the court, upon the ground of public policy, refuses to enforce a contract of a married woman not domiciled at the forum, there is, of course, no chance to impute to it an intention to hold that capacity is to be determined by the lex domicilii, rather than the lex loci contractus. But when the married woman was domiciled at the forum, a decision refusing to enforce the contract is likely, unless careful discrimination is made, to be interpreted as a decision that the capacity is to be determined by the lex domicilii, even when the real ground is that it would be contrary to the public policy of the forum to enforce, against persons domiciled at the forum, contracts which, though valid where made, are condemned by the lex fori. Strictly and technically speaking, a decision which rests upon this ground does not apply the lex domicilii to the question of capacity; but, since the public policy is derived from, and evidenced by, the law of the forum, which, ex hypothesi, is also the law of the domicile, it is sufficiently accurate, for the purposes of the disposition of such a case, to say that the capacity is determined by the lex domicilii. The use of that term, however, in such a case, is objectionable because it is calculated to create an impression that the court is announcing a general principle of private international law which is applicable wherever the domicile may happen to be. The reality and importance of the distinction here alluded to, between the theory that the lex domicilii determines capacity, and the theory that denies enforcement of a contract against a married woman domiciled at the forum, because contrary to its public policy, are shown by the fact that the first theory would operate to validate contracts valid according to the lex domicilii, but invalid according to the lex loci contractus, as well as to prevent enforcement at the domicile of contracts, valid according to the lex loci contractus, but invalid according to the lex domicilii; while the second theory would only operate to prevent enforcement at the domicile of contracts, valid according to the lex loci, but invalid according to the lex domicilii (using the latter term as synonymous with lex fori), and never to validate contracts invalid by the lex loci contractus, but valid by the lex domicilii. Again, according to the first theory, the lex domicilii would determine the question of capacity wherever that question might arise, even if in the state where the contract was made, while the second theory leaves the question to be determined by the lex loci contractus, if it arises in any state or country other than that of the domicile.

The distinction above discussed is well brought out in Armstrong v. Best (1893) 112 N. C. 59, 25 L.R.A. 188, 34 Am. St. Rep. 473, 17 S. E. 14. In that case it was held that a contract made in Maryland by a married woman domiciled in North Carolina (the forum) was not enforceable in the latter state, by the law of which a married woman is incapable of making such a contract, notwithstanding that she would be capable according to the law of Maryland (lex loci contractus). The decision is not upon the ground that the capacity of a married woman is, in general, to be determined by the law of her domicile. Upon the other hand, the court expressly says that the weight of authority establishes that such capacity is, in general, to be tested by the law of the place where the contract is made, and that, if the action at bar had been brought in the courts of Maryland, the defendant could not have availed herself of her incapacity under the law of her domicile. The decision is upon the ground that the enforcement of the contract against a married woman domiciled in North Carolina would be contrary to the public policy of the latter state, and that the case therefore falls within the qualification which attaches to all principles of private international law, to the effect that no state or nation will enforce a foreign law which is contrary to its fixed settled policy.

Though reaching a different conclusion on the question of public policy, the distinction is also well illustrated by the opinion in Thompson v. Taylor (1901) 66 N. J. L. 253, 54 L.R.A. 585, 88 Am. St. Rep. 485, 49 Atl. 544, where a contract of suretyship by a married woman domiciled in New Jersey was made in New York, by the law of which she was capable of making such a contract, although by the law of New Jersey she was incapable of binding herself as surety. The court said in effect that it was necessary to consider two propositions or objections: "First. That the incapacities of a wife under the common law, if not removed by the statute law of her domicile, follow her wherever she goes; so that, if at home she be unable to bind herself as surety, she may nowhere bind herself by such a contract. Secondly. That the retention in our law of so much of the common law as prevented married women from becoming sureties is a declaration by the legislature of a public policy to which the court should give effect by refusing to enforce obligations of this nature, incurred by its citizens in other states, where this disability no longer exists."

Assuming that a married woman was capable by the law of another state in which the contract was made (lex loci contractus),—or by the law of the state where it was performable (lex loci solutionis), if that is preferred,—the question whether it would be contrary to the public policy of another state in which she was domiciled, in relation to married women, to enforce it in the courts of that state, depends so much upon considerations that may be peculiar to local conditions,—especially the extent to which the common-law disabilities of married women have been removed,—that decisions in one jurisdiction on this point have rather less than the ordinary value of foreign decisions as precedents in other jurisdictions. Numerically considered, however, the cases in which the courts of the domicile have refused, on the ground of public policy, to enforce or give effect to a contract which the married woman was capable of making according to the lex loci contractus,—or lex loci solutionis, if that is preferred,—although she would have been incapable by the law of the domicile and of the forum, are in the minority. (The Louisiana cases, of course, are not considered in this connection, since, as above shown, they apply lex domicilii as the general test of capacity regardless of the public policy of the forum, and do not merely refuse to enforce a contract against a married woman domiciled at the forum, which would be contrary to its public policy.)

In some of the cases cited supra, II. a, which support the rule that the capacity of a married woman to contract is governed by the lex loci contractus, the married woman was not domiciled at the forum; at least, at the time the contract was made. See Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Westervelt (1884) 52 Conn. 592; Young v. Bullen (1897) 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1561, 43 S. W. 687; Bell v. Packard (1879) 69 Me. 105, 31 Am.

Rep. 251; Hill v. Chase (1886) 143 Mass. 129, 9 N. E. 30; Smith v. Frame (1889) 3 Ohio C. C. 587; Pearl v. Hansborough (1848) 9 Humph. (Tenn.) 433. And these cases, therefore, did not involve the question of public policy as regards a married woman domiciled at the forum.

In other cases cited supra, II. a, in support of the doctrine that the lex loci contractus, rather than the lex domicilii, governs, the domicile was at the forum; and in each of these cases the contract was upheld and enforced, being valid by the lex loci contractus, although invalid by the lex domicilii and lex fori. Bowles v. Field (1897) 78 Fed. 742 (on final hearing in (1897) 83 Fed. 886); First Nat. Bank v. Mitchell (1899) 34 C. C. A. 542, 92 Fed. 565, reversing (1898) 84 Fed. 90; Robison v. Pease (1902) 28 Ind. App. 610, 63 N. E. 479; Milliken v. Pratt (1878) 125 Mass. 374, 28 Am. Rep. 241; Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Simons (1893) 52 Mo. App. 357.

Some of these cases do not recognize, or at least do not advert to, any distinction arising from the fact that the domicile of the married woman was, or was not, at the forum. In Bowles v. Field (1897) 83 Fed. 886, however, the court said that, upon the assumption that the consideration for the note and mortgage in suit rested upon notes executed and made payable in Ohio, by a married woman domiciled in Indiana, as surety for her husband, their enforcement by a Federal court sitting in Indiana would not be precluded by the public policy of the latter state. The court further said that if there were an irreconcilable conflict in the public policy of the two states on the subject, the Federal court ought to be governed by the more liberal policy indicated by the act of Congress touching the rights of married women in the District of Columbia, rather than by the public policy indicated by the statutes of Indiana. In Milliken v. Pratt (1878) 125 Mass. 374, 28 Am. Rep. 241, the court conceded that, under some circumstances, the fact that the married woman was domiciled at the forum at the time the contract was made might bring the case within the exception, with reference to contracts contrary to the public policy of the forum, to the rule that the lex loci contractus, rather than the lex domicilii, furnishes the test of capacity. The court said in this connection: "It is possible, also, that, in a state where the common law prevails in full force, by which a married woman was deemed incapable of binding herself by any contract whatever, it might be inferred that such an utter incapacity, lasting throughout the joint lives of husband and wife, must be considered as so fixed by the settled policy of the state for the protection of its own citizens that it could not be held by the courts of that state to yield to the law of another state in which she might undertake to contract." The court held, however, under the circumstances, that there was no reason of public policy which should prevent the maintenance of the action, because, although at the time the guaranty was made the law of Massachusetts did not authorize a married woman to make contracts of that kind, yet even then she had a very extensive power to bind herself by contract, and that power had been extended at the time of the commencement of the action so as to cover guaranty contracts.

In Thompson v. Taylor (1900) 65 N. J. L. 107, 46 Atl. 567, the New Jersey supreme court held that it was contrary to the public policy of New Jersey to enforce a contract of suretyship by a married woman domiciled in New Jersey, although the contract was made in another state, by the law of which it was valid. But when the same case afterwards came before the court of errors and appeals (1901) 66 N. J. L. 253, 54 L.R.A. 585, 88 Am. St. Rep. 485, 49 Atl. 544, the latter court took the contrary position, and declared that the New Jersey statute regulating the right of married women to make contracts of suretyship was not the declaration of public policy that closes the courts of New Jersey to rights of action arising in other jurisdictions where the law is different. This is doubtless in accordance with the trend of the cases, although the question as to when, upon principles of comity, a court of one jurisdiction will enforce a contract which, so far as the substantive rights of the parties are concerned, is properly governed by the law of another jurisdiction, is peculiarly one for the courts of the forum, and the decisions of the courts of other jurisdictions on this point have rather less than the ordinary value of foreign decisions as precedents.

In Law v. Smith (1904) 68 N. J. Eq. 81, 59 Atl. 327, the court, on the authority of Thompson v. Taylor (1901) 66 N. J. L. 253, 54 L.R.A. 585, 88 Am. St. Rep. 485, 49 Atl. 544, held that a contract made in New York by a married woman domiciled in New Jersey was enforceable in a court of the latter state, notwithstanding that, by the law of that state, she would be incapable of making the contract.

In Brigham v. Gilmartin (1878) 58 N. H. 346, where a contract, made in Massachusetts, was held to be enforceable in New Hampshire, the domicile of the married woman, the court said that the Massachusetts liability of the defendant to pay for the property she bought there is not in conflict with the New Hampshire law of married women, or hostile to New Hampshire interests, or contrary to good morals.

In Case v. Dodge (1894) 18 R. L. 661, 29 Atl. 785, it was held that a purchase of goods by a married woman in Massachusetts, being valid according to the law of that state, was enforceable in Rhode Island, although, at the time it was made, it would not be valid according to the law of the latter state. It does not appear in this case whether the married woman was domiciled in Rhode Island or Massachusetts. At the time the action was brought, such a contract would have been valid even according to the law of Rhode Island. The court takes the general position that if a contract is valid by the law of the place where it was made, an action upon it in another forum will be sustained, unless the contract contravenes the law or policy of that forum. It is obvious that the court here distinguishes between a contract which is contrary to the statute of the forum and one which is contrary to its public policy, for in this case the contract, when made, was contrary to the law of Rhode Island, but it was enforced notwithstanding.

In R. S. Barbee & Co. v. Bevins (1917) 176 Ky. 113, 195 S. W. 154, it was held not contrary to the public policy of Kentucky to entertain an action against a married woman domiciled in that state, on an indorsement by her as surety, governed by the law of West Virginia, where the contract was made and payable, although her personal estate had not been set apart for that purpose by a deed of mortgage, or other conveyance, which would have been necessary if the contract had been governed by the law of Kentucky. But see Brown v. Dalton (1899) 105 Ky. 669, 49 S. W. 443, infra, III.

In Meier & F. Co. v. Bruce (1917) 30 Idaho, 732, 168 Pac. 5, there was no question that, as a matter of substantive law, the note in question was governed by the law of Oregon, by which it was valid, the note having been made there, being payable there, and the married woman having been domiciled there at the time the note was given, although she subsequently took up her residence in Idaho, by the law of which the note would have been invalid. The question was whether it was contrary to the public policy of Idaho to entertain an action on the note; the majority of the court being of the opinion that it was not, although there was a dissenting opinion.

So, in International Harvester Co. v. McAdam (1910) 142 Wis. 114, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 775, 124 N. W. 1042, 20 Ann. Cas. 614, the court declared that the contract of a married woman as accommodation maker of commercial paper not having been judicially declared unenforceable in Wisconsin, on grounds of public policy, or prohibited by legislation as pernicious, was enforceable in courts of Wisconsin in case of its having been made in another state, where such contracts are valid, unless such contracts are, in fact, inherently bad, in the sense indicated in the foregoing rules.

While the married woman, at the time the note in question was given, was a resident of South Dakota, where it was made and payable, she was a resident of Wisconsin when the action was commenced, and from the reasoning employed by the court in support of its decision it would seem that the result would not have been different if she had been a resident of Wisconsin when the note was made in South Dakota. The court said: "That such contracts are not to be regarded as inherently harmful is evidenced by the fact that they are permitted by the written law of a large portion of the states, and in most others legislation in that direction is progressive. It is further evidenced by the fact that they are recognized as not inherently bad by substantially all the courts of this country. The exceptions are not significant. This court, except as restrained by principle and the great weight of authority, is free to take its own stand, to declare for the state what shall be, in the particular situation, its public policy, till the source for written law shall have acted in the matter. The court cannot say that such contracts are against public policy merely because they have not the sanction of the common law, as we have seen. . . . How can the court say that it should be so classed,—that it should be located within the broadest possible boundaries of the immoral, the inherently bad? Nearly all the common-law disabilities of women to contract have been removed. They can acquire and enjoy property and make all contracts necessary or convenient in that regard. They can, in equity, charge their property substantially at will. There is little left of a business nature which men can do that they cannot do. They have nearly all the rights of men and some besides, and on all sides are making pressing claims with distinguished support for what is yet withheld, not very firmly, or, perhaps, very logically. How can the ordinary business contract in question, so common among men of ordinary perceptions, be said to be contrary to any policy of this state heretofore, or which should now good morals? We can give no answer to that consistent with respondent's position. It is considered there is none, and that the proposition under consideration must be answered in the affirmative. The decision appealed from is erroneous. The contract of respondent must be held as valid and enforceable here as in the place where it was made."

But in Union Trust Co. v. Grosman (1917) 245 U. S. 412, 62 L. ed. 368, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 147, the court, upon general principles, took the view that it would be contrary to public policy to enforce in Texas a guaranty by a married woman, void according to the law of that state, although it was made while she was temporarily in Illinois, by the law of which state it was valid; and that a Federal court sitting in Texas should enforce that public policy by refusing to render a judgment to enforce the guaranty.

It is a prerogative of the sovereignty of every country to define the conditions of its members, not merely its resident inhabitants, but others temporarily there, as to capacity and incapacity. But capacity and incapacity as to acts done in a foreign country, where the person may be temporarily, will be recognized as valid, or not, in the forum of his domicile, as they may infringe, or not, its interests, laws, and policies. Bank of Louisiana v. Williams (1872) 46 Miss. 618, 12 Am. Rep. 319.

And in Hanover Nat. Bank v. Howell (1896) 118 N. C. 271, 23 S. E. 1005, it was held, following the decision in Armstrong v. Best (1893) 112 N. C. 59, 25 L.R.A. 188, 34 Am. St. Rep. 473, 17 S. E. 14, that a married woman, domiciled in North Carolina, could not be held liable on a note signed as surety for her husband in North Carolina, although it was payable in New York, according to the law of which she was capable of making such a contract. This decision was on the ground that it would be contrary to the public policy of North Carolina to enforce such a contract against one of its own citizens. In this case it is true that the lex loci contractus and

domicil had not been at the forum, the court would, perhaps, have applied the law of the place of performance, upon the ground that, as between the law of the place where a contract is made and that where it is to be performed, the latter should govern, if it does not violate the public policy of the forum.

So, in Hayden v. Stone (1880) 13 R. I. 106, holding that an action could not be maintained in Rhode Island upon a note made in Massachusetts by a married woman then domiciled there, the court said: "And a contract valid by the laws of one state cannot be enforced in another, unless such a contract, made between its own citizens, could be enforced there; or, in other words, it depends on the lex fori." It was said in the subsequent case of Brown v. Browning (1886) 15 R. I. 422, 2 Am. St. Rep. 908, 7 Atl. 403, however, that the court did not, in the former case, mean to make a rule as broad as the language above quoted might imply, and that the reasoning of the court in the former case did not go to the validity of the contract, but to the remedy sought, which is always subject to the lex fori. In Brown v. Browning a contract made in Connecticut after sunset on Sunday, being valid according to the law of that state, was held to be enforceable in Rhode Island, notwithstanding that it would have been invalid if made in the latter state. The case is distinguished from Hayden v. Stone on the ground that the enforcement of the contract violated no law of remedy in force in Rhode Island.

In Robinson v. Queen (1889) 87 Tenn. 445, 3 L.R.A. 214, 10 Am. St. Rep. 690, 11 S. W. 38, holding that a note executed by a married woman as surety in a state where she resides and the note is payable, if valid in that state, may be enforced in Tennessee, the court said that if the suit were against a married woman, a citizen of Tennessee, on a contract made out of the state, there would be much force in the insistence of counsel that, inasmuch as it was the fixed policy of Tennessee to throw around married women the shield of disability, a court of that state should not, under any supposed obligation of comity, entertain a suit based upon such a contract.

And in First Nat. Bank v. Shaw (1902) 109 Tenn. 237, 59 L.R.A. 498, 97 Am. St. Rep. 840, 70 S. W. 807, it was held that a married woman domiciled in Tennessee may avail herself of the protection of its statute, allowing her to plead coverture as a defense to her contracts, when sued there on a note delivered and payable in another state, where such defense is not recognized.

In Holmes v. Reynolds (1883) 55 Vt. 39, while it was held that the validity of a contract of a married woman was to be determined by the law of Massachusetts, where it was made, the court said that contracts are not proprio vigore of any efficiency beyond the territory of the state where made; the effect given them elsewhere is from comity, and not of strict right; and that how far comity ought to extend is left to the courts in the jurisdiction where the remedies are sought. It does not prevail where the contract is in violation of the laws of that jurisdiction, of God, or nature, against good morals, religion, public rights, or public policy. The case, however, was held not to fall within any of the foregoing exceptions. It appeared that, after the contract in question, the legislature of Vermont passed a statute authorizing such contracts. It does not appear where the married woman was domiciled when she made the contract.

When the married woman was not domiciled at the forum at the time the contract was made in the other state, there is less reason for raising an objection to the enforcement of the contract, based on the public policy of the forum.

Thus, while, as already shown, the court in Armstrong v. Best (1893) 112 N. C. 59, 25 L.R.A. 188, 34 Am. St. Rep. 473, 17 S. E. 14, held it contrary to the public policy of North Carolina to enforce the contract of a married woman, domiciled in that state, although valid by the law of another state, where it was made, it was held in National Exch. Bank v. Rook Granite Co. (1911) 155 N. C. 43, 70 S. E. 1003, that it was not contrary to public policy to enforce such a contract by a married woman not domiciled in North Carolina, the Armstrong Case being distinguished upon the ground that the married woman was domiciled in North Carolina. And see Robinson v. Queen (Tenn.) supra.

The provision of the Alabama Code, that the separate estates of married women shall be liable for all contracts for certain articles of comfort and support of the household, does not apply to a contract made and to be performed outside of Alabama by a husband and wife not domiciled in Alabama. Judge v. Wright (1882) 73 Ala. 324.

In Wright v. Remington (1879) 41 N. J. L. 43, 32 Am. Rep. 180, holding that the enforcement of a contract of a married woman, valid by the lex loci contractus, was not contrary to the public policy of New Jersey, the married woman was apparently not domiciled in New Jersey.

As already intimated, while the public policy of the forum has sometimes been given effect to prevent the enforcement of a contract valid by the lex loci contractus (or lex loci solutionis), it has never been given the effect to validate the contract of a married woman which was invalid according to the lex loci contractus (or according to the lex loci solutionis or lex domicilii, if either is held to prevail over the lex loci contractus).

The observation in Moody v. Barker (1920) 188 Ky. 401, 222 S. W. 89, that it may be stated without exception that if, under the lex loci contractus, the contract is void for any reason, it will be invalid everywhere, and will not be enforced, although it would be valid if executed at the forum, is clearly correct when qualified so as to admit the effect of lex loci solutionis in jurisdictions in which that is preferred as the general test of contractual capacity of a married woman, or of lex domicilii in Louisiana, where that is preferred as the general test over lex loci contractus and lex loci solutionis.

It will be observed that though a Louisiana court may hold a married woman domiciled in that state bound by a contract which, by the law of another state, where it was executed and performable, she was incapable of making, that result is due to the general rule in that state that the lex domicilii governs, and not to an exception, based on public policy as regards married women domiciled in Louisiana, to a general rule which, in the absence of any obligation based on the public policy of the forum, refers the contractual capacity of a married woman to lex loci contractus or lex loci solutionis over lex domicilii.

3. Matters relating to the remedy.

The general rule that the lex fori governs as to matters of remedy (5 R. C. L. 1042) applies, of course, to the contracts of married women, not only as regards matters of remedy that are common to contracts generally, and which are therefore beyond the scope of the annotation, but also as regards matters of remedy that are distinctive to the contracts of married women, and so within its scope.

And so, even when it is admitted, or conceded, that the capacity of a married woman is to be tested by the law of some place other than that of the forum, and that, by the law of that place, she had the requisite capacity to make the contract in question, and that there is no fundamental objection arising from the public policy of the forum, there may still be a difficulty in the way of enforcing the contract at the forum, with the same effect as if the action had been brought at the place whose law determines the married woman's capacity, either because the lex fori furnishes no remedy at all, or a remedy which is too broad or too restricted to protect the rights of the parties as fixed by the law of the place which determines the existence and extent of the capacity of the married woman, it being impossible to borrow the remedy from the latter place.

It is to be observed, however, that the application of the lex fori to a contract which, so far as the substantive question of the capacity of a married woman to make it is concerned, is governed by the law of another jurisdiction, e. g., the law of another state, where it was made,—or the law of the state where it was performable, or where the married woman was domiciled, if either is chosen over the law of the place where the contract is made,—may produce a different result from that which would follow from its application to a contract which, as regards the capacity of a married woman to make it, is also governed by the law of the forum. And so the fact that the lex fori would have furnished an adequate remedy for the enforcement of the contract in question if it had been made at, and governed by the law of, the forum, as regards the capacity of a married woman to make it, does not have the effect to render enforceable a contract which according to the law of another state, where it was made, the married woman had no capacity to make. Upon the other hand, it does not follow from the fact that the contract could not have been enforced if made at, and governed by the law of, the forum as regards the capacity of the married woman to make it, that it must necessarily fail of enforcement if made in, and governed by the law of, another state, by which the married woman was capable, since the remedy at the forum may be adequate to the enforcement of a contract which a married woman is capable of making by the law of another state where it was made, or perhaps performable, though incapable by the law of the state where the action is brought (forum). In other words, the principle that the lex fori governs matters relating to the remedy contemplates only laws that are distinctive to the remedy, as distinguished from those that relate to matters of substance, like the capacity of a married woman to contract, and recognizes that the result of the application even of those laws of the forum that relate distinctively to the remedy may be affected by the character impressed upon the contract by the law of another jurisdiction, which governs as to matter of substance.

Notes of a married woman, being valid by the law of the state where they were made (Pennsylvania), and by the law of the state where they were payable (Kentucky), will be enforced by the courts of this state (Virginia) in the manner provided by its laws; for as to the remedy upon foreign contracts, the law of the forum governs. Young v. Hart (1903) 101 Va. 480, 44 S. E. 703.

Although a contract between a married woman and her husband is governed by the law of another state, in which it was made, the remedy is governed by the law of the forum; and so a rule of the forum that an action on such a contract must be in equity, and not at law, governs. Lawler v. Lawler (1913) 107 Ark. 70, 153 S. W. 1113; Shane v. Dickson (1914) 111 Ark. 353, 163 S. W. 1140.

In Shane v. Dickson (Ark.) supra, an action by the executor of the wife, upon a contract made between her and her husband, the court, while conceding that the validity of a contract between husband and wife was governed by the law of Missouri, where it was executed, said that the remedy was controlled by the law of Arkansas (lex fori), and that the wife, if living, could not have instituted an action at law in that state, her remedy being in equity, but that there was no error in proceeding to trial in the circuit court, as there was no motion to transfer the cause to equity.

In Halley v. Ball (1872) 66 Ill. 250, it was held that the question whether an action against a married woman should be at law or in equity must be determined by the law of the forum, rather than by the law of the place where the contract was made. In this case, however, the contract was enforceable at law in both states. The court said that a party seeking to enforce a contract valid by the laws of another state must avail himself of the remedy provided by the laws of the forum.

The law of the state in which a contract is executed by a married woman must be resorted to, to determine the nature of the obligation it imposes. But if it only constitutes a charge against her separate property, and does not bind her personally, the question whether it is enforceable in an action at law, or only by suit in equity, is governed by the lex fori. Burchard v. Dunbar (1876) 82 Ill. 450, 25 Am. Rep. 384. In this case the contract was made in New York, and, by the law of New York, did not bind her personally, but was a charge upon her separate property. It was held that an action at law would not lie on the contract in Illinois, since by the law of that state the remedy would be exclusively in equity, notwithstanding that by the law of New York an action at law might be brought. It does not appear where the married woman was domiciled.

So, in Bank of Louisiana v. Williams (1872) 46 Miss. 618, 12 Am. Rep. 319, the court, while conceding the general principle that the validity of a contract is to be determined by the law of the place where it is made, or by the law of the place of performance, held that, notwithstanding that a note made by a married woman would be a personal charge against her by the law of the place where it was made and was payable, it would not support an action in Mississippi, her domicile, for a personal judgment, but that the remedy would be limited, as in case of a contract made in that state, to her personal property.

In Dulin v. McCaw (1894) 39 W. Va. 721, 20 S. E. 681, it was held that while the capacity of a woman to bind herself and her property was to be determined by the law of Pennsylvania, where the contract was made, the form of the judgment, whether against her generally or against her separate property in that state, was to be determined by the law of West Virginia (lex fori); and in this case it was held that the judgment ought to be limited to her separate property, according to the law of West Virginia at the time the suit was commenced, although, according to the law of Pennsylvania, a personal judgment could have been entered against her.

In Coombes v. Knowlson (1916) 193 Mo. App. 554, 182 S. W. 1040, it was apparently assumed that the contract in question, having been made in Illinois, would be governed by the law of that state; but assuming the premise of the defendant, that, there being no proof of the law of Illinois in regard to the rights of a married woman to contract and prosecute suits in her own name, it must be presumed that the common law was in force there, it was held that the common law must be interpreted according to the decisions at the forum, and as the facts in the case disclosed a liability on behalf of defendant toward the plaintiff (a married woman), even at common law, she might maintain an action at law thereon in her own name, since the common-law rule that she might not maintain such an action had been changed by statute in Missouri, which, as the lex fori, would govern, the matter being one as to forum or procedure; and this position was adhered to upon a subsequent appeal in (1918) — Mo. App. —, 200 S. W. 743.

In Robinson v. Queen (1889) 87 Tenn. 445, 3 L.R.A. 214, 10 Am. St. Rep. 690, 11 S. W. 38, it was said that the courts of Tennessee would recognize and enforce so much of the law of Kentucky as determined and fixed the liability of a married woman domiciled in that state, upon a contract made and payable in that state; yet, with respect to the necessity of joining her husband as a defendant, the law of Tennessee, rather than that of Kentucky, governed.

But that the result of the application of the lex fori, as regards joinder, may be affected by the character impressed on the contract by the law of another state, is illustrated by Evans v. Cleary (1889) 125 Pa. 204, 11 Am. St. Rep. 886, 17 Atl. 440, where, in reply to the objection of the nonjoinder of a husband as the defendant in an action on a contract made and performable in Illinois at a time when, by the law of Pennsylvania, such joinder was necessary, the court said that, by the law of Illinois, the married woman was competent to contract and liable to sue without regard to her husband, and that, while it is true that in all matters relating to remedy merely the lex fori prevails, the liability of a party to contract depends upon the lex loci contractus.

In Ruhe v. Buck (1894) 124 Mo. 178, 25 L.R.A. 178, 46 Am. St. Rep. 439, 27 S. W. 412, it was held that notwithstanding that a married woman, by the law of Dakota, where the matrimonial domicile was established and the contract was made, might bind herself by contract, yet her real estate in Missouri was not subject to attachment for the debt created by such contract. The decision is not upon the ground that the validity of the contract was to be determined by the law in Missouri, but upon the ground that the creditor was only entitled to the remedies allowed by the law of Missouri, and that, at the time the suit was commenced, the property of a married woman could not be attached in that state. There was an able dissenting opinion in this case in which the position was taken that while the lex fori governs as to the remedy, yet the status of the party with reference to the contract was established by the lex loci, and that, relatively to such contract, she had the status of a feme sole.

Johnston v. Gawtry (1882) 11 Mo. App. 322, affirmed in (1884) 83 Mo. 339, involving a note which a woman had indorsed with a statement that the intention was to charge her separate estate, the court said that whenever a married woman, having a separate estate in lands in Missouri, makes a contract which, if made in Missouri, would be enforced in equity against her separate estate there, her capacity to make it, and its validity, when the attempt is made in Missouri to enforce it against her separate estate there, are governed by the laws of Missouri. The court added, however, that the contract of the married woman was made in New York, and there was no evidence that, according to the New York system of jurisprudence, that contract would not be enforceable against her separate property.

The decision in Hayden v. Stone (1880) 13 R. I. 106,—where it was held that neither real nor personal property in Rhode Island, belonging to a married woman domiciled in Massachusetts, could be attached in an action upon a promissory note made by her in Massachusetts, and valid in that state, but invalid according to the law of Rhode Island,—as explained in the subsequent case of Brown v. Browning (1886) 15 R. I. 422, 2 Am. St. Rep. 908, 7 Atl. 403,—seems to rest on substantially the same ground as the decision in the preceding case.

In Wick v. Dawson (1896) 42 W. Va. 43, 24 S. E. 587, which proceeded upon the assumption that the validity of a contract was to be determined by the law of Ohio, where it was made, and to be performed, and that, by the law of such place, it was valid, it was held that the law of the state where land, the separate property of a married woman, is situated, must determine the question of its liability to be subjected to the payment of claims against her, without reference to where the contract upon which the claim was based was made. This language is broad enough to make the lex rei sitæ govern, even if it operates to prevent the enforcement against real property of a contract made in a state by the law of which it would be enforceable against such property; but, as a matter of fact, the lex rei sitæ was applied in this case so as to hold the contract enforceable against real property in West Virginia, although it was executed and to be performed in Ohio.

The court in Gibson v. Sublett (1885) 82 Ky. 596, however, seems to take subsequently the same position that was taken in the dissenting opinion in Ruhe v. Buck (Mo.) supra. In the Gibson Case it was held that a contract made in Louisiana by a married woman domiciled in that state, and which was valid by the law of that state, and enforceable against her separate property there, could be enforced against her real property in Kentucky, notwithstanding that the obligation was not one which, by virtue of the Kentucky statute, could be enforced against such property. The decision is upon the ground that, when it is ascertained that a contract made by a married woman in another state is valid and binding, the remedy provided for the satisfaction of judgments should be applied as though the judgment were against a feme sole, or a married woman invested with the rights, and subject to the responsibilities, of a feme sole. The same position was taken in Young v. Bullen (1897) 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1561, 43 S. W. 687.

So, in State Bank v. Maxson (1900) 123 Mich. 250, 81 Am. St. Rep. 196, 82 N. W. 31, the court sustained a writ of attachment on land in Michigan, owned by a married woman—a resident of Kansas, in an action to enforce her note for her husband's debt, given and payable in Kansas, by the law of which a wife's property is subject to seizure for her debts, although not specifically bound, notwithstanding that, if the contract had been made in Michigan, it could not have been enforced against her property there, because the property was not specifically bound thereby. And to the same effect is National Exchange Bank v. Rook Granite Co. (1911) 155 N. C. 43, 70 S. E. 1003.

So, the laws of Iowa, providing that a married woman may create a liability against her separate real estate, are properly applied in an action in Texas to attach the separate real property of a married woman residing in Iowa, upon a promissory note executed by her in the latter state. Merrielles v. State Bank (1893) 5 Tex. Civ. App. 483, 24 S. W. 564.

A promissory note given in Louisiana by a married woman domiciled in that state, as surety for her husband, although void according to the law of Louisiana, will nevertheless be enforced in Mississippi against her separate real property in that state, where she contracted with reference to such estate and intended to charge it by the note, although the note purported, on its face, to be merely the personal obligation of the wife. Friereson v. Williams (1879) 57 Miss. 451. The decision is upon the ground that, while the capacity of a married woman to make a personal contract will be determined by the law of her domicil, yet her capacity to contract with ref-terminated by the lex rei sitæ, and that the note in question was a contract with reference to her real property. It was conceded in this case that the note, as a personal obligation of the wife, would have been adjudged void, out of comity to Louisiana, even if it were not so by the law of Mississippi.

In Wood v. Wheeler (1892) 111 N. C. 231, 16 S. E. 418, it was held that a personal judgment may be rendered in North Carolina against a married woman upon a note signed by her in South Carolina, where she was domiciled at the time, it being valid according to the law of that state, notwithstanding that it would have been invalid if executed in North Carolina, because her husband did not assent thereto, and notwithstanding that it was secured by a mortgage upon land in North Carolina, which is void because not executed in the manner required by the law of North Carolina. The married woman became a resident of North Carolina after the contract was made.

So, notes executed by a husband and wife jointly, as makers in Missouri, where they were then domiciled, by the law of which a married woman may bind herself as a feme sole, are enforceable against her in Louisiana whither she subsequently removed, in the same manner and to the same extent as they could be enforced in Missouri. Baer Bros. v. Terry (1902) 108 La. 597, 92 Am. St. Rep. 394, 32 So. 353.

And in Benton v. German-American Nat. Bank (1895) 45 Neb. 850, 64 N. W. 227, it was held that an action would lie in Nebraska to recover a personal judgment against a married woman domiciled in Missouri, upon an indorsement, in the latter state, of a note executed and delivered and payable in such state, notwithstanding that it would have been invalid if governed by the law of Nebraska, because it was not made with reference to, or upon the faith and credit of, her separate estate or business, as required by the Nebraska statute. In this case it will be observed that the place where the contract was made, indorser was domiciled, was the same, and the conflict was merely between the law of that state and the law of the forum.

That the principle which refers matters of remedy to the lex fori is not to be applied so as to give a greater or different substantive effect to the contract of a married woman than it has by the law of another jurisdiction which properly governs as to matters of substance, is illustrated by the cases which follow:

Thus, in Hinkson v. Williams (1879) 41 N. J. L. 35, it was held that an action could not be maintained in New Jersey against a husband and wife for goods sold to the wife in Pennsylvania upon her credit, by virtue of a statute of Pennsylvania which provides, in effect, that suit may be brought and judgment recovered against both husband and wife upon such liability, but that, after judgment, execution must first issue against the husband alone, and shall issue against the wife only in case no property of his is found. The decision is upon the ground that there was no mode of procedure by which the wife's right, under the Pennsylvania statute, to have the judgment satisfied out of the husband's property before resorting to hers, could be preserved, since, under the law of New Jersey, the effect of a judgment in the action would be merely that of a common-law judgment against two defendants, to be carried into effect by execution against both, and the wife's separate property might thus be made primarily liable for the entire debt,—a result manifestly repugnant to the policy of the Pennsylvania act.

And, in Bradley v. Johnson (1884) 46 N. J. L. 271, it was held that an action would not lie in that state to recover a personal judgment against a married woman upon a contract made in New York, notwithstanding that such an action would lie if the contract had been made in New Jersey. The decision is upon the ground that, as no statute of New York on the subject was proved, it must be presumed that the equity rule is in force in New York, by which a liability assumed by a married woman will be enforced against her separate estate, but will not render her personally liable.

So, an action cannot be maintained in Colorado to obtain a personal judgment against a married woman domiciled in Missouri upon a contract made by her in that state, where, by the law of Missouri, as it was at the time of the contract, the contract would only constitute a charge against her separate property. Hochstadter v. Hays (1887) 11 Colo. 118, 17 Pac. 289. The decision is upon the ground that, by the law of Missouri, which governs the effect of the contract, there was no personal obligation.

In Griswold v. Golding (1887) 8 Ky. L. Rep. 777, 3 S. W. 535, however, it was held that a note executed in Missouri, by a woman domiciled there, and which, by the law of Missouri, was not chargeable against her personally, or against her general estate, was not chargeable against real property in Kentucky belonging to her general estate, although the note, if made and payable in Kentucky, would have been chargeable against such property.

In Spearman v. Ward (1887) 114 Pa. 634, 8 Atl. 430, it was held that a note given in Ohio by a married woman domiciled in that state could not be enforced against her personally, or even against her separate property (real estate) in Pennsylvania, notwithstanding that it would be enforceable against her separate estate in Ohio. The decision is upon the ground that the proceeding on a married woman's contract in Ohio is practically a proceeding in rem, not against the feme covert personally, but against her property; and that the law which authorized it has no extra-territorial effect. Whitehurst's Estate (1884) 7 Pa. Co. Ct. 12, is to the same effect.

But a charge by a married woman in Tennessee, of her separate estate at the place of contract or elsewhere, for the payment of notes given for her own debt, may be enforced in Mississippi, although the contract might not uphold a personal judgment in Tennessee against her. Read v. Brewer (1894) — Miss. —, 16 So. 350.

III. Contracts relating to real property or immovables.

The question whether real estate in one state is subject to the liability created by a contract, governed as to matters of substance by the law of another state, which does not relate directly or specifically to such real estate, is considered supra, II. d. 3.

The capacity of a married woman to contract with reference to real property is determined by the law of the place where the property is situated; at least, so far as her capacity depends upon a law which operates directly on such property, as distinguished from one which operates on the person.

Thus, it has been held or declared that the capacity of a married woman, with or without the assent of her husband, to convey or mortgage real property, is determined by the law of the place where the property is situated (lex rei sitæ), irrespective of the place where the deed or mortgage was executed, or the married woman was domiciled. McDaniel v. Grace (1855) 15 Ark. 465; Thompson v. Kyle (1897) 39 Fla. 582, 63 Am. St. Rep. 193, 23 So. 12; Walling v. Christian & C. Grocery Co. (1899) 41 Fla. 479, 47 L.R.A. 608, 27 So. 46; Sell v. Miller (1860) 11 Ohio St. 331; Otis v. Gregory (1887) 111 Ind. 504, 13 N. E. 39; Swank v. Hufnagle (1887) 111 Ind. 453, 12 N. E. 303, 13 N. E. 105; Cochran v. Benton (1890) 126 Ind. 58, 25 N. E. 870; Doyle v. McGuire (1874) 38 Iowa, 410.

Not only the form of execution of a power of attorney executed by a married woman domiciled in Louisiana, authorizing her husband to convey real property in Arkansas, but her capacity to give such a power of attorney at all, is to be determined by the law of Arkansas (lex loci sitæ), and not by the law of Louisiana, where she was domiciled and where the power of attorney was executed. McDaniel v. Grace (Ark.) supra.

So, the capacity of a married woman to convey land to her husband (Duffy

W. 368), or to receive a conveyance directly from him (Rush v. Landers (1902) 107 La. 549, 57 L.R.A. 353, 32 So. 95; Polson v. Stewart (1897) 167 Mass. 211, 36 L.R.A. 771, 57 Am. St. Rep. 452, 45 N. E. 737), is to be determined by reference to the law of the place where the land is situated, irrespective of the domicil or the place where the deed was executed.

In Wood v. Wheeler (1892) 111 N. C. 231, 16 S. E. 418, the court, while, as already shown supra, upholding and enforcing a note given in South Carolina by a married woman then domiciled in that state, by the law of which she was capable of contracting, held that a mortgage on land in North Carolina, given to secure it, was void because executed without the written assent of the husband, and without privy examination, as required by the law of North Carolina.

In Bender v. Bailey (1912) 130 La. 341, 57 So. 998, where a resident of Texas willed all his property to his wife and four children, and appointed his wife executrix, with power to sell all his property at private sale, and she, individually and as executrix, sold real property in Louisiana at private sale, it was held that, although the sale would have been valid in Texas, it was not valid in Louisiana, the law of which governed.

In Conner v. Elliott (1920) 79 Fla. 513, 524, 85 So. 164, where a husband and wife domiciled in Alabama executed in that state a deed to land in Florida, and subsequently executed in Florida another deed to correct an error in the description in the first deed, and in a subsequent suit the conveyance had been decreed to create a mortgage lien, the court, applying the general principle that contracts in relation to real property are governed by the lex rei sitæ, referred the question of the married woman's capacity to give the mortgage as security for a debt of the husband to the law of Florida, by which it was valid; and said that the asserted provision of the law of Alabama, where the first instrument was executed, was not material in a proceeding in a court of that was valid under the Constitution and statutes of Florida, where the land was situated.

In Morris v. Linton (1905) 74 Neb. 411, 104 N. W. 927, where a suit to foreclose a mortgage on real estate in Nebraska was defended by the children of the mortgagor, upon the ground that, under the terms of an antenuptial settlement, the children of the marriage were to take, as purchasers, any property which the mother (the mortgagor) subsequently acquired, the court, in reliance on a previous Nebraska decision to the effect that a married woman cannot contract with reference to her subsequently acquired property, held that the antenuptial agreement was ineffectual to affect the rights of the mortgagee, it having been executed when the mortgagor was a minor, and not ratified and carried out by a deed of settlement until after the execution of the mortgage in question. It was contended by counsel for the children that the contract, the mortgage, and the notes were all governed by the laws of Great Britain, the place where the contract was entered into, and not by the laws of Nebraska, the situs of the real estate; but the court referred to the general principle, as stated by Judge Story in his Conflict of Laws, § 428, that the law of the situs shall exclusively govern in regard to all rights, interests, and titles in and to immovable property; and said that it followed that the execution of the mortgage and the contract under which the minors claim title to the real estate must be determined by the laws of Nebraska, and not by the laws of England.

Sometimes, however, while a contract of a married woman with reference to real property would be invalid if executed in the state where the property is situated (or by a person domiciled in that state, if, as in Louisiana, the lex domicilii rather than the lex loci contractus governs as to personal capacity), it would be so, not because of a law which operates directly on the property, but because of one which operates on the person; or, to use the language of the civil jurists which has been adopted in Louisiana, it would be because of a personal statute, and not because of a real statute. When that is so, if the contract would be valid by the law of the place where it was made (or by the law of the domicile), it is at least a serious question whether it should not be upheld, even as affecting real property, at another place. Such a case was presented in Augusta Ins. & Bkg. Co. v. Morton (1848) 3 La. Ann. 417. In that case a mortgage executed in Maryland, by a married woman domiciled there, upon immovables in Louisiana, to secure a debt of her husband, was upheld in the latter state, notwithstanding an article of the Louisiana Code which provided that a wife could not bind herself for the debts of her husband. The decision is upon the ground that, by the law of Maryland, a married woman could bind her separate property to secure a debt of her husband, and that article of the Code above referred to was a personal, and not a real, statute; i. e., that it operated on persons rather than on property, and that her personal capacity was governed by the law of Maryland. In Swank v. Hufnagle (1887) 111 Ind. 453, 12 N. E. 303, 13 N. E. 105, a contrary result was reached. It was there held that a mortgage on land in Indiana to secure a debt of the husband was invalid, although executed in Ohio, because by the statute of Indiana, a married woman was prohibited from mortgaging her land as surety for her husband. This case, however, is distinguishable from the preceding case, because the Indiana statute expressly related to property, and was therefore real, and not personal. It was held in Thomson v. Kyle (1897) 39 Fla. 582, 63 Am. St. Rep. 193, 23 So. 12, however, that a mortgage executed by a married woman on her separate real estate in Florida, as security for a debt of her husband, was valid and enforceable, notwithstanding that, by the law of Alabama, where the mortgagor was domiciled, the mortgage was executed, and the debt payable, a wife could not bind herself, or her property, for the debt of the husband. As the statute of Alabama was evidently a personal statute, it would seem that the principle of the decision in the Louisiana case would have made the law of Alabama govern. In Evans v. Beaver (1893) 50 Ohio St. 190, 40 Am. St. Rep. 662, 33 N. E. 643, it was held that a mortgage upon land in Ohio, executed by a married woman domiciled in Indiana, to secure notes given by her husband in Indiana and payable in that state, was invalid because, by the law of Indiana, she was not capable of becoming surety for her husband, although she was by the law of Ohio. The decision, however, does not rest upon the theory adopted in the Louisiana case, but upon the ground that a mortgage was only security for the performance of the personal obligation; and, that obligation being invalid by the law of Indiana, which governed it, there was nothing to support the mortgage. This result was avoided in Thomson v. Kyle (Fla.) supra, by holding that the personal obligation of the husband, which was valid by the lex loci contractus, was sufficient to support the wife's mortgage, notwithstanding that she was not personally bound because of her incapacity by the lex loci contractus.

Apparently upon the same principle that controlled the decision in Augusta Ins. & Bkg. Co. v. Morton (1848) 3 La. Ann. 417, it was held in Kelly v. Davis (1876) 28 La. Ann. 773, that the capacity of a married woman to take a deed of real property situated in Louisiana from her husband was to be determined by the law of Mississippi, where the parties resided, though its effect on real property in Louisiana would be determined by the law and policy of Louisiana. In this case the deed, which was executed in Mississippi, was held invalid in accordance with a law of Mississippi, making such a deed void as to existing creditors. The court said that, even if tested by the law of Louisiana, the deed would be invalid; but the decision is clearly on the ground that the law of Mississippi governed; apparently because it was personal.

It is further to be observed that a deed or mortgage executed by a mara personal contract by which, according to the law of another state where it was made (lex loci contractus), she was incapable of binding herself, and so the deed or mortgage may fail or be defeated, if there is no other personal obligation to support it, although, according to the law of the place where the real property is situated, she is not only capable of executing a deed or mortgage, but would also have been capable of binding herself by the personal contract if it had been made in that state. Theoretically this result does not involve a repudiation of the general principle that the validity of contracts in relation to real property (executed contracts, at least), including the question of capacity, is governed by the lex rei sitæ, since, upon the present hypothesis, the deed or mortgage fails not because the married woman was incapable of executing it, but because of the invalidity of the contract in connection with which, or on the basis of which, the particular deed or mortgage in question was given.

Thus, in Lamkin v. Lovell (1912) 176 Ala. 334, 58 So. 258, a suit by a married woman to cancel her note and mortgage on land in Mississippi, on the ground that they were given to secure a debt of her husband, it was held that the law of Alabama, where the parties lived and the note was made and was payable, by which a married woman is incapable of contracting to secure a debt of the husband, governed both as to the note and mortgage. The court conceded, for the sake of the argument, that if the contract were a Mississippi contract, it might be enforced and the mortgage foreclosed in the courts of that state; but, being an Alabama contract, it would be assumed that, upon proof in Mississippi of the law of Alabama the courts of Mississippi would interfere to prevent a foreclosure of the mortgage in that state.

So, it was held in Burr v. Beckler (1914) 264 Ill. 230, L.R.A.1916A, 1049, 106 N. E. 206, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 1132, that even though a trust deed is valid is governed by another law, and is invalid by that law because of the lack of capacity of the married woman.

In Post v. First Nat. Bank (1891) 138 Ill. 559, 28 N. E. 978, it was held that the capacity of a married woman to mortgage her real property in Illinois to secure a note of her husband was governed by the law of Illinois, where the property was situated, by which she was capable, and not by the law of Texas, where the mortgage was executed, by which she was incapable. The husband's note, which, so far as appears, was valid even by the law of Texas, would apparently support the wife's mortgage, without regard to any personal liability on her part.

In Myers v. Steenberg (1921) — Ala. —, 90 So. 302, a suit to foreclose a mortgage on real estate in Alabama, belonging to a married woman domiciled in Illinois, in which state the mortgage and the notes secured thereby were executed, the decision turned upon the question whether the debt secured was the joint debt of husband and wife, or the debt of the husband for which the wife was surety only. The mortgage in this case expressly stipulated that it, and the notes secured thereby, were made under, and were to be construed by, the laws of Alabama. It is also provided by statute that all contracts concerning real property in the state, entered into by married women who are not residents, will have the same force and validity as if such contracts were made by married women residing in the state. The court said that, when the facts were found from the evidence, the law of Alabama must be applied to them.

See, further, as to the effect upon a mortgage upon real property in one jurisdiction of the invalidity of the personal obligation which it was given to secure by the law of another jurisdiction, where the contract was made. Thomson v. Kyle (1897) 39 Fla. 582, 63 Am. St. Rep. 193, 28 So. 12, and Evans v. Beaver (1893) 50 Ohio St. 190, 40 Am. St. Rep. 666, 33 N. E. 643, supra.

The principle that the lex rei sitæ, as such, governs as to real property, is also subject to an exception as to personal covenants or obligations which, although in relation to real property, do not directly affect the title to or an interest in the property itself. It will be observed that this exception to, or qualification of, the principle which refers contracts in relation to real property to the lex rei sitæ, as such, may apply to a contract that is wholly executory, e. g., a contract to convey real property, or to a personal covenant in a deed or mortgage.

In Polson v. Stewart (1897) 167 Mass. 211, 36 L.R.A. 771, 57 Am. St. Rep. 452, 45 N. E. 737, the court, speaking by Holmes, J., said: "But it is said that the laws of the parties' domicil could not authorize a contract between them as to lands in Massachusetts. Obviously this is not true. It is true that the law of other states cannot render valid conveyances of property within our borders which our laws say are void, for the plain reason that we have exclusive power over the res. Ross v. Ross (1880) 129 Mass. 246, 37 Am. Rep. 321; Hallgarten v. Oldham (1883) 135 Mass. 7, 46 Am. Rep. 433. But the same reason, inverted, establishes that the lex rei sitæ cannot control personal covenants not purporting to be conveyances between persons outside the jurisdiction, although concerning a thing within it. Whatever the covenant, the laws of North Carolina could subject the defendant's property to seizure on execution, and his person to imprisonment, for a failure to perform it. Therefore, on principle, the law of North Carolina determines the validity of the contract."

A rather curious result was reached by the Massachusetts supreme court in Polson v. Stewart. The court there held that a covenant executed by a husband in North Carolina, where the parties were domiciled, to "surrender, convey, and transfer" his marital rights in certain property of the wife and her heirs, could be specifically enforced in Massachusetts, with reference to real property in Massachusetts. Holmes, J., admitted that a deed directly from the husband to the wife would have been invalid, although it had been executed, and the parties had been domiciled, in North Carolina, according to the law of which the wife would have been capable of receiving such a deed, she having been made a "free trader." He also apparently conceded what is expressly stated in the dissenting opinion of Field, Ch. J., that the covenant would have been invalid and unenforceable if the parties had been domiciled in Massachusetts and the contract had been made there, for he said that the competency of the wife to receive the covenant is established by the law of her domicil and of the place of the contract. Then, starting with the competency of the parties to make the covenant, he holds that it can be specifically enforced in Massachusetts because everything essential to its performance can be done consistently with the law of Massachusetts. Proceeding evidently on the theory that the parties must be regarded as having contemplated the enforcement of the covenant in a manner which would be consistent with the law of Massachusetts (which, as already shown, forbade a conveyance directly from the husband to the wife), he summarizes the undertakings of the husband as follows: First, not to disturb his wife's enjoyment while he kept her property; secondly, to execute whatever instrument was necessary in order to release his rights if she conveyed; and thirdly, to claim no rights on her death, but to do whatever was necessary to clear the title from such rights. He then says all these were as capable of performance in Massachusetts as they would have been in North Carolina. The suit was brought by the wife's administrator; but the opinion says that all the purposes of the covenant could have been secured at once in the lifetime of the wife by a joint conveyance of the property to a trustee upon trusts properly limited. To revert again to the distinction based on domicil and the place of the contract, it would seem, from the reasoning of the opinion, that the reason the covenant could not have been enforced if the parties had been domiciled in Massachusetts and the covenant had been made there, would have been that the parties would have no capacity to make the covenant at all, and therefore that, though everything which was necessary to its performance might be voluntarily performed by the husband, he could not be compelled to do any of such acts, because, in legal effect, the covenant was as if it had never been executed. Field, Ch. J., says in his dissenting opinion: "It seems to me illogical to say that we will not permit a conveyance of Massachusetts land directly between husband and wife wherever they may have their domicil, and yet say that they make a contract to convey such land from one to the other, which our courts will specifically enforce." If he meant a contract to convey directly from one to another, the quotation does not represent the position of the majority for it is impliedly admitted, in the prevailing opinion, that such a contract could not have been enforced because it would call for an act which would be contrary to the law of Massachusetts. The position of the majority on this point seems practically to amount to this: That the capacity of the parties to contract to do any act with reference to real property that might be done voluntarily consistently with the lex rei sitæ, is to be determined by the law of their domicil and of the place of the contract; and, if capable according to that law, the contract may be enforced, although they would not be capable by the lex rei sitæ of binding themselves to do such act. (Logically, the hypothesis need only include capacity according to the law of the place, where the contract is made in jurisdictions (see supra, II. a) in which lex loci contractus is held to prevail over lex domicilii and lex loci solutionis; or according to lex domicilii, or lex loci solutionis, in jurisdictions in which either is held to prevail over lex loci contractus.)

In Alexander v. Shillaber (1882) 64 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 530, the lex loci contractus, and not the lex rei sitæ, was held to govern the capacity of a married woman to make an executory contract to convey the real property; at least, where she is not a resident of the state or territory in which the property is situated. This was an action at law by the purchaser to recover the amount he had paid under the contract, the defendant having failed and refused to convey.

In Brown v. Dalton (1899) 105 Ky. 669, 88 Am. St. Rep. 325, 49 S. W. 443, it was held that an action would not lie in Kentucky against a married woman, domiciled in that state, upon her covenant in a deed to land in Virginia, executed by her husband to herself in Kentucky, whereby she assumed the payment of a note executed and payable in Virginia, which had been given by the husband in part payment of the land. The decision is not upon the ground that the deed was made in Kentucky, but apparently upon the ground that it would be contrary to the public policy of Kentucky to enforce such a covenant against a married woman domiciled in that state. The court said: "The wife was entitled, not only to the protection of the husband, but to his counsel and guidance in the management of her affairs, and she had learned that it was her duty to submit to him. If, when the law had imposed this duty upon her, it shall allow him to make contracts with her to pay his debts, and enforce these contracts against her because the debt is payable in another state, it will defeat the purposes of the statute framed to protect married women and prevent their property being wasted."

The law of Illinois, where the deed was delivered, governs with respect to the interpretation and validity of a married woman's covenant, in a deed of her husband's land in that state, to pay and discharge a certain trust deed or mortgage on the property, notwithstanding that the deed was acknowledged by her in Kentucky. Western Springs v. Collins (1900) 40 C. C. A. 33, 98 Fed. 933. It did not appear in this case where the woman was domiciled.

But in Bank of Africa v. Cohen [1909] 2 Ch. (Eng.) 129, 78 L. J. Ch.

N. S. 767, 100 L. T. N. S. 916, 25 Times L. R. 625, the court, upon the ground that the capacity of a married woman to make a contract with regard to an immovable is governed by the lex situs, refused to grant either specific performance, or damages for breach, of a contract executed in England by a married woman, whose domicile was English, whereby, to secure a debt of her husband, she agreed to mortgage to a bank carrying on business in England and in the Transvaal a certain immovable in the Transvaal, it appearing that, by the law prevailing in the Transvaal, a married woman was incapable of becoming surety for her husband unless she expressly renounced the benefit of the provisions of the Roman-Dutch law on the subject after having been informed of her rights,—a condition that had not been complied with in this case. The opinions in this case do not seem to recognize the possible distinction between the governing law as to the capacity to make an executory contract to convey or mortgage the property, and the governing law as to the capacity to convey or mortgage, although that distinction was urged in the briefs of counsel, which, among other cases, cite Polson v. Stuart (1897) 167 Mass. 211, 36 L.R.A. 771, 57 Am. St. Rep. 452, 45 N. E. 737. The opinion of Buckley, L. J., distinguishing Ex parte Pollard (1840) Mont. & C. Bankr. (Eng.) 239, observed that in that case the mortgagor was capable, and had purported to mortgage the land; and while, according to the lex situs, his mortgage was ineffectual in rem, yet, even according to the lex situs, his contract to mortgage could have been enforced in personam, but a judgment for specific performance in the case at bar would mean that the court should order the defendant, after having her rights explained to her, to renounce the provisions of the Roman-Dutch law, whereas the law to be applied is that she, after explanation of her rights, may refuse to renounce them.

In Baum v. Birchall (1892) 150 Pa. 164, 30 Am. St. Rep. 797, 24 Atl. 620, reversing (1891) 11 Pa. Co. Ct. 222, it was held that the law of Delaware governed with respect to the capacity of a married woman domiciled in Pennsylvania to execute a bond for the purchase price of land in Delaware. There were three alternative grounds of decision. The first was that, the bond being payable by its own terms in Delaware, the law of that state governed without reference to where the contract was made; but it was further held that the contract was really made in Delaware, although signed in Pennsylvania, since it was delivered to the obligee in Delaware. The third ground was that, as it was a contract relating to real property, it was governed by the lex rei sitæ.

G. H. P.

COMBINED INDEX

TO

NOTES AND CASES

ABANDONMENT.

Of operation of railroad or a portion thereof, see CARRIERS.

As ground for divorce, see DIVORCE AND SEPARATION.

Of highway, see HIGHWAYS.

By husband or wife, as affecting damages for death of spouse. 18-1409.

ABATEMENT.

Of nuisance, see NUISANCES.

ABORTION.

Entrapment to commit crime. 18-151.

ABSENCE.

Interruption of limitations by, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

ABUTTING OWNERS.

Additional servitude as against, see EMINENT DOMAIN.

Liability of, for injury by defect in street or sidewalk, see HIGHWAYS.

Right to have highway kept open, see HIGHWAYS.

Title of, on discontinuance of highway, see HIGHWAYS.

Liability of, for injury to person in street in consequence of games or sports allowed on his premises. 18-614 (case p. 610).

ACCEPTANCE.

Of surrender of lease, see TENANT.

Making operation of upon acceptance of council. 18-1242.

ACCIDENT.

Evidence of other accidents.

Lease of public park for people in methods of accidents. 18-1238.

ACCIDENT INSURANCE.

See INSURANCE.

ACCOUNT.

Execution of invalid contract giving right to account.

ACCOUNTING.

Reasonable time within to an account so its becoming an 18-887 (case p. 8)

Law governing question count rendered by m count stated. 18-84

Sufficiency of objection account to prevent account stated. 18-

Retention of statement unreasonable time as open to explanation

The dash in each citation stands for A.L.R.

See ACCOUNTS.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

To interrupt statute of limitations, see
LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

Liability of notary public or his bond for willful misconduct or negligence in certifying acknowledgment. 18-1304, 1306.

ACQUIESCENCE.

Estoppel by, see ESTOPPEL.

ACTION OR SUIT.

By husband or wife, see HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Limitation of time for, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

Parties, see PARTIES.

Against United States or officers thereof, see UNITED STATES.

Venue of, see VENUE.

Condition precedent.

Demand as condition of right of action on bond of public depository. 18-269.

Defenses.

In action on negotiable paper, see BILLS
AND NOTES.

To divorce suit, see DIVORCE AND SEPARA-TION.

Estoppel as, see ESTOPPEL.

Estoppel to set up, see ESTOPPEL.

In libel suit, see LIBEL AND SLANDER.

Laches as, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

Multifariousness.

Abolition in chancery of objection of.
18-976,

ADDITIONAL SERVITUDE.

On highways, see EMINENT DOMAIN.

ADJOINING OWNERS.

Rights and remedies in case of encroach-

Delay in seeking equitable relief for abatement of nuisance of trees on boundary line. 18-650.

ADMINISTRATION.

Of decedent's estate, see EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

ADMIRALTY.

*Jurisdiction over aircraft, or combined air and water craft. 18-1327
(case p. 1824).*

ADMISSIONS.

By demurrer, see PLEADING.

ADULTERATION.

*Constitutionality of regulations forbidding adulteration of milk. 18-244.
Arbitrary declaration of adulteration of milk. 18-246.*

AEROPLANES AND AERONAUTICS.

*Admiralty jurisdiction over aircraft or combined air and water craft.
18-1327 (case p. 1824).*

AFFIDAVIT.

Effect of filing affidavits of forgery against ancient deed. 18-908 (case p. 901).

AGE.

*Misrepresentations as to age as estoppel to plead infancy. 18-526
(case p. 516).*

AGRICULTURE.

COMBINED INDEX TO NOTES AND CASES.

ALIENS.

Entrapment to violate immigration law. 18-171.

Disloyalty or mental reservation as ground for cancelation of certificate of citizenship. 18-1185 (case p. 1182).

Application of provisions of Act of Congress of 1906 as to cancelation of certificate. 18-1182.

ALIMONY.

See DIVORCE AND SEPARATION.

ALTERATION OF INSTRUMENTS.

Detachment of promissory note from paper purporting to be an order for goods, signature to which was procured through fraud. 18-10.

AMENDMENT.

Of constitution, rules, or by-laws of insurance company, see INSURANCE.

AMUSEMENTS.

Moving pictures, see MOVING PICTURES.
On Sunday, see SUNDAY.

ANCIENT INSTRUMENTS.

Admissibility in evidence, see EVIDENCE.

Filing affidavit of forgery against ancient deed. 18-908 (case p. 901).

ANCILLARY ADMINISTRATION.

See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

ANIMALS.

In general.

Transportation of, see CARRIERS.

Competency of witness to testify to value of, on market. 18-1110.

Running at large.

Constitutionality of fence and stock laws. 18-67 (case p. 63).

Sale of stock running in violation of law. 18-63.
Right to kill animals seen at large in violation

APPEAL AND

In general.

Wife's right to allow fees to prosecute on in matrimonial action (case p. 1492).

Denial of due process by vide for appeal. 18

Right to appeal.

Waiver of right to review payment of fine, or discharge on 18-867 (case p. 8

Right of one adjudged guilty 18-208.

Acceptance of benefits of to appeal from refusal of attorneys' fees. 18-11

Effect of appeal.

Jurisdiction after appeal action has been wife counsel fees in appeal. 18-1499.

Suspension of proceedings on injunction from order dissolved 18-433.

Parties.

Principal as necessary from dismissal of action cancel bond, where obligee in contesting action. 18-269.

Record.

Conclusiveness of record exception was allowed defendant. 18-554.

Errors waived in appeal Exception not briefed is Necessity for exception To misconduct of counsel To exclusion of evidence To instructions. 18-914

Raising question by trial.

Misconduct of counsel.

The dash in each citation stands for A.L.R.

Dismissal.

Payment of fine, serving sentence, or discharge on habeas corpus as ground for dismissal. 18-867 (case p. 864).

Liability of appellant on injunction bond and for costs, if case is not reversed, as ground for retaining jurisdiction of appeal, though merits of case have been settled by lapse of time. 18-433.

Expiration of covenant pending appeal in suit to enjoin violation thereof, as ground for dismissal. 18-433.

Objections as to which party is stopped.

Right of one raising a question not properly in the case to complain of its determination. 18-983.

Right of one asking an instruction upon a theory not involved in the case to complain if an instruction upon that theory is given for his adversary. 18-469.

Discretionary matters.

Election between counts in indictment charging receiving of stolen automobiles belonging to different owners. 18-1074.

Competency of expert witness. 18-119.

Competency of juror. 18-368.

Questions not raised below.

Theory upon which case is tried as binding on appeal. 18-1204.

Errors waived or cured below.

Failure to give twenty days' notice of intention to make extraordinary motion for new trial in criminal case. 18-368.

Misjoinder of parties defendant. 18-979.

Review of facts.

Depreciated value of money as element to be considered in passing upon excessiveness of verdicts in personal injury cases. 18-565.

Negligence or contributory negligence at railroad crossing, reversal of finding. 18-1106.

Finding by master approved by chancellor. 18-623.

On appeal from appellate court; contempt proceeding. 18-208.

Reversible error.

Indorsement of name of witness upon information after trial has commenced. 18-1074.

— as to evidence.

Error without prejudice. 18-1360.

Admission in suit to enjoin erection of tuberculosis hospital, of report of experts recommending the site chosen or the written approval of the site by state board of health. 18-119.

Evidence of value at a point short of destination of animals lost during transportation, in action against carrier. 18-1110.

— as to instructions.

As to duty to retreat. 18-1272.

Instruction in action for injury to passenger in automobile by defect in highway, that stranger driving in highway may presume that it is in safe condition. 18-303.

Instruction in action for husband's death, that misconduct of wife may be considered in estimating damages. 18-1406.

As to burden of proof of knowledge of infirmity in negotiable instrument by holder thereof. 18-1.

— as to conduct of trial.

Failure to require state to elect between counts in indictment until evidence was all in. 18-1074.

Judgment.

Legal conclusion, duty of appellate court to declare, when result of suit depends entirely upon a legal question. 18-947.

Reversal of judgment to permit defendant to implead third party so as to secure contribution from him. 18-303.

APPELLATE COURT.

Review of findings on appeal from, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

APPOINTMENT.

Of personal representative, see EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

Power of, see POWERS.

Of receiver, see RECEIVERS.

APPORTIONMENT.

Of rent payable in lump sum at end of year, where landlord accepts surrender during the year. 18-947.

ARGUMENT.

Of counsel, see TRIAL.

Italic type indicates points with annotation; roman type, points without.

COMBINED INDEX TO NOTES AND CASES

ARM.

Provision in insurance policy as to loss or breaking of, see INSURANCE.

What amounts to loss of, within meaning of Workmen's Compensation Act. 18-1352.

ARMY AND NAVY.

Amount awarded one enlisted in navy for loss of time because of injury inflicted by third person as affecting damages for the injury. 18-667.

ARREST.

Release from, on bail, see BAIL AND RECOGNIZANCE.

Personal liability of peace officer for killing or injuring in making arrest. 18-198.

Right to try one brought within jurisdiction by unlawful arrest. 18-513.

ASSAULT AND BATTERY.

In general.

Homicide in resisting, see HOMICIDE.

With intent to rape, see RAPE.

Contempt of court by. 18-212 (cases pp. 202, 208).

Justification; defenses.

Right of self-defense as affected by fact that defendant was in company with assailant's spouse. 18-1068 (case p. 1066).

Peace officers' criminal responsibility for wounding one whom they wished to investigate or identify. 18-1368 (case p. 1360).

ASSESSMENTS.

Insurance assessments, see INSURANCE.

ASSETS.

Of decedent's estate, see EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

ASSIGNMENT.

Of negotiable paper, see BILLS AND NOTES.
Of bill of lading, see BILLS OF LADING.

Of corporate stock, see
Of lease, see LANDLORD.
Of warehouse receipt, see MEN.

ASSIGNMENT FOR

Receivers, see RECEIVER.

ASSUMPTION

What constitutes duress covery, see DURESS

Mistake as ground for ment. 18-1230.

ATTACHMENT

Sale under, see JUDICIAL Recovery upon ground money paid upon founded claim to 18-1233 (case p.

ATTORNEY

In general.

Argument of, see TRIAL

*Assault on, as cont
18-215.*

*Account by, reasons which to object to,
its becoming an 18-892.*

Office of executor held law as a trade or b income tax. 18-41.

Verification by attorney application for c
18-706.

Imputing to client know 18-1.

Compensation.

As element of costs, see
Attorneys' fees in divorce
VORCE AND SEPARATION

*Right of executor, adm imentary trustee, an attorney, to en
torney at the expe
18-635 (case p. 6*

Bond of public deposi counsel fees and s ling repayment of amount. 18-269.

The dash in each citation stands for A.L.R.

As element of costs, see COSTS AND FEES.
In divorce suit, see DIVORCE AND SEPARATION.

AUTOMOBILES.

Gasolene stations, see GASOLENE STATIONS,

Insurance on car.

Question for jury whether failure of insured to read policy insuring car is responsible for loss due to its failure to cover a risk from which loss results. 18-1210.

Negligence in use of; injuries by.

Guest's liability for injury to third person by negligence of driver. 18-365 (case p. 362).

Owner's liability for injury by automobile while being operated by repair man. 18-974 (case p. 972).

Liability of one letting automobiles for Under Workmen's Compensation Act, see WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.

BAGGAGE TRANSFERRERS.

As common carriers. 18-1323.

BAIL AND RECOGNIZANCE.

Passing an indictment to the files as discharging bail. 18-1154.

BAILMENT.

Warehousemen, see WAREHOUSEMEN.

Acceptance of receptacle as charging one as bailee of contents. 18-87 (case p. 83).

Liability of gratuitous bailee of locked box for loss of money contained in such

COMBINED INDEX TO NOTES AND CASES

Officers and agents.

Agreement to pay an officer or employee of, to disclose the existence of, or to assist one to establish, a deposit. 18-979 (case p. 976).

Deposits generally.

Agreement to pay officer or employee of bank to disclose the existence of, or to assist one to establish, a deposit. 18-975 (case p. 976).

Account rendered by, reasonable time within which depositor must object to, to prevent its becoming an account stated. 18-892.

Special deposit.

Acceptance of receptacle as making bank liable as bailee of contents. 18-87.

Collections.

Right of bank which receives for collection draft with bill of lading attached, to deliver bill of lading conditionally to consignee to enable him to inspect the goods. 18-732 (case p. 728).

Check on bank as payment of debt held by bank for collection. 18-537 (case p. 532).

BASEBALL.

See BALL PLAYING.

BASTARDY.

In general, see ILLEGITIMACY.

BATTERY.

See ASSAULT AND BATTERY.

BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES.

Insurance by, see INSURANCE.

BIGAMY.

Absolute nullity of bigamous marriage. 18-88.

Effect of statute relating to legitimacy of offspring of void marriage to make legitimate child of bigamous marriage. 18-88.

Revocation of will by bigamous marriage

BILLS AND

In general.

Alteration of, see ALTE
MENTS.

Pleading foreign sta
18-1203.

Validity.

By married women,
WIFE.

Note procured by frat force or effect.

Consideration.

Failure of considerati
infra.

Transfer without in Negotiating by delive dorsed in blank. 1

Rights and liabilities

Effect of defense to holder who derive a holder in due cc

— who are bona fide Presumption and bur
see EVIDENCE.

Instruction as to burd
Statutory definition o
18-1, 7.

When title of person
ment is defective statute as to effe purchasing note c person negotiating

Sufficiency of suspicio or knowledge of stances to defeat

Actions; defenses.

Statement in pleading for note had faile
sion. 18-947.

BILLS OF

*Conditional delivery consignee, to ena
the goods, by ban
lection draft w attached.* 18-73

*Lack of indorsemen
dorsement of bill ing pledge of goc*

*Right of party disc with bill of ladir
the goods held a ment of the draf*

The dash in each citation stands for A.L.R.
18 A.L.R.—99.

COMBINED INDEX TO NOTES AND CASE

Reversion of title upon abandonment or vacation of street as affected by bounding land conveyed by the street. 18-1017.

Title to center of highway conveyed by bounding grant on highway, 18-992.

BREACH.

Of contracts generally, see CONTRACTS.

BRIBERY.

Entrapment to commit crime. 18-152

BROKERS.

Insurance brokers, see INSURANCE BROKERS.

Stockbrokers.

Account by, reasonable time within which to object to, so as to prevent its becoming an account stated. 18-598.

Real estate brokers.

Brokerage contract or contract of joint adventure. 18-469.

BUILDING AND CONSTRUCTION CONTRACTS.

Bond of contractor, see BONDS.

BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS.

Regular employment of notary public by, as depriving him of his official character so as to relieve surety on his bond from liability. 18-1295.

BUILDINGS.

Restrictive covenants as to, see COVENANTS AND CONDITIONS.

Erection of, in parks or squares, see PARKS AND SQUARES.

BURDEN OF PROOF.

See EVIDENCE.

BURGL

Entrapment to comm

BUSIN

Privilege of communi business, see LIBE
Unfair competition, s
TITION.

BY-LA

Of insurance company

BYSTAN

Killing of, by unlawfu other. 18-917 (C

CANCELATION OF

Of certificate of citizen
Of contracts generally
Of insurance policy, s
Applicability of doctri not apply to suit to 18-690.

CAPIT

Right to erect, in pa

CARRI

Who are common ca

Persons or corporation transportation of (cases pp. 1810,

General rule as to wh constitute one a c a particular insta

Who are passengers.

*Status of passenger who enters Pullm
porary purpose.
69).*

Carrying livestock.
Measure of damages fo
of animals, see DA

The dash in each citation stands for A.L.R.

Furnishing unwholesome water or food to live stock. 18-1116 (case p. 1110).

Prejudicial error in reception of evidence as to value of animals lost. 18-1110.

Shipping contract not admissible on behalf of carrier in absence of pleading of fault on part of shipper. 18-1110.

Lack of knowledge of unwholesomeness as affecting liability for injury to animals by unwholesome water. 18-1110.

Duty to operate road.

Duty to operate side and switch tracks and spurs. 18-722 (case p. 717).

Requiring operation of sidetrack temporarily constructed and operated on land adjoining right of way, under gratuitous permission of owner of land, terminable at his option. 18-717.

CARTMEN.

See TEAMING AND TRUCKING.

CASUALTIES.

See ACCIDENT.

CATTLE.

In general, see ANIMALS.

Transportation of, see CARRIERS.

CAUSE.

Question for jury as to, see TRIAL.

CAVEAT.

Right of public administrator or state to file caveat to, or contest, will. 18-79 (case p. 77).

CERTIFICATE.

Of acknowledgment, see ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

Of citizenship, see ALIENS.

Constitutionality of regulations as to certification of milk. 18-246.

CERTIORARI.

Discretion of court as to grant of. 18-219.
When writ may be issued under statutory provision therefor. 18-219.

Effect of other remedy. 18-219.

Reviewing merits of case or weighing evidence. 18-219.

CHAIR CARS.

See SLEEPING AND CHAIR CARS.

CHANGE OF BENEFICIARY.

See INSURANCE.

CHANGE OF VENUE.

See VENUE.

CHARITIES.

Recovery against one responsible for personal injury as affected by charitable act. 18-686.

CHattel MORTGAGE.

Sale of property by chattel mortgagor and appropriation of the proceeds as a wilful and malicious injury to the property of the mortgagee, within meaning of Bankruptcy Act. 18-1426.

Sale of property by mortgagor and appropriation of the proceeds as conversion. 18-1426.

Election of remedy for wrongful sale of property by mortgagor. 18-1426.

CHATTELS.

Mortgage of, see CHATTEL MORTGAGE.

CHAUFFEUR.

See AUTOMOBILES.

CHECKS.

Payment by, see PAYMENT.

Italic type indicates points with annotation; roman type, points without.

COMBINED INDEX TO NOTES AND CASES.

CHILDREN.

See INFANTS; PARENT AND CHILD.

CHURCH.

In general, see RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.

CINEMATOGRAPH.

See MOVING PICTURES.

CITIZENS.

Aliens, see ALIENS.

CITIZENSHIP.

Citizenship of domesticated foreign corporation. 18-135.

CITY HALL.

Right to erect, in park. 18-1253.

CIVIL DEATH.

Imprisonment as extending time for redemption from judicial, execution, or tax sale. 18-531 (case p. 529).

CLAIMS.

Against decedent's estate, see EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

CLASSIFICATION.

By statutes, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW; STATUTES.

CLERKS.

Town clerk, see TOWN CLERK.

CLOTHES.

School regulation as to clothes of pupils. 18-649 (case p. 645).

COCAIN.

See DRUGS AND DRUGGS.

COLLATERAL INHIBITION.

See TAXES.

COLLATERAL INDEMNITY.

See PLEDGE AND COLLATERAL.

COLLECT.

By bank, see BANKS.

COLLECTOR.

Exhibition to, of letter from merchant's account as to goods.

COLORING MATERIAL.

Constitutionality of adding coloring material to cream. 18-245.

COMITTEE.

In general, see CONFLICT OF INTERESTS.

COMMERCIAL.

Entrapment to violate Commerce Act. 18-17.

State franchise tax upon road. 18-693.

COMMISSION MERCHANT.

See FACTORS.

COMMISSIONS AND COMMISSIONER.

Delegation of power to, under AL LAW.

Commissions of persons, see EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

Federal Trade Commission. TRADE COMMISSION.

The dash in each citation stands for A.L.R.

Commissions of trustee, see TRUSTS.

As a fraud, see FRAUD AND DECEIT.

COMMON CARRIERS.

See CARRIERS.

CONCESSIONS.

Grant of, in public parks. 18-1263.

COMMON DISASTER.

Effect on joint estate, community estate, or estate by entireties of death of both tenants in same disaster. 18-105 (case p. 103).

CONCLUSIONS.

Averment of, see PLEADING.

CONCLUSIVENESS.

Of judgment, see JUDGMENT.

COMMON LAW.

Power of legislature to alter common-law rules of conveyancing. 18-992.

CONDEMNATION PROCEEDINGS.

See EMINENT DOMAIN.

COMMONS.

See PARKS AND SQUARES.

CONDITIONS.

See COVENANTS AND CONDITIONS.

COMMUNITY PROPERTY

1

1

1

1

1

1

1

1

1

1

1

1

COMBINED INDEX TO NOTES AND CASES

Corporate matters.

Jurisdiction of action by or against foreign corporation, see COURTS.

Law controlling issuance of corporate stock. 18-1373.

Law governing rights and liabilities of stockholder in foreign corporation. 18-1376.

Personal injuries.

Extraterritorial operation of workmen's compensation statutes. 18-292 (case p. 285).

Remedies.

Law governing matters relating to the remedy for enforcement of married women's contracts. 18-1550.

Limitation of actions. 18-1194.

CONSENT.

As defense to crime, see CRIMINAL LAW.

Alimony after death of husband as affected by consent. 18-1055.

CONSEQUENTIAL INJURIES.

See EMINENT DOMAIN.

CONSIDERATION.

For note, see BILLS AND NOTES.

For contracts generally, see CONTRACTS.

CONSORTIUM.

Right of action for loss of, see HUSBAND AND WIFE.

CONSPIRACY.

Entrapment to commit crime. 18-153.

CONSTITUTION.

Of insurance company, see INSURANCE.

CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION.

Considering debates in constitutional convention in construing Constitution. 18-750.

CONSTITUTION

Construction.

Interpreting doubtful consonance with purport at time of. 18-750.

Considering conditions and at time of adoption under consideration.

Considering debates in convention and printed and against provision of people. 18-

Delegation of power.

To boards of health milk. 18-237.

Federal Trade Commission delegation of power.

Making operation of particular municipality on acceptance of council. 18-1242.

To municipalities. 18-

Rights of persons and protection; due power.

Crimination of self, see Uniformity and equality; LICENSE.

Special and local legislation. UTES.

Privilege of witness, see

Municipal corporations constitutional provisions granting of special corporations." 18-929

Right to classify persons for the purpose. 18-929.

Prevention of fraud and competition as with power. 18-219.

Inconsistency between rule of law as to property for public

Possibility of reverting dedicated the fee of estate within constitution. 18-992.

Vesting title to vacated owner as depriving the highway of his

Straightening course of to protect roads and floods as exercise. 18-393, — animals.

Fence and stock laws. 63).

The dash in each citation stands for A.L.R.

Sale or killing of stock running at large in violation of law. 18-63.

Sufficiency of time for redemption of animals seized under statute providing for sale of animals running at large in violation of law. 18-63.

— confiscation, seizure, and destruction of property.

Summary destruction of milk under certain conditions. 18-249.

Sale or killing of stock running at large in violation of law. 18-63.

Effect on validity of statute providing for sale of animals found running at large, of provision for turning the proceeds of sale into the road and bridge fund in case the owner fails to redeem the stock. 18-63.

Sufficiency of time for redemption of animals seized under statute providing for sale of animals running at large in violation of law. 18-63.

— criminal matters.

As to evidence, see infra.

Former jeopardy, see CRIMINAL LAW.

Self-crimination, see CRIMINAL LAW.

Right to jury trial, see JURY.

— fences.

Fencing and stock laws. 18-67 (case p. 63).

— license.

License for sale of milk. 18-253 (case p. 219).

— master and servant.

Provisions of Workmen's Compensation Act directed against noninsuring or self-insuring employers. 18-267 (case p. 259).

— milk.

Milk regulations. 18-235 (case p. 219).

— moving pictures.

Regulation of motion pictures in exercise of police power. 18-733.

— rates.

Discrimination between public utilities operated by private corporations or persons and utilities owned by municipalities. 18-929.

— remedies and procedure.

Revocation of license to sell milk without notice or hearing. 18-255.

Arbitrary declaration as to what shall constitute adulteration or unwholesomeness of milk. 18-246.

Failure to provide for appeal from revocation of license by order of dairy commissioner. 18-219.

Necessity of notice to owner before seizure and sale of stock running at large in violation of law. 18-63.

— vested rights.

Right to paid-up policy in case of disability after reaching certain age; impairment by by-law requiring payment of assessments during disability period. 18-1172.

CONSTRUCTION.

Of Constitution, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Of covenant or condition, see COVENANTS AND CONDITIONS.

Of deed, see DEEDS.

Of insurance contracts, see INSURANCE.

Of statute, see STATUTES.

CONTAGIOUS AND INFECTIOUS DISEASES.

Pesthouse or contagious disease hospital as a nuisance. 18-123 (cases pp. 116, 119).

CONTAINERS.

Constitutionality of regulations as to containers for milk. 18-251.

CONTEMPT.

What constitutes.

Assault as contempt of court. 18-212 (cases pp. 202, 208).

Assault upon judge during intermission of court at place other than court room. 18-202.

Abusing juror and making threatening gestures at him after case is ended but before end of term of court. 18-208.

Purging from contempt.

Denying intention to show contempt. 18-208.

Appeal.

Right of one adjudged guilty of contempt to appeal. 18-208.

Italic type indicates points with annotation; roman type, points without.

COMBINED INDEX TO NOTES AND CASE

Review of findings of fact on appeal from judgment of superior court. 18-208.

Power as to.

Inherent power of courts to punish for contempt. 18-202.

CONTENTS.

Acceptance of receipt as charging one as bailor of contents. 18-87 (case p. 83).

CONTEST.

Of will, see WILLS.

CONTRACTORS.

Bonds of, see BONDS.

CONTRACTS.

In general.

Conflict of laws as to, see CONFLICT OF LAWS.

Of corporation, see CORPORATIONS.

Measure of damages in action on, see DAMAGES.

Fraud in procuring, waiver of, see FRAUD.

Of incompetent person, see INCOMPETENT PERSONS.

Of married women, see HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Constitutional immunity against giving incriminating testimony as affecting contractual stipulation to submit to examination. 18-749 (case p. 742).

Pleading foreign statute relating to. 18-1203.

Implied agreements.

To share losses in the same proportion as profits in case of joint adventure, 18-469.

Consideration.

Consideration for note, see BILLS AND NOTES.

Payment of consideration as part performance which will take contract out of Statute of Frauds. 18-1089.

Joint adventure, consideration for contract. 18-469.

Insurance broker's contract to secure specified policy of insurance, consideration for. 18-1210.

Award of contract for consideration for con pay debts incurred work. 18-1221.

Statute of Frauds.

Joint adventure or pa real estate as Frauds. 18-484 469).

Rights and remedies o money to purchas an oral agreemen give a mortgage t 18-1098 (case p.

Remedy where party sideration has be oral agreement to is insolvent, and property to anotl eration. 18-1089.

—effect of fraud or Mere refusal to perfo as fraud. 18-1089.

Payment of considerat

Construction.

Deeds, see DEEDS.

Insurance contracts, s Covenants, see COVE TIONS.

Validity.

Statute of Frauds, see Married women's cont AND WIFE.

Insurance contract, se

—public policy.

Proceedings and reme infra.

Effect of public policy contract of other OF LAWS.

Agreement to pay offl bank or trust com existence of, or to lish, a deposit. 18-976).

Agreement for cancela insurance policy loan. 18-1146

Admissibility of evid was contrary to p answer totally de of the contract.

Fiduciary's agreement part with his pr of the profits. 18 —remedies; proceeds tracts.

Execution of contract public policy as accounting and 18-469.

The dash in each citation stands for A.L.R.

Breach.
Measure of damages for breach, see DAMAGES.

Choice of remedy for breach, see ELECTION OF REMEDIES.

Third person's right to sue for breach, see PARTIES.

Rescission.

Promptness as condition of right to. 18-890, 1190.

Public contracts.

Bond of contractor, see BONDS.

CONTRIBUTION.

Reversal of judgment to permit defendant to implead third party so as to secure contribution from him. 18-308.

CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

See NEGLIGENCE.

CONVERSION.

See TROVER AND CONVERSION.

CONVEYANCES.

See DEEDS.

CONVICTS.

Status of, see CIVIL DEATH.

COPY.

Filing affidavit of forgery against ancient deed as affecting admissibility of copy thereof in evidence. 18-912.

COPYIST.

Communication or exhibition of defamatory matter to, as publication or privilege. 18-776.

CORPORATIONS.

In general; creation.

Conflict of laws as to corporate matters, see CONFLICT OF LAWS.

Estoppel as to corporate existence & powers, see ESTOPPEL.

Receivers for, see RECEIVERS.

Taxation of, see TAXES.

Incorporation in two states as a domestication in one state of a corporation of the other. 18-123.

Jurisdiction to determine validity of creation of corporation of other state. 18-1376.

Incorporation in two or more states. 18-124.

De facto corporation.

Liability of stockholders in, see infra.

Domicil.

Residence of domesticated foreign corporation. 18-136.

Corporation must dwell at the place of its creation. 18-1376.

Reorganization; merger.

Jurisdiction of action involving validity of reorganization of foreign corporation. 18-1403.

Jurisdiction to determine question of merger of two corporations of another state. 18-1376.

Contracts; ultra vires.

What constitutes fraud in execution of corporate notes, which will throw upon subsequent holder burden of proving that he is a holder in due course. 18-57.

Jurisdiction to restrain ultra vires act of foreign corporation. 18-1394.

Conclusiveness of decision of corporate officers or directors that property is of sufficient value to warrant a loan under the powers of the corporation. 18-645 (case p. 639).

Seal on deed as prima facie evidence that deed was duly authorized act of corporation. 18-901.

Officers and directors.

Officers of bank, see BANKS.

Conclusiveness of decision of, that property is of sufficient value to warrant a loan under the powers of the corporation. 18-645 (case p. 639).

Issue of stock.

Jurisdiction of action to compel issue of stock by foreign corporation. 18-1396 (cases pp. 1373, 1376).

Law controlling issuance of corporate stock. 18-1373.

Italic type indicates points with annotation; roman type, points without.

COMBINED INDEX TO NOTES AND CASE

Power of legislature or public service commission of state where foreign corporation is doing business to increase or diminish its stock. 18-1373.

Transfer of stock.

Fraudulent representations in sale of corporate stock for which note is given, throwing upon subsequent holder of note burden of proving that he is a holder in due course. 18-60.

Jurisdiction of action to compel foreign corporation to transfer stock on books. 18-1397.

Rights of stockholders.

Jurisdiction of action to enforce rights of stockholders in foreign corporation. 18-1398 (case p. 1376).

Law governing rights of stockholder in foreign corporation. 18-1376.

Liability of stockholders.

Personal liability of persons doing business in name of dormant corporation. 18-282 (case p. 277).

Partnership liability of stockholders in de facto corporation. 18-277.

Estoppel to set up partnership liability of stockholders in de facto corporation. 18-277.

Dissolution.

Jurisdiction of action to dissolve foreign corporation. 18-1403.

Foreign corporations.

Domicil of, see supra.

What law governs matters affecting, see CONFLICT OF LAWS.

Jurisdiction over, see COURTS.

Insurance companies, see INSURANCE.

Appointment of receiver for, see RECEIVERS.

Taxation of, see TAXES.

Effect of domestication of foreign corporations. 18-130 (case p. 124).

Distinction between licensing to do domestic business and domesticating foreign corporation. 18-131.

Question as to intent of state providing for domesticating a foreign corporation to create a new corporation or to confer certain powers on the foreign one. 18-124.

COST OF LIVING.

Increase in, as affecting damages for personal injuries or death. 18-564 (case p. 554).

COSTS AND

Liability of appellant not reversed, as jurisdiction of ap

Acceptance of benefit bar to appeal from attorneys' fees. 1

Presumption as to preference for attorneys' fees in foreign judgment. 1

Limiting counsel fees to penalty of the

COTENANT

Entirety estate, see H

Death of both tenants as affecting joint tenancy judgment. (case p. 103).

COUNSEL

See ATTORNEYS,

COUNTERFEIT

Entrapment to commit forgery. 18-160.

Entrapment to commit goods bearing counterfeit. 18-162.

COUNTY AT

See DISTRICT AND PLEAS.

COUNTY DEED

Bond of, see BONDS.

COURTH

Erection of, in public. 18-1254.

COURT OF

Assault on, as common law. 18-217.

COUR

In general; jurisdiction of admiralty, see ADMIRALTY.

The dash in each citation stands for A.L.R.

Contempt of, see CONTEMPT.
Presumption in favor of judicial acts, see EVIDENCE.

Venue of action, see VENUE.

Change of venue as affecting jurisdiction, see VENUE.

Respect for action of. 18-208.

Estoppel to complain of lack of jurisdiction. 18-219.

—over foreign corporations.

Jurisdiction of action or proceeding involving internal affairs of foreign corporation. 18-1383 (cases pp. 1370, 1373, 1376).

Jurisdiction to determine validity of creation of corporation of other state. 18-1376.

Merger of two corporations of other state, power to determine question as to. 18-1376.

Jurisdiction to enforce rights of stockholder in foreign corporation. 18-1376.

Review by, of statutes or ordinances. Courts have no authority to make a law. 18-929.

Considering effect upon the entire enactment of holding particular provision invalid. 18-929.

Inquiry into wisdom of legislation. 18-929.

Review by courts of exercise of police power delegated to city. 18-95.

Rules of decision; stare decisis.

Rule of stare decisis as preventing review of constitutional question where facts before court are slightly different from those in former decisions. 18-992.

Decisions rendered after dedication was made as affecting rights of dedicator of street, upon its vacation. 18-992.

Erroneous decisions. 18-992.

COVENANTS AND CONDITIONS.

In general.

Condition precedent to suit, see ACTION OR SUIT.

Condition in bond of contractor, see BONDS.

Condition of right to rescind contract, see CONTRACTS.

Expiration of covenant pending appeal in suit to enjoin violation of covenant as ground for dismissal of appeal. 18-433.

Restricting use of property.

In dedication, see DEDICATION.

Multiple residence structures as violations of restrictive covenants. 18-451 (cases pp. 433, 441).

Object of covenant to be considered in construing it. 18-441.

Single house to constitute an apartment house as violation of restriction against more than one dwelling house on lot. 18-433.

Waiver of condition against erection of apartment house, what constitutes. 18-441.

COWS.

See ANIMALS.

CRIMINAL LAW.

Civil death of convicts, see CIVIL DEATH.
District attorney, see DISTRICT AND PROSECUTING ATTORNEYS.

Illegal sale of drugs or offense against the Narcotic Act, see DRUGS AND DRUGGISTS.

Violation of Espionage Act, see ESPIONAGE ACT.

Extradition, see EXTRADITION.

Habeas corpus, see HABEAS CORPUS.

Violation of liquor laws, see INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

Criminal libel, see LIBEL AND SLANDER.

Criminal trespass, see TRESPASS.

See also ABORTION; BIGAMY; BRIBERY; BURGLARY; CONSPIRACY; COUNTERFEITING; EMBEZZLEMENT; EXTORTION; FALSE PRETENSES; FORGERY; HOMICIDE; LARCENY; LOTTERY; RAPE; RECEIVING STOLEN PROPERTY; ROBBERY.

Instigation or consent, as defense.

Entrapment to commit crime with view of prosecution thereof. 18-146 (case p. 143).

Government officer under no duty to incite to or create crime for purpose of prosecuting and punishing it. 18-143.

Procedure; rights of accused.

Appeal in criminal case generally, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

Bail, see BAIL AND RECOGNIZANCE.

Instructions, see TRIAL.

Venue, see VENUE.

Waiver of right to review conviction by payment of fine, serving sentence, or discharge on habeas corpus. 18-867 (case p. 864).

Italic type indicates points with annotation; roman type, points without.

Application to criminal cases of statute authorizing special interrogatories. 18-1860.

Treaty as defense to prosecution instituted in disregard thereof. 18-503.

— self-crimination.

Requiring dairymen to furnish sample of milk for analysis. 18-248.

Contractual stipulation to submit to examination as affected by constitutional immunity against self-crimination. 18-749 (case p. 742).

— former jeopardy.

Passing indictment to files, right to re-docket. 18-1153 (case p. 1150).

Conviction for unlawful possession of intoxicating liquor as bar to prosecution for feloniously making or distilling the same liquor. 18-1150.

Sentence and imprisonment.

Effect of imprisonment as civil death, see CIVIL DEATH.

Waiver of right to review conviction by serving sentence. 18-872 (case p. 864).

CRIMINAL LIBEL.

See LIBEL AND SLANDER.

CRIMINAL TRESPASS.

See TRESPASS.

CRIMINATION OF SELF.

See CRIMINAL LAW.

CROSSINGS.

Injury at railway crossing, see RAILROADS.

CRUELTY.

As ground for divorce, see DIVORCE AND SEPARATION.

CUSTOM AND USAGE.

Evidence of, generally, see EVIDENCE.

Judicial notice of. 18-546.

DAIRIES.

See MILK.

DAIRY COMMISSIONER.

As an independent officer not subordinate to commissioner of agriculture and labor. 18-219.

Failure to provide for appeal from revocation of license by order of dairy commissioner. 18-219.

DAMAGES.

Opinion evidence as to, see EVIDENCE.
Instructions as to, see TRIAL.

Nominal damages.

Contributory negligence of plaintiff as affecting. 18-1210.

For insurance broker's breach of undertaking to secure specified form of insurance. 18-1210.

Preventing unnecessary amount.

Duty of employee seeking recovery under Workmen's Compensation Act to submit to operation or to take other measures to restore his earning capacity. 18-431 (cases pp. 415, 427).

General rule as to. 18-1210.

Contracts; bonds.

Nominal damages, see supra.

Preventing unnecessary amount, see supra.

Agent's or broker's breach of contract to procure or keep up insurance. 18-1219.

Damages limited to penalty of bond. 18-269.

In respect to freight.

Market value at point of destination as measure of damages for killing of sheep in transportation. 18-1110.

Torts generally.

Preventing unnecessary amount, see supra.

Personal injuries; death.

Recovery for mental anguish, see infra.

Mitigation or reduction, see infra.

Amount of recovery under Workmen's Compensation Act, see WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.

Increase in cost of living, or impaired purchasing power of money, as affecting. 18-564 (case p. 554).

DEFAMATION.

See LIBEL AND SLANDER.

DEFENSES.

In civil action generally, see ACTION OR SUIT.

To liability for assault, see ASSAULT AND BATTERY.

Instigation or consent as defense to criminal prosecution, see CRIMINAL LAW.

DEFINITENESS.

See UNCERTAINTY AND INDEFINITENESS.

DEFINITIONS.

See WORDS AND PHRASES.

DELAY.

In rescission of contract, see CONTRACTS.

Insurer's delay in exercising right to cancel policy for nonpayment of loan. 18-1141.

DELEGATION OF POWER.

Constitutionality of, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

DELIVERY.

Of property pledged, see PLEDGE AND COLLATERAL SECURITY.

DEMAND.

Necessity of demand on public depository for funds, to put it in default. 18-269.

DEMURRER.

See PLEADING.

DENTISTS.

Entrapment to commit the offense of practising dentistry without license. 18-186.

DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION.

Pleading foreign statute of. 18-1202.

Death of both tenants in same disaster as affecting joint estate, community estate, or estate by entireties. 18-105 (case p. 103).

DESERTION.

As ground for divorce, see DIVORCE AND SEPARATION.

DESTRUCTION.

Constitutionality of seizure and destruction of property, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

DETECTIVES.

Apparent co-operation of, in crimes, see CRIMINAL LAW.

DIRECTION OF VERDICT.

See TRIAL.

DISCHARGE.

In bankruptcy, see BANKRUPTCY.

On habeas corpus, see HABEAS CORPUS.

Of servant, see MASTER AND SERVANT.

DISCONTINUANCE.

Of highways, see HIGHWAYS.

DISCRETION.

Review of, on appeal, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

As to grant of writ of certiorari. 18-219.

DISCRIMINATION.

Unconstitutionality of, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

In license tax, see LICENSE.

As to goods or patrons as affecting question whether one engaged in local transportation of goods is a common carrier. 18-1319.

The dash in each citation stands for A.L.R.

Cancellation of certificate of citizenship because of. 18-1185 (case p. 1182).

DISMISSAL OR DISCONTINUANCE.

Of appeal, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

Dismissal, after change of venue in criminal case, as affecting jurisdiction or power of courts of respective districts as to subsequent proceedings. 18-714 (case p. 706).

DISQUALIFICATION.

Of juror, see JURY.

DISSOLUTION.

Of corporation, see CORPORATIONS.

deserted spouse. 18-627.

Alimony; suit money.

Right of wife to allowance of counsel fees to prosecute or defend appeal in matrimonial action. 18-1494 (case p. 1492).

Death of husband as affecting alimony. 18-1040 (case p. 1038).

Support of children.

Allowance in decree against parent for education of child. 18-899 (case p. 896).

DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE.

See EVIDENCE.

DOMESTICATION.

Effect of domestication of foreign corpo-

COMBINED INDEX TO NOTES AND CASES.

DRIVER.

Imputing negligence of, to passenger, see NEGLIGENCE.

ELECTIC

Between courts in indictment, etc.

DRUGS AND DRUGGISTS.

Entrapment to commit crime of unlawfully selling narcotics. 18-170 (case p. 143).

Entrapment to commit offense of illegal importation of opium. 18-178.

Entrapment to violate Pure Food and Drug Act. 18-187.

ELECTION OF R

For wrongful sale of m by mortgagor. 18-1
Contract or tort as re
failure to perform

ELECTRIC

Incidental service by c electric plant as re a public utility. 18

DUPLEX RESIDENCE.

Violation of restrictive covenant by, see COVENANTS AND CONDITIONS.

ELECTRIC L

Power of city as to, gene PAL CORPORATIONS.

DUPLICITY.

In indictment, see INDICTMENT, ETC.

ELECTRIC V

Right to string wires right of way. 18-615).

DURESS.

Recovery back of money paid upon excessive or unfounded claim to avoid attachment. 18-1233 (case p. 1230).

EMBEZZLER

*Entrapment to commit bezzling letter coo
18-181.*

EASEMENTS.

For railroad right of way, see RAILROADS.
Right of way as a limited estate; grantee exceeding limits as trespasser. 18-615.

Notary's bond as liable

EDUCATION.

Of infants, see INFANTS.

EMINENT DO

What may be taken; fo

Condemnation of park l consistent with purp cation. 18-1271.

EJECTMENT.

Determining title of United States to real estate in suit by alleged owner against agents of government in possession of the property. 18-992.

Possessory action by claimant of real estate against officers of government holding the property for public purposes. 18-992.

*Rights acquired.
As against third persons*

Right to compensation Consequential injuries i infra.

Measure of damages, se

Compensation in second proceeding. 18-561

Inconsistency between p rule of law as to t property for public

Second condemnation, estoppel as to damages. 18-567.

Consequential injuries.

May paramount right of public to improve navigability of stream without compensating riparian owner for resulting damage be extended to improvements for purposes not in aid of navigation. 18-403 (case p. 393).

Injury to private property by changing course of stream to protect roads and bridges. 18-393.

Additional servitude.

Telephone line along public highway. 18-615.

EMPLOYEES.

See MASTER AND SERVANT.

EN

Right to en
18-1264, 1

ENCI

By trees on bou
OWNERS.

EN

See HUSBAND AND

ENI

To commit crim

E

Of license tax, s

EQUAL

See CONSTITUTION

EQUITA

See ESTOPPEL.

Italic type i

EQUITY.

Injunction, see INJUNCTION.

Limitation of actions in, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

Misrepresentation as to age as estoppel to plead infancy. 18-521 (case p. 516).

EROSION.

Liability for erosion of banks by water within the stream because of straightening of channel to prevent overflow. 18-393.

ESCAPE.

Homicide by officer to prevent, see HOMICIDE.

COMBINED INDEX TO NOTES AND CASES.

By fraud.

Misrepresentation as to age as estoppel to plead infancy. 18-520 (case p. 516).

By inconsistency.

Choosing forum in which one's right shall be determined as estoppel to complain of lack of jurisdiction. 18-219.

Damages on second condemnation, estoppel to avoid, by theory of damages set up on first condemnation. 18-567.

By receiving benefits.

Appeal barred by, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

— knowledge; fraud; gu

Fraud in inception of throwing upon other burden of proving it in due course. 18-7, 10.)

Instruction as to, 18-1.

Fiduciary profiting by principal. 18-469.

— cause.

Presumption that injury result of accident.

— contributory negligence.
Exercise of ordinary care action for wrongful — judicial acts.

Propriety of amount fees included in it 18-1194.

Documentary evidence.

Filing affidavit of forged deed, effect. 18-96

Prompt registration of its admissibility in Certified copy from record more than thirty years showing that the deed instrument. 18-901

Parol and extrinsic evidence in writings.

In suit against broker to cure kind of insurance contracted for. 18-121

Opinions.

Discretion of master as expert witness. 18

Necessity that opinion be upon facts proved sufficient to form a basis 18-106.

As to value of sheep on Relevancy and materiality.

Under particular plead

Libel for charging preacher with immorality, evidence that morals was required of person in ordinary Libel in charging preacher with immorality, evidence that, he insisted on preaching. 18-1155.

— custom or habit.

Habit or custom of one as evidence of his freedom from negligence. (case p. 1106).

EVIDENCE.

In general.

Constitutionality of statute as to, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Reception of, on trial, see TRIAL.

Necessity of exception to exclusion of. 18-1110.

Judicial notice.

Custom of persons having goods for sale to entertain employees of customers. 18-546.

Existence of dormant and growing season in each year where land is used for agricultural purposes. 18-947,

Population of city. 18-95.

Presumptions and burden of proof.

Instruction as to, see TRIAL.

Ancient deed, affidavit of forgery against, as affecting burden of proof as to genuineness thereof. 18-912.

Letter properly addressed and mailed presumed to reach addressee; rebuttal of presumption. 18-1125.

Presumption that joint adventurers are to share equally in the profits. 18-469.

Corporate seal on deed as prima facie evidence that deed was duly authorized. 18-901.

Husband's failure to furnish necessities or the means of procuring them. 18-1125.

Reasonableness of increase of insurance rates or change in plan of assessments to increase revenue. 18-1172.

— survivorship.

Effect on joint estate, community estate, or estate by entirety, of death of both tenants in same disaster. 18-105 (case p. 103).

Survivorship where two persons perish in the same disaster. 18-103.

The dash in each citation stands for A.L.R.

to accident resulting in death is challenged as ground for admission of evidence of habits of deceased. 18-1106.

—reputation.

Reputation of one injured or killed as evidence of his own negligence or freedom from negligence. 18-1109.

—value.

Prejudicial error as to. 18-1110.

—negligence.

Custom or habit as to, see supra.

Evidence of reputation on question of, see supra.

Evidence of similar acts or facts in negligence cases, see infra.

Evidence of violation of ordinance. 18-782.

Circumstantial evidence to prove that one killed by another's negligence exercised ordinary care. 18-1106.

—similar acts or facts.

Other accidents. 18-610.

Weight and sufficiency.

Insufficiency of evidence as ground for new trial, see NEW TRIAL.

Sufficiency of evidence to go to jury, see TRIAL.

Instruction as to, see TRIAL.

Question for jury as to weight of testimony. 18-1110.

Sufficiency of evidence to sustain finding that employee was not totally incapacitated. 18-415.

Scroll on record of deed, opposite the signature, as showing that the deed was under seal. 18-901.

In prosecution of husband for rape of wife. 18-1057.

Admissibility under pleadings.

Evidence admissible where specific acts of negligence are set out in detail. 18-192.

Evidence admissible under general allegation of negligence. 18-192.

Admissibility of evidence that contract was contrary to public policy, under answer totally denying the existence of the contract. 18-469.

Shipping contract not admissible on behalf of carrier in absence of pleading of fault on part of shipper. 18-1110.

Variances.

Variance between indictment and proof, see INDICTMENT, ETC.

Right to answer on theme of last plea

Constitutional immunity against giving incriminating testimony as affecting contractual stipulation to submit to examination. 18-749 (case p. 742).

EXCEPTIONS.

To raise question on appeal, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

Generally, see TRIAL.

EXCISE TAX.

On corporation, see TAXES.

EXCLUSIVE PRIVILEGES.

See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

EXCUSABLE HOMICIDE.

See HOMICIDE.

EXECUTION.

Sale under, see JUDICIAL SALE.

Of power of appointment, see POWERS.

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

In general.

Public administrators, see PUBLIC ADMINISTRATOR.

Nature of residence contemplated by statute or rule making residence within state qualification of executor or administrator. 18-681 (case p. 573).

Income tax on commissions of. 18-414 (case p. 411).

Right of executor or administrator who is himself an attorney to employ another attorney at the expense of the estate. 18-635 (case p. 631).

Desire of testator as controlling factor in determining right to administer estate. 18-575.

Property subject to appointment as assets of estate of donee of power. 18-1461.

Authority of administrator appointed in one county as extending to estate of decedent in all counties of state. 18-1118.

Past-due note held by citizen of one state against one of another as assets at domicil of creditor. 18-1118.

Removal from state of assets of nonresident decedent before claims of citizens of state are paid. 18-1118.

Interest of mortgagor who has paid judgment recovered by domiciliary administrator, in controversy between the latter and an ancillary administrator as to right to proceeds. 18-1118.

Estoppel of ancillary administrator, as against judgment debtor, to question validity of judgment under which domiciliary administrator collected money. 18-1118.

EXHIBITS.

With pleading, see PLEADING.

Lease of public park for purpose of. 18-1238.

EXPENDITURES.

Estoppel by permitting, see ESTOPPEL.

EXPERT EVIDENCE.

See EVIDENCE.

EXPLOSIONS AND EXPLOSIVES.

Entrapment to violate statute regulating manufacture of explosives. 18-178.

Nonliability of employer for injuries from explosion caused by torts of independent contractor. 18-853, 858.

EXTENSION.

Of time, see TIME.

EXTERNAL, VIOLENT AND ACCIDENTAL MEANS.

Injury to, or death of, insured by, see INSURANCE.

EXTORTION.

Entrapment to commit crime. 18-161. Insurable interest in life of. 18-1161.

The dash in each citation stands for A.L.R.

EXTRADITION.

Right to try one brought within jurisdiction illegally or as a result of mistake as to identity. 18-509 (case p. 503).

Presumption that soldiers were acting under permission of government where arrest was made, in determining jurisdiction to try one arrested by United States soldiers in foreign territory. 18-503.

EXTRAORDINARY MOTION.

For new trial, see NEW TRIAL.

EXTRATERRITORIAL OPERATION.

Of Workmen's Compensation Act, see WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.

EYESIGHT.

Construction of provision in insurance policy as to loss of. 18-1346.

FACTORS.

Account rendered by, reasonable time within which to object to, so as to prevent its becoming an account stated. 18-894.

FACTS.

Review of, on appeal, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

FALLING OBJECTS.

Independent contractor, employment of, as affecting liability of owner for injury by fall of object from building during work thereon. 18-782, 788.

Contributory negligence of pedestrian in street, injured by fall of shutter. 18-782.

FALSE PRETENSES.

Entrapment to commit crime. 18-161.

FATHER-IN-LAW.

FEDERAL CONTROL.

Franchise tax on railroads as affected by. 18-693.

Failure of counsel to raise, in action against telephone company in possession of the government, defense of nonliability of defendant because the negligence was that of the government. 18-554.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

Validity and construction of statute creating Federal Trade Commission. 18-549 (cases pp. 542, 546).

FENCES.

Constitutionality of fence and stock laws. 18-67 (case p. 63).

FIDUCIARY.

Concealment by fiduciary, see FRAUD AND DECEIT.

Trustees generally, see TRUSTS.

Validity of fiduciary's agreement to induce owner to part with his property. 18-469.

Presumption and burden of proof as to fraud where fiduciary profits by transaction with principal. 18-469.

FILING.

Passing indictment to files, effect. 18-1153 (case p. 1150).

FINANCIAL ABILITY.

Of husband as affecting wife's right to counsel fees to prosecute or defend appeal in matrimonial action. 18-1498.

FINDINGS.

Review of, on appeal, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

FINES.

Waiver of right to review conviction by payment of. 18-867.

FINGERS.

What amounts to loss of, within meaning of Workmen's Compensation Act. 18-1853.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

Liability on bond of policeman for negligent acts committed by him when acting both as policeman and fireman. 18-192.

FIRE INSURANCE.

See INSURANCE.

FOLLOWING TRUST PROPERTY.

See TRUSTS.

FOOD.

Furnishing food to animals during transportation, see CARRIERS.

See also MILK.

Entrapment to violate Pure Food and Drug Act. 18-187.

FOOT.

Provision as to loss of, in insurance policy, see INSURANCE.

What amounts to loss of, within meaning of Workmen's Compensation Act. 18-1351.

FOREIGN CORPORATIONS.

See CORPORATIONS.

FOREIGN EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

FOREIGN JUDGMENT.

See JUDGMENT.

FOREIGN LAW.

Manner of pleading. 18-1197 (cases pp. 1190, 1194).

FORFEITURE.

Of franchise, see CORPORATIONS.

FORGERY.

By altering instrument, effect on civil liability, see ALTERATION OF INSTRUMENTS.

Ancient deed, filing affidavit of forgery against. 18-908 (case p. 901).

Entrapment to commit offense of passing forged instrument. 18-179.

FORMER JEOPARDY.

See CRIMINAL LAW.

FRANCHISE TAX.

See COMMERCE; TAXES.

FRAUD AND DECEIT.

In general.

Presumption and burden of proof as to, see EVIDENCE.

False pretenses, see FALSE PRETENSES.

Entrapment to use mails to defraud. 18-185.

What constitutes fraud within rule that fraud in inception of bill or note throws upon subsequent holder burden of proving that he is a holder in due course. 18-52.

Prevention of, as within scope of police power. 18-219.

Giving money or presents to employee of third person to induce him to influence his employer to make purchase. 18-546.

Bank officer's conduct in securing from mentally incompetent depositor, who has forgotten the deposit, an agreement to pay the former to reveal the location of the deposit. 18-976.

Concealment.

Bank officer's concealment of his relation to the bank when inducing a depositor who, because of illness, had forgotten the deposit, to agree to pay the former to reveal the location of the deposit. 18-976.

Effect of; remedies.

Effect on oral contract, see CONTRACTS.

Estoppel by, see ESTOPPEL.

Fraud in inception of bill or note as throwing upon subsequent holder burden of proving that he is a holder in due course. 18-18 (cases pp. 1, 7, 10).

Right to try one brought within jurisdiction by fraud or trickery. 18-516.

Note procured by fraud as without legal force or effect. 18-10.

Fraudulently procuring signature to paper purporting to be an order for goods, to which is attached a promissory note, and then detaching the note. 18-10.

-waiver of.

New agreement for discharge of obligation of contract on different terms as waiver of fraud in procuring contract. 18-1194.

FRAUDS, STATUTE OF.

See CONTRACTS.

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES.

Remedy where party to whom the consideration has been paid under an oral agreement to convey real estate is insolvent, and has conveyed the property to another, without consideration. 18-1089.

FRUIT.

Right to fruit of a tree overhanging boundary line. 18-667.

FUGITIVES.

Extradition of, see EXTRADITION.

GAMES.

Injury to person in street in consequence of games on adjoining premises. 18-614 (case p. 610).

GAS.

Power of city as to, generally, see MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

GASOLENE STATIONS.

Public regulation of gasolene filling stations. 18-101 (case p. 95).

GOOD FAITH.

Presumption and burden of proof as to, see EVIDENCE.

Wife's good faith as affecting her right to allowance of counsel fees to prosecute appeal in matrimonial action. 18-1497.

GRAND JURY.

Dismissal, nol. pros. or mistrial after change of venue in criminal case as affecting jurisdiction to find new indictment. 18-714 (case p. 706).

GROSS RECEIPTS.

Taxation of gross receipts of carriers, gas and electric companies, etc., application of constitutional provision for. 18-750.

GUARANTY.

Surrender and acceptance of term as affecting guarantor's liability for rent. 18-959.

GUARDIAN AND WARD.

Income tax on commissions of guardian. 18-414.

GUEST.

Liability of guest for injury to third person due primarily to negligence of driver. 18-365 (case p. 362).

Question for jury as to contributory negligence of guest in automobile. 18-296.

HABEAS CORPUS.

Waiver of right to review conviction by discharge on. 18-873.

Italic type indicates points with annotation; roman type, points without.

HABITS.

Evidence of, generally, see EVIDENCE.

HAND.

Provision as to loss of, in insurance policy, see INSURANCE.

What amounts to loss of, within meaning of Workmen's Compensation Act. 18-1358, 1360.

HEALTH.

Lease of public park for health exhibit. 18-1238.

HIGH COST OF LIVING.

Damages for personal injuries or death as affected by. 18-564 (case p. 564).

HIGHWAYS.

In general.

As boundary, see BOUNDARIES.

Establishment by dedication, see DEDICATION.

Injury to traveler by dangerous condition of premises near highway, see NEGLIGENCE.

Park lands, establishment of highway over. 18-1248.

Title.

Title on vacation of highways, see infra.

Easement only vests in municipality by dedication at common law. 18-992.

Purchase of abutting lot from dedicator of highway as vesting fee to the highway in the purchaser. 18-992.

Uses; what allowed in.

Additional servitude on highways, see EMINENT DOMAIN.

Defects; liability for injuries to travelers.

When highway under repair may be regarded as closed to travel. 18-303.

Insufficiency and want of repair. 18-303.

Lack of barriers across highway under repair. 18-303.

- who entitled to protection.

Loss of rights in highway by stopping to speak to another person. 18-610.

— Liability of others than municipality.
Injury due to negligent driving, see NEGLIGENCE.

Liability for dangerous condition of private grounds adjoining highway, see NEGLIGENCE.

Nonliability of employer for injuries to person in highway caused by torts of independent contractor. 18-845, 846, 849, 857 (cases pp. 782, 788, 794).

Ladder on sidewalk to reach sign on building as a nuisance. 18-794.

— contributory negligence.

Of person injured otherwise than by defects, see NEGLIGENCE.

At railroad crossing, see RAILROADS.

Of person injured by street car, see STREET RAILWAYS.

Personal care required of one riding in automobile driven by another. 18-356 (case p. 303).

Reversible error in instruction as to. 18-303.

Discontinuance.

Reversion of title upon abandonment or vacation of public street or highway. 18-1008 (cases pp. 983, 992).

Attaching to dedication condition that street shall not be closed in part. 18-983.

Abutting owner's right to prevent closing of street. 18-983.

Agreement between city and dedicator of land that latter shall have continued use of street, effect. 18-983.

Decisions rendered after dedication was made as affecting rights of dedicator of street, upon its vacation. 18-992.

Vesting title to vacated highway in abutting owner as depriving dedicator of the highway of his property. 18-992.

Statute providing that execution of plat shall vest in the municipality the fee title to streets shown thereon, effect. 18-992.

HOLIDAYS.

Sunday. see SUNDAY.

HOMICIDE.

Variance between indictment and proof, see INDICTMENT, ETC.

Negligent homicide.

Carelessness in exercising right of self-defense which results in unintentional killing of third person. 18-928.

While engaged in unlawful act.

Homicide by unlawful act aimed at another. 18-917 (case p. 914).

Excusable homicide; self-defense.

Peace officers' criminal responsibility for killing or wounding one whom they wished to investigate or identify. 18-1368 (case p. 1360).

Killing of person by shot or blow aimed at a third person in self-defense. 18-937.

Right of self-defense as affected by the fact that the defendant was in company with the assailant's spouse. 18-1068 (case p. 1066).

Duty to retreat when not on one's own premises. 18-1279 (cases pp. 1272, 1276).

Charging jury on self-defense where accused denies the killing. 18-1272.

Instruction as to duty to retreat. 18-1272.

HORSES.

In general, see ANIMALS.

Transportation of, see CARRIERS.

Fraud in sale of horse for purchase price of which a note is given, throwing upon subsequent holder of note burden of proving that he is a holder in due course. 18-53.

HOSPITALS.

Pesthouse or contagious disease hospital as a nuisance. 18-122 (cases pp. 116, 119).

HUSBAND AND WIFE.

In general.

Husband's liability for rape of wife, see RAPE.

Right of self-defense as affected by fact that defendant was in company with assailant's spouse. 18-1068 (case p. 1066).

Husband's liability on wife's contracts.

Independent means of wife as affecting husband's duty to provide necessities for her. 18-1131 (case p. 1125).

The dash in each citation stands for A.L.R.

General rule as to when wife's right to pledge husband's credit arises. 18-1125.

Agency of wife for husband in purchasing necessities for herself. 18-1125.

Payment for similar articles on other occasions as showing wife's right to procure articles on husband's credit. 18-1125.

Burden of showing that husband neither furnished necessities bought by wife on husband's credit nor the means of procuring them. 18-1125.

Instructions in action to hold husband liable for necessities furnished wife. 18-1125.

Separation of husband and wife, effect. 18-1125.

Maintenance furnished to wife living separate from husband under court order or agreement between them as bar to right to pledge husband's credit. 18-1125.

Contracts of wife.

Husband's liability on contracts by, or necessities furnished to, wife, see supra.

Conflict of laws as to validity, see CONFLICT OF LAWS.

Law governing validity of note executed by married woman. 18-1509.

Entirety estate.

Death of both tenants in common disaster as affecting. 18-105 (case p. 103).

As tenancy in common with certain limitations. 18-103.

Continuance of the relationship of husband and wife as essential to. 18-103.

Community property.

Death of both tenants in same disaster as affecting. 18-105.

Actions.

Measure of damages for death of husband or wife, see DAMAGES.

Conclusiveness of judgment, see JUDGMENT.

Wife's right of action for loss of consortium. 18-882 (case p. 873).

Right of one spouse to recover damages for torts inflicted by third person upon the other spouse. 18-873.

Imputing negligence of husband to wife. 18-303.

HYDROAEROPLANE.

Admiralty jurisdiction over. 18-1327 (case p. 1324).

Italic type indicates points with annotation; roman type, points without.

IDENTITY.

Right to try one brought within jurisdiction as result of mistake as to identity. 18-516 (case p. 503).

Peace officers' criminal responsibility for killing or wounding one whom they wished to investigate or identify. 18-1368 (case p. 1360).

ILLEGITIMACY.

Legitimation of child, see PARENT AND CHILD.

Illegitimacy of child as affecting revocation of will by subsequent birth of child. 18-91 (case p. 88).

ILL TREATMENT.

As ground for divorce, see DIVORCE AND SEPARATION.

IMMIGRATION.

See ALIENS.

IMMORALITY.

Obscenity, see OBSCENITY.

Entrapment as defense to prosecution for procuring women for immoral purposes. 18-156.

Damages for wrongful death of husband, as affected by wife's immorality. 18-1412 (case p. 1406).

IMPLIED REPEAL.

Of statutes, see STATUTES.

IMPRISONMENT.

Effect of, as civil death, see CIVIL DEATH. For crime, generally, see CRIMINAL LAW.

IMPROVEMENTS.

Estoppel by permitting, see ESTOPPEL.

INCOME TAX.

See TAXES.

COMBINED INDEX TO NOTES AND CASES.

INCOMPETENT PERSONS.

Divorce because of charge of insanity or attempt to have spouse committed to insane asylum. 18-572 (case p. 570).

Bank officer's conduct in securing from mentally incompetent depositor, who has forgotten the deposit, an agreement to pay the former to reveal the location of the deposit. 18-976.

INDEFINITENESS.

See UNCERTAINTY AND INDEFINITENESS.

INDEPENDENT CONTRACTORS.

Liability for acts of, see MASTER AND SERVANT.

Liability of, for injury, see MASTER AND SERVANT.

INDIANS.

Entrapment to commit crime of selling liquor to Indians. 18-168.

INDICTMENT, INFORMATION, AND COMPLAINT.

In general.

Dismissal, nol. pros. or mistrial after change of venue as affecting jurisdiction to find new indictment or to try on new indictment. 18-714 (case p. 706).

Passing indictment to files. 18-1153 (case p. 1150).

Joinder of counts for theft of property, or receiving stolen property, belonging to different persons. 18-1077 (case p. 1074).

Indorsement of name of witness upon information after trial has commenced. 18-1074.

Election between counts in indictment. 18-1074.

Variance.

Charge of wilful, malicious murder as sustained by proof of wilfulness and malice directed against a person other than the one killed. 18-914.

INDORSEMENT.

Of note, see BILLS AND NOTES.

Lack of indorsement of warehouse bill of lading as affecting goods. 18-588 (case p. 588).

Of name of witness upon information after trial has commenced. 18-1074.

INFANT.

As to relation of parent and child, see PARENT AND CHILD.

Education of.

Allowance in decree of divorce as to education of child. 18-896 (case p. 896).

Right of father to decide custody of his child by agreement required by state. 18-896.

Support.

In case of divorce, see DIVORCE AND SEPARATION.

Contracts.

Misrepresentations as to age of child to plead infancy. 18-516 (case p. 516).

INFECTIOUS DISEASE.

See CONTAGIOUS AND INFECTIOUS DISEASE.

INFORMATION.

In criminal case, see INDICTMENT, INFORMATION, AND COMPLAINT.

INHERITANCE.

See TAXES.

INJUNCTION.

In general.

Against nuisances, see NUISANCE.

Right of private corporation to enjoin public utility to enjoy right of way unlawfully or to enjoin utility which competes with it. 18-929.

Mandatory injunction.

Compelling owner of branches overhanging street to join owner. 18-1074 (case p. 1074).

The dash in each citation stands for A.L.R.

Injury to, or trespass upon, real property.

Enjoining planting of trees or grass near boundary line. 18-661.

Bond.

Appeal from order dissolving injunction as suspending proceeding to assess damages on bond. 18-433.

Retaining jurisdiction of appeal, to determine liability of appellant on injunction bond in suit to enjoin violation of covenant, though covenant has expired. 18-433.

INSANITY.

In general, see INCOMPETENT PERSONS.

Divorce because of charge of insanity or attempt to have spouse committed to insane asylum. 18-572 (case p. 570).

INSOLVENCY.

Of banks, see BANKS.

Receivers, see RECEIVERS.

Right of cestui que trust to have trust property wrongfully pledged by trustee for his personal debt redeemed by money belonging to his insolvent estate. 18-626 (case p. 623).

Remedy where party to whom the consideration has been paid under an oral agreement to convey real estate is insolvent, and has conveyed the property to another without consideration. 18-1089.

INSPECTION.

Constitutionality of regulations for inspection of cattle and dairies. 18-238.

Conditional delivery of bill of lading by bank receiving for collection draft with bill of lading attached, to consignee, to enable him to inspect the goods. 18-732 (case p. 728).

Consignee's right to, when required to pay for goods before delivery; waiver. 18-728.

INSTIGATION.

As affecting criminal responsibility, see CRIMINAL LAW.

INSULT.

Master's liability for. 18-1414.

INSURANCE.

In general.

Insurance broker, see INSURANCE BROKERS.

Constitutionality and construction of provisions of Workmen's Compensation Act directed against noninsuring or self-insuring employers. 18-267 (case p. 259).

Definition of insurance contract. 18-1081.

Foreign corporation.

Jurisdiction of action involving internal affairs of foreign insurance company. 18-1402 (case p. 1370).

Officers and agents.

Agent's or broker's failure to procure or keep up insurance, liability. 18-1214 (cases pp. 1204, 1210).

Insurable interest.

Reinsurer's right to question the insurable interest or eligibility of beneficiary. 18-1163 (case p. 1161).

Son-in-law's insurable interest in life of father-in-law. 18-1161.

Validity of policy.

Validity of insurance covering intoxicating liquor. 18-1084 (case p. 1081).

Rules and by-laws.

Change of rates, see infra.

Impairment of vested rights by change in by-law, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Reasonableness of change in by-laws. 18-1172.

Classification of members of benefit society and provision that each class shall raise its own funds and pay its own losses. 18-1172.

Loan on policy.

Cancellation of paid-up life insurance policy for nonpayment of loan. 18-1145 (case p. 1141).

Cancellation; paid-up policy.

Nonpayment of loan as ground for cancellation of paid-up life policy. 18-1145 (case p. 1141).

Italic type indicates points with annotation; roman type, points without.

Delay in exercising right to cancel. 18-1141, 1190.

Extension of time for repaying loan so as to prevent cancellation of policy for nonpayment, evidence to show. 18-1141.

Waiver of notice by agreement. 18-1141.

Construction of policy generally.

Strained or unreasonable construction not proper. 18-1329.

Premiums and assessments.

Payment of, by beneficiary as affecting right to change beneficiary, see infra.

Agent's liability for failure to transmit insurance premium. 18-1218.

Rates, right of mutual benefit association to raise. 18-1180 (case p. 1172).

Jurisdiction of action to enjoin foreign insurance company from changing rates. 18-1370.

Waiver of right to object to increased assessments. 18-1172.

Impairment of vested rights by increase in assessments. 18-1172:

Reasonableness of increase of rates or change in plan of assessments. 18-1172.

Classification of members of mutual society and requiring each class to raise its own funds and pay its own losses. 18-1172.

Tender of unearned premiums; sufficiency; to whom made. 18-1190.

Pleading return, or offer to return, premiums within reasonable time. 18-1190.

Reasonable time for tender of premiums on avoidance of policy for breach of warranty. 18-1190.

Change of beneficiary.

Payment of premiums, or other consideration moving from original beneficiary, as affecting right to change beneficiary of mutual benefit certificate. 18-383 (case p. 378).

Proofs of loss.

Constitutional immunity against giving incriminating testimony as absolving insured, under indictment for arson, from compliance with contractual stipulation to submit to examination. 18-742.

Risks and causes of loss or injury.

Infection through a wound previously received. 18-113 (case p. 106).

Instruction as to what jury may consider and what inferences it may draw in determining cause of injury. 18-106.

Presumption that injury to insured was result of accident. 18-106.

Extent of injury; of recovery.

Amount of recovery on policy covering intoxicating liquor. 18-1089 (case p. 1081).

Loss or mutilation of member, or loss of sight, contemplated by indemnity provisions of accident insurance policy. 18-1339 (case p. 1329).

Recovery against one responsible for personal injury or death as affected by receipt of insurance money. 18-683, 686.

Action on policy.

Instructions. 18-106.

Reinsurance.

Insurable interest or eligibility of beneficiary, right of reinsurer to question. 18-1163 (case p. 1161).

Guaranty insurance.

Workmen's compensation, see WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.

INSURANCE BROKERS.

Liability of broker for failure to procure or keep up insurance. 18-1214 (cases pp. 1204, 1210).

Bank as. 18-1204.

Consideration for broker's contract to procure insurance. 18-1210.

Parol evidence in action against, for failure to procure insurance policy contracted for. 18-1210.

Contributory negligence of principal as defense to action against agent for breach of contract to secure insurance. 18-1210.

Nominal damages only recoverable for breach of broker's contract to secure specified form of insurance, where employer contributes to loss. 18-1210.

INTENT.

As element of homicide, see HOMICIDE.

Presumption that parties to contract intended law of state of performance to control. 18-1509.

INTERFERENCE.

With business, see UNFAIR COMPETITION.

The dash in each citation stands for A.L.R.

INTERNAL AFFAIRS.

Jurisdiction over internal affairs of foreign corporations, see COURTS.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

Federal inheritance tax, see TAXES.

Federal income tax, see TAXES.

INTERPLEADER.

Reversal of judgment to permit defendant to implead third party so as to secure contribution from him, 18-303.

INTERROGATORIES.

JOINDER.

Of counts in indictment, see INDICTMENT, ETC.

Of parties defendant, see PARTIES.

JOINT ADVENTURE.

Applicability of Statute of Frauds to joint adventure to deal in real estate. 18-484 (cases pp. 468, 469).

When persons are engaged in, so as to impute negligence of one to the other. 18-303.

Brokerage contract or contract of joint adventure. 18-469.

Question for jury as to existence of. 18-469.

Specific definition of rights and duties of parties as necessary to justify finding of joint adventure. 18-469.

Necessity of service.

Entry on warrant of attorney expressly authorizing entry without process. 18-1194.

Conclusiveness.

Former conviction or acquittal as bar to criminal prosecution, see CRIMINAL LAW.

— as to parties.

Judgment against husband in action for personal injury to him as bar to action by wife for loss caused to her by such injury. 18-873.

Judgment of sister state.

Presumption as to propriety of amount included in judgment for attorneys' fees. 18-1194.

Enforcement.

Sale of property, see JUDICIAL SALE.

JUDICIAL NOTICE.

See EVIDENCE.

JUDICIAL SALE.

Tax sale, see TAXES.

Imprisonment as extending time for redemption. 18-531 (case p. 529).

JURISDICTION.

Of admiralty, see ADMIRALTY.

Change of venue as affecting, see VENUE.

In general, see COURTS.

Estoppel to complain of lack of. 18-219.

JURY.In general.

Review of discretion as to, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

Questions for, see TRIAL.

Special interrogatories to, see TRIAL.

Assault on juror as contempt of court. 18-214.

Contempt in abusing juror. 18-208.

Waiver of right to.

Request by both parties for directed verdict as waiver of submission to jury. 18-1433 (cases pp. 1419, 1421, 1426, 1430).

Competency.

Disqualification of jury as ground for new trial, see NEW TRIAL.

Relationship to prosecutor or witness for prosecution as disqualifying juror in criminal case. 18-375 (case p. 368).

Review of discretion as to. 18-368.

JUSTIFICATION.

For assault, see ASSAULT AND BATTERY.

For homicide, see HOMICIDE.

Of libel, see LIBEL AND SLANDER.

KNOWLEDGE.

In general, see NOTICE.

LACHES.

See LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

LANDLORD AND TENANT.Lease.

Right to lease public park, square, or common. 18-1262, 1270 (cases pp. 1288, 1242).

— surrender and acceptance.

Right to recover rent or on obligation given for rent as affected by. 18-957 (case p. 947).

What constitutes acceptance of surrender. 18-947.

— assignment; sublease.

Sublessee as assignee of lease as trespasser. 18-503 (case p. 500).

Surrender and acceptance of term as affecting liability of subtenant for rent. 18-963.

Tenant's right to sublet. 18-500.

Rent.

Surrender and acceptance of term as affecting right to recover rent or on obligation given for rent. 18-957 (case p. 947).

Apportionment of rent payable in lump sum at end of year, where landlord accepts surrender during the year. 18-947.

Apportionment of yearly rent as though payable monthly upon abandonment in the spring of farm lands leased from fall to fall. 18-947.

Effect of fact that rent is evidenced by a note payable at the end of the term on right to apportion the rent, where surrender is accepted during the term. 18-947.

Statement by tenant, in action on rent note, that consideration of the note had failed because surrender was accepted before rent became due. 18-947.

LARCENY.

Duplicity in indictment for, see INDICTMENT, ETC.

Entrapment to commit crime. 18-172.

LAST CLEAR CHANCE.

See NEGLIGENCE.

LAW MERCHANT.

Effect, under law merchant, of fraud in inception of bill or note to throw upon subsequent holder burden of proving that he is a holder in due course. 18-18, 38.

LAW OF PLACE.

See CONFLICT OF LAWS.

LAWYERS.

See ATTORNEYS.

LEASE.

In general, see LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Right to lease public park, square, or common. 18-1262, 1270 (cases pp. 1238, 1242).

LEG.

Provision as to loss or breaking of, see INSURANCE.

What amounts to loss of, within meaning of Workmen's Compensation Act. 18-1852.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES.

See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

LEGISLATURE.

Power to alter common law, see COMMON LAW.

Relation of courts to, see COURTS.

Legislative power over municipalities, see MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

Uses to which legislature may devote park property. 18-1266.

Power of legislature to provide for a fee to be limited upon a fee. 18-992.

LEGITIMATION.

Of child, see PARENT AND CHILD.

LEVY AND SEIZURE.

Sale under, see JUDICIAL SALE.

LIBEL AND SLANDER.

In general.

Entrapment to commit crime of criminal libel. 18-160.

Privilege.

May actual malice which will defeat conditional privilege coexist with belief in truth of imputation. 18-1160 (case p. 1155).

Communication or exhibition to employee or business associate of defendant as privileged. 18-776 (case p. 772).

Publication.

Communication or exhibition to employee or business associate of defendant as publication. 18-776.

Actions; defenses.

May actual malice which will defeat conditional privilege coexist with belief in truth of imputation. 18-1160 (case p. 1155).

Remittitur from verdict, on motion for new trial. 18-1155.

Relevancy of evidence in action for charging preacher with immorality. 18-1155.

Question for jury as to truth of charges. 18-1155.

LIBERAL CONSTRUCTION.

Of statute, see STATUTES.

LIBRARY.

Erection of, in public park. 18-1255.

LICENSE.

In general.

For practice of dentistry, see DENTISTS.

State law requiring license for vehicles as applicable to those engaged in handling United States mail. 18-1169 (case p. 1163).

Power to grant licenses or special privileges in parks. 18-1263.

Constitutionality of regulations as to licensing of milk venders. 18-253 (case p. 219).

Purpose for which license fee may be imposed. 18-219.

Right to question constitutionality of the act under which license is secured. 18-219.

For moving picture shows. 18-733.

Revocation.

Constitutionality of regulations as to revocation of license to sell milk. 18-255.

Right of one whose license is revoked to question constitutionality of the act under which he secured it. 18-219.

Failure to provide for appeal from revocation of license by order of dairy commissioner. 18-219.

Uniformity and equality.

Discriminatory provisions in regulations as to license to engage in milk business. 18-255.

LIENS.

Of chattel mortgage, see CHATTEL MORTGAGE.

Of vendor, see VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

LIFE INSURANCE.

See INSURANCE.

LIGHT.

Power of city as to, generally, see MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

In general.

Pleading foreign Statute of Limitations. 18-1204.

Conflict of laws as to. 18-1194.

Laches.

Laches as preventing recovery of property diverted from one religious sect or denomination to another. 18-692 (case p. 690).

Applicability of doctrine that laches does not apply to suit to cancel a void deed. 18-690.

Delay in seeking abatement of branches of trees overhanging boundary line. 18-650.

Absence from state.

Necessity of setting up by reply absence from state when Statute of Limitations is pleaded as defense. 18-1194.

When action is barred.

Action on bond of notary public to recover funds embezzled by him. 18-1295.

Interruption of statute; removal of bar.

Acknowledgment, new promise, or payment by grantee of mortgaged premises. 18-1027 (case p. 1024).

LIVE STOCK.

In general, see ANIMALS.

Transportation of, see CARRIERS.

LOAN.

On insurance policy, see INSURANCE.

Conclusiveness of decision of corporate officers or directors that property is of sufficient value to warrant a loan under the powers of the corporation. 18-645 (case p. 639).

The dash in each citation stands for A.L.R.

18 A.L.R.—101,

Insult offered by telegraph messenger to addressee of message, at her home. 18-1414.

— independent contractors.

Nonliability of employer for injuries caused by the torts of an independent contractor. 18-801 (cases pp. 782, 788, 794).

Bond from contractor to protect employer from liability for injuries, effect of, 18-788.

Fall of shutter injuring pedestrian, when owner has contracted to have the shutters painted on the building. 18-782.

Fall of hot rivet thrown from one workman to another, injuring pedestrian. 18-788.

Removal of sign from building standing flush with sidewalk, injury to pedestrian. 18-794.

Liability of servant or independent contractor.

Liability of agent, see PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

Joint verdict against building owner and contractor, setting aside as to the latter when it is erroneous as to the former. 18-782.

MAXIMS.

What cannot be done directly, the law does not permit to be done indirectly. 18-706.

MENTAL ANGUISH.

Damages for, see DAMAGES.

MENTAL CAPACITY.

In general, see INCOMPETENT PERSONS.

MENTAL RESERVATION.

Cancellation of certificate of citizenship because of mental reservation when taking oath of allegiance. 18-1185 (case p. 1182).

MERGER.

Of corporation, see CORPORATIONS.

MESSENGER SERVICE.

Liability for misconduct or negligence of messenger, not directly related to the service. 18-1416 (case p. 1414).

MILK.

Constitutionality of regulations as to milk. 18-235 (case p. 219).

Creamery business as one affected with a public interest. 18-219.

Dairy commissioner as an independent officer not subordinate to commissioner of agriculture and labor. 18-219.

Failure to provide for appeal from revocation of license by order of dairy commissioner. 18-219.

MINISTERS.

Libel in charging preacher with immorality, evidence in action therefor. 18-1155.

MINORS.

See INFANTS.

MISCONDUCT.

See MARITAL MISCONDUCT.

MISTAKE.

Recovery back of payment made under, see ASSUMPSIT.

Right to try one brought within jurisdiction as result of mistake as to identity. 18-516 (case p. 503).

MISTRIAL.

After change of venue in criminal case as affecting jurisdiction or power of courts of respective districts of subsequent proceedings. 18-714 (case p. 706).

MITIGATION.

Of damages, see DAMAGES.

The dash in each citation stands for A.L.R.

MOBS AND RIOTS.

Liability of peace officer or his bond for failure to prevent killing by mob. 18-201.

MONEY.

Change in purchasing power of, as affecting damages for personal injuries or death. 18-564 (case p. 554).

MONUMENTS.

Erection of, in public park. 18-1259, 1265.

MORPHINE.

See DRUGS AND DRUGGISTS.

MORTGAGE.

In general.

Acknowledgment of, see ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

Chattel mortgage, see CHATTEL MORTGAGE.

Rights and remedies of one who advances money to purchase real estate under oral agreement by the vendee to give a mortgage thereon as security. 18-1098 (case p. 1089).

Account rendered by mortgagee, reasonable time for objection to so as to prevent its becoming an account stated. 18-895.

Acknowledgment, new promise, or payment by grantee of mortgaged premises as interrupting or removing bar of limitations. 18-1027.

Interest of mortgagor who has paid judgment recovered by domiciliary administrator, in controversy between the latter and an ancillary administrator as to right to proceeds. 18-1118.

Sufficiency of acknowledgment by grantee that property was transferred subject to mortgage. 18-1024.

Redemption.

From judicial sale generally, see JUDICIAL SALE.

From tax sale, see TAXES.

Imprisonment as extending time for. 18-531 (case p. 529).

MOTION PICTURES.

See MOVING PICTURES.

MOTIONS AND ORDERS.

Raising question for consideration on appeal by motion, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

Motion for new trial, see NEW TRIAL.

MOTIVE.

Divorce because of unsuccessful attempt of man to commit wife to insane asylum, as depending upon his motive. 18-570.

MOTORCYCLE.

Variance between pleading and proof in action for injury by. 18-192.

MOTORCYCLE POLICEMAN.

Liability on bond of, for negligent injury. 18-192.

MOTOR VEHICLES.

See AUTOMOBILES; MOTORCYCLE.

MOVING COMPANY.

See TEAMING AND TRUCKING.

MOVING PICTURES.

Sunday closing by municipality of motion picture houses not closed on that day by state laws. 18-733.

Regulation of, in exercise of police power. 18-733.

MULTIPLE RESIDENCES.

Breach of restrictive covenant by, see COVENANTS AND CONDITIONS.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

In general.

Judicial questions as to acts of, see COURTS.

Italic type indicates points with annotation; roman type, points without.

Parks, see PARKS AND SQUARES.

Public funds of, see PUBLIC MONEYS.

Special legislation as to, see STATUTES.

Applicability of public utility acts to municipal corporations owning or operating a public utility. 18-946 (case p. 929).

Use of park property for municipal water supply and sewage. 18-1265.

Judicial notice of population of city. 18-95.

Applicability to municipal corporations of constitutional provision forbidding granting of special privileges to "corporations." 18-929.

Discrimination by state between public utilities operated by private persons or corporations and those operated by municipalities. 18-929.

Implied repeal of statute as to control of public utilities owned by municipalities by statute dealing with control of public utilities generally. 18-929.

Inquiry by courts into wisdom of municipal ownership of public utilities. 18-929.

Capacity in which municipality operates lighting plant or waterworks. 18-929.

Powers generally.

Delegation of legislative power to, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Power as to parks or squares, see PARKS AND SQUARES.

Power of city to accept a dedication of a street subject to conditions. 18-983.

Power of legislature to authorize municipal corporations to own and operate public utilities. 18-929.

Ordinances.

Review of, by courts, see COURTS.

Effect of violation of ordinance, see VIOLATION OF LAW.

Entrapment as defense to prosecution for violation of traffic ordinance. 18-192.

Constitutionality of regulations as to milk. 18-235 (case p. 219).

Regulation of gasoline filling stations. 18-101 (case p. 95).

Sunday closing of amusements not forbidden on that day by state law. 18-738 (case p. 733).

Traffic or vehicle regulations as applicable to persons engaged in handling United States mail. 18-1169 (case p. 1163).

Sufficiency of evidence to overturn ordinance as being arbitrary, unreasonable, or discriminatory. 18-95.

Liability for damages.

Injuries caused by torts of independent contractor. 18-863.

MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP.

Inquiry by courts into wisdom of municipal ownership of public utilities. 18-929.

MURDER.

See HOMICIDE.

MUSEUMS.

Erection of, in public park. 18-1256.

MUTUAL BENEFIT INSURANCE.

See INSURANCE.

NARCOTICS.

See DRUGS AND DRUGGISTS.

NATURAL CHILDREN.

See ILLEGITIMACY.

NATURALIZATION.

Of aliens, see ALIENS.

NAVIGATION.

Consequential injuries in improving, see EMINENT DOMAIN.

NECESSARIES.

Husband's liability for, see HUSBAND AND WIFE.

NEGLIGENCE.

In general.

Review of verdict or finding as to, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

Of carrier, see CARRIERS.

The dash in each citation stands for A.L.R.

NOL. PROS.

After change of venue in criminal case as affecting jurisdiction or power of courts of respective districts as to subsequent proceedings. 18-714.

NOMINAL DAMAGES.

See DAMAGES.

NONRESIDENTS.

Running of limitations in favor of, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

NOTARY.

Taking of acknowledgment by, see ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

Liability of notary public or his bond. 18-1302 (case p. 1295).

NOTES.

See BILLS AND NOTES.

NOTICE.

In general.

Effect of notice of rights of third person in note taken by assignment, see BILLS AND NOTES.

Necessity of, to constitute due process of law, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Presumption and burden of proof as to, see EVIDENCE.

For cancelation of insurance policy, see INSURANCE.

Carrier's liability for injury to animals by unwholesome water as affected by lack of knowledge of unwholesomeness. 18-1110.

Waiver of statutory notice of extraordinary motion for new trial in criminal case. 18-368.

Imputed.

Imputing to holder of note knowledge of his attorney of infirmity in note. 18-1.

NUISANCES.

What constitutes.

Pesthouse or contagious disease hospital. 18-122 (cases pp. 116, 119).

Ball playing on lot near public highway. 18-610.

Ladder on sidewalk to reach sign on building. 18-794.

Trees or shrubs overhanging boundary line. 18-650.

Remedies.

Remedy in case of nuisance resulting from trees near boundary, see ADJOINING OWNER.

Estoppel to secure abatement. 18-650.

Reversible error in admission of evidence in suit for. 18-119.

Injunction against tuberculosis hospital in residential district. 18-116, 119.

OATH.

Verification by attorney for accused of application for change of venue. 18-706.

OBJECTIONS.

To raise question on appeal, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

Generally, see TRIAL.

OBSCENITY.

Entrapment to commit offense of sending obscene matter in interstate commerce. 18-171.

Entrapment to commit offense of selling obscene matter. 18-171.

Entrapment to send obscene matter through mails. 18-170.

OFFICERS.

Taking of acknowledgment by, see ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

Of bank, see BANKS.

Bonds of, see BONDS.

Of private corporations generally, see CORPORATIONS.

Prosecuting attorney, see DISTRICT AND PROSECUTING ATTORNEYS.

Homicide by, see HOMICIDE.

Receivers, see RECEIVERS.

Of town, see TOWN.

Federal officers, see UNITED STATES.

Liabilities.

Liability on bond, see BONDS.

Personal liability of peace officer for negligence causing personal injury or death. 18-197 (case p. 192).

Liability of township trustees for loss of public funds. 18-982 (case p. 979).

Public necessity as defense to liability of police officer for negligent injuries inflicted in discharge of official duties. 18-192.

Leaving signed warrants, blank as to payee and amounts, in the hands of a clerk. 18-979.

Township trustees' liability for misappropriation of funds by clerk, occurring before or after their term of office. 18-979.

OPERATION.

Of railroads, see CARRIERS; RAILROADS.

Duty of employee seeking recovery under Workmen's Compensation Act to submit to operation to restore his earning capacity. 18-431 (cases pp. 415, 427).

Unreasonableness of refusal of injured employee to submit to operation as question of fact. 18-415.

Mental anguish arising from knowledge that operation necessary to save life has become impossible because of injury by another's negligence. 18-554.

OPINION EVIDENCE.

See EVIDENCE.

OPIUM.

In general, see DRUGS AND DRUGGISTS.

Entrapment to commit offense of illegally importing. 18-178.

Entrapment to violate law as to smoking opium. 18-179.

OPTIONS.

Agreement to get options and sell them and divide the proceeds as partnership. 18-468.

ORAL CONTRACTS.

In general, see CONTRACTS.

ORDINANCES.

See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

OUTLOOK.

Duty of automobile driver as to, see AUTOMOBILES.

PAID-UP POLICY.

Cancellation of, see INSURANCE.

PALACE CARS.

See SLEEPING AND CHAIR CARS.

PARAMOUR.

Paramour's right of self-defense as against husband attacking him. 18-1070.

PARENT AND CHILD.

Matters as to infants generally, see INFANTS.

Illegitimate children generally, see ILLEGITIMACY.

Effect of statute relating to legitimacy of offspring of void marriage to make legitimate child of bigamous marriage. 18-88.

PARKS AND SQUARES.

Uses to which park property may be devoted. 18-1246 (cases pp. 1238, 1242).

Definition of park. 18-1238.

PAROL CONTRACTS.

See CONTRACTS.

PARTIAL INVALIDITY.

Of statute, see STATUTES.

PARTICULARITY.

In pleading, see PLEADING.

PARTIES.

On appeal, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

Italic type indicates points with annotation; roman type, points without.

Interpleader, see INTERPLEADER.

Who are affected by judgment, see JUDGMENT.

Public administrator or state as proper party to file caveat to, or contest, will. 18-79 (case p. 77).

Third person's right to sue on contractor's bond. 18-1221.

Waiver of objection of misjoinder of parties. 18-979.

PARTNERSHIP.

Joint adventure generally, see JOINT ADVENTURE.

Liability of corporate stockholders as partners, see CORPORATIONS.

Applicability of Statute of Frauds to partnership to deal in real estate. 18-484 (cases pp. 468, 469).

What constitutes fraud in execution of partnership notes, which will throw upon subsequent holder burden of proving that he is a holder in due course. 18-57.

Reasonable time within which to object to statement of account between partners, so as to prevent its becoming an account stated. 18-895.

Agreement to get options and sell them and divide the proceeds as partnership. 18-468.

PART PAYMENT.

As affecting limitations of actions, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

PART PERFORMANCE.

Of oral contract, see CONTRACTS.

PASTEURIZATION.

Constitutionality of regulation as to Pasteurization of milk. 18-246.

PAYMENT.

Recovery back of payments made, see ASSUMPSIT.

Interruption of running of limitations by, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

Of employee's wages, see MASTER AND SERVANT.

Check on bank as payment of debts held by bank for collection. 18-537 (case p. 532).

PEACE OFFICER.

Homicide by, see HOMICIDE.

Liability of peace officer or his bond for negligence causing personal injury or death. 18-197 (case p. 192).

PENALTY.

Recovery on bond of public depository of statutory penalty for delay in returning funds deposited. 18-269.

Validity of statutory penalty for delay of public depository in returning funds. 18-269.

PENSIONS.

Recovery against one responsible for death as affected by receipt of. 18-689.

PERFORMANCE.

Part performance of oral contract, see CONTRACTS.

PERJURY.

Entrapment as defense to prosecution for attempted subornation of perjury. 18-191.

PERSONAL INJURIES.

By automobile, see AUTOMOBILES.

Conflict of laws as to, see CONFLICT OF LAWS.

Measure of damages for, see DAMAGES.

Recovery for mental anguish resulting from, see DAMAGES.

Evidence in action for, see EVIDENCE.

In highway, see HIGHWAYS.

Wife's right of action for injuries to husband, see HUSBAND AND WIFE.

To employees, see MASTER AND SERVANT; WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.

Liability of public officer for, see OFFICERS.

On railroad track, see RAILROADS.

By street car, see STREET RAILWAYS.

In general, see NEGLIGENCE.

Reversal of judgment for, to permit defendant to implead third party so as to secure contribution from him. 18-303.

PERSONAL PROPERTY.

Mortgage of, see CHATTEL MORTGAGE.

PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVES.

See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

PESTHOUSE.

As a nuisance. 18-122.

PHALANGES.

What amounts to loss of, within meaning of Workmen's Compensation Act. 18-1354.

PLACE.

Place of trial, see VENUE.

PLEADING.

Evidence admissible under, see EVIDENCE.
Variance between pleading and proof, see EVIDENCE.

In criminal prosecution, see INDICTMENT, ETC.

Definiteness; particularity.

Foreign statute, manner of pleading. 18-1197 (cases pp. 1190, 1194).

Conclusions.

Effect of adding conclusion of law to a pleading of facts to prevent party from insisting upon rights arising from facts pleaded. 18-947.

Statement that consideration for note had failed as a mere conclusion. 18-947.

Exhibits.

Necessity of attaching policy to complaint in action on insurance policy, 18-1190.

Striking out.

Striking as sham plea of statute which is not in effect. 18-1194.

Multifariousness.

See ACTION OR SUIT.

Duplicity.

In indictment, see INDICTMENT, ETC.

Declaration or complaint.

Failure to state obligation between plaintiff and defendant, or attach policy to complaint, or incorporate it therein. 18-1190.

Failure to state that all premiums were paid before due, in action on insurance policy. 18-1190.

Pleas and answers.

Necessity of pleading return of, or offer to return, insurance premiums within reasonable time. 18-1190.

Answer in action on life insurance policy, relying on breach of warranty. 18-1190.

Reply.

Exception to statute of limitations, necessity of setting up, by reply. 18-1194.

Demurrer.

Incorporating demurrer in paper with answer not filed or acted upon as a demurrer. 18-717.

Failure to state that all premiums were paid before due, in action on insurance policy. 18-1190.

Failure to state obligation between plaintiff and defendant as ground for demurrer to complaint on life insurance policy. 18-1190.

Failure to incorporate policy in complaint on insurance policy, or attach it to complaint. 18-1190.

— what admitted by.

Admission of all facts sufficiently pleaded. 18-873.

PLEDGE AND COLLATERAL SECURITY.

Lack of indorsement or irregular indorsement of warehouse receipt or bill of lading as affecting pledge of goods. 18-588 (case p. 583).

Right of cestui que trust to have trust property wrongfully pledged by trustee for his personal debt redeemed by money belonging to his insolvent estate. 18-626 (case p. 623).

Delivery of pledged property, necessity. 18-583.

Recovery in specie of property pledged to innocent purchaser as collateral for trustee's debt. 18-623.

POLICE.

Homicide by, see HOMICIDE.

Italic type indicates points with annotation; roman type, points without.

Personal liability of peace officer or his bond for negligence causing personal injury or death. 18-197 (case p. 192).

Liability on bond of policeman for negligent acts committed by him when acting both as policeman and fireman. 18-192.

Liability on bond of motorcycle policeman for negligent injury. 18-192.

POLICE POWER.

In general, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Review by courts of exercise of, by municipal corporations. 18-95.

POLLUTION.

Of water furnished animals during transportation, see CARRIERS.

POPULATION.

Judicial notice of. 18-95.

POSTHUMOUS CHILD.

Revocation of will by birth of, see WILLS.

POSTOFFICE.

Presumption as to delivery of mail, see EVIDENCE.

State or municipal traffic or vehicle regulations as applicable to those engaged in handling United States mail. 18-1169 (case p. 1163).

Entrapment to use mails for sending of nonmailable matter. 18-179.

POVERTY.

Wife's poverty as affecting her right to allowance of counsel fees pending appeal in matrimonial action. 18-1498.

POWER OF ATTORNEY.

To confess judgment, see JUDGMENT.

POWERS.

Of attorney, see POWER OF ATTORNEY.

Inheritance or succession tax on property covered by power of appointment, see TAXES.

Existence of power of appointment as vesting estate in donee. 18-1461.

Property subject to appointment not subject to distribution as part of estate of donee. 18-1461.

Appointed property as assets of estate of donee of power. 18-1461.

Extent of rights of creditors of donee in appointed estate, where the power is executed. 18-1461.

Rights of creditors of donee in case of failure to execute the power. 18-1461.

PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE.

Pleading foreign statute relating to procedure. 18-1202.

PREACHERS.

See MINISTERS.

PREFERENCE.

In distribution of assets of insolvent, see INSOLVENCY.

PREMIUM.

Insurance premium, see INSURANCE.

PRESUMPTIONS.

In general, see EVIDENCE.

By jury, see TRIAL.

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

In general.

Agents of bank, see BANKS.

Damages for breach of contract of employment, see DAMAGES.

Factors, see FACTORS.

Husband's liability for wife's acts as his agent, see HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Insurance agents, see INSURANCE.

Question for jury as to agency. 18-1125.

The dash in each citation stands for A.L.R.

Agent's liability.

Liability for failure to procure or keep up insurance. 18-1214 (cases pp. 1204, 1210).

Election of remedy for failure of agent to perform duty involved in his contract. 18-1210.

Contributory negligence of principal as defense to action against agent for breach of contract to secure insurance. 18-1210.

Nominal damages only allowed for agent's breach of contract, where principal's negligence contributed to loss. 18-1210.

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

Surety on bail bond, see BAIL AND RECOGNIZANCE.

Bonds generally, see BONDS.

Surrender and acceptance of term as affecting surety's liability for rent. 18-959, 963.

Principal as necessary party on appeal from dismissal of suit by surety to cancel bond, where principal joins obligee in contesting right to cancellation. 18-269.

Improper designation of public depository as defense to surety's liability. 18-269.

Regular employment of notary public by loan association as depriving him of his official character so as to relieve surety on his bond from liability. 18-1295.

PRIORITY.

On distribution of insolvent estate, see INSOLVENCY.

PRIVILEGE.

Of witness, see WITNESSES.

PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS.

In libel case, see LIBEL AND SLANDER.

PROBATE.

Of will, see WILLS.

PRO CONFESSO.

Judgment pro confesso, see JUDGMENT.

PROHIBITION.

Of sale of intoxicating liquors, see INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

PROMISE.

To interrupt Statute of Limitations, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

PROMISSORY NOTES.

See BILLS AND NOTES.

PROMPTNESS.

In rescission of contract, see CONTRACTS.

PROOFS OF LOSS.

See INSURANCE.

PROSECUTING ATTORNEY.

See DISTRICT AND PROSECUTING ATTORNEYS.

PROSECUTING WITNESS.

Disqualification of juror because of relationship to. 18-375 (case p. 368).

PROXIMATE CAUSE.

Infection through a wound previously received as proximate cause of death of insured. 18-113 (case p. 106).

PUBLIC ADMINISTRATOR.

Right of, to file caveat to, or contest, will. 18-79 (case p. 77).

PUBLICATION.

Of libel or slander, see LIBEL AND SLANDER.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

In park, see PARKS AND SQUARES.

PUBLIC DEPOSITORY.

Bond of, see BONDS.

PUBLIC MONEYS.

Liability on bond for loss of or misfeasance as to, see BONDS.

Officer's liability for loss of, see OFFICERS.

Income from public land leased for private purpose must be devoted to public use. 18-1242.

PUBLIC OFFICER.

See OFFICERS.

PUBLIC POLICY.

Effect of, on enforcement of foreign law, see CONFLICT OF LAWS.

PUBLIC PROPERTY.

See PARKS AND SQUARES.

PUBLIC PURPOSE.

Purpose for which public funds may be used, see PUBLIC MONEYS.

PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSIONS.

Applicability of public utility acts to municipal corporations owning or operating a public utility. 18-946 (case p. 929).

Application to foreign corporations of statute conferring power on commission to control issuance of stock by corporations. 18-1373.

PUBLIC SERVICE CORPORATIONS.

Incidental service to members of the public as making an individual or corporation whose principal business is of a different nature a public utility. 18-764 (cases pp. 750, 754).

Applicability of public utility acts to municipal corporations owning or operating a public utility. 18-946 (case p. 929).

What is a public utility within meaning of constitutional provision for taxation of gross receipts of such utility. 18-750.

Absence of charter authority to furnish public service as affecting question whether corporation is a public utility. 18-754.

Power of legislature to authorize municipal corporations to own and operate public utilities. 18-929.

Inquiry by courts into wisdom of municipal ownership of public utilities. 18-929.

Delegating to municipality power of legislature to regulate public utilities. 18-929.

Implied repeal of statute as to control of public utilities owned by municipalities by statute dealing with control of public utilities generally. 18-929.

Excepting municipal corporations from public utilities acts as special legislation. 18-929.

Right of private corporation operating public utility to enjoin another corporation unlawfully operating a similar utility which competes with the former. 18-929.

Rates.

Discrimination between public utilities operated by private persons or corporations and those operated by municipalities in regulating rates. 18-929.

PUBLIC SQUARE.

See PARKS AND SQUARES.

PUBLIC UTILITIES.

See PUBLIC SERVICE CORPORATIONS.

PULLMAN CARS.

See SLEEPING AND CHAIR CARS.

PURCHASE MONEY.

Lien for, see VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

PURCHASING POWER.

Change in purchasing power of money as affecting damages for personal injuries or death. 18-564 (case p. 554).

PURE FOOD AND DRUG ACT.

Entrapment to violate. 18-187.

QUALIFICATIONS.

Of juror, see JURY.

QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

See TRIAL.

RAILROADS.In general.

For all questions involving the duty and liability of a railroad company as a carrier to its patrons or the public, or governmental control of railroad companies, see CARRIERS.

Duty to operate railroads, see CARRIERS.

Interstate business of, see COMMERCE.

Receivers for, see RECEIVERS.

Taxation of, see TAXES.

Construction of, in parks, squares, or commons. 18-1249, 1266.

Right to string wires across railroad right of way. 18-619 (case p. 615).

Forfeiture by railroad company of its rights as destroying title to its right of way. 18-567.

Height to which easement for railroad right of way extends. 18-615.

Injury at crossing.

Review on appeal, of finding as to negligence. 18-1106.

—contributory negligence.

Personal care required of one riding in automobile driven by another. 18-315.

Review on appeal of finding as to contributory negligence. 18-1106.

RAPE.

Criminal responsibility of husband as for rape, or assault to commit rape, on wife. 18-1063 (case p. 1057).

Coercion of wife by husband to submit to intercourse with third person. 18-1057.

Collusion between accused husband and actual perpetrator, what constitutes within meaning of statute. 18-1057.

Sufficiency of evidence to sustain conviction of husband for rape of wife. 18-1057.

Instruction in prosecution of husband for rape committed on wife. 18-1057.

RATES.

Of carriers, see CARRIERS.

Insurance rates, see INSURANCE.

Of public service corporations generally, see PUBLIC SERVICE CORPORATIONS.

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.

See BROKERS.

REAL PROPERTY.

Oral contract as to, see CONTRACTS.

Covenants relating to, see COVENANTS AND CONDITIONS.

Deeds of, see DEEDS.

Parks and squares, see PARKS AND SQUARES.

Powers as to, see POWERS.

Of religious societies, see RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.

Conflict of laws as to capacity of married women to contract with reference to real property or immovables. 18-1555.

REASONABLENESS.

Question for jury as to, see TRIAL.

Objection to account, reasonable time for, so as to prevent its becoming an account stated. 18-887.

RECEIPTS.

Warehouse receipts, see WAREHOUSEMEN.

RECEIVERS.

Jurisdiction to appoint receiver of foreign corporation. 18-1404.

Italic type indicates points with annotation; roman type, points without

Franchise or excise tax on corporation in hands of receiver. 18-700 (case p. 693).

Rights to property limited to those possessed by the one for whom receiver was appointed. 18-583.

Delivery of unindorsed warehouse receipt as effecting pledge of property, as against receiver. 18-583.

RECEIVING STOLEN PROPERTY.

Duplicity in indictment for, see INDICTMENT, ETC.

Entrapment to commit crime. 18-187.

Discretion of court as to requiring state to elect between counts in indictment. 18-1074.

Prejudicial error in failure to require election between counts in indictment until evidence was all in. 18-1074.

RECEPTACLES.

Acceptance of receptacle as charging one as bailee of contents. 18-87 (case p. 83).

Constitutionality of regulations as to milk receptacles. 18-251.

RECOGNIZANCE.

See BAIL AND RECOGNIZANCE.

RECORDS AND RECORDING LAWS.

On appeal, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

Prompt registration of deed as affecting its admissibility in evidence. 18-901.

Scroll on record of deed, opposite the signature, as showing that the deed was under seal. 18-901.

REDEMPTION.

From judicial sale generally, see JUDICIAL SALE.

From mortgage, see MORTGAGE.

From tax sale, see TAXES.

Sufficiency of time for redemption of animals seized under statute providing for sale of animals running at large in violation of law. 18-63.

REDUCTION.

Of damages, see DAMAGES.

REINSURANCE.

See INSURANCE.

RELATIONSHIP.

Disqualification of juror by, see JURY.

RELEASE.

From liability by discharge in bankruptcy, see BANKRUPTCY.

RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.

Laches as preventing recovery of property diverted from one religious sect to another. 18-692 (case p. 690).

REMEDIES.

Conflict of laws as to, see CONFLICT OF LAWS.

On invalid contract, see CONTRACTS.

Election of, see ELECTION OF REMEDIES.

REMITTITUR.

On motion for new trial, see NEW TRIAL.

RENT.

Liability for, see LANDLORD AND TENANT.

REORGANIZATION.

Of corporation, see CORPORATIONS.

REPAIR MAN.

Liability of owner for injury by automobile while being operated by repair man. 18-974 (case p. 972).

REPEAL.

Of statutes, see STATUTES.

The dash in each citation stands for A.L.R.

REPLY.

See PLEADING.

REPUTATION.

Evidence of, see EVIDENCE.

RESCISSION.

Of contract, see CONTRACTS.

RESIDENCE.

See DOMICIL.

RES JUDICATA.

Former jeopardy as bar, see CRIMINAL LAW.
In general, see JUDGMENT.

RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR.

See MASTER AND SERVANT.

RESTRICTIVE COVENANTS.

See COVENANTS AND CONDITIONS.

RESULTING TRUST.

See TRUSTS.

RETREAT.

Duty as to, before killing in self-defense, see HOMICIDE.

REVERSION.

Of title upon abandonment or vacation of highway, see HIGHWAYS.

REVOCATION.

Of certificate of citizenship, see ALIENS.
Of license, see LICENSE.
Of will, see WILLS.

RIGHT OF WAY.

Easement of, see EASEMENTS.

RIPARIAN OWNERS.

Consequential injuries to riparian rights, see EMINENT DOMAIN.

ROBBERY.

Entrapment to commit crime. 18-189.

RULES.

Of insurance company, see INSURANCE.

RUNNING AT LARGE.

See ANIMALS.

SAFETY FIRST EXHIBIT.

Lease of public park for. 18-1238.

SALE.

Of mortgaged chattels by mortgagor, see CHATTEL MORTGAGE.
Of corporate stock, see CORPORATIONS.
Judicial sale, see JUDICIAL SALE.

Entrapment to commit crime of selling goods bearing counterfeit labels. 18-162.

Fraudulently procuring signature to paper purporting to be an order for goods, to which is attached a promissory note, and then detaching the note. 18-10.

Inspection, right to, of consignee required to pay for goods before delivery; waiver. 18-728.

SAMPLE.

Requiring dairyman to furnish sample of milk for analysis. 18-248.

SANITY.

See INCOMPETENT PERSONS.

Italic type indicates points with annotation; roman type, points without.

SCHOOLHOUSE.

See SCHOOLS.

SCHOOLS.

Regulation as to clothes of pupils.
18-649 (case p. 645).

Erection of schoolhouse in public park.
18-1256.

SEAL.

Scroll on record of deed, opposite the signature as showing that the deed was under seal. 18-901.

Corporate seal on deed as prima facie evidence that deed was duly authorized. 18-901.

SEAMEN.

Amount awarded one enlisted in Navy for loss of time because of injury inflicted by third person as affecting damages for the injury. 18-667.

SECURITY.

Collateral security, see PLEDGE AND COLLATERAL SECURITY.

Requiring deposit of securities for paying bills by one seeking license to sell milk. 18-254.

Waiver of right to review conviction by giving of security for fine. 18-871.

SEIZURE.

Of property, for debt, see LEVY AND SEIZURE.

SELF-CRIMINATION.

See CRIMINAL LAW.

SELF-DEFENSE.

In committing assault, see ASSAULT AND BATTERY.

Commission of homicide in, see HOMICIDE.

SENTENCE.

In criminal case, see CRIMINAL LAW.

SEPARATION.

Of husband and wife, see DIVORCE AND SEPARATION.

SERVANT.

See MASTER AND SERVANT.

SEVERANCE.

Severance as to principal on appeal from dismissal of suit by surety to cancel bond, where principal joins obligee in contesting right to cancelation. 18-269.

SEWERS.

Use of park property for sewer system.
18-1265.

SHAREHOLDERS.

See CORPORATIONS.

SHEEP.

See ANIMALS.

SHERIFF.

Homicide by, see HOMICIDE.

Liability of sheriff or his bond for negligence causing personal injury or death. 18-197 (case p. 192).

SHRUBS.

Near boundary line, see ADJOINING OWNER.

SIDE TRACKS.

See SPUR TRACKS AND SIDINGS.

SLANDER.

See LIBEL AND SLANDER.

The dash in each citation stands for A.L.R.

SLAVE.

Entrapment as defense to prosecution for illegal trading with slave. 18-191.

SLEEPING AND CHAIR CARS.

Status of passenger in ordinary coach who enters Pullman coach for temporary purpose. 18-71 (case p. 69).

SON-IN-LAW.

Insurable interest in life of father-in-law. 18-1161.

SPECIAL DEPOSIT.

See BANKS.

SPECIAL INTERROGATORIES.

See TRIAL.

SPECIAL LEGISLATION.

See STATUTES.

SPECIAL PRIVILEGES.

Grant of, in public parks. 18-1263.

SPORTS.

On Sunday, see SUNDAY.

Injury to person in street in consequence of sports on adjoining premises. 18-614 (case p. 610).

SPUR TRACKS AND SIDINGS.

Duty of railroad to operate. 18-722 (case p. 717).

SQUARES.

See PARKS AND SQUARES.

STALE DEMANDS.

See LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

STALLIONS.

Fraud in sale of stallion for purchase price of which note is given, casting upon subsequent holder of note burden of proving that he is a holder in due course. 18-58.

STARE DECISIS.

Rule of, see COURTS.

STATE.

Public funds of, see PUBLIC MONEY.

Right of public administrator or state to file caveat to, or contest, will. 18-79 (case p. 77).

Traffic or vehicle regulations of state as applicable to persons engaged in handling United States mail. 18-1169 (case p. 1163).

STATE'S ATTORNEY.

See DISTRICT AND PROSECUTING ATTORNEYS.

STATUTE OF FRAUDS.

See CONTRACTS.

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

See LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

STATUTES.

In general.

Review of, by courts, see COURTS.

Manner of pleading foreign statute. 18-1197 (cases pp. 1190, 1194).

Striking as sham plea of statute which is not in effect. 18-1194.

Validity.

Considering effect upon the entire enactment of holding particular provision invalid. 18-929.

Who may question validity. 18-219.

—partial invalidity.

General rule as to. 18-929.

Italic type indicates points with annotation; roman type, points without.

Authority of court to hold invalid one provision of statute and uphold the remainder, if, by so doing, a result would be accomplished which would not have been sanctioned by the legislature. 18-929.

Provision in statute that, if any portion of it is held unconstitutional, such decision shall not affect the validity of the remainder of the act. 18-929.

Title.

Fencing and stock laws. 18-68.

Local or special legislation.

Constitutional equality of protection and privileges, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Fencing or stock laws. 18-68.

Law operating upon all persons in like circumstances not local or special. 18-929.

Excepting from public utilities act municipal corporations and utilities owned and operated by them. 18-929.

Construction.

Construction of statutes relating to particular subjects, see those subjects.

Construction of Constitution, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Determining legislative intent from consideration of statute as a whole. 18-929.

Implication that statute enumerating certain conditions to which it shall apply shall not apply to other conditions not enumerated. 18-1057.

—strict or liberal construction.

Tax laws. 18-1461.

Workmen's Compensation Act. 18-427.

Repeal.

Implied repeal of statute as to control of public utilities owned by municipalities by statute dealing with control of public utilities generally. 18-929.

STEERING GEAR.

Liability of one letting automobile for hire for injury to person in highway resulting from defective steering gear, 18-74.

STENOGRAPHER.

Communication or exhibition of defamatory matter to, as publication or privilege. 18-776.

STOCKHOLDERS.

See CORPORATIONS.

STOLEN PROPERTY.

Receiving stolen property, see RECEIVING STOLEN PROPERTY.

STORAGE AND MOVING COMPANIES.

Warehousemen, see WAREHOUSEMEN.

As common carriers. 18-1323.

STRANGERS.

To contract, right of action on, see PARTIES.

STREET RAILWAYS.

In general.

As carriers, see CARRIERS.

Interurban railways, see INTERURBAN RAILWAYS.

Entrapment as defense to prosecution of street railway company for violation of traffic ordinance. 18-192.

Right to string wires across railroad right of way. 18-621.

Contributory negligence.

Of person injured on interurban railroad track, see INTERURBAN RAILWAYS.

Personal care required of one riding in automobile driven by another. 18-338 (case p. 296).

STREETS.

See HIGHWAYS.

STRICT CONSTRUCTION.

Of statute, see STATUTES.

STRIKING OUT.

Of pleading, see PLEADING.

Of evidence, see TRIAL.

SUBLEASE.

See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

The dash in each citation stands for A.L.R.

SUBORNATION OF PERJURY.

See PERJURY.

SUBROGATION.

Advancing money to purchase real estate under oral agreement by vendee to give a mortgage thereon as security as giving right to subrogation. 18-1100.

SUCCESSION TAX.

See TAXES.

SUIT MONEY.

In divorce suit, see DIVORCE AND SEPARATION.

SUNDAY.

Municipal power to require closing on Sunday of amusements not forbidden on that day by state laws. 18-738 (case p. 733).

SUPPORT.

Husband's liability for wife's support, see HUSBAND AND WIFE.
Of infants, see INFANTS.

SURETIES.

Suretyship in general, see PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

SURRENDER.

Of lease, see LANDLORD AND TENANT.

SURVIVORSHIP.

Presumption and burden of proof as to, see EVIDENCE.

SWITCHES.

See SPUR TRACKS AND SIDINGS.

TAXES.In general.

As affecting commerce, see COMMERCE.
Strict construction of tax laws, see TAXES.

What taxable.

As affecting commerce, see COMMERCE.

Local taxation of domesticated foreign corporation. 18-141.

Franchise or excise tax on corporation in hands of receiver. 18-700 (case p. 693).

Federal control of railroads as affecting right of state to impose franchise tax. 18-693.

Assessment; valuation.

Limiting to public utilities constitutional provision for taxation of gross receipts of carriers, gas and electric companies, etc. 18-750.

What is a public utility within provision for taxation of gross receipts of such utility. 18-750.

Franchise tax to be reckoned upon full amount of authorized stock, and not amount which public utilities commission has sanctioned. 18-693.

Redemption from tax sale.

Imprisonment as extending time for. 18-531.

Succession tax.

On property covered by power of appointment. 18-1470 (cases pp. 1461, 1466).

Conditions expressed conjunctively in statute not to be read as if prescribed disjunctively in determining whether interest is taxable. 18-1461.

Income tax.

Commissions as executor, administrator, guardian, etc., as income subject to income tax. 18-414 (case p. 411).

TEAMING AND TRUCKING.

Persons or corporations engaged in local transportation of goods as common carriers. 18-1316 (cases pp. 1310, 1314).

TELEGRAPHS.

Right to string wires across railroad right of way. 18-619.

Italic type indicates points with annotation; roman type, points without.

Liability for misconduct or negligence of messenger not directly related to the service. 18-1416 (case p. 1414).

TELEPHONES.

Right to string wires across railroad right of way. 18-619 (case p. 615).

Additional servitude, telephone line along public highway as. 18-615.

Franchise by county to operate lines along roads and highways as limited to those under jurisdiction of county. 18-615.

New trial because of counsel's failure to raise defense of nonliability because defendant telephone company was in possession of the government. 18-554.

TEMPERATURE.

Forbidding transportation of milk above a specified temperature. 18-255.

TEMPORARY ALIMONY.

See DIVORCE AND SEPARATION.

TENANT.

See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

TENANTS IN COMMON.

See COTENANCY.

TENDER.

Beneficiary's right to receive tender of premiums on avoidance of insurance policy for breach of warranty. 18-1190.

Reasonable time for tender. 18-1190.

TERMINATION.

Of lease, see LANDLORD AND TENANT.

THEFT.

See LARCENY.

THIRD PERSONS.

Enforcement of contract by, see PARTIES.

THREATS.

As duress, see DURESS.

Duty to retreat before killing in self-defense as affected by previous threats by assailant. 18-1289.

THUMB.

What amounts to loss of, within meaning of Workmen's Compensation Act. 18-1353.

TIME.

For objection to account stated, see ACCOUNTS.

Question for jury as to reasonableness of, see TRIAL.

Extension of.

Power of one purchasing real estate subject to mortgage to contract for extension of the time of payment. 18-1024.

Execution of extension agreement by transferee of mortgaged property as acknowledgment that property was transferred subject to the mortgage. 18-1024.

Loan on insurance policy, when time for repaying extended so as to prevent cancelation of policy under terms of contract. 18-1141.

TITLE.

To highway on abandonment, see HIGHWAYS.

Of statute, see STATUTES.

TORTS.

Choice between action in tort or action on contract, see ELECTION OF REMEDIES.

Joint liability for, see JOINT CREDITORS AND DEBTORS.

Master's liability for, see MASTER AND SERVANT.

Municipal liability for, see MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

TOWN CLERK.

Misappropriation by, liability of township trustees for. 18-979.

TOWN HALL.

Right to erect in park. 18-1253.

TOWNS.

Liability of township trustees for loss of public funds. 18-982.

Township trustees' liability for misappropriation of funds by clerk, occurring before or after their term of office. 18-979.

Leaving signed warrants, blank as to payee and amounts, in the hands of a clerk. 18-979.

TRADE COMMISSION.

See FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

TRADEMARKS.

Entrapment to commit offense of counterfeiting trademark labels. 18-160.

TRAFFIC REGULATIONS.

State or municipal regulations as applicable to those engaged in handling United States mail. 18-1169 (case p. 1163).

Entrapment as defense to prosecution for violation of. 18-192.

TRANSFER.

Of bill of lading, see BILLS OF LADING.
Of corporate stock, see CORPORATIONS.

TRANSFER COMPANIES.

As common carriers. 18-1323, 1324.

TREATIES.

Treaty as part of supreme law of the land. 18-503.

As defense to criminal prosecution instituted in disregard thereof. 18-503.

TREES.

On boundary lines, see ADJOINING OWNERS.

Power of municipality to plant, in parks. 18-1265.

TRESPASS.

Sublessee or assignee of lease as trespasser. 18-503 (case p. 500).

Independent contractor's trespass, non-liability of employer. 18-862.

Grantee exceeding limits of right of way as trespasser. 18-615.

Right to try disputed rights in real property. 18-500.

TRIAL.

Matters as to jury, see JURY.

Place of, see VENUE.

Election between counts.

Election between counts in indictment, see INDICTMENT, ETC.

Striking evidence.

Refusal to strike all the evidence of a witness as incompetent where a portion of it was competent. 18-1074.

Argument and conduct of counsel.

Necessity of exception to. 18-1272.

Objections and exceptions.

Conclusiveness of record as to whether exception was allowed to plaintiff or defendant. 18-554.

Presumptions by and matters that may be considered by jury.

Instruction as to matters that may be considered by jury in determining cause of injury to insured, and what inferences jury may draw. 18-106.

Questions for jury.

Objection to account, reasonable time for, so as to prevent its becoming an account stated. 18-895.

Truth of charges alleged to constitute libel. 18-1155.

Weight of testimony, including expert testimony. 18-1110.

Insured's failure to read policy as cause of loss due to its failure to cover a certain risk. 18-1210.

Unreasonableness of refusal of injured employee to submit to operation. 18-415.

Reasonable time for return of insurance premiums on cancelation of policy for breach of warranty. 18-1190.

Joint enterprise as question for jury. 18-469.

Agency of wife for husband in purchasing necessities for herself. 18-1125.

— negligence.

Automobile driver's negligence. 18-667, 1421.

Contributory negligence of guest in automobile. 18-296.

Alighting backward from vehicle without looking to see if other vehicles are approaching. 18-667.

Contributory negligence of person struck by automobile after alighting from street car. 18-1421.

Direction of verdict.

Waiver of jury trial by request for directed verdict, see JURY.

General rule as to. 18-1426.

Refusal to direct verdict when there is substantial evidence to support opponent's case. 18-1110.

Special interrogatories.

Application to criminal cases of statute authorizing special interrogatories. 18-1360.

Instructions.

Necessity for exception to instruction, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

Estoppel to object on appeal as to. 18-469.

— on what matters necessary or proper. Charging jury on self-defense where accused denies the killing. 18-1272.

— on evidence and facts.

Weight or amount of evidence. 18-469.

Use of term "presumption of fact." 18-469.

— correctness.

Of instructions on evidence or facts, see supra.

Prejudicial error in instructions, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

Instruction as to division of profits of joint adventure. 18-469.

Instruction, in action on accident insurance policy, as to facts and circumstances to be considered by jury in determining cause of injury, and inferences to be drawn therefrom. 18-106.

Instruction in action for husband's death, that misconduct of wife may be considered in estimating damages. 18-1406.

In action to hold husband liable for necessities furnished wife. 18-1125.

Definition of rape in prosecution of husband for rape committed on wife. 18-1057.

Instruction in homicide case as to duty to retreat. 18-1272.

Findings or verdict.

Direction of verdict, see supra.

Review of findings on appeal, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

TROVER AND CONVERSION.

Discharge in bankruptcy as affecting liability for conversion. 18-1426.

Sale of property by mortgagor and appropriation of the proceeds as conversion. 18-1426.

TRUCKMAN.

See TEAMING AND TRUCKING.

TRUSTEES.

In general, see TRUSTS.

Of town, see TOWN.

TRUSTS.

Resulting trust.

Advancing money to purchase real estate under oral agreement by vendee to give a mortgage thereon as security, which is not carried out, as basis of resulting trust. 18-1099.

Rights and liabilities of trustees.

Right of testamentary trustee who is himself an attorney to employ another attorney at the expense of the estate. 18-635 (case p. 631).

Income tax on compensation. 18-414.

Rights of cestui que trust.

Right of cestui que trust to have trust property wrongfully pledged by trustee for his personal debt redeemed by money belonging to his insolvent estate. 18-626 (case p. 623).

Following trust property.

Recovery in specie of property pledged to innocent purchaser as collateral for trustee's debt. 18-623.

TRUTH.

Truth or belief in truth as defense to libel or slander, see LIBEL AND SLANDER.

TUBERCULIN TEST.

Constitutionality of regulations as to. 18-238.

TUBERCULOSIS HOSPITAL.

As a nuisance. 18-122 (cases pp. 110, 119).

Injunction against tuberculosis hospital in residential district. 18-116, 119.

Admission, in suit to enjoin erection of tuberculosis hospital, of report of experts recommending the site chosen or the written approval of the site by state board of health. 18-119.

TYPIST.

Communication or exhibition of defamatory matter to, as publication or privilege. 18-776.

ULTRA VIRES.

Ultra vires acts of corporation, see CORPORATIONS.

UNCERTAINTY AND INDEFINITENESS.

In pleading, see PLEADING.

UNFAIR COMPETITION.

Validity and construction of statute creating Federal Trade Commission. 18-549 (cases pp. 542, 546).

Prevention of, as within scope of police power. 18-219.

Giving of premiums by manufacturer to salesmen and retailers, as an inducement to push his product, as in violation of Federal Trade Commission Act. 18-542.

Social entertainment of employees to induce them to influence their employers to make purchases, as violation of Federal Trade Commission Act. 18-546.

UNIFORMITY.

Of license tax, see LICENSE.

UNIFORMS.

School regulation as to wearing of, by pupils. 18-649 (case p. 645).

UNITED STATES.

Relation of state to Federal government, see STATE.

Possessory action by claimant of real estate against officers of government holding the property for public purposes. 18-992.

Determining title of United States to real estate in suit by alleged owner against agents of government in possession of the property. 18-992.

USAGE.

See CUSTOM AND USAGE.

USURY.

Pleading foreign statute relating to. 18-1203.

VACATION.

Of highways, see HIGHWAYS.

VALUATION.

Of property for taxation, see TAXES.

VALUE.

Opinion evidence as to, see EVIDENCE.

Conclusiveness of decision of corporate officers or directors that property is of sufficient value to warrant a loan under the powers of the corporation. 18-645 (case p. 639).

VARIANCE.

Between pleading and proof, see EVIDENCE.

VENDOR AND PURCHASER.In general.

Covenants and conditions, see COVENANTS AND CONDITIONS.

Deeds, see DEEDS.

Judicial sale, see JUDICIAL SALE.

Rights and liabilities of purchaser of land subject to mortgage, see MORTGAGE.

Right to sell park property.
18-1259, 1268.

VENDOR'S LIEN.

Subrogation to, see SUBROGATION.

VENUE.

Right of courts of one state to enforce laws of, or causes of action arising in, another state, see CONFLICT OF LAWS.

Jurisdiction of action by or against foreign corporation, see COURTS.

Dismissal, nolle prosequi, or mistrial after change of venue in criminal case, as affecting jurisdiction or power of courts of respective districts as to subsequent proceedings.
18-714 (case p. 706).

Jurisdiction after change, general rule as to. 18-706.

Estoppel to object to sufficiency of verification of application for change. 18-706.

VERDICT.

Direction of, see TRIAL.

VERIFICATION.

Application for change of venue, verification by attorney for accused. 18-706.

VILLAGES.

Power as to parks, see PARKS.

Power to prohibit motion pictures on Sunday. 18-733.

VIOLATION OF LAW.

Evidence of, on question of negligence. 18-782.

Necessity that violation be the proximate cause of an injury to make the violator liable for the injury. 18-782.

VISITATORIAL POWER.

Of courts over foreign corporations, see COURTS.

WAGES.

Of employee, see MASTER AND SERVANT.

WAIVER.

Of error in trial court, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

Of breach of covenant, see COVENANTS AND CONDITIONS.

Of fraud, see FRAUD AND DECEIT.

Of notice before cancellation of insurance policy, see INSURANCE.

Of right to object to increase in insurance assessments, see INSURANCE.

Of right to jury trial, see JURY.

Payment of fine, serving sentence, or discharge on habeas corpus, as waiver of right to review conviction.
18-867 (case p. 864).

Consignee's right to inspect goods before paying therefor. 18-728.

WARD.

See GUARDIAN AND WARD.

WAREHOUSEMEN.

Lack of indorsement or irregular indorsement of receipt as affecting pledge of goods. 18-590 (case p. 583).

WARRANT OF ATTORNEY.

See POWER OF ATTORNEY.

WATERS.

Admiralty jurisdiction over, see ADMIRALTY.

Furnishing water to animals during transportation, see CARRIERS.

Riparian rights.

Consequential injuries to, see EMINENT DOMAIN.

Erosion of banks because of straightening of channel of river to prevent overflows. 18-393.

Injury to riparian property by changing course of channel of stream to protect roads and bridges. 18-393.

Water supply.

Capacity in which municipality operates waterworks. 18-929.

WAY.

Easement of, see EASEMENTS.

WILFUL MISCONDUCT.

Liability of notary public or his bond for. 18-1803.

WILLS.

Matters concerning executors and administrators, see EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

Powers given by, see POWERS.

Execution of power by, see POWERS.

Illegitimacy of child as affecting revocation of will by subsequent birth of child. 18-91 (case p. 88).

Right of public administrator or state to file caveat to or contest will. 18-79 (case p. 77).

WIRES.

As additional servitude on highway, see EMINENT DOMAIN.

Right to string wires across railroad right of way. 18-619 (case p. 615).

WITNESSES.In general.

Assault on, as contempt of court. 18-217.

Relationship to witness for prosecution as disqualifying juror. 18-375 (case p. 368).

Indorsement of name of witness upon information after trial has commenced. 18-1074.

Competency.

Competency of expert witness or one expressing opinion, see EVIDENCE.

Review of discretion as to. 18-119.

Privilege of.

Contractual stipulation to submit to examination as affected by constitutional immunity against giving incriminating testimony. 18-749 (case p. 742).

WORDS AND PHRASES.

Account stated. 18-882,

Admissions. 18-469.

Alimony. 18-1040 note.

Ankle. 18-1329.

Apartment house. 18-441.

At. 18-1329.

Broken. 18-1346 note.

Capital stock. 18-693.

Child. 18-92.

Consortium. 18-873.

Cruelty justifying divorce, see DIVORCE AND SEPARATION,

Flat. 18-463 note.

Foot. 18-1329.

House. 18-458 note.

Insurance broker. 18-1204.

Insurance contract. 18-1081.

Joint adventure. 18-469.

Lex loci contractus. 18-1509.

Lose. 18-1350 note.

Park. 18-1238.

Perpetrator. 18-1060 note,

Post letter. 18-184.

Presumption of fact. 18-469.

Private residence. 18-460 note.

Rape. 18-1064 note.

Sever. 18-1342 note.

Severance. 18-1342 note.

Tenement house. 18-462, 463 note.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.In general.

Constitutionality and construction of provisions directed against noninsuring or self-insuring employers. 18-267 (case p. 259).

Purpose of compensation acts. 18-427.

Liberal construction of acts in favor of injured employee. 18-427.

Terms which state may impose as condition of self-insurance. 18-259.

Italic type indicates points with annotation; roman type, points without.

Requiring self-insurer to pay a certain amount into the state treasury, in case of death of employee without dependents, to provide a fund for other employees inadequately compensated under the act. 18-259.

What employments are within act.

Extraterritorial operation of statutes; conflict of laws. 18-292 (case p. 285).

State workmen's compensation act as applying to injury by hydro-aeroplane moored in navigable waters of the United States. 18-1824.

What injuries are within act.

Injury to employee while away from plant, primarily to serve a purpose of his own or of another employee, but which may incidentally benefit employer. 18-525 (case p. 523).

Defenses.

Duty of injured employee to submit to operation, or to take other measures to restore earning capacity. 18-431 (cases pp. 415, 427).

Unreasonableness of refusal of injured employee to submit to operation as question of fact. 18-415.

Compensation.

Loss of member, what amounts to. 18-1350 (case p. 1348).

Estoppel of employer to question correctness of award. 18-415.

Review of award where there is only partial disability after short period of total disability and award gives compensation for permanent total disability. 18-415.

Sufficiency of evidence to sustain finding that employee was not totally incapacitated. 18-415.

— payment of.

Constitutionality and construction of provisions as to manner of payment directed against noninsuring or self-insuring employers. 18-267.

WRIT AND PROCESS.

Necessity of service to support judgment, see JUDGMENT.

The dash in each citation stands for A.L.R.

